Guenther Stein, Christian Science Monitor correspondent in China and author of Challenge of Red China, making his first public appearance in New York since his return, painted a picture of the feudalism that has been China's centuries-old curse.

Do you know that Gunther Stein was a member of the Communist Party, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir, and also that he was engaged in Soviet undercover work.

Mr. MORRIS. And I think, Mr. Chairman, we have put into the record his associations with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. At a later paragraph in the same article, Mr. Budenz, we find the following:

Israel Epstein, who represented the New York Times on the American correspondents' trip to Yenan last summer, contrasted the genuine cooperatives in Yenan areas to the so-called credit cooperatives in Kuomintang areas which serve to line the landlords' pockets, and "cooperative hostels" where ragged workers are not allowed.

Did you know that Israel Epstein was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Israel Epstein was emphasized as one of the most important Communists in regard to Far East affairs. There was great solicitude in getting him into this country, and J. Peters said he was also engaged in Soviet undercover work.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have introduced evidence of his association with the Institute of Pacific Relations. Later in the article, Mr. Budenz, it reads:

Chu Tong, an editor of the New York China Daily News, rounded out the picture.

Then it goes on to say:

The feudal evil is allied with foreign imperialism, he explained, outlining the 100-year history of Anglo-American intervention which "has always been on the wrong side."

Did you know that the New York China Daily News was a Communist publication?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like that introduced into the record, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be received and properly identified.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 179" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 179

[From the Daily Worker, New York, November 22, 1945, p. 9]

SOCIAL WORKERS GET THE TRUTH ABOUT CHINA

By Helen Simon

The CIO social service workers who attended Local 19 forum on the crisis in China Monday night were outraged and angry. The speakers, outstanding experts in the field, presented the facts and the union members felt that now they were better armed to fight America's undemocratic intervention and to get their men folk home.

Gunther Stein, Christian Science Monitor correspondent in China and author of Challenge of Red China, making his first public appearance in New York since his return, painted a picture of the feudalism that has been China's centuries-old curse.

FEUDALISM CITED

The Chungking government is based on the identical feudal landlords, money lenders, parasites who had to be ousted from power in 18th and 19th century Europe to make way for industrialization, Stein said. The oriental village, with its thankless primitive toil, its exorbitant rents and innumerable taxes, is the key to China's problem.

Chiang Kai-shek's central government is "corrupt and inefficient;" its control is limited to the Chungking area and based elsewhere on compromise with local chieftains. It is incapable of developing industry—which would be to the interest of American investors—because it does not consider raising mass purchasing power. It is interested in using American loans for a new war industry, for a dumping-export industry—but not for consumption.

This is the feudal set-up which Washington supports, Stein charged. And this is the set-up which the Communists undertake to replace.

Stein spoke of rent and tax reduction in Yenan areas; of the first successful program anywhere in the Orient of village self-government; of doubling farm production and creating ingenious factories despite the blockade.

"The Chungking feudal regime can never win," Stein concluded.

Israel Epstein, who represented the New York Times on the American correspondents' trip to Yenan last summer, contrasted the genuine cooperatives in Yenan areas to the so-called credit cooperatives in Kuomintang areas which serve to line the landlords' pockets, and "cooperative hostels" where ragged workers are not allowed.

He compared "trade unions" in Kuomintang China—many of which have no right to strike or bargain collectively—to Yenan unions which have full rights, even sharing in the planning of government-owned industries and fully responsible for spending the three percent social-security fund paid out by employers.

CONTRAST IN WAGES

As to wages, even official Kuomintang figures admit that real wages dropped 60 percent during the war. In Yenan two equally beneficial wage systems apply: either the worker receives free rent, three suits a year, food, soap and other goods for himself and an additional one and one-half persons plus a money wage or else his wage is computed by the market price of a fixed measure of millet, the staple food.

There is no free medical care in Kuomintang China while all medical care is free in the north, Epstein reported.

Chu Tong, an editor of the New York China Daily News, rounded out the picture.

The feudal evil is allied with foreign imperialism, he explained, outlining the 100-year history of Anglo-American intervention which "has always been on the wrong side."

The Chinese-American editor demolished arguments currently used to justify the transporation of Kuomintang troops to Communist-liberated areas and their armed support by American marines.

It's just to disarm Japanese? But the Japanese are not disarmed and are working alongside Kuomintang, puppet and American troops against Communist-led forces.

We must back the legal government? Was this so of Spain's Republican government? Should Lafayette have helped George III rather than Washington?

WARNS OF UNITED STATES ROLE

We must protect the lives of Americans? But we are risking them by becoming involved in China's civil war. And this traditional excuse for intervention was used by the Japanese, too.

Remember that United States General Wedemeyer said that we must make North China a military base to prevent Russian expansion, Chu Tong warned. Remember that some United States monopolists may be interested in China as an economic colony.

The room teemed with questions when the speakers stopped. What is Russia's role? Russia is not intervening, is withdrawing as promised from Manchuria.

Why was General Stilwell replaced? Because he opposed corruption and inefficiency in the Kuomintang armies and sought cooperation with the Communist-led armies.

RAP INTERVENTION

How do Chinese groups other than Kuomintang and Communists stand? All demand withdrawal of United States troops.

The meeting unanimously passed a resolution condemning United States intervention (see box) and determined to circulate a petition. One girl, to strong applause, urged mass action—meetings, parades, demonstrations.

The wife of a marine now stationed in Tientsin added a note of desperate urgency:

"Our boys don't understand what's happening to them. They are being wined, dined, corrupted by the Kuomintang mayor of Tientsin. We've got to get to them somehow and explain how terribly wrong it is to fight against the democratic peoples of China."

Mr. MORRIS. You say this was part of the Communist campaign to influence foreign policy?

Mr. BUDENZ. I can say that definitely because this campaign was organized ahead of time, not with Gunther Stein, but ahead of time for a great number of organizations which were not necessarily Communist organizations but were infiltrated with Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you continue?

Mr. BUDENZ. This is another article, November 29, 1945, which I have here, page 2, written by Joseph Starobin and, therefore, of very high standing in Communist directives and information, and it says:

State Department career men like Raymond T. Ludden had visited Yenan and brought back favorable impressions; there was an American mission in Yenan, headed by Col. David Barrett, whose reports were also favorable. Newspapermen like Brooks Atkinson, Harrison Forman, and Israel Epstein, who knew China better than Hurley, were telling the truth about both the Kuomintang and the Communists.

Then they go on. This is an attack upon General Hurley, it is quite evident, to belittle Hurley as a man who liked Cadillac cars.

This accounts for his spleen against the "career men," whom he considers "college fellers" and pro-Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. I am sorry, proceed.

Mr. BUDENZ. "College fellers," by the way, is in quotations to indicate that Hurley is not coherent.

Mr. MORRIS. To what extent do you know the Communist affiliation of those people?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know Israel Epstein. I know the close association of Harrison Forman with the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, he was intimately connected with the Communist Party; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. How about Raymond Ludden?

Mr. BUDENZ. Raymond Ludden I only know in this way: That the group around Stilwell were constantly referred to as those relied upon to help advance the Communist cause in China. I wouldn't want to indict one individual of that group, although Mr. Ludden is one of them, but the discussions did not refer to individuals.

Mr. MORRIS. It is your testimony that, when you were talking about people that the Communists could rely on, the reliance was on the whole group around General Stilwell and not to any one individual?

Mr. BUDENZ. The group around Stilwell, in persuading him to antagonism toward Chiang Kai-shek.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you continue, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. That completes this.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to have that introduced into the record, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 180" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 180

[From the Daily Worker, New York, November 29, 1945, p. 2]

HURLEY'S COLORFUL CAREER PAINTED IN OIL

(By Joseph Starobin)

Sympathetic newspapers always use the word "colorful" to describe men like Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley. It is part of big business mythology about democracy and free enterprise that such oil speculators (preferably with plenty of gold braid on their shoulders) should run the foreign policy of the United States.

Yet Hurley has colorfully succeeded in master-minding the present warfare in China. The result is that American boys are dying—3 months after VJ day—to bolster a dictatorial regime which the Chinese people themselves don't want.

Who is Hurley, and what do his resignation statements mean?

It does not say enough to call him an imperialist, for so are Byrnes and Truman. For that matter, Roosevelt who appointed and tolerated Hurley, also wanted to advance the specific American interest in Asia.

Hurley is first of all a big-business man, with the typical concern for direct money interests, with the special streak of a frontier background in the old Choctaw Indian territory of Oklahoma, where he was born 62 years ago. He served as attorney for the Choctaw Indians and saw action in the First World War, becoming a colonel by the end of it.

BIG OILMAN

Hurley assisted in organizing the United States Chamber of Commerce in 1912, and was chairman of the Oklahoma Republican State convention in 1926. He did big business in oil development, and was instrumental in forcing Mexico to indemnify the oil interests when their imperialist properties were seized.

And he became, as a reward for services rendered, the Secretary of War in Herbert Hoover's administration, serving from 1929 to 1933. He was in office when Gen. Douglas MacArthur shot down the bonus marchers in 1932. He is, incidentally, a great friend of John L. Lewis.

Hurley's prewar mentality can best be seen from a speech on November 11, 1939, to the Overseas Masonic Lodge at Providence, R. I.

Hurley proposed that western civilization should be saved by an alliance between Germany and Great Britain, impossible as that might seem, he added.

Otherwise, the gates will be opened to an avalanche of orientalism, namely Soviet Russia, he said, from which it would take western civilization a century to recover.

This fear of orientalism sounds funny, doesn't it, in view of Hurley's supposed love for China. What he meant, however, was clear.

He was bitterly afraid of the Soviet Union, afraid that the war might develop in such a way as to let the Soviet Union share in the victory. And he sought some way to reconcile the Anglo-German struggle.

But he was an America Firster enough to stress that we should not intervene in Europe and should develop a cash-and-carry trade with France and Britain.

The reason why the Republicans and all the former isolationists now rush to embrace Hurley is that they recognize the former Republican isolationist in him.

GLOBE-TROTTER

He favored victory over the Axis, not because he opposed fascism as such but because he wanted the United States to cash in on that victory by pursuing an anti-Soviet course simultaneously with a policy of forcing Britain to shell out to the USA. Only if you see this in Hurley can you understand his opposition to Communist and colonial imperialism.

During the war he was sent to all corners of the globe as Ambassador to New Zealand, as special emissary in the Near East, as observer in Moscow during the critical days of 1942. And finally, he bobbed up with Donald Nelson's economic mission in China in the late summer of 1944.

In China, Hurley's flamboyant self-advertising methods were notorious; he was strongly attracted to Chiang Kai-shek for he recognized the man who might build a reactionary China subservient to a strong imperialist America—at the expense of the Soviet Union and Great Britain as well.

Hurley's first bit of "colorfulness" was to maneuver Gen. Joseph Stilwell and the former Ambassador, Clarence E. Gauss, out of China. Stilwell had been critical of the way Chiang was saving American lend-lease weapons for the ultimate civil war; Gauss knew more about Kuomintang corruption than anyone else.

When Chiang demanded Stilwell's scalp, Hurley said to "Vinegar Joe": "I have only two stars to your four, but I'm going to tell Washington one of us has to leave."

From November 1944 until April 1945 Hurley put on a big show of trying to bring about Kuomintang-Communist unity. He even thought a personal visit to Moscow last April would solve all problems in China. Hurley, who knew nothing about China, acted very much the prima donna. He tried to trick the Chinese Communists into an abject surrender to the Kuomintang. When that finally failed, he became openly pro-Chiang and bitterly anti-Communist.

IRKED BY CRITICS

What irked him just as much as his failure to force a Chinese settlement was the fact that well-informed American opinion among experts and journalists was very critical of the Kuomintang and of Hurley's methods.

State Department career men like Raymond T. Ludden had visited Yenan and brought back favorable impressions; there was an American mission in Yenan, headed by Col. David Barrett, whose reports were also favorable. Newspapermen like Brooks Atkinson, Harrison Forman and Israel Epstein (who knew China better than Hurley) were telling the truth about both the Kuomintang and the Communists.

Hurley was the kind of man who could arrange for a specially designed Cadillac to be flown in from India to Chungking. He insisted on wearing his uniform in performing civilian duties, although he was not entitled to do so. Roosevelt had to tell him point blank to cut it out. This kind of man had no use for the pro-China experts, and succeeded in forcing them out of the Chungking Embassy one by one.

This accounts for his spleen against the "career men," whom he considers "college fellers" and pro-Communists. Actually they are only the last of the pro-Roosevelt Mohicans in a Department which is increasingly dominated by the Byrnes type of political ignoramus.

Now Hurley resigns with a big bang, which is completely in keeping with his bang, bang career.

The moral of the tale is this: when Truman and Byrnes broke with the Roosevelt policy and backed Chiang Kai-shek's civil war plans, they naturally had to rely on world more and more—for he expressed the logic of their position and, moreover, carried it out in practice.

So it is in every phase of foreign affairs. Wherever American-Soviet understanding is abandoned and an attempt is made by Democratic politicians to embark on world domination, the Hurley Republicans will make the most of it. They will go the Truman-Byrnes type one better. They will rapidly drive this country to an internal coup d'état and external aggression in other people's affairs.

Mr. BUDENZ. This was written while I was still in the Communist Party, and I recall it. It is a special dispatch by Virginia Gardner and Art Shields, Communist correspondents here in Washington, Daily Worker correspondents in Washington. It is headed Washington Notes, and says:

With the assistant to Assistant Secretary of State James C. Dunn, Eugene Dooman, who was chairman of SWINK, the powerful interdepartmental committee representing State, War, and Navy, and former acting Secretary Joseph Grew out, the forces in the State Department which were relatively anti-imperialist were strengthened.

That is found on page 2 of that issue.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like that introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 181" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 181

[From the Worker, October 7, 1945, p. 2]

WASHINGTON NOTES

(By Virginia Gardner and Art Shields)

WAR DEPARTMENT DIVISION ON JAPANESE POLICY; UNITED STATES CHAMBER ADVISES OPTIMISM WITH HUMOR

The recent rebuke to Gen. Douglas MacArthur's policies given by Assistant Secretary of State Dean Acheson was the culmination not only of a split in the State Department but in the War Department itself.

With the assistant to Assistant Secretary of State James C. Dunn, Eugene Dooman, who was chairman of SWINK, the powerful interdepartmental committee representing State, War, and Navy, and former Acting Secretary Joseph Grew out, the forces in the State Department which were relatively anti-imperialist were strengthened. They were able to push through certain directives which had been held up in committee theretofore, so that the set of directives for treatment of Japan which the White House recently released were even better than the original directives which had been flown over to MacArthur and apparently lay ignored somewhere on his desk or thereabouts.

But in the War Department itself there developed what amounted to virtually a revolution. Among those most alarmed and exercised by the MacArthur policies and the complete lack of carrying out of directives from the State Department was Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy. In fact, McCloy is said to be determined that the new directives shall be carried out even if he has to go over to Japan and take a look-see himself.

Yet Senator H. Styles Bridges (Republican of New Hampshire) continues to attribute to Washington officials who represent "the leftist thinking of the Nation" the wave of criticism against MacArthur.

You don't hear much these days in Washington about what a good administrator President Truman is, since MacArthur has flouted the directives sent him and the Ways and Means Committee declared a lockout on all unemployment-compensation legislation. In all the years during which the late President Roosevelt took such a beating as a poor administrator, there never was quite such contempt shown for legislation he recommended or directives sent to any part of the Govenment by a constituted authority.

The United States Chamber of Commerce determined to be sunny, even if it hurts. So in a piece which underlines with a note of grimness its advice to business to exude confidence the Chamber of Commerce Business Action for September 24 says: "If we read the signs aright, the great mass of the population is ready to welcome an active, aggressive leadership by business * * *. But labor is afraid of unemployment, just as business fears it * * *. Some believe the answer is to be found in the Murray (full employment) bill. The sharp, forceful movement behind that measure is a manifestation of fear * * *. The formulas have got to be achieved on the local or industry level, or more specifically on the individual level."

Then, in italics: "This is the time for businessmen to think, talk, plan and act in forceful tones of optimism, with the confidence which they are fully justified in feeling—and with a sense of humor."

What amounts to an actual conspiracy to build up an anti-Communist labor movement in Germany under official United States auspices is under way. Spark plug in it from Washington is Irving Brown, who along with many of his former associates in the Labor Section of the War Production Board had a Social-Democratic orientation.

For 3 months he did little else but busily recruit candidates on the basis of such refined qualifications as their devotion to the cause of Red-baiting. Among others he has picked are Joseph D. Keenan of the AFL, Vice Chairman for labor production of WPB. Paul Porter, Wisconsin Socialist, who has been kicking around the Government for years now trying to retrieve his standing with labor after the fiasco he pulled at the airframe wage hearing he conducted early in the war, and David Saposs of the WPB Labor Section, who is a natural for the assignment. In Germany as a result they are dealing only with non-Communist elements in the labor movement, and actively encouraging anti-Communists in the unions being established or revived.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, that terminates the phase of Mr. Budenz' testimony concerning the Communist effort to infiltrate and influence American foreign policy. I would like to get back to Mr. Budenz' identification of people who were associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations and their Communist affiliation.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know James S. Allen?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; Mr. Allen was well known to me. He was foreign editor of the Daily Worker for a considerable period of time while I was managing editor, and then he had a sort of special assignment as foreign adviser to the Daily Worker.

Prior to that he was Communist International representative in the Philippines with all the powers of a Communist International representative in the islands.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have introduced into the record Mr. Allen's connection with the Institute of Pacific Relations on a previous occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know Abraham Chapman?

Senator SMITH. Is this Mr. Allen the man who wrote a review of some books or the review of an attack on some of the Southern States and was part of a group to incite the Negroes down there?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. That is not involved here now, however.

Senator SMITH. He was a Communist at that time?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. He held a high place in the Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. He was a very much trusted man, and this is shown by the fact that he was the Communist representative in the Philippines, sent on a special mission there and directing the Philippine Communist Party.

In addition to that, he was the leading authority on foreign affairs for the Daily Worker, and even when he resigned as foreign editor to do special writing he continued to be foreign affairs adviser and was closely in touch with many International agents. I can say that from his own statements and from my knowledge of what a foreign editor of the Daily Worker does.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know that Hilda Austern was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. From official reports.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you introduce into the record evidence of Miss Austern's association with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. Hilda Austern was also known as Mrs. Bretholz.

The CHAIRMAN. What are you reading from?

Mr. MANDEL. Her associations with the Institute of Pacific Relations are taken from War and Peace in the Pacific, a Preliminary Report of the Eighth Conference of the IPR on Wartime and Postwar Cooperation of the United Nations in the Pacific and the Far East, page 162 being the proceedings of the Mont Tremblant, Quebec, conference of December 4 to 14, 1942.

In that volume she is listed as a member of the international secretariat and as having participated in the 1936 and 1939 conferences as assistant treasurer.

Mr. MORRIS. Assistant treasurer of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Next I read from Handbook for the Sixth Conference of the IPR at Yosemite National Park, Calif., August 15 to 29, 1936, page 62, where Hilda Austern is listed as a member of the international secretariat and conference staff and also a member of the finance committee.

I read from Security in the Pacific, a Preliminary Report of the Ninth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations, held at Hot Springs, Va., January 6 to 17, 1945, page 160, where Hilda Austern is listed as a member of the international secretariat. She is again so listed in the proceedings of the Virginia conference, Virginia Beach conference, held November 18 to December 2, 1939, and she is also there listed as assistant treasurer.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like those references made by Mr. Mandel incorporated into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be so incorporated.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 182" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 182

MISS HILDA AUSTERN

International secretariat (also known as Mrs. Bretholz): Miss Hilda Austern (1936, 1939). Assistant treasurer. (Source: War and Peace in the Pacific (A Preliminary Report of the Eighth Conference of the IPR on Wartime and Postwar Cooperation of the United Nations in the Pacific and the Far East), Mont Tremblant, Quebec, December 4–14, 1942, p. 162.)

International secretariat and conference staff, finance committee: Minute secretary, Hilda Austern. (Source: Handbook for the Sixth Conference of the IPR, Yosemite National Park, Calif., August 15–29, 1936, p. 62.)

International secretariat: Hilda Austern (1936, 1939, 1942). Assistant treasurer, IPR. (Source: Security in the Pacific (A Preliminary Report of the Ninth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations), Hot Springs, Va., January 6–17, 1945, p. 160.)

International secretariat: Hilda Austern, assistant treasurer (1936). (Source: Problems of the Pacific (Proceedings of the Study Meeting of the Institute of Pacific Relations, Virginia Beach, Va., November 18–December 2, 1939, p. 274.)

Mr. MANDEL. I have here an item from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated September 1, 1941, being a letter marked "Strictly Confidential," addressed to Miss Hilda Austern from Edward C. Carter. I will read excerpts from this letter as follows:

DEAR HILDA: Would you like to tackle the following research job for the War Department? You would be on the international secretariat payroll, and I do not propose to charge the Army anything for this service.

The project has to be done if possible in a fortnight, and the aim is to discover what the possibilities would be of finding suitable space for landing fields, preferably 4,000 feet long, but with an absolute minimum of 3,500 feet, on the following islands.

Then there is a list of islands in the Pacific which is given.

Supplementary information which would be required would be:

Then there is a list given such as prevailing winds, possibilities for landing supplies, and so forth.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like that letter introduced into evidence and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom is that signed?

Mr. MANDEL. Edward C. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. Addressed to Hilda Austern, about whom we were talking.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record and properly identified.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 183" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 183

LEE, MASS., September 1, 1941.

Strictly Confidential.
Miss HILDA AUSTERN,
Office.

DEAR HILDA: Would you like to tackle the following rush research job for the War Department? You would be on the international secretariat payroll and I do not propose to charge the Army anything for this service.

The project has to be done if possible in a fortnight, and the aim is to discover what the possibilities would be of finding suitable space for landing fields, preferably 4,000 feet long, but with an absolute minimum of 3,500 feet, on the following islands:

Palmyra	Baker
Enderbury	Christmas
Samoa (British and United States)	Fiji group
New Hebrides	New Caledonia
Howland	Jarvis
Johnson	Canton
Loyalty

Supplementary information which would be required would be:

(a) Prevailing winds, storms, monsoons, etc.

(b) Possibilities for landing supplies by steamer.

(c) Natural defenses, i. e., would the fields be far enough inland or, if near the sea, protected by higher ground from, say, the gunnery range of submarines that might emerge from the sea nearby.
(d) Health conditions, i. e., mosquitoes, malaria, or other diseases.
(e) Local food supply.
(f) Local labor supply.
(g) Local government and its political orientation.
(h) Local police or military organization, if any.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the record to show that that last letter was introduced for the purpose of showing that Miss Austern was on the payroll of the Institute of Pacific Relations and the general nature of some of the work that she performed for that organization.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know Abraham Chapman?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; he is a veteran Communist, also known as John Arnold.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say "John Arnold" is that his party name?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, he wrote under these different names and was sometimes known in the party as John Arnold. It was a party name. He was on the editorial board in connection with Freiheit, which is the Communist daily paper in New York, published in the same building as the Daily Worker. Therefore I conferred with Mr. Chapman many times and know him as a Communist. He has a very high position so far as the regard of the Communist Party leaders in the Communist movement.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you introduce into the record the associations of Mr. Chapman with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a memorandum found in the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated May 9, 1947, headed, "Research and publication program of the American Institute of Pacific Relations," and listing books and research projects and studies under way for 1946–47. It lists Philippine Nationalism Today, by Abraham Chapman.

Then I have here a list of articles written for the Far Eastern Survey by Abraham Chapman. There are four articles. It is to be noted also, however, that Abraham Chapman is coauthor with Earl Browder of a pamphlet entitled "The Meaning of the Palestine Partition," published in 1937.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that published under the auspices of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. But the first four articles were?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like Mr. Mandel's notation showing Abraham Chapman's relations with the Institute of Pacific Relations in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. These are notations, Mr. Mandel, as I understand it, from instruments that you found in the records, these notations were made by you or notations that you found?

Mr. MANDEL. They are notations in the first case from the memorandum of the Institute of Pacific Relations and in the second case from the actual volumes of the Far Eastern Survey, the official organ of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. Who made the notation?

Mr. MANDEL. I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. You examined the volumes yourself?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 184" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 184

RESEARCH AND PUBLICATION PROGRAM OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS—BOOKS AND RESEARCH PROJECTS

Studies under way 1946–47: Philippine Nationalism Today, by Abraham Chapman.

Abraham Chapman, author of American Policy in the Philippines (Far Eastern Survey, June 5, 1946).

Abraham Chapman, author of Hawaii Seeks Statehood (Far Eastern Survey, June 17, 1946).

Abraham Chapman, author of Pacification in Central Luzon (Far Eastern Survey, August 17, 1946).

Abraham Chapman, author of Notes on the Philippine Election (Pacific Affairs, June, 1946, p. 193).

Abraham Chapman, coauthor with Earl Browder, of pamphlet, The Meaning of the Palestine Partition (1937).

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Kathleen Barnes?

Mr. BUDENZ. I knew of her, I did not meet her personally.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know she was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. I will not say that I knew it through the whole 10 years I was in the Communist Party, but I heard it mentioned at various times.

Mr. MORRIS. So you do know that at one time she was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would say a couple of times. She did not receive the constant reference that some of the other names that you have mentioned received.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you tell us of Mrs. Barnes' association with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. This is taken from the files of Pacific Affairs and the Far Eastern Survey, both organs of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and is a long list of articles by Kathleen Barnes which is here submitted for the record.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you indicate the number of articles in each publication, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. For Pacific Affairs, 8, and for Far Eastern Survey, 23.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like that compilation introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was that compilation made by, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. By actual consultation of the volumes of both publications.

The CHAIRMAN. By yourself?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you had the volumes in your possession?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, it will be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 185" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 185

KATHLEEN BARNES

Member of board of directors of the American Russian Institute for Cultural Relations with the Soviet Union, Inc., 56 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City.

The following articles by Kathleen Barnes appear in Pacific Affairs:

Eastward Migration Within the Soviet Union, December 1934 (pp. 395–405).

Review of Project for the Second Five-Year Plan for the Development of the National Economy of the U. S. S. R., December 1934 (pp. 470–471).

Review of Birobidzhantsy na Amure (The Birobidjans on the Amur) by M. Goldstein, September 1935 (pp. 507–508).

Review of Soviet Journey by Louis Fischer, June 1935 (pp. 254–256).

Comment and Opinion of Another Perspective, September 1935 (pp. 477–481).

Review of Soviet Communism: A New Civilization by Sidney and Beatrice Webb, June 1936 (pp. 294–296).

Review of The Soviets by Albert Rhys Williams, December 1937 (pp. 490–492).

Review of Over the North Pole, by George Baidukov, June 1938 (pp. 274–275).

Review of Great Soviet World Atlas, volume 1; edited by A. F. Gorkin, et al., September 1940 (pp. 354–355).

The following articles by Kathleen Barnes appear in the Far Eastern Survey:

Industrialization of the Soviet Far East, April 10, 1935.

Japanese Soviet Friction, September 25, 1935.

The Soviet Economic Stake in the Orient, January 29, 1936 (p. 19).

Siberia—From Mongolia to the Arctic, May 6, 1936 (p. 93).

The Clash of Fishing Interests in the Pacific, November 18, 1936 (p. 243).

The Agricultural Foundation of Siberia's Economy, February 17, 1937 (p. 37).

Tanna Tuva Showing Signs of Industrial Activity, March 17, 1937.

Siberian Gold Production Tops Previous Figures, May 12, 1937.

New Bed of Radio Active Ores Found in Central Asia, June 23, 1937.

Overcoming Obstacles to Rubber Control, August 4, 1937 (p. 177).

Alaska Salmon in World Politics, March 2, 1938.

Japanese Government Given Blank Check, April 6, 1938 (p. 79).

Asiatic Russia, Storehouse of Mineral Wealth, July 13, 1938 (p. 157).

Soviet-Japanese Relations Still Hanging Fire, January 5, 1939 (p. 1).

Konisomolsk—Pioneer City on the Amur, February 15, 1939.

Japan Seeking Larger Contribution From Her Mandate, March 15, 1939.

Outer Mongolia on the World Stage, August 30, 1939, (p. 207).

Soviets Promoting Migration to Siberia, October 25, 1939.

Soviets Hope for Rubber Self Sufficiency by 1942, November 8, 1939.

Soviet Union Improving Railway Network, December 20, 1939.

Pacific Islands Double Phosphate Output, May 22, 1940.

Soviets Stress Program for Far Eastern Section, July 17, 1940.

Fisheries, Mainstay of Soviet-Japanese Friction, March 27, 1940 (p. 75).

Mr. MORRIS. Are there any letters from the Institute of Pacific Relations addressed to Mrs. Barnes?

Mr. MANDEL. I have here two letters taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations on the letterhead of the Council of the U. S. S. R., Institute of Pacific Relations, one dated April 16, 1938, addressed to Mrs. Kathleen Barnes from E. V. Harondar, who has been previously designated as an official of the U. S. S. R. Council of the IPR.

DEAR MRS. BARNES: Could you kindly obtain and send us on an exchange basis the following publications which we urgently need for our work here: (1) Annual Report of the Governor of the Panama Canal, (2) Official Handbook of the Panama Canal, and (3) Panama Canal Record. We would like to get all these data for the last 3 years. Thanking you in advance for this favor.

Sincerely yours.

The CHAIRMAN. Where was that written from?

Mr. MANDEL. From Moscow, 20 Razin Street, April 16, 1938.

The CHAIRMAN. Who signed that first letter?

Mr. MANDEL. E. V. Harondar.

Mr. MORRIS. Who is he?

Mr. MANDEL. He is an official of the U. S. S. R. Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Then we have another letter dated August 29, 1939, to Mrs. Kathleen Barnes on the same type of letterhead from the same individual, E. V. Harondar, as follows:

DEAR MRS. BARNES: Referring to your letter of June 14 and July 6, I take pleasure in informing you that all books mentioned therein have been received. We note that there will be some delay in obtaining some of them. However, The United States in World Affairs, 1938, has already been received. We have recently sent you an English edition of the papers published in connection with the Eighteenth party congress under the title, The Land of Socialism, and an English edition of the History of the Communist Party. Today under separate cover I am sending you a book of statistical information on Soviet agriculture. Our librarian is collecting a new set of books on the Soviet Union which will be forwarded to you shortly. We would appreciate it if you could include in the next shipment of books the following publication: Panama Canal and its Ports, United States War Department, United States Army Corps of Engineers, revised 1938.

Sincerely yours.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have this introduced into the record. The purpose of introducing this exhibit, these two exhibits, would be to show the functions being carried on by the Institute of Pacific Relations, particularly by Kathleen Barnes, who has been identified by Mr. Budenz as a member of the Communist Party.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 186" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 186

COUNCIL OF THE U. S. S. R.,
INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS,
Moscow, August 29, 1939.

Mrs. KATHLEEN BARNES,
American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations,
New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

DEAR MRS. BARNES: Referring to your letter of June 14, and July 6, I take pleasure in informing you that all books mentioned therein have been received. We note that there will be some delay in obtaining some of them. However, the United States in World Affairs, 1938, has been already received. We have recently sent you an English edition of the papers published in connection with the XVIII Party Congress under the title The Land of Socialism and an English edition of the History of the Communist Party. Today under separate cover I am sending you a book of statistical information on Soviet Agriculture. Our librarian is collecting a new set of books on the Soviet Union which will be forwarded to you shortly. We would appreciate it if you could include in the next shipment of books the following publication: Panama Canal and Its Ports. U. S. War Department, U. S. Army Corps of Engineers. Revised 1938.

Sincerely yours,

E. V. HARONDAR.

COUNCIL OF THE U. S. S. R.,
INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS,
Moscow, April 16, 1938.

Mrs. KATHLEEN BARNES,
American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations,
New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

DEAR MRS. BARNES: Could you kindly obtain and send us on an exchange basis the following publications which we urgently need for our work here: (1)

Annual Report of the Governor of the Panama Canal, (2) Official Handbook of the Panama Canal, and (3) Panama Canal Record. We would like to get all these data for the last 3 years. Thanking you in advance for this favor.

Sincerely yours,

E. V. HARONDAR.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you any comments on that, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. I would like to call attention to the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. I don't know what the date of this letter is.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the date of that letter, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. 1939. If I am correct, this is an advance copy before the American Communists got it. We must understand the significance of this book, that it is the foundation stone today of Communist doctrine.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say "this book"?

Mr. BUDENZ. The History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union Bolsheviks, to which he refers, which is now fully credited to Josef Stalin. It is required reading by every Communist and is used as a basis of their thought and action. This was not got out in the United States until after this was sent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a modern edition of Marxism?

Mr. BUDENZ. It is Stalin's rendition of Marxism-Leninism under the guise of history. It shows the necessity for violent revolution, the overthrow of the bourgeois government, and the importance of a Communist Party devoted to revolution, a party of a new type, in order to bring about this overthrow of these governments.

Senator SMITH. Is that available here now?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is available in the English translation, gotten out by the Communist Party through the International Publishers, headed by Alexander Trachtenberg.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. I refer to a previous exhibit already introduced, exhibit 58, and I read one paragraph of that exhibit, being a memorandum on Personnel in Connection With Soviet Studies. It is marked "confidential, not for distribution outside the office."

This is dated August 10, 1934, and the last paragraph reads as follows:

The fourth group—

That is, the people engaged in these studies—

consists of the few people who are already familiar with the institute's record in the Soviet Union, or who could be made so. Harriet Moore and Kathleen Barnes are about the only ones already familiar, and they both have the advantage of being good students who have not got the academic jitters about bolshevism. With Harriet, a further period of language study, which she may at present be contemplating, would probably be essential. This could be arranged, however, or you could decide to start from the beginning and send some young person of promise to Moscow to train him for the job.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know that Harriet Moore——

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. By whom was that signed?

Mr. MANDEL. This has no signature.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently it is addressed to somebody?

Mr. MANDEL. It is evidently an interoffice memorandum.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that Harriet Moore identified in that document is a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think I identified her yesterday as a Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have had evidence that Kathleen Barnes was the first wife of the Joseph Barnes who has been identified before this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MANDEL. I have another letter here from the S. S. Chitral dated January 24, 1935. The document comes from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations and is addressed to Frederick Field from E. C. Carter, and I read:

DEAR FRED: Here is the list which the Institute of Oceanography in Moscow gave me, indicating precisely what American Fisheries Publications they already have. As I have already written you, I told them that you or Mrs. Barnes would undertake to get sent to them any glaring omissions, and that, in addition, you would see what could be secured from commercial firms engaged in any aspect of the fish business.

I am sending this letter by air mail with a typed copy of the list which our friends in Moscow gave me. I am sending the original list by ordinary mail, by way of confirmation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is signed by whom?

Mr. MANDEL. As I understand, by E. C. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, that is addressed to Frederick Field. Mr. Chairman, I would like that introduced into the record again as an example of the type of work being carried on by Kathleen Barnes.

The CHAIRMAN. This is already an exhibit, is it not?

Mr. MORRIS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 187" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 187

STEAMSHIP "CHITRAL,"
January 24, 1935.

F. FIELD,
129 East Fifty-second Street,
New York City, U. S. A.

DEAR FRED: Here is the list which the Institute of Oceanography in Moscow gave me, indicating precisely what American fisheries publications they already have. As I have already written you, I told them that you or Mrs. Barnes would undertake to get sent to them any glaring omissions, and that, in addition, you would see what could be secured from commercial firms engaged in any aspect of the fish business.

I am sending this letter by air mail with a typed copy of the list which our friends in Moscow gave me. I am sending the original list by ordinary mail, by way of confirmation.

Sincerely yours,

E. C. CARTER.

Send all stuff to Oceanography people via Kantarovich.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here some quotations from Mrs. Barnes' actual writings in the magazine of the Institute of Pacific Relations, in Pacific Affairs. The first is reviewing a book called The Soviets, by Albert Rhys Williams.

The Soviets, by Albert Rhys Williams, reviewed by Kathleen Barnes: "The Soviets is absorbing reading and bears impressive witness to the achievements of the country under consideration."

From Pacific Affairs, December 1937, page 492.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know that Albert Rhys Williams is a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know Albert Rhys Williams personally, and he is a Communist.

Mr. MANDEL. Then next is a review of Soviet Journey by Louis Fischer.

Soviet Journey, by Louis Fischer, reviewed by Kathleen Barnes, page 255: "Agitation in foreign countries is not likely to be productive of revolutionary results until such time as the workers of these countries can see that life under bolshevism is better in every way than under capitalism. Is that time coming? What will result from this burgeoning activity in the U. S. S. R.? This question is implied in the short last chapter of Soviet Journey."

From Pacific Affairs, March 1935, page 255.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any comment to make on that, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. I didn't catch it fully. I was distracted by the spelling of Albert Rhys Williams' name.

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

Soviet Communism, by Sidney and Beatrice Webb, reviewed by Kathleen Barnes, page 294 ff: "Slowly and with care the study proceeds to the consideration of the 'good life' at which the Soviets are aiming. 'The worship of God' is replaced by the 'service of man.' Such is the Webbs' appraisal of Soviet communism."

From Pacific Affairs, June 1936.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like those excerpts made by Mr. Mandel incorporated into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 188" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 188

KATHLEEN BARNES

The Soviets, by Albert Rhys Williams, reviewed by Kathleen Barnes: "The Soviets is absorbing reading and bears impressive witness to the achievements of the country under consideration" (Pacific Affairs, December 1937, p. 492).

Soviet Journey, by Louis Fischer, reviewed by Kathleen Barnes, page 255: "Agitation in foreign countries is not likely to be productive of revolutionary results until such time as the workers of these countries can see that life under bolshevism is better in every way than under capitalism. Is that time coming? What will result from this burgeoning activity in the U. S. S. R.? This question is implied in the short last chapter of Soviet Journey" (Pacific Affairs, March 1935, p. 255).

Soviet Communism, by Sidney and Beatrice Webb, reviewed by Kathleen Barnes, page 294ff: "Slowly and with care the study proceeds to the consideration of the 'good life' at which the Soviets are aiming. 'The worship of God' is replaced by the 'service of man.' Such is the Webbs' appraisal of Soviet communism" (Pacific Affairs, June 1936).

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, do you know Angus Cameron to be a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; from official reports.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have any dealings with Angus Cameron?

Mr. BUDENZ. None at all.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the nature of the official reports, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. The official reports had to do with the conduct of the Communist Party in Massachusetts, with which I was very closely in touch; that is to say, I was in Massachusetts a great deal as a member of the national committee of the Communist Party, perhaps more than in any other State. It repeatedly was called to my attention at State committee meetings the important part that Angus Cameron was playing in the Communist Party.

Secondly, and more important than that, he was called to the attention of the Politburo by Alexander Trachtenberg as having committed himself to the Communist cause and also with the statement by Alexander Trachtenberg that Little, Brown & Co. was being made into the international publishers of the Communist front.

I said the other day that Communist leaders didn't use the words "Communist front"; that was one time that Trachtenberg in a sort of jesting way used the term. The work of Angus Cameron in getting published the works of those who were pro-Communist but not necessarily known publicly as such was commended by the Politburo and his plans particularly for doing that in the future.

Mr. MORRIS. What firm was he associated with, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Little, Brown & Co. in Boston.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that testimony was to show the nature of this publishing firm which did put out quite a few books of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I understand that there has been a reorganization of the firm recently.

Senator SMITH. Little, Brown & Co.?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Senator SMITH. That is one of the oldest firms in America, a publishing firm; is it not?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; Mr. Budenz just testified to that.

Do you have any comments to make, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Little, Brown & Co. had a high and distinguished record as publishers and maintains it by some of the works they publish and some of the authors they bring forth. That was, of course, of great value to the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. You did know of many Communist publications which were gotten out by Little, Brown & Co.?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know that was the plan, and I know that many people in Communist fronts have had their books published by them. I can't say that I know specifically that it was all arranged, because I wasn't present.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, you previously testified that John K. Fairbank was a member of the Communist Party to your knowledge?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, do you have any letter at this time that we can introduce showing Mr. Fairbank's association with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. John K. Fairbank is listed as a member of the board of trustees of the American council of the publication IPR News, in a letter dated March 1950. We have had previously testimony that he was chairman of one of the subcommittees of the Mont Tremblant conference.

Mr. MORRIS. He is presently a member of the board of trustees of the Institute of Pacific Relations; is he not?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir. I have here a letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated April 29, 1944, and I read a section of this letter as follows:

> If Wellington Liu visits India, perhaps he can help in forwarding the manuscripts to New York, but it would be best to have them brought back by some American or sent in a diplomatic bag, perhaps to Mr. Fairbank.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like that introduced into the record as the next consecutive exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 189" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 189

APRIL 29, 1944.

Message for Prof. Chien Tuan-sheng,
Southwest Associated University, Kunming, or care of Lt. Robert W. Barnett, Headquarters, Fourteenth Air Force, Kunming Airfield.

DEAR MR. CHIEN: I was extremely disappointed to receive your cable stating that you were discontinuing work on the study of Chinese government and politics. As you will know from my cabled reply of April 10, I had already sent you a message about the project in care of Professor Staley, asking him to leave it with Robert Barnett in Kunming. I do hope it has now reached you; but, in case it has not, here is what I said:

"Holland approves outline of project on Chinese government as described in Chien's letter of December 6. Holland is cabling approval on February 17, 1944. In addition to the $300 already turned over to Professor Chou, Holland will arrange a further payment of $600. Part of this might be paid with the help of Barnett if he agrees and informs his wife or Holland accordingly. Holland is also consulting Wong Shih-chieh about facilitating part of the payment. Holland hopes that a substantial part of the manuscript may be completed and in his hands by the end of September, so that portions of it might, if necessary, be used as a document for the IPR conference in January 1945. Holland also hopes that Chien or his colleague can make available part of the chapter on recent trends of the Kuomintang, which might be used as an article in the September issue of Pacific Affairs. This should reach New York by June 30 at the latest. If this topic is not convenient, an article on some problems of postwar political readjustment in China might be substituted. For safety's sake, Holland thinks that there ought to be at least three copies of the manuscript, but Chien can decide whether these shall be rough copies or clean copies. It might be wise to send Holland a copy of each chapter as it is completed. If Wellington Liu visits India, perhaps he can help in forwarding the manuscripts to New York, but it would be best to have them brought back by some American or sent in a diplomatic bag, perhaps to Mr. Fairbank.

It has not been as easy as I expected to send the money to you in the form requested, but I trust that by this time you will have already received an installment of $200 from Barnett and more will be coming shortly.

I realize that with prices rising so fast the original fee I proposed may now be inadequate and it was for that reason that I suggested in my cable that we could increase the amount from $800 to $1,100. I most earnestly hope that you will not have to drop the project, as we have been counting on it very much. Even if it is not possible to complete the study on the original scale, I would urge you or Mr. Wang to prepare a short monograph and send it to me by October or November at the latest.

If there is anything else we can do to assist you in completing the study, please let me know. I realize that conditions for doing this kind of research work must be terribly difficult now, and I am anxious to do everything possible to facilitate matters for you. I am sure that Wellington Liu will be just as disappointed as we are if you do not produce a manuscript. As you know, your study has been included in the list of research projects announced by the China Council of the IPR.

With all good wishes and looking forward to hearing from you,
Sincerely yours,

W. L. HOLLAND.

P. S.—Would you kindly tell Dr. Chiang Mon-lin when you see him that I have received his letter of April 11 with some errata for his book. We have tried two publishers so far but have not yet succeeded in getting the book accepted. It is now being considered by the Oxford University Press, and I hope to get a decision soon. One of the difficulties is the paper rationing.

Mr. MANDEL. We have previously introduced a letter signed by I. Epstein to W. H. Holland, from which I read a paragraph. This was exhibit 112.

I suppose you know that Fairbank came in from Kweilin (come to think of it, I told you Saturday) and have received something, through him, from H. and Elsie.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, that has already been introduced into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a letter dated March 10, 1944, addressed to John Fairbank care of Lauchlin Currie of the White House, Washington, D. C. I read:

Here is a letter to Liu Yu-wan which I should like to have sent by hand or via the A. P. O. in Chungking. Would you be kind enough to inquire whether John Davies can take it with him if he is likely to be going through to Chungking in the near future or alternatively whether it could be sent via A. P. O. to Mac Fischer or Jack Service or someone else whom you know to be in Chungking and willing to deliver the note? If for any reason you prefer not to do this, don't hesitate to tell me. I shall be down in Washington next Wednesday and probably Thursday also.

That is signed, "W. L. Holland."

The CHAIRMAN. Addressed to whom?

Mr. MANDEL. Addressed to John Fairbank, care of Lauchlin Currie, the White House, Washington, D.C.

Senator FERGUSON. What was Fairbank doing at that time? What was his job? Why did he get his mail at the White House?

Mr. MANDEL. I believe he was connected with the Office of War Information.

Senator FERGUSON. Why did he not get at the Office of War Information? Have you any records to show?

Mr. MORRIS. We do not have any records to show why. We will have to ask Mr. Fairbank that.

Mr. MANDEL. This is exhibit 106, previously used.

Senator FERGUSON. We notice quite a bit of this mail going through courier.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, I have to go to the floor. I am in charge of a bill that is coming up. Senator Smith, would take over?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know that Max Granich was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know Max Granich very well, know him to be a member of the Communist Party and engaged in underground work. He is the husband of Grace Granich to whom I previously referred and a brother of Mike Gold, the Communist columnist of the Daily Worker.

Mr. MORRIS. You know he is a trusted member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Very trusted, part of the very protected apparatus, or protective apparatus, the security apparatus.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have a letter that will show the connection between Mr. Granich and the Institute of Pacific Relations, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. An exhibit that was previously used.

Senator FERGUSON. Might we get the time when he was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. All through the period of my membership, 1935 to 1945.

Mr. MANDEL. This letter is dated December 13, 1939, and is exhibit 54, addressed to Mr. Max Granich at China Today.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, will you listen particularly to this, please?

Mr. MANDEL. It is addressed to him at 168 West Twenty-third Street, New York City, and as I understand by Owen Lattimore. I read from the letter as follows:

I am afraid that my position as editor of Pacific Affairs makes it impossible for me to join the editorial board of China Today. I am a member of the international secretariat of the Institute of Pacific Relations. This means that one of my employers is the Japanese council of the Institute of Pacific Relations. There has already been a considerable kick about my being on the board of Amerasia. It is probably better for me not to invite extra kicks by going on the board of China Today, which is more partisan, and more obviously partisan, than Amerasia.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, do you have any comments to make on that particular publication?

Mr. BUDENZ. China Today was the Communist publication run by Frederick Vanderbilt Field and Philip Jaffe.

Mr. MORRIS. Did they run it under their own names?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; they ran it under the names of Frederick Spencer and J. W. Phillips or some such name. I think that is correct, J. W. Phillips.

Senator FERGUSON. Was Amerasia a Communist publication?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; Communist-created, but in order to have a certain different function than China Today. China Today was clearly Communist from its inception.

Senator FERGUSON. Would that account for the language that is used there about having a different slant?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes. This letter, it seems to me, is very revealing. You will note Mr. Lattimore did not reject the policy of China Today, he just thinks it wouldn't permit him to function as well if he were connected with it. China Today was clearly a Chinese publication devised by the Communists in secrecy, to a degree, but with Communist policies very clearly defined for the purpose of influencing other agencies and organizations, penetrating them, and in that way working out the Communist program in the United States for China.

Senator FERGUSON. And it was more openly for the Communist cause than Amerasia?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; that is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. Reading that letter, Mr. Budenz, would you not say that Owen Lattimore knew the nature of those organizations when he used the term "one is more partisan than the other"?

Mr. BUDENZ. I can't see as an expert of the Far East how he could avoid knowing it because these were prominent publications in New York activity.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you say the words "more partisan" meant more communistic?

Mr. BUDENZ. Decidedly.

Senator FERGUSON. As far as China was concerned and the Far East?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. If you are Communist in regard to China, you are Communist everywhere.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know that Philip Jaffee was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; both by official information and by personally being acquainted with Mr. Jaffe in his not too frequent but nevertheless several visits to the Politburo.

Mr. MORRIS. There is no doubt in your mind that Philip Jaffe was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know it definitely.

Senator FERGUSON. During the whole period that you were one?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. Of course, during the whole period I didn't always see him personally, but from official reports. Not only may I say that he was a Communist, but he was a Soviet espionage agent from advice given to me by J. Peters, immediately following conversations of Peters with Jaffe.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, I have here a photostat of the Daily Worker of December 3, 1945. Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate that document for us?

Mr. MANDEL. This photostat was made at my direction. It is a photostat of the Daily Worker of December 3, 1945, page 11.

Mr. MORRIS. I call your attention to the review of Joseph Starobin there of Jaffe's book on the Far East. I ask you if you will make comments on it, Mr. Budenz. You will note some part of it is underscored.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. Well, of course, Mr. Starobin—this by the way, was published after I was out of the Communist Party, but it is an issue I have read. Mr. Starobin begins by attacking Patrick J. Hurley all over again and says:

> Militarists like Patrick J. Hurley are riled by the virtual unanimity of American intellectual opinion on the broad issues of the future of Asia. The writers, experts, journalists—and even career diplomats in the State Department—are almost unanimous in their judgment of the reactionary character of the Kuomintang leaders, in their sympathy for the Chinese Communist program, and their emphasis on the need for an independent, democratic India.

Then he goes on to say:

> This has given rise to virtual renaissance of American writing and thinking on the Far East.

The renaissance in this case is evidence by Philip Jaffe.

> Philip Jaffe's book is the latest contribution to this judgment of the experts. It follows a remarkable outpouring of progressive literature about Asia in the last 2 years. There was Owen Lattimore's Solution in Asia; Kate Mitchell's study of India, and Kumar Goshal's work on the same subject. We have also had Lawrence K. Rosinger's China's Crisis and Andrew Roth's Dilemma in Japan—excellent statements from the younger men in the far eastern field. And then there were the two eyewitness reports on the Chinese Communists by Harrison Forman and Guenther Stein.

It goes on then with quite an acclaim of Jaffe's contribution.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know that Kate Mitchell was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; I met her as such at enlarged meetings of the Communist Party.

Senator SMITH. Is this Harrison Forman a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. I am glad you asked me that question, Senator. Yesterday in the double question raised by Mr. Morris on Harrison Forman and Mr. Stein I said "Yes," they were Communists. Technically and legally I cannot say that Harrison Forman is a Communist. This is the situation: Harrison Forman was working with the Communists, knew he was working with them.

According to all official information I have he consented to have the Communists get out a special campaign for his book. He consented to have Joe North look over his book, and in addition to that was referred to as one of "our people," but I have never heard him referred to as Communist specifically and I like to be meticulous about that.

I would like to make that sharp distinction. He was as close to the Communists as one could be without having been called such.

Mr. MORRIS. And he consciously worked with them?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, he consciously worked with them and arranged that the Communists should send out a secret memorandum which plugged his book and Gunther Stein's at the same time as required reading for all Communists and also as those books which should be pushed forward in non-Communist organizations.

Senator SMITH. Is he any relation to Dr. Clark Forman?

Mr. BUDENZ. He is no relation so far as I know. Dr. Clark Forman is another man.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Clark Forman to be a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. You read there that Kumar Goshal wrote a book. Did you know that Kumar Goshal was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have heard him referred to as such though not very emphatically.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that introduced into the record and given the next consecutive number.

Senator SMITH. Yes.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 190" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 190

[From the Daily Worker, New York, December 3, 1945, p. 11]

JAFFE'S BOOK ON FAR EAST STRESSES NEED FOR DEMOCRACY, INDUSTRIALIZATION

(New Frontiers in Asia, by Philip Jaffe. Alfred A. Knopf, $3. Reviewed by Joseph Starobin)

Militarists like Patrick J. Hurley are riled by the virtual unanimity of American intellectual opinion on the broad issues of the future of Asia. The writers, experts, journalists—and even career diplomats in the State Department—are almost unanimous in their judgment of the reactionary character of the Kuomintang leaders, in their sympathy for the Chinese Communist program, and their emphasis on the need for an independent, democratic India. There is probably no other phase of American policy on which there is such a broad agreement among well-informed people. This has given rise to a virtual renaissance of American writing and thinking on the Far East.

Philip Jaffe's book is the latest contribution to this judgment of the experts. It follows a remarkable outpouring of progressives literature about Asia in the last 2 years. There was Owen Lattimore's Solution in Asia; Kate Mitchell's study of India; and Kumar Goshal's work on the same subject. We have also had Lawrence K. Rosinger's China's Crisis, and Andrew Roth's Dilemma in Japan—excellent statements from the younger men in the far eastern field. And then there were the two eyewitness reports on the Chinese Communists—by Harrison Forman and Guenther Stein.

PROGRAM FOR ASIA

Jaffe's contribution is in the same tradition of scholarship; but in addition to presenting the facts as they are, Jaffe has attempted, like Lattimore, to couch his scholarship in the framework of a general proposition. This proposition is that the needs of American capitalism demand a large-scale program of industrializing China and India on the basis of democratic and progressive governments in those countries. Not only do the needs of America require such a program but also the necessity of minimizing rivalry with Great Britain, securing a peaceful Asia and establishing a real basis for cooperation with Soviet Russia.

In reality, there are two separate aspects to the book: One is a detailed exposition of recent history in India and China, an excellent and rich library of information in itself. The other aspects, linked with the first but quite separate, is an essay on how the United States can solve the problems created by its enormous wartime productivity. The first aspect of the book is easier to appraise than the second.

SKILLFUL ANALYSIS

The discussion of India and China offer an excellent picture of what's what in both countries. The strategy of British imperialism in the Cripps proposal is exposed with great skill, and Jaffe makes full use of his detailed knowledge of the All India National Congress both before and after the August 1942 events.

He also uses the letters of William Phillips to the late President Roosevelt to good advantage, and what gives the passage on India particular depth is his treatment of her economic problems, the various proposals which have come from India itself for postwar economic development.

The discussion of China is probably the most elaborate single aspect of the book. It adds up to a damning indictment of the Kuomintang regime and a very firm statement on behalf of Communist China's achievements—or more exactly—"new China's" achievements.

These passages are jam-packed with material of the greatest topical value to the layman and yet of equal academic value to the student of China. The full story of Kuomintang deception over the draft constitution is here; likewise, the hitherto unpublished summary of what really happened in Sinkiang, the details of General Hurley's antics and the meaning of the Stilwell-Gauss ousters a year ago. All this offers as fresh a background for today's headlines as one could hope for.

BRITAIN'S DILEMMA

I would have liked an equally thorough treatment of the Indonesian, Indo-Chinese and Philippine independence movements, and a greater differentiation in analyzing French as compared with British imperial policy.

On the other hand, one comes across rare material that is so little understood in this country—such as the story of Anglo-American rivalry in Siam. In general, one of Jaffe's strong points is his delineation of the British imperialist dilemma and the use which he makes of sidelights and comments from British sources. This enriches the entire discussion.

QUESTIONS ON ASIA

The second aspect of this book—the proposal for large-scale development of Asia—raises many more questions, and I can only indicate them here.

Jaffe does not say that American capitalists will accept his proposals; he does not regard them as inevitable in any sense, and in fact exhibits many doubts as to whether the United States will take the course he advises.

He is also quite well aware that the alternative to a program of democratic cooperation with the progressive forces of Asia is a policy of imperialist expansion and cut-throat rivalry with Great Britain.

Yet it is also true that his appeal has a certain one-sidedness. It does not analyze very sharply the actual possibilities of realizing his program. And of course, this discussion is entirely within the framework of the continuation of capitalism as such.

AMERICAN POLICY

I think that American Communists can certainly agree with the concept of American assistance in the industrialization of an Asia in which an independent India and a progressive, anti-feudal China would be the recipients of this aid.

But the immediate problem, as recent events show, is that American policy is blocking the independence movements of Asia and shows no inclination to accept or work with the anti-feudal, democratic program of the Chinese Communists.

It is this aspect of American policy which determines our approach to everything else about United States relations with the Far East. And this refusal to accept a democratic Asia is not sufficiently foreseen in Jaffe's discussion and even in his premises.

This was perhaps understandable since the bulk of the book was written in the summer of 1944. But when read today, it gives rise to illusions about the nature of American policy.

In all fairness, I see these faults only as an aspect of the book, and not necessarily the decisive aspect. For its factual material and its elaboration of the true issues inside of India, China, and Japan it ranks second to none in the growing library of progressive thought on the Far East.

Senator FERGUSON. I notice that this writing kind of lumped all these books together. Would you say that was a proper classification?

Mr. BUDENZ. These are some exhibits of those books which carried forward the idea of Communists represented by Mr. Browder in 1937; that the Chinese Communists should be represented as the democratic elements for the salvation of China.

Senator FERGUSON. But if you were to class the writings of this writer that we have been talking about would you class them the same as he did?

Mr. BUDENZ. Absolutely.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, we were discussing Philip Jaffe. I offer you there an article from the New Masses and ask you if that recalls anything to you.

Mr. BUDENZ. This article from the New Masses is its issue of October 12, 1937, with the chief article, the one to which you refer by Philip Jaffe, China's Communists Told Me, a Specialist in Far Eastern Affairs Interviews the Leading Men of Red China in Their Home Territory. This expedition, if you wish to call it that, under Jaffe's supervision to Yenan was a Communist project so far as discussions in the Politburo showed.

Mr. MORRIS. You knew it was a Communist project from your position in the Daily Worker, is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. Not only in the Daily Worker, it was discussed with the editors of New Masses before the Politburo and was considered to be a very important mission to stimulate activity among intellectuals everywhere about Red China to bring out that which Joseph Stalin later pointed out that the intellectuals have been won to sympathy for Red China.

Mr. MORRIS. So you knew this was a Red project?

Mr. BUDENZ. Most decidedly.

Mr. MORRIS. Are there any other excerpts that you care to comment on, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. We shouldn't take too much time on it. I think the significant part is the concluding part.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you read that, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. The part I shall quote is this:

Our visit to Yenan was climaxed by a huge mass meeting, addressed by Chu Teh, Bisson, Lattimore, and myself and attended by the 1,500 cadet students of the People's Anti-Japanese Military-Political University and about 500 from other schools.

Mr. MORRIS. Who is Chu Teh?

Mr. BUDENZ. Chu Teh is one of the great leaders of the Chinese Communists. Bisson, he is identified as T. A. Bisson in other parts of the article. Lattimore is identified as Owen Lattimore, editor of Pacific Affairs, in another part of the article.

Here are some questions asked of me. "What is the position of woman in the United States of America? How do American workers live and how developed is their movement? What are the results of Roosevelt's NRA campaign? What is the present situation in the left literary movement in America? What do the American people think of our long march west?" And innumerable questions concerning America's attitude in the event of a Sino-Japanese conflict, the American attitude toward the war in Spain, and what Americans think of the Kuomintang-Communist cooperation.

Then omitting one paragraph he concludes with Agnes Smedley's estimate of their trip—that is, of the trip of Bisson, Jaffe, Lattimore, to the Red Chinese areas. In this letter Miss Smedley says, or rather Jaffe says, that Miss Smedley indicates "better than I am able," how much hope and enthusiasm the visit of Americans evoked in the former Soviet regions.

This is Agnes Smedley now being quoted:

In my imagination I follow your journey from here, and my friends and I speculate as to your exact location day by day, and your exact occupation. I want to tell you that you left behind remarkable friends. I did not realize the effect of that meeting until 2 or 3 days had passed. Then it began to roll in. I have no reason to tell you tales. But the meeting, and your speech in particular, has had a colossal effect upon all people.

Then she goes on with other similar praises for the contribution made.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that article of October 12, 1937, in the New Masses magazine, incorporated by reference.

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 191" and was filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. And I would like to have such extracts as read by Mr. Budenz completely incorporated into the record.

Senator SMITH. That will be done.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know Anthony Jenkinson?

Mr. BUDENZ. I knew him personally, sir; Anthony Jenkinson.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; he, according to his own statement to me, was sent here under instructions from Moscow to penetrate the conservative labor press with the Allied Labor News. I had a number of conferences in his office in mid-Manhattan on this question.

These conferences—may I explain?

Mr. MORRIS. By all means.

Mr. BUDENZ. These conferences arose from the fact that the Daily Worker was having difficulty in getting full coverage from Moscow, and we wanted to get the help of the Allied Labor News and Anthony Jenkinson declared in a series of conferences I had with him that this was contrary to the instructions which he had received in England; that the instructions he had received from Moscow were to confine the Allied Labor News to the conservative labor press and to try to penetrate the American Federation of Labor newspapers under the guise of being merely a labor service on the international basis.

Later on, after further discussions and because in part the Allied Labor News didn't get into the A. F. of L. newspapers as they wanted—the A. F. of L. labor leaders have a remarkable ability to smell out Communist institutions—they did then relent in regard to the Daily Worker first by permitting the Daily Worker to quote the Allied Labor News, and then finally by allowing us, if I remember correctly—at least we were on the eve of that—to use its name, its byline.

22848 O - 51 - pt. 2 (Face p. 659) No. 2

FEE PAID $5.00
STUB NO. 6961
MAY 13 1942
COUNTY CLERK N.Y. CO.

CERTIFIED COPY ISSUED
Fee Paid
Dated
County Clerk, N. Y. Co.
By

5078

Certificate

of

Anthony E. Jenkinson

Robert Ferrell

CONDUCTING BUSINESS UNDER THE NAME OF

ALLIED LABOR NEWS

1133 BROADWAY, NYC

THIS RECORD NOT TO BE REMOVED FROM THE OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK

FILED BY

MAY 13 1942

PROPERTY CONVEYED
STUB No. 51469
PAGES
TOTAL
AUG 8 - 1951
CLERK'S OFFICE, N. Y.
BY

State of New York,
County of } ss.:

On this 12 day of May in the year one thousand nine hundred and forty-two before me personally appeared Anthony E. Jenkinson and Robert Ferrell to me known and known to me to be the individuals described in and who executed the foregoing certificate, and they thereupon duly acknowledged to me that they executed the same.

[signature]
NOTARY PUBLIC
Notary Public, New York County
New York County Clerk's No. 1943
N.Y. County Register's No. 1943
Commission Expires March 30, 1943

2 - 1 - 25 — 1 — 25000 12-2-50

AUG 8 - 1951

I, the undersigned do hereby certify that Mary [illegible] to me known to be the individual described in and who executed the foregoing certificate, and duly acknowledged to me that she executed the same.

[illegible]

Mr. Morris. You have no doubt, then, that they were completely controlled?

Mr. Budenz. Completely controlled by the Communists. Not only do I know that from the Politburo but Jenkinson told me definitely he had been sent from England for that purpose. You must understand that a great many of the translations, for popular purposes, of Moscow publications at that time took place in London. They had over there at that time for that purpose a division of Communist International and he had received his instructions from the Soviet capital for that purpose.

Mr. Morris. Was he an English citizen?

Mr. Budenz. That is my understanding. He was even supposed to be titled.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Budenz, in connection with your statement that it was created by the Communist Party, I would like Mr. Mandel to introduce a certificate of incorporation of the Allied Labor News.

Mr. Mandel. I have here a photostat of the certificate of incorporation of the Allied Labor News, dated May 12, 1942, in which Anthony B. Jenkinson and Robert Terrall, T-e-r-r-a-l-l, are listed as the incorporators.

Mr. Morris. Did you know Robert Terrall?

Mr. Budenz. I don't recall him now.

Mr. Morris. But you do know that Anthony B. Jenkinson is a Communist?

Mr. Budenz. Definitely.

Mr. Morris. I notice he uses the address of 16 West Twelfth Street, New York City.

Do you know what address that is?

Mr. Budenz. I don't know.

Mr. Morris. Is that the home residence of Frederick Vanderbilt Field?

Mr. Budenz. It's near it; it's opposite the Daily Worker.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate where that came from?

Mr. Mandel. That photostat was made at my direction from the records of the county clerk.

Mr. Morris. Also the records of the secretary of state of New York?

Mr. Mandel. Yes, sir.

Senator Smith. That will be received as an exhibit.

Mr. Mandel. To indicate the nature of the Allied Labor News.

Mr. Morris. Not on that, his association with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 192" and is herewith inserted.)

Mr. Mandel. I have the following letters from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, one is dated February 2, 1942, addressed to Philip E. Lilienthal, from W. L. Holland, referring to Sir Anthony Jenkinson. I read the following excerpt:

> The Shepherd book and the second volume of the handbook should be out this week and Bradley next week. We have added a new chapter on strategy to the Formosa book and that should be out in about two more weeks. Elizabeth is greatly excited at the colossal orders we continue to get from the War Department for our pamphlets, the latest being for 20,000 copies of a very brief, elementary affair, called Know Your Enemy, Japan, by Tony Jenkinson. We are expecting them to order 15,000 copies of your pamphlet.
>
> Sincerely yours,
>
> W. L. Holland.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this is to show that Anthony Jenkinson's book was the subject of interest of the Institute of Pacific Relations and also that the War Department had ordered 20,000 copies of his pamphlet.

May that be introduced in the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 193" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 193

NEW YORK CITY, February 2, 1942.

Mr. PHILIP E. LILIENTHAL,
Institute of Pacific Relations,
San Francisco, Calif.

DEAR PHIL: Many thanks for your notes of Friday and Saturday and the earlier note about Condliffe's approval of the Mitchell proofs.

I am not surprised that the Washington proposal smelled bad to you, but I thought I ought to let you know about it in case you had caught the prevailing yearning to be in the Nation's Capital. Personally, I should much prefer you here. Thus far Luce apparently has not been able to persuade the Government to give Bob Barnett passage to China on a bomber, so the whole business is still in suspense. Please don't feel bound to leave exactly on the 14th. I only suggested it because it was the end of the week. If you want to stay a week longer, please do so.

I wrote last week to Albany for a certificate of ownership for my car and hope the GMAC will send it to me soon. I am sorry to be giving you so much trouble over the car. I enclose a check for $40 to cover part of the expenses you have been incurring, e. g., for Doreen's excess baggage and license plates. I am awfully grateful for all you did to help Doreen and hope the cleaning-up job has not been too awful. The laundry box arrived safely. We seem to have brought a few of Miss Stewart's things and have apparently left our electric kitchen clock behind, but I will write Miss Stewart about this when I return her things.

The first part of the Brock manuscript looks pretty good, and Hilda thinks the printer will be able to read the manuscript quite well. Farquhar was on a considerable bender in New York. Whether it was because of this or not I don't know, but Hilda was finally able to make a pretty remunerative deal with him on the Burma book which is now being reprinted by Haddon. We are actually going to get 10-percent royalties on it. I hope Sammy won't repudiate the agreement when he sobers up.

The Shepherd book and the second volume of the handbook should be out this week and Bradley next week. We have added a new chapter on strategy to the Formosa book and that should be out in about two more weeks. Elisabeth is greatly excited at the colossal orders we continue to get from the War Department for our pamphlets, the latest being for 20,000 copies of a very brief elementary affair called "Know Your Enemy Japan," by Tony Jenkinson. We are expecting them to order 50,000 copies of your pamphlet.

Sincerely yours,

W. L. HOLLAND.

Mr. MANDEL. This is the next letter taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated July 24, 1940, addressed to Chen Han-seng, care of the American Express Co., Hong Kong. He is addressed as "Dear Geoffrey," and I read a section of the letter, as follows:

> In a little while I hope to be able to send Tony Jenkinson to China for a few months on behalf of the international secretariat. You will find him an invaluable friend.

That is signed by Edward C. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. By that he means the international secretariat of the IPR?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to introduce that into the record and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 194" and is as follows:)

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 24, 1940.

CHEN HAN-SENG, ESQ.,
Care of American Express Co., Hong Kong.

DEAR GEOFFREY: Yesterday was certainly a red-letter day in the office, for I received two letters from you both dated the 8th of July. It is very exciting to be in direct communication with you again, for we have all missed you greatly and no one has missed you more than I.

What you have said about Pacific affairs is most timely. I have sent copies of your Pacific Affairs letter to Owen, Lockwood, Field, Porter, Holland, and others. I know that they will all enjoy it as much as I have.

I wish you would write me frankly your private estimate of the Far Eastern Survey. I assume that you get it regularly. Do you have time to read it? Is it of use (a) to you, (b) to any Chinese of your acquaintance in China or Hong Kong, (c) to any foreigners of your acquaintance in China or Hong Kong?

What is your reaction to Amerasia as at present operating? Does it fill the need of a monthly, or do you still feel that Pacific Affairs should become a monthly in competition with Amerasia?

I am glad that you have sent Bill Holland direct a copy of your other letter of July 8 reporting on your program of work. I am sure he will be glad to have this letter and will doubtless be writing you as to several questions in due course. I know he will be as excited as I am to be in direct communication with you again.

The next month is likely to be fateful for both Hong Kong and England. We hope that no damage will come to you and Susie or to Elsie or to Wellington and all of the members of his family.

We feel important here in the midst of the enormous, but undirected, latent power of the United States. The administration is preparing to be strong in a military way in 2 or 3 years, but is doing little to use its moral and material strength now when it is needed.

In a little while I hope to be able to send Tony Jenkinson to China for a few months on behalf of the international secretariat. You will find him an invaluable friend.

Linebarger has written most enthusiastically of the help you gave him when he was in Hong Kong.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a letter dated January 18, 1937, from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations addressed to Dr. James T. Shotwell. It comes from Frederick V. Field. I read:

DEAR DR. SHOTWELL: One of the secretaries of the British group at the Yosemite Conference was Sir Anthony Jenkinson, who has just been in my office and asked if I would be so good as to put him in touch with you. He is a young Englishman who, like a good many others, at first gives a good many people the impression of being superficial but who on longer acquaintance turns out to be exceedingly thoughtful, talented, and indeed quite brilliant. Three or four years ago he wrote a book called America Came My Way, which I am told had phenomenal sales in England.

Since the Yosemite Conference, Jenkinson has been traveling in Canada, gathering information for a book on that country. He has heard about the large study of the Canadian-American relations which you have organized, and is very anxious to know more about it. It is for this reason that he would welcome an opportunity to have a talk with you. I therefore told him that I would write you this note so that you would know who he was if he called for an appointment.

I hope you will forgive my taking this liberty on your time, but I think you will find that Jenkinson is well worth while.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERICK V. FIELD.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to have Mr. Field's letter of January 18, 1937, introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SMITH. That will be done.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 195" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 195

JANUARY 18, 1937.

Dr. JAMES T. SHOTWELL,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. SHOTWELL: One of the secretaries of the British group at the Yosemite Conference was Sir Anthony Jenkinson, who has just been in my office and asked if I would be so good as to put him in touch with you. He is a young Englishman who, like a good many others, at first gives a good many people the impression of being superficial but who on longer acquaintance turns out to be exceedingly thoughtful, talented, and indeed quite brilliant. Three or four years ago he wrote a book called America Came My Way, which I am told had phenomenal sales in England.

Since the Yosemite Conference Jenkinson has been traveling in Canada gathering information for a book on that country. He has heard about the large study of Canadian-American relations which you have organized, and is very anxious to know more about it. It is for this reason that he would welcome an opportunity to have a talk with you. I therefore told him that I would write you this note so that you would know who he was if he called for an appointment.

I hope you will forgive my taking this liberty on your time, but I think you will find that Jenkinson is well worth while.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERICK V. FIELD.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a list of writings, articles, by Israel Epstein, writing for the Allied Labor News and appearing in the Daily Worker.

I would like to incorporate that list into the record.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that be incorporated in the record?

Senator SMITH. That will be done.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 196" and is as follows:)

ISRAEL EPSTEIN—ARTICLES FOR ALLIED LABOR NEWS

Daily Worker, July 29, 1946.
Daily Worker, January 30, 1948.
Daily Worker, August 26, 1948, page 8.
Daily Worker, August 27, 1948, page 8.
Daily Worker, December 1, 1948.
Daily Worker, August 18, 1949, page 6.
Daily Worker, August 19, 1949, page 6.
Daily Worker, September 5, 1949, page 6.
Daily Worker, August 16, 1950, page 6.
Daily Worker, September 11, 1950, page 6.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Mr. William Mandel, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know him to be a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir, I have met him both at the headquarters of the Communist Party and also up at the offices of Soviet Russia Today, or, yes, Soviet Russia Today.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know him to be a Communist of long standing, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; he is a well-versed Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have anything to show Mr. Mandel's connection with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. William Mandel, listed as a research associate of the American Russian Institute, IPR—no relative of mine—was the author of a paper on the Soviet Far East and Central Asia which was presented at the eighth conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations at Mount Tremblant, Canada, in December 1942.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, when you said "member of the American Council," do you mean the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes. He is listed as a research associate of the American Russian Institute which is one of the organizations listed by the Attorney General and in the foreword to his study, had the following note:

This study, constituting part 2 of a larger work on the Soviets in the Far East, is to be published later by the IPR and is submitted by the international secretariat——

Mr. MORRIS. Of the IPR?

Mr. MANDEL. Of the IPR.

as a document of the eighth conference of the IPR to be held in December 1942. The author alone is responsible for statements of fact or opinion in his study that later appeared as a book entitled, "The Soviet Far East and Central Asia," which is listed as follows: "By William Mandel, research associate, American Russian Institute, IPR, inquiry series, issued under the auspices of the International Secretariat, Institute of Pacific Relations, the Dial Press, Inc., New York, N. Y., 1944.

Now, I have made some excerpts from the book which are worthy of note, and I read from the foreword:

During 1938 the inquiry was carried on under the general direction of Dr. J. W. Dafoe as chairman of the Pacific Council and since 1939 under his successors, Dr. Philip C. Jessup and Mr. Edgar J. Tarr. Every member of the international secretariat has contributed to the research and editorial work in connection with the inquiry, but special mention should be made of Mr. W. L. Holland, Miss Kate Mitchell, and Miss Hilda Austern carried the major share of this responsibility.

Now, I have an excerpt from the book——

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel's book?

Mr. MANDEL. William Mandel's book. The author's preface might be worthy of note and I read:

The Soviet Union has stated its desire for continued neutrality vis-à-vis Japan. It feels that this neutrality is necessary in order finally to defeat Hitler and thus deprive Japan of the partner without which it cannot hope for victory. Its single-handed aid to China from the beginning of the Japanese attack in 1937, helped to prevent Japan from winning the Pacific war during China's 4 years of otherwise lonely struggle before Pearl Harbor. That neutrality means not only that Soviet forces in the Far East need not be replenished and supplied in active campaign, but that American lend-lease aid can continue to reach the Soviet Union without loss by submarine attack or aerial bombardment.

* * * For the most complete prewar data available, the reader is referred to Land of the Soviets, by Nicholas Mikhailov, a Soviet work available in English, and Soviet Asia, by R. A. Davies and Andrew Steiger.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce those excerpts into the record.

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 197" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 197

THE SOVIET FAR EAST AND CENTRAL ASIA

(By William Mandel, research associate, American Russian Institute IPR inquiry series issued under the auspices of the international secretariat, Institute of Pacific Relations. The Dial Press, Inc., New York, N. Y., 1944)

FOREWORD

This study forms part of the documentation of an inquiry organized by the Institute of Pacific Relations into the problems arising from the conflict in the Far East.

* * * * * * *

It has been prepared by Mr. William Mandel, research associate, American Russian Institute.

* * * * * * *

During 1938 the inquiry was carried on under the general direction of Dr. J. W. Dafoe as chairman of the Pacific Council and since 1939 under his successors, Dr. Philip C. Jessup and Mr. Edgar J. Tarr. Every member of the international secretariat has contributed to the research and editorial work in connection with the inquiry, but special mention should be made of Mr. W. L. Holland, Miss Kate Mitchell, and Miss Hilda Austern, who have carried the major share of this responsibility.

* * * * * * *

The purpose of this inquiry is to relate unofficial scholarship to the problems arising from the present situation in the Far East. Its purpose is to provide members of the institute in all countries and the members of IPR conferences with an impartial and constructive analysis of the situation in the Far East with a view to indicating the major issues, which must be considered in any future adjustment of international relations in that area.

* * * * * * *

(Pp. vii, viii, ix)

EDWARD C. CARTER,
Secretary-General.

NEW YORK, May 15, 1943.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE

* * * * * * *

The Soviet Union has stated its desire for continued neutrality vis-à-vis Japan. It feels that this neutrality is necessary in order finally to defeat Hitler and thus deprive Japan of the partner without which it cannot hope for victory. Its single-handed aid to China from the beginning of the Japanese attack in 1937, helped to prevent Japan from winning the Pacific war during China's 4 years of otherwise lonely struggle before Pearl Harbor. That neutrality means not only that Soviet forces in the Far East need not be replenished and supplied in active campaign, but that American lend-lease aid can continue to reach the Soviet Union without loss by submarine attack or aerial bombardment.

* * * For the most complete prewar data available, the reader is referred to Land of the Soviets, by Nicholas Mikhailov, a Soviet work available in English, and Soviet Asia, by R. A. Davies and Andrew Steiger.

* * * Industrial enterprises have been evacuated to, and erected in central Asia in such numbers during the course of the war as to have completely changed the basis of its economy. Refugees have been resettled en masse. They include not only Slavs, but large numbers of Jews, as well as persons from the Baltic states. As a result of the Soviet policy of safeguarding not only cultural institutions, but the creative individuals who are the bearers of culture, these evacuees include a large proportion of scientists, artists, writers, the personnel of the motion-picture industry, and the like.

* * * * * * *

(Pp. xii, xiv, xv)

WILLIAM MANDEL.

NEW YORK, September 1943.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Budenz, two previous witnesses have identified Michael Greenberg as a member of the Communist Party. Did you know that Michael Greenberg is a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. Budenz. I knew him from official communications to be a member of the Communist Party, yes, sir.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, we have already shown Mr. Greenberg is connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations, but I think we have one inquiry by Senator Ferguson which has not been answered.

Mr. Mandel. Senator Ferguson asked about the naturalization of Michael Greenberg. Our files show that Michael Greenberg was naturalized in the United States District Court of Washington, D. C., June 6, 1944, certificate No. 6370908.

Senator Smith. Where was he from?

Mr. Mandel. England.

Mr. Morris. May the record so show?

Mr. Budenz, do you know Andrew Roth to be a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. Budenz. Yes, sir, from official communications. My impression is that I met Andrew Roth but I am not sure. He was very active, particularly during the Amerasia difficulties in sending suggestions to the Communist leaders.

Mr. Morris. Do you know his book, Dilemma in Japan?

Mr. Budenz. Yes, sir. This book, Dilemma in Japan, was submitted to the Politburo for reading before it was published.

Mr. Morris. You know that from your own knowledge?

Mr. Budenz. Yes, sir; I saw at least what purported to be a copy of it. It was to be given to several people and I didn't read it.

Mr. Morris. Who published Dilemma in Japan?

Mr. Budenz. I think it is Little, Brown & Co.

Mr. Morris. It so states in that article?

Mr. Budenz. That was my remembrance.

Mr. Morris. Could you comment any further on Dilemma in Japan as used by the Communist Party, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. Budenz. Well, this particular photostat that has been given me, which is the Daily Worker of September 12, 1945—the date is obscure, but it's 1945—page 8, Seeds of New Pearl Harbor still in Japan, Writer Warns, by Samuel Sillen, was a leading article in order to focus attention on Japan, which the Communist leaders were on orders to advance everywhere they could. In this book, Lieutenant Roth attacks very sharply Under Secretary of State Grew, or rather former Under Secretary of State Grew, because Grew had resigned while this book was in the course of being prepared or published rather.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, I would like this photostat, if it is authenticated by Mr. Mandel, to be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

Mr. Mandel. This is a photostat of the Daily Worker of September 12, 1945, page 8, which was reproduced at my direction.

Senator Smith. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 198" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 198

[From the Daily Worker, New York, September 12, 1945, p. 8]

SEEDS OF NEW PEARL HARBOR STILL IN JAPAN, WRITER WARNS

(By Samuel Sillen)

A new Pearl Harbor will threaten America unless sweeping changes are quickly effected in Japan's political and economic structure. The imperialist rulers of Japan have a carefully planned come-back strategy which calls for retention of their power within the country and for creating disunity among the victor nations. If United States policy is not directed toward smashing this strategy at the outset, the blood of American boys will again redden the Pacific. This urgent warning is the theme of Dilemma in Japan, a book completed after VJ-day and published this morning by Little, Brown & Co.

Andrew Roth, the author, is one of the group of the Far East experts, who earned the displeasure of former Under Secretary of State Joseph C. Grew, leading advocate of friendship with the Emperor both before and after Pearl Harbor. He is at present under indictment for allegedly making use of State Department documents marked "Confidential."

But there is nothing confidential in this book. The public record of tragically wrong-headed policy speaks for itself. And a review of that record—which prominently includes Mr. Grew's published diary, Ten Years in Japan—casts a disturbing light on the events of the past few days in Southern Korea, China, and Japan itself.

Mr. Roth rips away the unreal distinction between the moderates and extremists among Japan's rulers. The moderate elements—Emperor, navy, businessmen—on whom the State Department experts relied for peace, joined hands enthusiastically with the most rabid militarists in the sneak attack on Pearl Harbor.

And today again, Roth warns, the group in Japan that will try most eagerly to please us will be our greatest danger.

"These self-proclaimed angels of peace," he writes, "will be the front men for the Zaibatsu, which is Japanese for plutocracy or moneyed groups."

In view of General MacArthur's announcement that he does not intend to interfere with Japan's internal economy, Roth's analysis of Japan's Big Four financial combines—Mitsui, Mitsubishi, Sumitomo, and Yasuda—assumes vital significance. Emphasizing that they boast a concentration of financial power unparalleled anywhere else in the world, Roth notes that "the relative position of the Mitsui or Mitsubishi concerns in the life of Japan is so important that beside them the role played by organizations like du Pont and Standard Oil seems small."

"During most of the modern period," he writes, "Japan's giant trusts have been important and willing partners of the militarists in the acquisition of new territories for exploitation, with quarrels restricted to the question of methods, division of spoils, and supreme power over the domestic economy."

A surrender that would leave these elements in power would fall far short of victory.

Like these imperialists, the Emperor should be tried as a war criminal, Roth believes. Hirohito, a wealthy landowner, is also a substantial member of the Zaibatsu, an integral part of the economic oligarchy. The occupying forces should encourage literature critical of the Emperor institution. The opponents of the throne, who favor popular sovereignty against imperial sovereignty, should be strengthened, he declares.

These antiimperialist elements in Japan are described historically in one of the most important sections of Roth's valuable book. Japanese censorship has kept the world in virtual ignorance of popular resistance movements within the country, so that the average American thinks of Japan as one undifferentiated mass.

But the severity of Japanese reaction reflects, as in Germany, the imperialists' need to stamp out or siphon off the discontent of the people organized in trade-unions and democratic political movements.

Roth recalls that in the Diet elections of 1928, for example, the laborites won 8 seats with 438,000 votes, and the Communist-influenced Workers and Peasants Party won 2 seats with 188,000 votes.

STRUGGLE AGAINST WAR

The Japanese Communists have consistently fought against Japan's imperialist war even under the most savage repression.

"On July 8, 1937, the day after the beginning of the China Incident, the Communists issued a statement denouncing Japan's attack as an 'unjust robbers' war which every Japanese should oppose."

Roth cites dramatic evidence of labor resistance, under Communist leadership, even after Pearl Harbor.

The problem, says Roth, is to convert Japan's democratic minority into a majority. Working with the labor movement which has persisted, even if in rudimentary form, during the war is indispensable for achieving a peaceful and democratic Japan.

But Roth understands clearly that American monopolists, who certainly don't like to encourage labor at home, will be most reluctant to promote labor organization in Japan.

Under the slogan of working with the forces of "order" and "stability," American reactionaries will resist essential modification of the class structure in Japan. That way lies another Pearl Harbor for America.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, I notice that we are introducing quite a few people, mentioning quite a few people, as Communists connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Was there ever any comment made in official Communist Party circles that you know of that indicated the degree of concentration by Communist writers and Communist members?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; there were a number of discussions within the Politburo that while they were pleased with the success that IPR was making in its contacts and in the infiltration and its influence in governmental agencies and in agencies of public opinion, they constantly criticized the Institute of Pacific Relations comrades for not spreading out more—that is, they felt that the institute was too much a concentration point for Communists; that control could be maintained without such a galaxy of Communists in it. These problems were presented to the Communist Party from time to time. This discussion, therefore, went on for several years, to my knowledge, and the constant criticism by the Communist leaders was that those within the Institute of Pacific Relations were too much concentrated in regard to Communist personnel.

Mr. MORRIS. Then they had too many Communists for their purpose?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right, they didn't need so many.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have anything else that would associate Andrew Roth with the Institute of Pacific Relations, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. This is taken from the official publications of the Institute of Pacific Relations. We find a list of books and articles by Andrew Roth, for example, French Interest and Policies in the Far East, coauthored by Andrew Roth. IPR Inquiry Series, 1941. I have here four articles, three articles by Roth and one a review of his book, Dilemma in Japan, taken from Pacific Affairs. Then there are three articles by Roth or about his book in the Far Eastern Survey.

I offer that for the record.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that compilation be introduced into the record and made a part of it with the next consecutive number?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 199" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 199

ANDREW ROTH

IPR BOOKS

French Interests and Policies in the Far East by Roger Levy, Guy Lacam, Andrew Roth. IPR Inquiry Series, 1941. (IPR Books, New and Forthcoming Publications on the Far East and Pacific Area—IPR (p. 11)).

ARTICLES IN PACIFIC AFFAIRS

Japan Strikes South, 371–372 (Review 1941, volume XIV.
Review of Blood on the Rising Sun by Douglas G. Haring, 235–236, 1944, volume XVII.
Review of Our Japanese Foe, by Ian Morrison; My Life With the Enemy, by Phyllis Argall; Nippon: The Crime and Punishment of Japan, by Willis Lamott, 351–352, 1944, volume XVII.
Dilemma in Japan (review) 114, volume XIX, 1946.

ARTICLES IN FAR EASTERN SURVEY

War Leads to Sharp Rise in Soviet-United States Trade, October 1940.
Cotton for the Soviets, January 2, 1941.
Dilemma in Japan, Little Brown. Reviewed by Richard Watts, October 10, 1945.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here, taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, a press release from the Federated Press, Eastern Bureau, 30 Irving Place, New York City, sheet 2, February 19, 1941. The article is by Andrew Roth and at the top it says:

Written for (insert name of paper) and released by the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations and by Federated Press. Opinions are the author's.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was the author?

Mr. MANDEL. Andrew Roth.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, could you tell us what the Federated Press was?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. As chairman of publications, Dick Sellers reported to me. He was in charge and afterward so was Mark Stone or Finestone, the brother of I. N. Stone, who reported to me. He was its business manager or manager and the Federated Press was completely controlled by the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you any comments to make on the fact that Andrew Roth's book was released by the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations and by the Federated Press?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I must say that if someone who was a non-Communist in the American Council was responsible for that, he was very naive. Undoubtedly, it was due to Communist influence.

Mr. MORRIS. That was an article, not a book?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. The article was released in that fashion because the Federated Press by that time had a well-established reputation.

Mr. MORRIS. It was openly Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. It wasn't openly Communist but everybody in New York knew.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that be introduced into the record as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 200" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 200

LOOKING ABROAD

Written for (insert name of paper) and released by the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations and by Federated Press. Opinions are the author's.

(By Andrew Roth, author of numerous articles on India and Indochina)

Indochina has emerged from the obscurity of small items buried in the back pages of the American press into the full glare of front-page headlines.

Friction between the unofficial Anglo-American alliance and Japan has reached a new intensity. The fate of Indochina is a key to future developments in the area.

Indochina's importance is largely strategic. From northern Indochina, where Japan obtained bases last September, Japanese planes have taken off to bombard the Burma road and southwest China. In addition, Japan has taken steps to obtain Camrahh Bay, Indochina's partly developed naval base on the southeast coast, and Saigon, a smaller but completed base further south.

Possession of these bases would not only help Japan to outflank the defenses of the Philippines and the Netherlands East Indies, but also bring Japan within 750 miles of Singapore—the British Gilbraltar of the East.

It was largely because Indochinese officials refused to give up these bases that Japan encouraged Thailand to attack Indochina, paving the way for Japan to step in as mediator. The peace conference between Thailand and Indochina is now going on in Tokyo and Japan is expected to emerge as the winner, with the possibility of obtaining bases in Thailand—as well as Indochina—as payment for its mediation.

Most discussions of Indochina have ignored the fact that the nation's 23,000,000 inhabitants have aspirations of their own. As in China and India, the great mass of the Indochinese people are peasants, impoverished by a tremendous burden of high taxes and low returns. In Indochina the economy was largely owned by the Bank of Indochina, whose political representative in France was Paul Baudoin, foreign minister in the Reynaud cabinet and also in the early days of the Petain regime.

The development of the nationalist movement in China in the twenties and the effect of the depression of 1929 promoted agrarian discontent in Indochina. This culminated in an uprising of Indochinese troops at Yenbay in 1930, with sporadic fighting continuing into 1931. The rebellion was ruthlessly suppressed, but the basic cause—peasant poverty—was not removed.

That unrest still exists in Indochina was demonstrated by a series of riots and demonstrations which occurred throughout the state in November and December of 1940. In the Saigon area alone more than 1,000 rebels were arrested, 200 of them being lined up and shot at the Saigon airport. The desire on the part of the Indochinese to be free from the bondage of either the Japanese or the French may yet play an important part in southeast Asia, the Balkans of the Far East.

Mr. BUDENZ. The American Federation of Labor had publicly labeled it as Communist. I don't know the exact year, but it was on several occasions.

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a letter dated September 26, 1940, from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, addressed to Owen Lattimore from Edward C. Carter.

DEAR OWEN: Andrew Roth, who has been doing a small but important monograph for the IPR inquiry is going on with his Far Eastern studies. He has completed his third year in the Chinese language, has started Russian, and has done a good deal on Chinese labor and nationalism, on Chinese postwar history, and also on Indian history.

He will be delighted to contribute to Pacific Affairs if you wish to appeal to him for help. You have already seen some evidences of his writing and will know better than I whether he will fit into your plan for Pacific Affairs during the next 2 years. I think you know that he is rated very highly by Jessup and Peffer.

Mr. MORRIS. Who signed that?

Mr. MANDEL. It is signed by Edward C. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 201" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 201

SUNSET FARM,
LEE, MASS., September 26, 1940.

OWEN LATTIMORE, Esq.,
300 Gilman Hall, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR OWEN: Andrew Roth, who has been doing a small but important monograph for the IPR inquiry, is going on with his Far Eastern studies. He has completed his third year in the Chinese language, has started Russian, and has done a good deal on Chinese labor and nationalism, on Chinese postwar history and also on Indian history.

He will be delighted to contribute to Pacific Affairs if you wish to appeal to him for help. You have already seen some evidences of his writing and will know better than I whether he will fit into your plan for Pacific Affairs during the next 2 years. I think you know that he is rated very highly by Jessup and Peffer.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MORRIS. That is a recommendation of Andrew Roth showing other members of the IPR, and Jessup is Philip Jessup.

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a letter dated May 23, 1940, from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, addressed to Mr. Holland from Mr. Carter, and reads:

Andrew Roth called to see me today as a result of your letter to him of May 10.

Then the last paragraph says:

Roth knows Barnett and Rosinger and is working under Peffer and Peake at Columbia. He hopes to stay in the Far East field.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 202" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 202

129 EAST FIFTY-SECOND STREET, NEW YORK CITY,
May 23, 1940.

W. L. HOLLAND, Esq.,
Giannini Foundation, University of California,
Berkeley, Calif.

DEAR BILL: Andrew Roth called to see me today as a result of your letter to him of May 10. He is prepared to undertake to add the chapter that you have proposed; namely, to bring the history of French political and economic relations with China and Japan up to the present time, since Levy's report does not go beyond 1938. I have assumed that you want Roth to cover anything he can in 1939 and thus far in 1940.

I have told Roth that I hope he can finish his work by July 1 or July 15 at the latest.

As he is headed for a scholastic career, he is wondering what he can get out of this task professionally; that is, what sort of a byline he could get. I said I supposed there were three possibilities: First, that he might be mentioned in the foreword as having contributed a chapter; second, that he might be mentioned on the title page as having contributed a chapter; and, third, that the book might be published as being written by Levy and Roth. I, myself, think that the latter would probably not be possible, but I told him that this was a matter that you would have to decide, and that I could not commit myself at all. Will you let me know what your reaction is?

Roth knows Barnett and Rosinger and is working under Peffer and Peake at Columbia. He hopes to stay in the Far East field.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a letter from the Department of the Navy, dated July 19, 1951, addressed to Hon. Pat McCarran, and reads:

In reply to your letter of 27 June 1951, the following data concerning Andrew Roth are submitted for your information.

Roth was enrolled in the United States Navy Japanese-language course at Harvard University as a contract employee on 28 August 1941. This contract was canceled on 5 December 1941 when Roth enlisted in the United States Naval Reserve. On 8 September 1942, he was commissioned as an ensign in the United States Naval Reserve and was ordered to duty with the Department of the Navy.

On 6 June 1945, Roth was arrested by Federal authorities in Washington, D. C. The complaint charged Roth with conspiracy to violate subsections C and D of section 31 title 50, United States Code (revised under act of 25 June 1948, 80th Cong., as title 18, U. S. Code, sec. 793), and the violation of section 88, title 18, United States Code (revised as title 18, U. S. Code, sec. 371. On that date he was presented with an order signed by the Secretary of the Navy which relieved him immediately from active duty in the Navy.

At the August 1945 criminal term of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, Roth was indicted with others for removing United States Government records from the files of various Government agencies and converting them to their own use. The charges against Roth were subsequently nol-prossed by the United States attorney.

Roth's resignation from the United States Naval Reserve was accepted on 3 April 1947. Since that time, he has had no connection with the United States Navy.

That is signed by Dan A. Kimball, Under Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that letter from Under Secretary of the Navy be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 203" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 203

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 19, 1951.

HON. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: In reply to your letter of 27 June 1951, the following data concerning Andrew Roth are submitted for your information.

Roth was enrolled in the United States Navy Japanese-language course at Harvard University as a contract employee on 28 August 1941. This contract was cancelled on 5 December 1941 when Roth enlisted in the United States Naval Reserve. On 8 September 1942 he was commissioned as an ensign in the United States Naval Reserve and was ordered to duty with the Department of the Navy.

On 6 June 1945 Roth was arrested by Federal authorities in Washington, D. C. The complaint charged Roth with conspiracy to violate subsections C and D of section 31, title 50, United States Code (revised under act of 25 June 1948, 80th Cong., as title 18, U. S. Code, sec. 793), and the violation of section 88, title 18, United States Code (revised as title 18, U. S. Code, sec. 371). On that date he was presented with an order signed by the Secretary of the Navy which relieved him immediately from active duty in the Navy.

At the August 1945 criminal term of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, Roth was indicted with others for removing United States Government records from the files of various Government agencies and converting them to their own use. The charges against Roth were subsequently nol-prossed by the United States attorney.

Roth's resignation from the United States Naval Reserve was accepted on 3 April 1947. Since that time, he has had no connection with the United States Navy.

Sincerely yours,

DAN A. KIMBALL,
Under Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter addressed to the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, United States Navy, dated August 4, 1942, from Edward C. Carter, coming from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I read as follows:

DEAR SIR: I have known Andrew Roth for several years and have found him to be exceedingly intelligent and of pleasing personality and good judgment. I have the highest regard for his scholarship and knowledge of the problems of southeast Asia. He completed the research assignment made to him by the Institute of Pacific Relations promptly and in an entirely satisfactory manner. He is a tireless worker.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

This letter of August 4 is a response to a request from Andrew Roth dated July 28, 1942, addressed to Mr. E. C. Carter, and found in the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations:

DEAR MR. CARTER: It was very good seeing you, if only for a moment. Knowing how busy you are, I thought that my contact with you would be restricted to hearing you over the radio as I have several times, including the Shostakovitch premiere.

I am nearing the end of the course, and I am increasingly happy that I chose to follow your advice. I feel that I can perform a useful function not only now but in the postwar world, should I be around to observe it.

As you may have guessed, this letter has an ulterior purpose. I am about to be elevated from the lowly rank of yeoman, second class, to lieutenant, junior grade, and I require letters of recommendation. I am sorry that the effectiveness of your past recommendations compels me to ask you for another.

Therefore, I should heartily appreciate it if you were to find time to write another. It should be addressed to the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, but be sent to me and bear no reference to the particular division to which I expect to be assigned. Unfortunately for your secretary, the rules require the letter to be in triplicate. I should appreciate receiving a letter as soon as possible, because our applications are being held up until our letters of recommendation are in.

I put the whole letter into the record.

Mr. MORRIS. Two letters?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like those two letters authenticated by Mr. Mandel as having come from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

Senator SMITH. First is the letter signed by Andrew Roth to Mr. Carter, and the second letter does not appear to be signed.

Mr. MORRIS. You did not introduce that into the record; did you?

Mr. MANDEL. No.

Senator SMITH. You are not introducing this last one?

Mr. MORRIS. Since this is part of the file, we will introduce it exactly for what it was, as a letter attached to the rest of the file.

Senator SMITH. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. We will just introduce it as being an appendage to the other letter.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 204" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 204

129 EAST FIFTY-SECOND STREET, NEW YORK CITY,
August 4, 1942.

CHIEF OF BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
United States Navy.

DEAR SIR: I have known Andrew Roth for several years and have found him to be exceedingly intelligent and of pleasing personality and good judgment. I have the highest regard for his scholarship and knowledge of the problems of southeast Asia. He completed the research assignment made to him by the Institute of Pacific Relations promptly and in an entirely satisfactory manner. He is a tireless worker.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

---

36 GRAY STREET, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.,
July 28, 1942.

DEAR MR. CARTER: It was very good seeing you, if only for a moment. Knowing how busy you are, I thought that my contact with you would be restricted to hearing you over the radio as I have several times, including the Shostakovitch premier.

I am nearing the end of the course, and I am increasingly happy that I chose to follow your advice. I feel that I can perform a useful function not only now but in the postwar world, should I be around to observe it.

As you may have guessed, this letter has an ulterior purpose. I am about to be elevated from the lowly rank of yeoman, second class, to lieutenant, junior grade, and I require letters of recommendation. I am sorry that the effectiveness of your past recommendations compels me to ask you for another.

Therefore, I should heartily appreciate it if you were to find time to write another. It should be addressed to the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, but be sent to me and bear no reference to the particular division to which I expect to be assigned. Unfortunately for your secretary, the rules require the letter be in triplicate. I should appreciate receiving the letters as soon as possible, because our applications are being held up until our letters of recommendation are in.

In the little spare time at my disposal, I have been doing some thinking and reading on postwar Japan, and have come near formulating a study on that subject. However, since I do not know whether my next tour of duty will admit of any research or writing, I cannot plan very definitively at this time. Perhaps I can discuss this with you on my next leave.

Sincerely yours,

ANDREW ROTH.

---

129 EAST FIFTY-SECOND STREET, NEW YORK CITY,
August 4, 1942.

MR. ANDREW ROTH,
36 Gray Street, Cambridge, Mass.

DEAR ANDY: Thank you for your letter of July 28. I was glad to hear of your impending promotion.

Enclosed is the letter of recommendation in triplicate with an extra copy for your own files.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you ever see Corliss Lamont at Communist meetings?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not at Communist meetings, but I have met him as a Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. You have?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes; and I have discussed with him on several occasions Communist affairs, with him as a Communist. You must understand that while Mr. Lamont, to my knowledge, was a Communist—that is, to my personal knowledge and in meeting with him as such and conferring with him, that he sometimes had little difficulties with the Communist viewpoint with some criticism, and on several occasions and specifically on one that I can remember, I was called upon by the Communist leaders to gice him information that would straighten him out. This was with regard to James Burnham, now of New York, who had evidently made quite an impression on Lamont and whom I assured him was a Trotzkyite. Lamont was sending reports to Comrade Hathaway of his activities in the organization which he then represented, formerly known as Friends of Russia.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know that Len DeCaux was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Very well, and personally. I have met him on many occasions at secret Communist meetings and specifically in July 1940, though I could recall many more, but July 1940 at the national convention of the CIO in St. Louis. I recall that because just at that time I had become president of the corporation controlling the Daily Worker, and we commented on that. He attended secret meetings with Roy Hudson and other representatives of the Communist Party in regard to the role he was to play in the national office of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Mr. MORRIS. So it is your knowledge that he is a highly placed Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. I knew him as a Communist before he was in the CIO.

By the way, he was released from the CIO because he could not agree with Mr. Murray. I think that should be clear.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have already introduced into the record the fact that Len DeCaux was a member of the board of trustees of the Institute of Pacific Relations as well as the man who was in charge of public relations for the Triennial Conference at Mont Tremblant in 1942.

Mr. Chairman, we have, I would estimate, about another half hour's work.

Senator SMITH. We will recess now until 2:30 this afternoon.

(Whereupon, at 1 p. m., the hearing was recessed until 2:30 of the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Senator SMITH. The hearing will come to order. We will proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce into the record a book review of William Mandel's book, IPR Inquiry Series, New York, the Dial Press, 1944. This appeared in the Saturday Review of Literature, March 11, 1944, page 18. Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate the authenticity of that?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostatic copy of a review appearing in the Saturday Evening Review of Literature for March 11, 1944, page 18.

Here we have a book review appearing in the New York Times of February 28, 1944, on page 16, also an opinion of the Library of Congress in a letter to Senator Pat McCarran, August 23, 1941, signed by Ernest S. Griffith, Director, Legislative Reference Service.

Mr. Morris. I would like to introduce those into the record and have them marked the next consecutive exhibits.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 205 and 206," and are as follows:)

Exhibit No. 205

[From the Saturday Review of Literature, March 11, 1944, p. 18]

The Rump of the Bear

(The Soviet Far East and Central Asia. By William Mandel. IPR Inquiry Series. New York: The Dial Press. 1944. 151 pp. $2.50—reviewed by Emil Lengyel)

The Soviet Far East is a huge land bordering on Japanese-held territory and the Pacific. William Mandel compares it to Canada and Alaska from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, insofar as its size is concerned. The Yakut Republic itself—part of this territory—is as large as all of European Russia.

Most important region of the Soviet Far East is the Maritime Territory with the city Vladivostok on its southern tip. On the map this region looks like a finger thrust into the intestines of the Japanese Empire. It was bases there that attracted the envious attention of the world-traveling United States Senators, some of whom told the country that the Soviets should place those bases at our disposal.

This is a rich country and would be much richer if more manpower could be had. Oil is one of its most important raw materials in this mechanized world, and large quantities of it are found in the northern part of Sakhalin Island. The author points out that the Soviet Far East produces more than its quota of coal, pig iron, and cement. It exports large quantities of lumber, fish, and fur to the western Soviet Union. The known natural riches of the Far East sound like a list of chemical elements. In agricultural products it became self-sufficient a couple of years ago, and is now expected to provide an exportable surplus.

This vast territory is sparsely settled, most of its white inhabitants living along the Trans-Siberian Railroad and great river banks. The January average temperature of the city of Khabarovsk is 6 below zero Fahrenheit, while that of Verkhoyansk, in Yakutia, it is 58° Fahrenheit.

The Soviet Far East is the land of one railway, the author shows. That railway is the Trans-Siberian. The much talked about and little known Baikal-Amur Railway has not yet been completed, in the author's view. Rivers afford water transportation when open to navigation, which may not be more than an average of 6 months a year.

Obviously, Mr. Mandel made an effort to assemble most of the material available about the natural resources, economic and cultural development, population and land settlement, transportation and administrative divisions of the Soviet Far East. The available material is not rich, which may be judged by the fact that all of it is presented on not more than 85 pages, several of which are reprints of Soviet daily press articles, containing so few points of interest that they could have easily been presented in condensed form. Just the same, the material provided by Mr. Mandel will prove useful to Far East specialists.

Readers may be interested in Mr. Mandel's treatment of the importance of this region for the outcome of the war with Japan. The Soviets are at peace with the Mikado's empire, since, as the author points out, first they had to stave off Hitler's aggression. The Far East was turned into an arsenal for the forces fighting in the west.

In his interpretation of the Soviet policy in the Far East, Mr. Mandel does not seem to be consistent. He writes in his preface that the Far East's economic expansion was "determined by Soviet estimates of potentialities inherent in the position of the U. S. S. R. as members of opposition coalitions." On the other hand, he writes in a later chapter: "Any attempt to read into the regionalization of the economy of the Far East now proceeding, any special design arising out of the proximity of Japanese forces would not be borne out by the facts." Not only is this statement not consistent with the previous one, but it is hard to accept it in view of the constant state of preparedness characterizing life in Far East border districts.

Some 30 pages of this small book are devoted to a discussion of the vast Soviet Central Asiatic Republics. The author himself warns the reader that these chapters contain no rounded treatment. The title page of his book reads: "The Soviet Far East and Central Asia," while the other titles, on the jacket and elsewhere, simply call it: "The Soviet Far East." Had more material been available about the more eastern region, it would have been preferable for the author not to roam so far afield.

EXHIBIT No. 206

[From the New York Times, February 28, 1944, p. 16 of Book Review Section]

THE NEW SIBERIA

(The Soviet Far East, by William Mandel, 158 pp. New York: The Dial Press. $2.50—by William Henry Chamberlin)

The Soviet Far East, the vast, bleak, sparsely settled territory between Lake Baikal and the Arctic and Pacific Oceans, is one of the least known regions of the world, so far as the developments of the last 10 or 15 years are concerned. Ever since the Japanese seizure of Manchuria the Soviet Government has regarded this area as an advanced military zone and has not extended facilities for detailed study to any foreign observer.

In the event that the Soviet Union should enter the war against Japan this region would assume great importance in American eyes. So it is useful to have a compilation of the information that is available from Soviet sources about economic development and settlement and population policies. This is what Mr. Mandel has prepared in this little book, which is one of the inquiry series prepared by the Institute of Pacific Relations.

While the author concentrates his attention on the Soviet Far East, he includes some material bearing on Soviet Central Asia. Here, as he shows, population has increased and cultural life has been enriched because of the mass evacuation of refugees from the Ukraine and other sections when the Germans invaded European Russia in 1941 and 1942.

Climatically and physically the Soviet Far East, as the author suggests, is similar in some respects to western and northwestern Canada. There are rich fisheries and timber and mining regions in the southern part of the area; but the greater part is an unbroken Arctic waste. Of the 4½ million people who lived east and north of Lake Baikal in 1939 nearly 4 million lived along the line of the Trans-Siberian Railway or in the valley, 50 to 100 miles wide, between the Amur River and the mountains. In Canada one finds this same ribbonlike distribution of population—though Canada, of course, has developed a much thicker network of railways and an infinitely higher standard of living than eastern Siberia.

The Soviet Government has tried to push the development of the Far East, both for military and for economic reasons. Discharged Red army soldiers have been settled in military farm colonies along the Manchurian border. Ardent young Communists have helped to establish a pioneer town, Komsomolsk, on the lower reaches of the Amur River and have helped to develop oil resources in the northern, Russian half of the island of Sakhalin.

While the reader will find interesting information on a little-known part of the world in this book, two limitations must be noted. The first (for which the author is, of course, not responsible) is the absence of first-hand foreign information. The second is Mr. Mandel's extremely uncritical attitude toward the Soviet regime. The czarist practice of sending political prisoners to Siberia is frequently mentioned; but there are no references to the much larger employment of forced labor under the Soviets. And it is highly questionable, to put it mildly, whether Soviet Uzbekistan is, in Mr. Mandel's words, "a State comparable to Sweden in economy, culture, and national statehood."

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: We have examined the book, The Soviet Far East and Central Asia, by William Mandel (New York, international secretariat, Institute of Pacific Relations, 1944). The book mentions the czarist practice of sending exiles to the Far East but does not contain any references to Soviet slave-labor camps. It cites several cases of increases in the population of various localities due to new arrivals which are described in such terms as "the influx of settlers," "mass settlement of refugees," "influx of evacuees," etc.

The two reviews of Mr. Mandel's book which accompany this letter comment upon its merit. The underlined portions contain the more critical remarks.

The map which we are sending contains the best information that we have on the location of forced-labor camps in the Soviet Union. We have roughly sketched in on this map those regions comprising the Soviet Far East and Central Asia as delineated in the book by Mr. Mandel.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST S. GRIFFITH,
Director, Legislative Reference Service.

TESTIMONY OF LOUIS FRANCIS BUDENZ, CRESTWOOD, N. Y.—Resumed

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know that Agnes Smedley was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I knew it by official information. I also knew Miss Smedley many years ago.

Mr. MORRIS. There is no doubt at all about her being a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no; not then or afterward.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that Mildred Price is associated with the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. I know that from personal knowledge, having met Miss Price several times at the Daily Worker. When I say several, not too many. Secondly, from her attendance on occasion at large national committee meetings of the Communist Party. At the Daily Worker on two occasions that I can recall she brought Chinese Communists up there, three of them at one time and two at another. This was during the forties, and I just don't recall the years.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you recall the names of the Chinese Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. I do not. I was introduced to them for an extensive period of time but my memory doesn't recall, at least at the present.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, I show you a copy of a letter, our exhibit No. 99, which was introduced at the open hearing of August 14, 1951. This is a copy of a letter headed "The China Aid Council." I ask you if you know that organization to be a Communist-controlled organization? You will notice that Mildred Price was the executive secretary.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. This was not just a Communist-controlled organization. It was a Communist-created organization, and was, therefore, also Communist-controlled. It is what is popularly known as a Communist front.

Mr. MORRIS. You know that from your own experience?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. We had that testimony from Miss Elizabeth Bentley last week, Mr. Budenz. Did you know Miss Bentley when you were in the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. I was introduced to her by Jacob Golos in order that she could take down stenographically my reports intended for the Soviet secret police. He couldn't do it constantly. He had been my intermediary for years, but after he pleaded guilty to being a foreign agent without having registered, he felt that he shouldn't too frequently be in contact with me, and he asked that I meet Miss Bentley. That was for a very short period of time, because my activities in that respect ended about 6 months after I first met Miss Bentley. I used to have to call her up under the name of Helen Johns.

Mr. MORRIS. J-o-h-n-s?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you testify to the fact that she held a high place in the Communist organization?

Mr. BUDENZ. She held a very important key position in the espionage apparatus of the Communist in this country.

Mr. MORRIS. You know that from your own experience?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know it from my experience. I know it from Mr. Golos' introduction. He was chairman of the control commission of the Communist Party, and from my own personal knowledge and of course mountains of evidence in other proceedings, was also for many years engaged in espionage activities in the United States, using the World Tourist Agency, of which he was the head, for that purpose. He was the center of false passports and things of that character.

He introduced Miss Bentley to me as one who already had won her place in confidential work for the party and that I could rely upon her completely, tell her anything and that that was equivalent to telling it to him.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, Miss Bentley testified that Mr. Golos was one of the three-man control commission. You have now said he was chairman of the control commission. Can you tell us who the other members were at any time?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. I had many contacts with Mr. Golos as chairman of the control commission, since occasionally in addition to the secret work I was doing with the Soviet secret police, I also had the political responsibility of keeping watch over the staff of the Daily Worker and of other people in the publication field when the control commission demanded it. Consequently, I had many relationships with Mr. Golos. The control commission at that time was really more than three, but three were publicly named. That is publicly named within the party. They weren't publicly named so much outside for the general public, but I mean within the party. These three were generally named in the national committee with power to enlarge their numbers, which permitted them to make the control commission as large as they wished. But the three that were constantly named during that period were Jacob Golos, Charles or Clarence Derba (he used both names, and he spelled his name either D-i-r-b-a or D-e-r-b-a), and Dora Lipshitz.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, the name of John S. Service came up this morning. Will you tell us what you knew about John S. Service's connection with the Communist Party to be?

Mr. BUDENZ. John S. Service, at least from the official information I received, had many contacts with the party. He was designated as Lattimore's pupil in some of these discussions. He was designated as a man to be relied upon in the State Department, particularly in 1945 in the campaign against General Hurley. I have never heard him mentioned specifically as a Communist, but his relationship was certainly very close from all the official reports I received. You must understand that during a considerable period of time I was in the Communist Party, Mr. Service was in China and would not come so much directly to my attention.

Mr. MORRIS. But did you know that the Communist Party relied on John Stewart Service to put over their policy in the Far East?

Mr. BUDENZ. Most specifically. That is to say, it came out very sharply in 1945 and the names of John Stewart Service and John Carter Vincent were repeatedly mentioned as being dependable in the campaign within the State Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I interrupt at this point? You have a couple of times used the word "designated," Mr. Budenz. Did you make it clear for the record, do you think, by whom Mr. Service was designated?

Mr. BUDENZ. As what?

Mr. SOURWINE. You mentioned that he was designated in several capacities. He was designated. Do you recall?

Mr. BUDENZ. Designated as Lattimore's pupil?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUDENZ. I have heard that expression several times. My memory is that it came from Earl Browder and Jack Stachel.

Mr. SOURWINE. You didn't use that word in the sense of an official appointment, but rather as a characterization of him?

Mr. MORRIS. That was a characterization in the discussion in the Politburo.

Mr. SOURWINE. By more than one member of the Politburo?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. At more than one time?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was the same true with regard to our subsequent use of the word designation? You spoke of Mr. Lattimore in another capacity?

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. Service, you mean?

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Service.

Mr. BUDENZ. Being designated as a man who was reliable.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. This was used repeatedly. Perhaps if I search my memory further I could think of who these people were who mentioned him specifically, but it was within the Politburo.

Mr. SOURWINE. I simply wanted to clear up your connotation of the word designated, in your use of it, because otherwise the testimony might not be clear on that point.

Mr. BUDENZ. I see.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, yesterday you testified that at the time Owen Lattimore was with Henry Wallace in the Far East, you were approached by Jack Stachel and were told of his particular role, that is of Lattimore's particular role in the Communist organization. Was there any mention by Stachel at that time of John Carter Vincent's position in the Communist organization?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. So the testimony you gave this morning with respect to John Carter Vincent could be amplified by stating that Jack Stachel told you that on that particular occasion?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes; that is very definite.

Mr. MORRIS. And did you hear on other occasions of John Carter Vincent?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; particularly during the period of 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Nym Wales, who was the wife of Edgar Snow?

Mr. BUDENZ. I knew her officially. During the past year I recall that I met her once, but I don't recall the occasion.

Mr. MORRIS. You don't recall the occasion?

Mr. BUDENZ. No.

Mr. MORRIS. But did you know that she was a Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Most decidedly. She was, so far as official reports went, a Communist before Snow was.

Mr. MORRIS. Before Edgar Snow was?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator SMITH. Is he the Snow who wrote the book, People on Our Side?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; he did.

Senator SMITH. He also wrote Red Star Over China.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. Can you recall anything about that book that would be of interest to this committee, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. He amended one edition of the book, as I recall, at the request of the Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, his first edition differed from the second edition?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. I don't recall all the circumstances. By checking up on the book, I could, because I was in the midst of the discussions.

Mr. MORRIS. You participated in the discussion that led to the request on the part of the Communist Party to him to amend the first edition of his book?

Mr. BUDENZ. Either in those discussions or in subsequent discussions in which the matter was reviewed.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, have you any letters in the files on Edgar Snow or Mrs. Edgar Snow that would be of interest to us now?

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a letter dated May 27, 1940, addressed to Edgar Snow, Esquire, Worchester House, Baguio, the Philippines, from Edward C. Carter.

DEAR SNOW: Your very important letter of May 3 with several enclosures has just arrived. I am sharing your letter and that of Mrs. Chuan with the following:

Miss Ida Pruitt
Harry Price
John Hersey
Frederick V. Field
Robert W. Barnett

I want to read another section of the letter.

Your Saturday Evening Post article was invaluable. All of your writing helps. Your discriminating analyses of China and the Far East today are of the greatest value to the future both of China and the United States.

That is signed "Edward C. Carter."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like that introduced into the record and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

Senator SMITH: So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 207" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 207

129 EAST FIFTY-SECOND STREET,
New York City, May 27, 1940.

EDGAR SNOW, Esq.,
Worcester House, Baguio, the Philippines.

DEAR SNOW: Your very important letter of May 3 with several enclosures has just arrived. I am sharing your letter and that of Mrs. Chuan with the following:

Miss Ida Pruitt
Harry Price
John Hersey
Frederick V. Field
Robert W. Barnett

You give me credit for more work on behalf of the industrial cooperatives than I am entitled to. I am afraid I have a one-track mind. For the past year I have felt that the only person in the world who could put the CIC on the map in the United States is yourself. I shall continue to do all in my limited power to get you to come to the United States for this purpose. You and you alone have the ability to raise money for progressive China from out and out capitalists. You are the only American who knows the CIC from the inside who at the same time has Nation-wide prestige in the United States.

I have done a little on behalf of Miss Pruitt, but it is discouraging, for she has been the personification of devotion to the cause, but does not inspire quite that confidence which is so desperately essential if things are to be done in a big way in this country.

Your Saturday Evening Post article was invaluable. All of your writing helps. Your discriminating analyses of China and the Far East today are of the greatest value to the future both of China and the United States.

Hoping that you can come to us soon, I am

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MANDEL. Here is a review of Red Star Over China, by Edgar Snow. The review is by Edward C. Carter, published in Pacific Affairs for March 1938, pages 110 to 113. Mr. Carter:

The leaders of Red China represent to the peasants Franciscan simplicity, personal bravery, an abounding humor, and a strategic ingenuity of magical dimensions; but they represent, as well, a way of life that has convinced the masses that there at least are political leaders who will not betray them into the hands of the landlords and money lenders.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that excerpt from Edward C. Carter's book review of Edgar Snow's book be incorporated into the record?

Senator SMITH. It is so ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 208" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 208

RED STAR OVER CHINA, BY EDGAR SNOW, REVIEWED BY EDWARD C. CARTER

The leaders of Red China represent to the peasants Franciscan simplicity, personal bravery, an abounding humor, and a strategic ingenuity of magical dimensions; but they represent, as well, a way of life that has convinced the masses that there at last are political leaders who will not betray them into the hands of the landlords and money lenders (Pacific Affairs, March 1938, pp. 110–113).

Mr. MANDEL. Quoting again from Pacific Affairs of September 1937, page 247, in regard to Edgar Snow. He is called:

Edgar Snow—the first foreign newspaper correspondent to be given free access to the Red districts of China, spent 4 months in Soviet territory in 1936.

Mr. MORRIS. May that extract made by Mr. Mandel be incorporated into the record, Mr. Chairman?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 209" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 209

Edgar Snow—the first foreign newspaper correspondent to be given free access to the Red districts of China, spent 4 months in Soviet territory in 1936 (Pacific Affairs, September 1937, p. 247).

Mr. MANDEL. And finally a quotation from Pacific Affairs of September 1939 reviewing Inside Red China, by Nym Wales. The review is by Olga Lang:

It is curious how much of their good reputation abroad the Chinese Communists owe to one man—Edgar Snow * * * Nym Wales, as the wife of Edgar Snow, will inevitably have her work compared with that of her famous husband. * * * She is not impartial. She thoroughly approves of the Chinese Communists. * * * So she writes with gay excitement and eager partisanship.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that extract be incorporated into the record?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 210" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 210

INSIDE RED CHINA, BY NYM WALES

It is curious how much of their good reputation abroad the Chinese Communists owe to one man—Edgar Snow * * * Nym Wales, as the wife of Edgar Snow, will inevitably have her work compared with that of her famous husband. * * * She is not impartial. She thoroughly approves of the Chinese Communists. * * * So she writes with gay excitement and eager partisanship. (By O. L. (Olga Lang), Pacific Affairs, September 1939.)

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know Mary Van Kleeck?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have known her personally as a Communist and known her for many years.

Mr. MORRIS. You met her under circumstances indicating that she was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. She is Mary Van Kleeck, of the Russell Sage Foundation; that is, she is an officer of the foundation. That doesn't indict the whole foundation.

Mr. MANDEL. I have a letter here on the stationery of the International Industrial Relations Institute, taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated January 22, 1937, addressed to Frederick V. Field, signed Mary Van Kleeck.

DEAR MR. FIELD: I am very glad to become a member of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I shall of course have a special interest in bringing about appropriate cooperation between the International Industrial Relations Institute and the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that letter be introduced into the record to be marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

Mr. MORRIS. The purpose of that is to show Miss Van Kleeck's membership in the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 211" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 211

INTERNATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS INSTITUTE,
New York, January 22, 1937.

MR. FREDERICK V. FIELD,
Secretary, American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations,
129 East Fifty-second Street, New York.

DEAR MR. FIELD: I am very glad to become a member of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I shall, of course, have a special interest in bringing about appropriate cooperation between the International Industrial Relations Institute and the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Sincerely yours,

MARY VAN KLEECK.

Mr. MANDEL. I have a letter dated May 2, 1933, to Mary Van Kleeck, signed Joseph Barnes:

DEAR MISS VAN KLEECK: I am very glad, indeed, to sign the statement concerning the Soviet Union which you have sent me. I am afraid that I am very optimistic as to the possibility of such good advice being followed by Mr. Roosevelt, but I am glad that you are at least seeing to it that the idea is expressed to him as forcefully as possible.

I am enclosing my small contribution to the expenses of the project.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that letter be introduced into the record to be marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 212" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 212

MAY 2, 1933.

MISS MARY VAN KLEECK,
Russell Sage Foundation,
130 East Twenty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MISS VAN KLEECK: I am very glad, indeed, to sign the statement concerning the Soviet Union which you have sent me. I am afraid that I am very optimistic as to the possibility of such good advice being followed by Mr. Roosevelt, but I am glad that you are at least seeing to it that the idea is expressed to him as forcefully as possible.

I am enclosing my small contribution to the expenses of the project.

Very sincerely yours,

JOSEPH BARNES.

Mr. MANDEL. Another letter taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations on the letter head marked "130 East Twenty-second Street, New York City," which is the Russell Sage Foundation where Miss Van Kleeck was employed, dated March 23, 1938, to Mr. E. C. Carter, signed Mary Van Kleeck.

DEAR MR. CARTER: You said that you wanted the manuscript of my radio speech of last night on the Moscow trials. I do not think that it can be of any real service to you, but I send it nevertheless by way of expressing my best wishes for your address tomorrow night. I hear that you are also giving a broadcast. I am sure that you will render fine service this week in the interest of a better understanding of this complicated situation.

With cordial greetings, I am,

Sincerely yours.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 213" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 213

130 EAST TWENTY-SECOND STREET,
New York City, March 23, 1938.

MR. E. C. CARTER,
The Inquiry,
129 East Fifty-second Street, New York.

DEAR MR. CARTER: You said that you wanted the manuscript of my radio speech of last night on the Moscow trials. I do not think that it can be of any real service to you, but I send it nevertheless by way of expressing my best wishes for your address tomorrow night. I hear that you are also giving a broadcast. I am sure that you will render fine service this week in the interest of a better understanding of this complicated situation.

With cordial greetings, I am
Sincerely yours,

MARY VAN KLEECK.

Mr. MANDEL. On the same letterhead, dated April 20, 1938, from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations addressed to Mr. E. C. Carter from Mary Van Kleeck.

The full text of Newton D. Baker's statement on the Moscow trials at the Fourth Annual Women's Congress in Chicago in March 1937 was published in the April 1937 issue of Soviet Russia Today.

I am mindful of your request for a list of liberals present at the dinner with Mr. Troyanovsky and I shall send it as soon as possible.

Meanwhile, let me tell you how much I enjoyed your review of Red Star Over China. It seems to me a very fair appraisal and criticism of the book.

Have you seen the Labor Monthly published in London? The current issue is called the Crisis Issue and the comment on the Moscow trials is very interesting. Incidentally it supports essentially my remarks in the broadcast, a fact which I am glad to report to Pacific Affairs.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 214" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 214

NEW YORK CITY, April 20, 1938.

MR. E. C. CARTER,
129 East Fifty-second Street, New York.

DEAR MR. CARTER: The full text of Newton D. Baker's statement on the Moscow trials at the Fourth Annual Women's Congress in Chicago in March 1937 was published in the April 1937 issue of Soviet Russia Today.

I am mindful of your request for a list of liberals present at the dinner with Mr. Troyanovsky and I shall send it as soon as possible.

Meanwhile, let me tell you how much I enjoyed your review of Red Star Over China. It seems to me a very fair appraisal and criticism of the book.

Have you seen the labor monthly published in London? The current issue is called the Crisis Issue and the comment on the Moscow trials is very interesting. Incidentally, it supports essentially my remarks in the broadcast—a fact which I am glad to report to Pacific Affairs.

Sincerely yours,

MARY VAN KLEECK.

Mr. MANDEL. On the same letterhead dated May 26, 1938, to E. C. Carter from Mary Van Kleeck:

DEAR MR. CARTER: Will you be one of a group of 10 or 12 of different related professions to cooperate in giving a dinner on Tuesday, May 31, to Deputy Commissioner Vassily Bourgman, who is now in this country arranging plans for the Soviet pavilion at the New York World's Fair? Mr. Bourgman sails Wednesday morning, so the plans are being hurriedly made. We shall also invite as our guest Mr. Constantin Oumansky, counsel of the Soviet Embassy.

* * * * * * *

The dinner will be at 7 o'clock, at the Cosmopolitan Club, 122 East Sixty-sixth Street * * *.

I have read excerpts from the letter.

Mr. MORRIS. May that be introduced in the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 215" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 215

NEW YORK CITY, May 26, 1938.

Mr. E. C. CARTER,
Institute of Pacific Relations,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. CARTER: Will you be one of a group of 10 or 12 of different related professions to cooperate in giving a dinner on Tuesday, May 31, to Deputy Commissioner Vassily Bourgman, who is now in this country arranging plans for the Soviet pavilion at the New York World's Fair? Mr. Bourgman sails Wednesday morning, so the plans are being hurriedly made. We shall also invite as our guest Mr. Constantin Oumansky, counsel of the Soviet Embassy.

The suggestion for this plan has been made to me by Mr. Simon Breines, who is associated in the architectural planning of the building. He and I believe it is not too early to begin to plan the exhibits. Suggestions from American friends on this point will be welcome. The building will undoubtedly be a central point of interest for visitors, as was the Soviet building at the Paris exposition.

The dinner will be at 7 o'clock at the Cosmopolitan Club, 122 East Sixty-sixth Street, where a room will be reserved in my name as a member. The cost for each member of the group of hosts will be $2.75.

As the time is short, I should greatly appreciate your telephoning or telegraphing your response tomorrow, Friday, to me at my office at the above address (GRamercy 5-7060).

Sincerely yours,

MARY VAN KLEECK.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, do you know Vilhjalmur Stefansson?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know from official reports that he is a Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know he was a member of many Communist-front organizations?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is where much of the discussion around him centers. He was a member of so many, I think the word countless can be used without exaggeration.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, if the interruption may be permitted, the name that your are discussing is not a common one, but would it be improper to identify the particular Stefansson to whom you now refer?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. Vilhjalmur, V-i-l-h-j-a-l-m-u-r, Stefansson, S-t-e-f-a-n-s-s-o-n.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is the first name m-u-r or m-a-l?

Mr. MANDEL. m-u-r.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you continue, Mr. Budenz.

Mr. BUDENZ. He has been very much interested in the Arctic. In fact, his latest book on geopolitics, on the Arctic, with contributions by Mr. Lattimore to it, shows, although in a very involved and I should say semischolarly way, that Soviet Russia is impregnable because it has control of the heartland.

Mr. MORRIS. Is he an explorer, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; he has been an explorer.

Mr. MORRIS. You are testifying that party discussions indicated that he was on many Communist-front organizations?

Mr. BUDENZ. Very many indeed.

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony that in addition to being a member of many Communist-front organizations, he was also a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct. It was on the occasion of the Communist fronts precisely that I recall his association being officially brought to my attention.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you put into the record letters that will indicate Mr. Stefansson's association with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. I have a letter here dated January 26, 1939, addressed to Philip J. Jaffe from Edward C. Carter, taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

DEAR JAFFE: This is to express the hope that you and Mrs. Jaffe will attend the opening of the Arctic exhibition at the Natural History Museum on Sunday, February 5, at 3:30 p. m., under the auspices of the American Russian Institute. Stefansson, the great explorer, and Oumansky will both speak . The exhibit is on a very important subject. I will send you the details later.

Oumansky, by the way, is the Russian Ambassador.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I introduce that into the record and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 216" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 216

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 26, 1939.

PHILIP J. JAFFE, Esq.,
49 East Ninth Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR JAFFE: This is to express the hope that you and Mrs. Jaffe will attend the opening of an Arctic exhibition at the Natural History Museum on Sunday, February 5, at 3:30 p. m., under the auspices of the American Russian Institute. Stefansson, the great explorer, and Oumansky will both speak. The exhibit is on a very important subject. I will send you the details later.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MANDEL. The next is a memo dated April 2, 1940, presumably Frederick V. Field, from ECC, presumably E. C. Carter. This memo says:

I have just had word from Cripps—that would be the British Foreign Minister—that he will accept my invitation for dinner on the evening of Thursday the 11th.

Then there is listed those who are invited, presumably the IPR, and among those is the name of Vilhjalmur Stefansson, along with Frederick V. Field and others.

Senator SMITH. Will you state where that came from?

Mr. MANDEL. From the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 217" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 217

APRIL 2, 1940.

F. V. F. from E. C. C.

I have just had word from Cripps that he will accept my invitation for dinner on the evening of Thursday the 11th. This takes the place of the dinner to which I had invited you for this week. I hope you can come.

Before I send out all of the invitations that I would like to, I wish you would glance through the list below and let me know what four or five people had better be eliminated and what four or five people are important to add from the American Council point of view.

The private room at the Gladstone only holds 20 at the outside and I had rather thought that a meeting of more than 20 might inhibit complete candor on Cripps' part.

Frederick V. Field, yes.
P. E. Corbett, yes.
W. W. Lockwood, yes.
W. B. Osgood Field, Jr.
Philip C. Jessup, no.
Joe Barnes, no.
Harriet Moore, yes.
Mrs. Eliot Pratt, no.
Vilhjalmur Stefansson, yes.
Rose Rubin
Rose Somerville
Robert S. Lynd
Wm. W. Lancaster
Ruth Carter, yes.
Jack Shepherd, yes.
Kathleen Barnes, yes.
Robert W. Barnett, yes.
Ch'ao-ting Chi, yes.
Andrew Grajdanzev.
Edward C. Carter, yes.
Sir Stafford Cripps, yes.
Rossinger, yes.
T. A. Bisson, no.
Harry Price, yes.
Luther Tucker, no.
Sam Harper, no.
John Hazard.
W. D. C.
Faymonville, yes.
Geoffrey Wilson, ?.
McCann, no.
Muhle, yes.

Mr. MANDEL. Finally I have a letter taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated March 14, 1938, addressed to Mr. Frederick V. Field, from Edward C. Carter, as follows:

DEAR FRED: I have accepted Corliss Lamont's invitation to speak at the Hippodrome on the evening of Thursday, March 24, on the Soviet Union and present world events. The other speakers will be Troyanovsky and Stefansson. I am wondering whether there are any points that you would like me to make on behalf of the American Council. The meeting is held under the auspices of an ad hoc committee of which Corliss Lamont is chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that an ad hoc committee of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. I believe it would be an ad hoc committee of the American Council of the Soviet-American Friendship.

Mr. MORRIS. May that be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 218" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 218

NEW YORK CITY, March 14, 1938.

Mr. FREDERICK V. FIELD,
San Francisco.

DEAR FRED: I have accepted Corliss Lamont's invitation to speak at the Hippodrome on the evening of Thursday, March 24, on the Soviet Union and present world events. The other speakers will be Troyanovsky and Stefannson. I am wondering whether there are any points that you would like me to make on behalf of the American Council. The meeting is held under the auspices of an ad hoc committee of which Corliss Lamont is chairman.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know Anna Louise Strong?

Mr. BUDENZ. I knew her very well indeed for a number of years.

Mr. MORRIS. Was she a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Always she was during my membership in the party.

Mr. MORRIS. Was she a long and trusted member of the party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Very much so; engaged in the confidential work for the Communist International. That was told me by J. Peters and many others.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, have you any letters indicating that Anna Louise Strong was associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. Her book is reviewed entitled "This Soviet World," in Pacific Affairs for December 1936, on pages 611 to 612. She has an article in Pacific Affairs for June 1941, on page 11, entitled "Eighth Route Regions in North China," and also an article "Dawn Out of China," appearing in Pacific Affairs for September 1949, on page 454.

Here is also an excerpt from Pacific Affairs for December 1936 appearing on pages 611 and 612 in the review of this Soviet World by Anna Louise Strong, the review being written by Owen Lattimore, and I quote:

Her book as a whole is good confrontation of the Soviet ideas of democracy, originality and individuality, and the foreign idea of regimentation.

Mr. MORRIS. May those references of Mr. Mandel be incorporated?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 219" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 219

ANNA LOUISE STRONG

Strong, Anna Louise, This Soviet World, 611–612, reviewed.
Source: Volume 9, December 1936, Pacific Affairs (p. 14).
Strong, Anna Louise, Eighth Route Regions in North China, 154–165, article.
Source: Volume 14, June 1941, Pacific Affairs (p. 11).
Strong, A. L., Dawn Out of China, 302.
Source: Pacific Affairs, Volume 22, September 1949 (p. 454).

This Soviet World, by ANNA LOUISE STRONG

(Reviewed by Owen Lattimore, p. 611–612)

"Her book as a whole is a good confrontation of the Soviet idea of democracy, originality and individuality, and the foreign idea of regimentation" (Pacific Affairs, December 1936).

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know Ella Winter, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know of her by official declarations.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know she is a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes, repeatedly and over my entire period of membership. She was a very active Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. Is her membership in the Communist Party rather an open fact?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think it must be open. Many people know it.

Mr. SOURWINE. When you say repeatedly, Mr. Budenz, you don't mean she was repeatedly a member. You mean that you repeatedly heard references to her within the party.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right, and official references. She was quite active and reports of hers or reference to her work on the west coast and in other places came to the attention of the national headquarters repeatedly.

Mr. MANDEL. Ella Winter is the author of a book review appearing in Pacific Affairs in 1934, pages 473 and 474. In the March 1935 issue of Pacific Affairs, on page 87, we find the following quote in reference to Ella Winter, and her article What Next in California. And it says she speaks of the hard-hitting and hard-fighting minority that heads the workers' fight in California, the Communist Party."

Then we have some letters here. One is a letter dated February 8, 1935, to Mrs. Ella Winter from Catherine Porter, who has been previously identified as a member of the staff of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

DEAR MRS. WINTER: Thank you for your note of the 24th. Your editorial was received in ample time after all. The March issue of the magazine is now in the press and you will receive your copy shortly.

Enclosed is our check for $25 in payment for the editorial.

I am somewhat embarrassed about the book review, especially since I see that Joe Barnes was quite indefinite about the matter in his letter of September 24. As a matter of fact, we do not pay for book reviews, and this has always been made quite clear to our reviewers * * *.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may this and the reviews mentioned by Mr. Mandel by Ella Winter be incorporated into the record?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 220 and 221" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 220

ELLA WINTER

Articles in Pacific Affairs: Book review, 1934, pages 473–474.

Ella Winter, What Next in California, speaks of "the hard-fighting and hard-hitting minority that heads the workers' fight in California, the Communist Party" (Pacific Affairs, p. 87, March 1935).

EXHIBIT No. 221

FEBRUARY 8, 1935.

MRS. ELLA WINTER,
Box 855, Carmel, Calif.

DEAR MRS. WINTER: Thank you for your note of the 24th. Your editorial was received im ample time after all. The March issue of the magazine is now in the press and you will receive your copy shortly.

Enclosed is our check for $25 in payment for the editorial.

I am somewhat embarrassed about the book review, especially since I see that Joe Barnes was quite indefinite about the matter in his letter of September 24. As a matter of fact, we do not pay for book reviews, and this has always been made quite clear to our reviewers. Ordinarily editorials are not paid for, either, but Mr. Lattimore made a special exception in your case as he was very anxious to have that subject treated by you. I am more than sorry that the question of fee for book reviews was not made clear to you earlier.

Sincerely yours,

CATHERINE PORTER.

Mr. MANDEL. Finally, I have a list of articles by Ella Winter which appeared in the Daily Worker with the dates and pages which I would like to introduce into the record.

Mr. MORRIS. And the purpose of this is to show that Ella Winter contributed to the Daily Worker and was at the same time a contributor to the Institute of Pacific Relations? Is that the purpose of that, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you accept that into the record, Mr. Chairman?

Senator SMITH. It is so ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 122" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 222

ELLA WINTER

Following is a list of contributions to the Communist publication, the Daily Worker, and the Worker, by Ella Winter:

Worker. (See Daily Worker for December 24, 1931, p. 3).
Daily Worker. (See issue of June 25, 1934, p. 5, col. 1).
Worker. (See Daily Worker December 21, 1935, p. 3).
Daily Worker. (See issue of March 6, 1936, p. 5).
Daily Worker. (See issue of August 12, 1936, p. 1).
Daily Worker. (See issue of February 12, 1937, p. 2).
Daily Worker. (See issue of October 3, 1947, p. 6).
Daily Worker. (See issue of October 2, 1947, p. 6).

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the record to show that when we had a discussion this morning about certain policies represented by the Daily Worker as being the policy of the United States State Department issued by Sumner Welles, we have nothing at this time to show what the State Department's official attitude was at that time. I suggest that we set in motion an inquiry to find out exactly what the situation was so that the record will be complete in that respect.

Senator SMITH. So that the record may carry a copy of whatever statement was made by Mr. Welles at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. In other words, I think the record should have the official statement.

Senator SMITH. I think so, too. We will follow up on that.

Mr. SOURWINE. In expanding on that, in fairness to the State Department might it be well if the committee requested the Department for a brief statement of what the Department's official policy was at that particular time and permit it to be entered in the record?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. May the order be made for entry of it at the point where reference was made in this morning's hearing?

Senator SMITH. Yes. It would seem to me that the statement which was printed in the Daily Worker, if that is called to the attention of the State Department, they can say whether or not they issued such a statement as was attributed to Mr. Welles. They either know or don't know whether or not such a statement was issued.

Mr. MORRIS. Our record has nothing to show that.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce at this time for the following probative value, letters from the Institute of Pacific Relations files by and concerning Sumner Welles. The purpose of introducing these letters is to show the degree of influence that the Institute of Pacific Relations was able to bear on Sumner Welles, who was for a period of time Under Secretary of State. I wonder if you will receive those letters into evidence at this time.

Senator SMITH. Not for the purpose——

Mr. MORRIS. For that particular purpose.

Senator SMITH. For that particular purpose only, yes.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a letter dated October 21, 1946, addressed to R. M. Fowler, 2279 Sun Life Building, Montreal, Canada, from Edward C. Carter.

Senator SMITH. Where was that found?

Mr. MANDEL. Found in the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I quote an excerpt from that letter:

DEAR BOB: I understand that Mr. Sumner Welles is going to be your guest shortly. As you know, he is really a very great man and a terrible loss to the United States State Department. You ought to know that consistently throughout the last 10 years whenever I have gone to Welles with any request on behalf of the IPR he has instantaneously and generously responded—cutting red tape—speeding the IPR on its way. He has always professed sincere admiration for the work of the IPR. A few months ago, he accepted the chairmanship of the Washington group of the IPR on the understanding that he couldn't give time actively for several months so we have not been making demands on him, but expect his help at a few key points during the coming winter. I am sure he will have greatly enjoyed his Canadian trip.

That is an excerpt from the letter.

Senator SMITH. What is the date?

Mr. MORRIS. October 21, 1946. Mr. Chairman, may I introduce that into the record for the stipulated purpose that I have indicated?

Senator SMITH. Yes. Have you identified the file?

Mr. MORRIS. It is significant, Senator. We want it introduced for that particular purpose, which I think is apparent from reading that letter.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 223" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 223

OCTOBER 21, 1946.

R. M. FOWLER, ESQ.,
2279 Sun Life Building,
Montreal, Canada.

DEAR BOB: I understand that Mr. Sumner Welles is going to be your guest shortly. As you know, he is really a very great man and a terrible loss to the United States State Department. You ought to know that consistently throughout the last 10 years whenever I have gone to Welles with any request on behalf of the IPR he has instantaneously and generously responded—cutting red tape—speeding the IPR on its way. He has always professed sincere admiration for the work of the IPR. A few months ago, he accepted the chairmanship of the Washington group of the IPR on the understanding that he couldn't give time actively for several months so we have not been making demands on him, but expect his help at a few key points during the coming winter. I am sure he will have greatly enjoyed his Canadian trip.

If it is natural for you to do so, I hope you will draw him out a bit on the IPR—remind him that the Canadian Institute is the very honored Canadian section of the IPR and, if you get any reaction that would be helpful to me, be sure and let me know.

It would do no harm for you to place on one of your tables in your library at home in Montreal a copy of Windows on the Pacific and IPR books which I am mailing to you today under separate cover.

With all good wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a letter date June 6, 1946 to The Honorable Sumner Welles, from Edward C. Carter, taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I read the last paragraph:

I was greatly intrigued by Walter Lippman's suggestion this morning that you become the American delegate on the Security Council. This would certainly be a great step forward and I hope Mr. Truman and Mr. Byrnes will so regard it. Although my own personal preference would be to see you serving as Secretary of State, perhaps this is too ideal a solution to hope for.

Mr. MORRIS. May we introduce that into the record, and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 224" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 224

JUNE 6, 1946.

The Honorable SUMNER WELLES,
P. O. Box 4669, Anacostia Station, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WELLES: Would there be any chance of your having half an hour free when Mr. Pollard and I could call on you at Oxon Hill any time on Tuesday, June 11, before 3:30 p. m.? I have to be at Mr. Justice Black's at 4 p. m. and then go to the station to take the train for Detroit. But any time in the morning or early afternoon would be convenient for me and Mr. Pollard.

Lord Inverchapel has asked that the dinner which we wanted to give him be postponed until the autumn. He apparently wants to get acclimatized before doing much speaking.

As example is frequently more persuasive than exhortation, I am wondering whether you would be able to consider making a contribution of $1,500 this year to the over-all national budget of the American Council of $250,000. Such a gift would carry great weight with others, both nationally and in the Washington area, and would be of great material aid in our plans for a more adequate service in Washington.

I was greatly intrigued by Walter Lippmann's suggestion this morning that you become the American delegate on the Security Council. This would certainly be a great step forward and I hope Mr. Truman and Mr. Byrnes will so regard it. Although my own personal preference would be to see you serving as Secretary of State, perhaps this is too ideal a solution to hope for.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a letter dated March 15, 1946, addressed to the Honorable Sumner Welles from Edward C. Carter.

DEAR MR. WELLES: This is to inquire the approximate date of your return to Washington. A few days after your return I would like to call to see you when you might conveniently spare an hour for an unhurried talk regarding IPR problems and policies. Demands on the IPR are steadily increasing, and we want sound advice as to which of the many calls are more important.

That is signed by Edward C. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I introduce that into the record and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 225" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 225

MARCH 15, 1946.

The Honorable SUMNER WELLES,
250 Via Bellaria, West Palm Beach, Fla.

DEAR MR. WELLES: This is to inquire the approximate date of your return to Washington. A few days after your return I would like to call to see you when you might conveniently spare an hour for an unhurried talk regarding IPR problems and policies. Demands on the IPR are steadily increasing and we want sound advice as to which of the many calls are most important.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MANDEL. The next is a letter on the stationery of Sumner Welles dated April 22, 1946, to Mr. Carter, and signed by Sumner Welles:

DEAR MR. CARTER: Thank you for your letter of April 19. Your letter of April 8, of which you have been kind enough to enclose a copy, crossed my most recent letter to you in the mails. The information you send me with regard to the selection of a vice chairman of the Washington group is of course most agreeable to me. I do not know Mr. Graves personally, but I shall needless to say be delighted to be associated with him.

With kind regards, believe me, sincerely yours.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I introduce that into the record and ask to have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

Senator SMITH. Where was this found?

Mr. MANDEL. That is taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 226" and is as follows:)

OXON HILL MANOR, OXON HILL, MD.,
April 22, 1946.

EDWARD C. CARTER, ESQ.,
Director, American Council,
Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc.,
1 East Fifty-fourth Street,
New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. CARTER: Thank you for your letter of April 19.

Your letter of April 8, of which you have been kind enough to enclose a copy, crossed my most recent letter to you in the mails.

The information you send me with regard to the selection of the vice chairman of the Washington group is, of course, most agreeable to me. I do not know Mr. Graves personally, but I shall, needless to say, be delighted to be associated with him.

With my kind regards, believe me
Sincerely yours,

SUMNER WELLES.

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a letter dated June 30, 1942, addressed to Mr. Harold Young, Assistant to the Vice President, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C., from Edward C. Carter.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: This is to thank you for your letter of June 11, asking whether I could call to see you next time I visit Washington.

I am planning to be there all day Thursday, July 2, and would appreciate the privilege of talking with you. I am relatively free all day except that I am tied up from 12:30 to 1 with an engagement with Mr. Welles.

Ultimately I am anxious to talk about our proposed IPR conference with Mr. Wallace, but I can do this on some other visit after you and I have had our preliminary talk.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

By way of explanation, Mr. Young was Mr. Wallace's secretary.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I introduce that into the record and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. Is he referring there to Mr. Henry Wallace?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 227," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 227

129 EAST FIFTY-SECOND STREET,
New York City, June 30, 1942.

MR. HAROLD YOUNG,
Assistant to the Vice President,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: This is to thank you for your letter of June 11, asking whether I could call to see you next time I visit Washington.

I am planning to be there all day Thursday, July 2, and would appreciate the privilege of talking with you. I am relatively free all day except that I am tied up from 12:30 to 1 with an engagement with Mr. Welles.

Ultimately I am anxious to talk about our proposed IPR conference with Mr. Wallace, but I can do this on some other visit after you and I have had our preliminary talk.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a letter dated June 29, 1938, addressed to Frederick V. Field. The letter is unsigned. It is taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. The letter reads as follows:

DEAR FRED: Upon advancing into Carter's office, your June 23 letter in hand, I was confronted with his air-mail letter to you of June 27, enclosing the letter to John Thompson. There is nothing more to add at the moment, though I know that Carter is keeping in touch with Welles and Duggan in the State Department and with any other contacts and suggestions that he can find, and would welcome any specific suggestions you might make as to how the Pacific Council could explore the possibilities more thoroughly. At present it appears that any contacts we might develop in that part of the world would have to be through individuals, as unofficial organizations in the field of foreign affairs seem to be nonexistent. Could you let us know exactly what the members of the American Council to which you refer would propose doing?

The rest is a comment I don't think it necessary to read.

Mr. SOURWINE. You spoke of that as a letter. As a matter of fact, it is a carbon copy of a letter; is it not?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. The original letter may well have been signed and, for all you know, was signed; is that correct?

Mr. MANDEL. So it would appear.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know whether the original letter was sent?

Mr. MANDEL. I do not.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I note that the address on the letter is 129 East Fifty-second Street, which is the address of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Will you receive that into evidence, Mr. Chairman?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 228" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 228

129 EAST FIFTY-SECOND STREET,
New York, June 29, 1938.

Mr. FREDERICK V. FIELD,
1795 California Street, San Francisco, Calif.

DEAR FRED: Upon advancing into Carter's office, your June 23 letter in hand, I was confronted with his air-mail letter to you of June 27 enclosing the letter to John Thompson. There is nothing more to add at the moment, though I know that Carter is keeping in touch with Welles and Duggan in the State Department and with any other contacts and suggestions that he can find, and would welcome any specific suggestions you might make as to how the Pacific Council could explore the possibilities more thoroughly. At present it appears that any contacts we might develop in that part of the world would have to be through individuals, as unofficial organizations in the field of foreign affairs seem to be nonexistent. Could you let us know exactly what the members of the American Council to which you refer would propose doing?

With reference to your query about Saionji you will have already seen in Carter's long letter to Alsberg that he had invited Saionji to come over. We have now heard that it will be impossible for him to come, but that Takayanagi will be coming in July to discuss the various problems raised for the Japanese Council by the secretariat inquiry. Carter will be writing you in detail about this point, so I won't elaborate.

I delivered the Bretholtz family, bag and baggage, at 24 West Fifty-fifth this morning. They are extremely pleased to be there, and we are planning to drink a suitable toast to the absentee landlord on Friday evening.

My regards to Edith and Lila and Gail.

As ever,

———— ————.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a letter, a carbon of a letter, from the Department of State, dated March 17, 1942. It comes from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and is addressed to Mr. Edward C. Carter, and signed by Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary, and attached is a small slip which says: "Please note that this is not to be published," with the initials "ECC" presumably E. C. Carter. This is the letter:

MY DEAR MR. CARTER: I have your letter of March 11, 1942, in which you inquire with regard to the practical value of the publications and activities of the Institute of Pacific Relations. The receipt is also acknowledged of similar letters addressed to other officers of the Department.

The importance of the development of an informed public opinion with regard to problems affecting foreign relations requires no special emphasis. In the development of such a public opinion, a valuable service is rendered by organizations which seek to present in readily accessible form studies by serious scholars of current problems and to stimulate an intelligent discussion of these problems. While for obvious reasons the Department of State has necessarily adopted the practice of refraining from endorsing or sponsoring any particular private organization, I am glad to say that in the opinion of officers of the Department who are especially familiar with the activities of the Institute of Pacific Relations, the publications of the institute have been of interest and value, and the institute has been making a substantial contribution to the development of an informed public opinion.

I note and appreciate your statement that you propose not to use this letter publicly.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will you accept that and mark it as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 229" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 229

Please note that this is not to be published—E. C. C. [Typewritten note attached to letter.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1942.

Mr. EDWARD CARTER.
Institute of Pacific Relations,
129 East Fifty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. CARTER: I have your letter of March 11, 1942, in which you inquire with regard to the practical value of the publications and activities of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The importance of the development of an informed public opinion with regard to problems affecting foreign relations requires no special emphasis. In the development of such a public opinion, a valuable service is rendered by organizations which seek to present in readily accessible form studies by serious scholars of current problems and to stimulate an intelligent discussion of these problems. While for obvious reasons the Department of State has necessarily adopted the practice of refraining from endorsing or sponsoring any particular private organization, I am glad to say that, in the opinion of officers of the Department who are especially familiar with the activities of the Institute of Pacific Relations, the publications of the institute have been of interest and value, and the institute has been making a substantial contribution to the development of an informed public opinion.

I note and appreciate your statement that you propose not to use this letter publicly.

Sincerely yours,

SUMNER WELLES,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a photostat of a letter on the stationery of the Department of State, dated July 2, 1940. This photostat was made at my direction from the document in the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. It is addressed to Mr. Edward C. Carter, signed Sumner Welles, Under Secretary.

DEAR MR. CARTER: Please accept my thanks for your courtesy in sending me, with your letter of June 28, 1940, a first draft of Mr. Lattimore's article "Empire Lies in the East." I have noted with interest the contents of the article and am bringing it to the attention of some of my associates here for their information."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will you accept that into evidence and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 230" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 230

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 2, 1940.

Mr. EDWARD C. CARTER,
Secretary-General, Institute of Pacific Relations, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. CARTER: Please accept my thanks for your courtesy in sending me with your letter of June 28, 1940, a first draft of Mr. Lattimore's article, "Empire Lies in the East."

I have noted with interest the contents of the article and am bringing it to the attention of some of my associates here for their information.

Sincerely yours,

SUMNER WELLES, Under Secretary.

Mr. MANDEL. The next is a letter, a copy of a letter from Harper & Bros., dated July 31, 1946, from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, addressed to Mr. Carter, E. C. Carter:

As I phoned your office today, we are to publish this fall a book by Sumner Welles to be entitled "Where Are We Heading?" which will deal with various aspects of the present international scene.

The book is to contain a few maps, one of which is to be a map of China showing the areas controlled by the National and Communist Governments. When we asked Mr. Welles for further details in this connection, which we could turn over to the professional map men, he replied, "I would suggest that the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, might be the best authority on the second map (that of China) and I have no doubt that Mr. Carter will take a personal interest in giving us all the help needed."

That is an excerpt from the letter.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I introduce this into the record, again for the same limited purpose?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

Mr. MORRIS. May it be marked the next consecutive exhibit.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 231" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 231

HARPER & BROS.,
New York, N. Y., July 31, 1946.

Mr. EDWARD C. CARTER,
American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations,
New York City.

DEAR MR. CARTER: As I phoned your office today, we are to publish this fall a book by Sumner Welles to be entitled "Where Are We Heading?" which will deal with various aspects of the present international scene.

The book is to contain a few maps, one of which is to be a map of China showing the areas controlled by the National and Communist Governments. When we asked Mr. Welles for further details in this connection, which we could turn over to the professional map man, he replied, "I would suggest that the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, might be the best authority on the second map (that of China) and I have no doubt that Mr. Carter will take a personal interest in giving us all the help needed."

Any information which you or your organization can give us will be greatly appreciated. You may think it wise to use shading to indicate not only the known controlled areas, but also disputed areas or regions where the boundaries are now in doubt.

We shall look forward to hearing from you in the matter.

Sincerely yours,

BEULAH HAGEN,
Assistant to Cass Canfield.

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter to Miss Beulah Hagen, of Harper Bros., taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated August 1, 1946, from Edward C. Carter:

DEAR MISS HAGEN: Your letter of July 31 reached me this morning with Mr. Sumner Welles' suggestion that we cooperate in supplying your map maker with data showing the areas of China controlled by the Nationalist and Communist Governments. This is to assure you that we will do our best to give you the expert help Mr. Welles and you desire. It is somewhat of a tricky business because some of the marginal areas are in a constant state of flux.

Those of my colleagues who have the most precise data happen to be away from the office this week, but if you can wait until next week I think we can be of assistance.

Perhaps you will want to send up your map maker with such material as he already has, and then we can tackle the problem together.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I introduce that into evidence and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 232" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 232

AUGUST 1, 1946.

Miss BEULAH HAGAN,
Harper & Bros., New York, N. Y.

DEAR MISS HAGAN: Your letter of July 31 reached me this morning with Mr. Sumner Welles' suggestion that we cooperate in supplying your map maker with data showing the areas of China controlled by the Nationalist and Communist Governments. This is to assure you that we will do our best to give you the expert help Mr. Welles and you desire. It is somewhat of a tricky business because some of the marginal areas are in a constant state of flux.

Those of my colleagues who have the most precise data happen to be away from the office this week, but if you can wait until next week I think we can be of assistance.

Perhaps you will want to send up your map maker with such material as he already has, and then we can tackle the problem together.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MORRIS. The next letter that Mr. Mandel is about to read I think will give significance to the last two, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter dated August 6, 1946, to Miss Beulah Hagan, taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and I read the next to the last paragraph.

Mr. MORRIS. Who wrote this letter, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. This is from Edward C. Carter to Miss Beulah Hagan, of Harper Bros.

Whether you will want to adopt our consultant's broader phrase for the Communists by calling the area Communist-Democrats is up to you and Mr. Welles. It has this advantage: that it gives cognizance to the fact that in many areas the sympathizers with the third party—the Democratic League—are working hard to bring about a coalition between the Communists and the Kuomintang.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, doesn't that further show something else? Would you read the preceding paragraph, too?

Mr. MANDEL (reading:)

I think you can improve on the designation of the Times map by using the word "Kuomintang" at the top and the bottom in place of "Nationalists."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the idea there was to make the recommendation that the "Nationalists" be changed to "Kuomintang" and the term "Communists" be changed to "Communist-Democrats."

Do you have any comment to make on that, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have not, except I think it speaks for itself.

Mr. MORRIS. May that be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator SMITH. So ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 233" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 233

AUGUST 6, 1946.

Miss BEULAH HAGEN,
Harper & Bros., New York, N. Y.

DEAR MISS HAGEN: My third consultant has just brought in this copy of the New York Times map of Sunday, July 28, with a few changes in ink.

He thinks that this is about as nearly accurate as you can get from this distance.

He has located Changchun, which I incorrectly on the phone this morning, thought the Times had put in the Communist area. But this is not the case.

The name "Changchun" at the spot indicated should certainly be included in Mr. Welles' map.

Then it is rather important to add to the map "Kalgan" and to show the cross-country railroad which my consultant has put in in pen.

I think you can improve on the designation of the Times map by using the word "Kuomintang" at the top and the bottom in place of "Nationalists."

Whether you will want to adopt our consultant's broader phrase for the Communists by calling the area Communist-Democrats is up to you and Mr. Welles. It has this advantage: that it gives cognizance to the fact that in many areas the sympathizers with the third party—the Democratic League—are working hard to bring about a coalition between the Communists and the Kuomintang.

If I get any further details I will let you know.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, do you know Ilona Ralf Sues?

Mr. BUDENZ. I do. I know her personally.

Mr. MORRIS. Was she a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. She was a member of the Communist Party who, under Communist orders, entered the home of Chiang Kai-shek.

Mr. MORRIS. Entered the home of Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. She was a friend or attendant or secretary or something of Madame Chiang Kai-shek, if I remember correctly. At any rate she had very close relationships with Chiang Kai-shek. When I say "entered the home," I don't necessarily mean she lived there, though my impression is that she did.

Mr. MORRIS. You mean she had access to the family circle?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. You knew her to be a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have met her personally as a member of the Communist Party and I have talked to her at some length about her experiences.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that she wrote Shark Fins and Millet?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, have you available now——

Mr. MANDEL. Not now.

Mr. MORRIS. May we submit the information on Miss Ilona Ralf Sues later in the record?

Do you know Andrew Steiger?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know him through official words in the Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know he was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. According to my memory he wrote a number of pro-Communist articles some years ago. I mean for the Daily Worker. That is my remembrance.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Budenz can testify more extensively along the lines that we are pursuing today, but we would like to develop our research a bit to keep pace with that, and we ask that Mr. Budenz, after a few final questions, be permitted to leave but stay under subpena for a short period of time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, if you are going to stop at this time asking Mr. Budenz questions about the names of persons, I would like to inquire. Mr. Budenz has now testified on 2 days with respect to a number of names. Do you know how many of the persons who have been established as associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations Mr. Budenz has now identified as Communists?

Mr. MORRIS. My count runs to 43, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. Including the last name that was identified today?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were all of those names included in the list that was made a part of the record earlier, of persons who had connections with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MORRIS. No; there are some additions. There are some we did not have on the original list of 82.

Mr. SOURWINE. That were brought out by Mr. Budenz yesterday or today for the first time?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right, Mr. Sourwine. One other thing, Mr. Budenz. One of the Senators asked me if you would expatiate just a bit on the official Communist policy adopted in official meetings of the Communist Party to bring about the conquest of China. One of the members of the committee asked if you would further develop that.

Mr. BUDENZ. Of course the Communist Party changed its tactics and also its propaganda in accordance with the instructions from Moscow. If I had known this question was going to be asked, I could have brought you exactly the period by dates, but from my memory I don't want to be too exact. Originally the Communists in China were represented as extreme revolutionists. They were establishing soviets. At the same time, though, China occupied in Communist activities and propaganda a very prominent part always. From the very beginning of my entry into the party China was considered to be a key to world conquest. This is borne out by the constant emphasis of the Communist Party itself in demonstrations and in the publications on that score.

Now, as time went forward, particularly with the Communist Party in the United States, under the people's front policy, developing infiltration, and becoming more powerful in its influence in the country through its various agents, the policy in regard to China likewise was given a new twist, and as we see, the effort was to promote the idea of the Chinese Communists being a democratic force.

This was contrary to the previous propaganda.

After that, there was developed a coalition government, and this began, of course, in 1943, but it takes some time for a line to develop. It came to fruition in 1944 and 1945. And after I left the party, the idea of coalition government was stressed very emphatically as a task put upon the American Communist Party to win the United States to the idea of coalition government in China.

It was pointed out that this was an application of the constant Communist tactic of the united front, whereby you united with those who wished to destroy. This coalition government was to be applied not only in China but in Poland and the eastern European states and was to be popularized in the United States. We were particularly to stress it, though, in regard to China, in order to bring about a Red China, as Earl Browder said in speaking to the national committee as early as the latter part of 1943, and again in 1944. The task given to the American party by Moscow was to so condition American opinion and the American Government as to assure a Red Poland and a Red China at that particular time, this under the banner of coalition government.

Senator WATKINS. How did they react to General Marshall's appointment as Ambassador to succeed Patrick Hurley?

Mr. MORRIS. Senator, may I say that that point came up this morning.

Mr. Budenz left the Communist Party in 1945, and I think at that time General Marshall had not assumed the position of Secretary of State.

Mr. BUDENZ. General Hurley had not yet resigned?

Senator WATKINS. In other words, the witness does not know how they officially reacted to it.

Mr. BUDENZ. I do not, except from reading the Daily Worker, and I could not inform you on that offhand.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz would like to restrict his testimony, and we are asking him to, to only those incidents that took place during the period of his membership in the Communist Party.

Mr. Budenz, will you supplement the testimony you have just given, namely, that the coalition government was the official Communist Party policy, by going through your personal records and sending to the committee whatever additional documents you can give along those lines?

Mr. BUDENZ. I shall, very gladly.

Mr. MORRIS. And Mr. Sourwine, when you asked the question before about how many people were identified, I want to stress that that number did not include incidental names that turned up in the course of testimony that were not directly related to the Institute of Pacific Relations.

One name I had in mind is Louis Dolivet.

Mr. SOURWINE. I meant to inquire with regard to names that you had posed to Mr. Budenz for purposes of identification.

Mr. MORRIS. My figure includes only those who were associated directly with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

And Mr. Budenz, will you remain available to this committee, so that we can get these last bits of testimony straightened out?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

I would like to put on the record here in that respect, so that it won't be forgotten by me or the committee, that among these documents will be a statement by the Chinese Communist Party to the Communists, that while the Communists were to the outer world advocating coalition government, the Chinese Communists were telling the Communists of the world that they were for coalition government in order to destroy Chiang Kai-shek and impair American imperialism.

Senator SMITH. The hearing will recess now until further call of the chairman as to when the next meeting will be held.

(Whereupon, at 3:35 p. m., Thursday, August 23, 1951, the hearing was recessed subject to the call of the chairman.)

22848—52—pt. 2——23

INDEX

(NOTE.—The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee attaches no significance to the mere fact of the appearance of the name of an individual or an organization in this index.)

A Page

ABC stabilization fund 481
Acheson, Dean 428, 444, 445, 494, 639
Ackerman, Dr. Phyllis 410, 620, 622
Adams, Samuel 548
Adler, Solomon (Schloma) 420, 434, 493
Administrator of Export Control 390
AFL. (See American Federation of Labor.)
Agriculture Department 419, 432, 464, 477, 488, 577
Air Force (United States) 597
Akiyama 369
Al 421
Allen, Edward W 568
Allen, James S 439, 471, 640
Allen, Raymond B 568
Allied Labor News 658, 659, 662
Allied Powers 354, 379, 419, 560, 561, 562, 617, 622
Allied Supreme Command 611, 615
All India National Congress 656
Alling, Paul 445
Alsberg 365, 366, 694
Alson, Joseph 603
Amerasia 439, 474, 518, 555, 569, 572, 609, 618, 619, 625, 653, 661, 665
American and Allied War Relief 445
American-British-Chinese currency stabilization fund 390
American Committee for Chinese War Orphans. (See China Aid Council.)
American Committee for International Studies 390
American Communist Party. (See Communist Party, United States.)
American Consulate (Harbin) 507, 508
American Consulate (Shanghai) 507
American Council on Education 445
American Council Paper No. 2 572, 573
American Embassy (Chungking) 638
American Embassy (Nanking) 493
American Embassy (Tokyo) 451
American Express Co. (Hong Kong) 660, 661
American Federation of Labor 444, 445, 607, 633, 640, 658, 669
American Fisheries Publications 648
American Friends of the Chinese People 411, 439
American League for Peace and Democracy. (See China Aid Council.)
American Legion 377, 399
American Navy 379
American occupation authorities (Japan) 367
American Peace Mobilization 527
American Populist 565
American President Lines 444
American Red Cross 432
American Revolution 544
American-Russian Institute 433, 444, 488, 645, 663, 664, 686
American School (Shanghai) 577
American Society for Russian Relief 539

Page
Americans United ---- 633
Anderson, Sherwood ---- 411
Anglo-German-American cartel system ---- 608
Angus ---- 471, 472
Annals ---- 571, 572
Anti-Hitler Germans ---- 464
AP (see Associated Press) ---- 386
A. P. O ---- 395, 396, 426, 427, 652
Argall, Phyllis ---- 668
Army Air Intelligence. (See Army Intelligence.)
Army Intelligence (Military Intelligence Division) ---- 353, 354, 357, 359, 388, 391, 392, 393, 394, 400, 416, 417, 481, 572, 573
Army and Navy Club (Washington, D. C.) ---- 586
Arnold, John (see Abraham Chapman) ---- 643
Arnold, Julean ---- 576, 577
Asahi Institute of the Far East ---- 362, 363
Asahi Shimbun ---- 367, 370
Asia Magazine ---- 396
Asiaticus ---- 425
Associated Press (AP) ---- 386
Atcheson, George ---- 618
Atherton, J. Ballard ---- 578
Atkinson, Brooks ---- 638
Atkinson, Henry A ---- 409, 410
Atlanta prison ---- 543
Atlantic Charter ---- 613, 633
Atlantic Monthly ---- 544
Atomic Energy Commission ---- 486
Austern, Miss Hilda (Mrs. Bretholz) ---- 414, 418, 471, 476, 641, 642, 660, 663, 664, 695
Austral-Asiatic Bulletin ---- 385, 386
Australian Legation (Washington, D. C.) ---- 440
Axis ---- 495, 597, 598, 600, 607, 638

B

Bachrach, Marian ---- 581
Badoglio ---- 552
Baidukov, George ---- 645
Baikal-Amur Railway ---- 675
Baker, Newton D ---- 684
Balamuth, Louis ---- 485, 486, 487
Ball, W. McMahon ---- 385
Ballantine, Joseph W ---- 568, 618
Bank of Indochina ---- 669
Barlow, Samuel L. M ---- 410
Barnes, Joseph ---- 424, 425, 431, 432, 444, 490, 491, 494, 541, 542, 543, 544, 648, 683, 687, 689
Barnes, Kathleen ---- 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 687
Barnett, Robert W. (Bob) ---- 389, 391, 397, 445, 474, 481, 575, 576, 577, 651, 660, 670, 671, 680, 681, 687
Barrett, Col. David ---- 636, 638
Bassett, Arthur ---- 432
Bates, Searle ---- 432, 444
Batory (steamship) ---- 590, 591
Baudoin, Paul ---- 669
Baumgartner, Dr. Leona ---- 410
Baxter, James P ---- 428, 444
Bean, Louis ---- 432
Beecroft, Eric ---- 445, 483
Belshaw ---- 577
Bentley, Elizabeth (Helen Johns) ---- 403, 447, 452, 652, 660, 677, 678
Benzon, Wilfred ---- 441
Berg, Dorothy ---- 390
Berle, Adolph A ---- 432, 444, 445, 602, 603
Berliner, Taggeblatt ---- 371

Page
Bethune, Dr. Norman 560
Bett, Mr 386
Beukema, Col. Herman 432, 444
Bibby, Dr. Henry L 409, 410
Biddle, Attorney General 409
Big Four 611
Biggerstaff, Knight 568
Big Three 606, 607
Binder, Carroll 432, 444
Biographical Register (Department of State) 495, 497, 576, 577
Bissell, General 495
Bisson, T. A 386, 387, 389, 393, 474, 477, 479, 529, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 620, 622, 657, 658, 687
Bittelman, Alexander 555, 556
Blankfort, Michael 582
Bloch, Kurt 390, 474, 475
Blos, Dr. Peter 410
Board of Economic Warfare 384, 385, 393, 419, 432, 440, 443, 444
Bolsheviks 476, 647
Bolton, Frances 440
Bonnet, George 603
Boone Daniel 547, 549
Borg, Dorothy 474
Borton, Hugh 471, 472, 568
Bourgman, Vassily 684, 685
Bradley, Lyman R 409, 410, 659, 660
Brando de Boukelitz 501
Brandt 473
Braunich, Arthur 487
Breines, Simon 685
Bretholz, Mrs. (See Miss Hilda Austern.)
Bretholz family 695
Bretton Woods 607
Bridges, Styles 639
British Embassy (Tokyo) 372, 373, 374
British Embassy (Washington, D. C.) 440
British Government 390
British Labor Government 617
British Navy 578
Broek 660
Brooks, Overton 597
Brothman, Abraham 404
Browder, Earl 405, 415, 435, 438, 520, 521, 528, 535, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 548, 550, 551, 559, 560, 562, 563, 564, 593, 594, 595, 598, 599, 600, 601, 605, 626, 643, 644, 657, 679, 700.
Brown, Fred 520, 521
Brown, H. Clifford 568
Brown, Irving 640
Brown, John 548
Brown, Norman 444, 445, 446, 483
Brownell, Lincoln C 568
Budenz, Louis Francis 513, 701
Bunch 445
Bunche, Ralph 432, 440, 443
Bundy, Harvey 446
Burden, W. A. M 494
Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce 432, 577
Bureau of the Budget 432
Burma Road 382
Burnham, James 674
Bykov, Col. Boris 488, 489, 490
Byrnes, James F 617, 618, 619, 633, 637, 639, 691, 692

C

Page
California University 375, 427, 444, 450, 474, 476, 670
Cameron, Angus 649, 650
Canadian diplomatic mission in Tokyo 375
Canadian Embassy (Tokyo) 374, 375, 450, 451
Canadian External Affairs Ministry 451
Canadian Foreign Service 378
Canadian Legation (Washington, D. C.) 440
Canfield, Cass 697
Canning, William Martin 466, 487
Carlin, Beatrice 447
Carlson, Gen. Evans F 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588
Carmon, Walt 496
Carnegie Corp 433
Carter, Edward C 355, 364, 366, 373–375, 378, 382, 383, 385, 390–392, 399, 408, 424–426, 428–434, 438, 440, 449–466, 470, 471, 473, 474, 476, 477, 481, 483, 526, 528, 535, 536, 537, 539, 568, 573, 574, 583–589, 590, 591, 620, 630, 631, 642, 643, 648, 660, 661, 664, 669–673, 680, 681, 683, 684–687, 691, 692, 694–698
Carter, Mrs. Edward C 409, 410, 620, 622
Carter, Ruth 687
Carter, William D 414, 415
CBS. (See Columbia Broadcasting System.)
Central Powers 379
Chamberlain, William Henry 676
Chambers, Jay David Whittaker 420, 421, 487–497
Chapman, Abraham (John Arnold) 640, 643, 644
Chen, Mrs 537
Chi, Dr. Chao Ting 409, 410, 411, 426, 431, 435, 474, 475, 481, 525, 687
Chicago Daily News 432, 444
Chicago University 445, 474, 475, 485
Childs, Morris 605
China Aid Council 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 416, 436, 437, 677
China defense supplies 440
China Handbook 536
China spy ring 367, 370
China Today 652, 653
Chinese Communist Army 384, 531, 532, 582, 612
Chinese Central Government 623, 635
Chinese Communists. (See Communist Party, China.)
Chinese Government. (See Nationalist Chinese Government.)
Chinese Hand Laundry Alliance 411
Chinese News Service 535, 536, 537
Ching-wei, Wang 476
Chitral (steamship) 648
Cholmeley, Elsie Fairfax (Mary Epstein) 589, 590, 591
Chou, Professor 651
Christian Science Monitor 634, 635
Chuan, Mrs 680, 681
Chung-han, General Hu 596
Churchill, Winston 616, 617
Church League for Industrial Democracy 411
CIAA. (See Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.)
CIC 388, 591
CIO. (See Congress of Industrial Organizations.)
CIO News 445
City College. (See College of the City of New York.)
City College Teacher-Worker 467, 486
Civil War 545
Clapper, Raymond 433, 444
Claridge Hotel 478
Clark, Tom 581
Clayton, Will 494
Cleeve, Miss 472
Clise, Charles F 568
Clubb, Oliver Edmond 495, 496

Page
Coe, Frank 425, 426, 440, 443, 445, 446, 495
Coffee, Congressman 446
Coffee, John M 444, 633
COI. (See Coordinator of Information.)
College of the City of New York (City College) 466, 467, 469, 485, 486, 487
Collier, John 495
Collins, Henry 488, 489
Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS) 390
Columbia University 373, 374, 403, 433, 444, 449, 466, 467, 469, 474, 475, 476, 482, 483, 484, 485, 493, 494, 670
Comintern 383
Commerce Department 390
Commission on Publications 514
Committee on Appropriations (watchdog committee) 485
Communist-Democrats 698
Communist International 405, 514, 520, 521, 541, 545, 565, 640, 659
Communist International (Seventh World Congress) 545, 565
Communist Party ..... 373, 374, 381, 382, 386, 397, 399, 403–407, 412, 415–417, 421–423, 426, 431, 438, 439, 441–443, 446, 447, 450, 452, 453, 456, 460, 466, 467, 469, 472, 476, 482, 483–488, 490–493, 496, 472, 476, 482, 483–488, 490, 493, 496, 510, 513, 525, 527–530, 532–535, 540–547, 550–552, 554–563, 565–567, 572, 580, 581, 583, 584, 588, 593, 599, 601, 602, 604, 605, 619, 621, 623–626, 630–632, 634–640, 641, 643, 644, 646–650, 652, 654, 657–659, 662, 665, 667, 674, 677–680, 682, 686, 688, 689, 698–700.
Communist Party (China) ..... 377, 397, 398, 407, 434, 435, 436, 437, 456, 457, 458, 459, 461, 464, 465, 473, 521, 525, 529, 532, 533, 534, 538, 560, 563, 564, 565, 581, 582, 583, 594, 599, 600, 634, 635, 637, 638, 654, 656, 657, 658, 677, 682, 696, 697, 700, 701.
Communist Party (France) 501
Communist Party (Japan) 368, 398, 504, 505, 510, 511, 667
Communist Party (Massachusetts) 649
Communist Party (Philippines) 641
Communist Party (underground) 488
Communist Party (United States) ..... 403, 404, 405, 413, 435, 490, 510, 511, 517, 518, 544, 560, 581, 605, 608, 609, 649, 700.
Communist Political Association 604, 605, 607
Condliffe 471, 660
Congressional Record 492
Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO) 414, 433, 441, 444, 445, 559, 607, 622, 633, 635, 674
Congress of the United States. (See United States Congress.)
Connally 606
Constitution. (See United States Constitution.)
Coons, Arthur G 568
Coordinator of Information 390, 393, 396, 432, 483
Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs (CIAA) 439
Coplon, Judith 558
Corbett, P. E 473, 474, 687
Cornell University 441
Cosmopolitan Club 685
Cotten, Mrs. Elizabeth B 409, 410
Coudert Committee. (See New York State Legislative Committee on the Public Schools.)
Council on African Affairs 622
Council of American-Soviet Friendship 630, 631
Council for Pan-American Democracy 540
Counterintelligence 388
Coville, Cabot 440
Cowles, Gardner 433, 446
CPA. (See Communist Party, United States.)
Creel, Herrlee G 475
Cressey, George B 568
Cripps, Sir Stafford 686, 687
Croly, Herbert 548

Page
Culbertson, Lt. J. S---- 573
Currie, Lauchlin---- 382, 413, 414, 417, 418, 419, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 433, 434, 443, 443, 444, 479, 480, 494, 585, 586, 594, 595, 598, 599, 600, 652.

D

Dabney, Virginius ---- 494
Dafoe, Mr. J. W---- 365, 576, 577, 580, 663, 664
Daily Worker---- 460, 466, 514, 515, 516, 517, 529, 530, 531, 535, 539, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 560, 561, 594, 595, 598, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 626, 631, 632, 634, 635, 637, 639, 640, 641, 643, 652, 654, 655, 657, 658, 659, 662, 665, 666, 674, 677, 678, 689, 690, 699, 700.
Daniel, Mrs. Judith---- 440
Davidson, Maurice P---- 620, 622
Davies, John---- 426, 427, 439, 652
Davies, Joseph---- 432
Davies, R. A---- 663, 664
Davis, Benjamin, Jr---- 605
Davis, Elmer---- 613
Deane, Hugh---- 396, 397
DeBecker, E. V. A---- 358
De Boukelitz, Brando---- 501
DeCaux, Len---- 425, 426, 441, 444, 445, 493, 494, 674
Declaration of Independence---- 369
Deimel, Henry---- 477
De Jong, Miss Ellen Van Zyll---- 390, 475, 476, 481
DeLacy, Hugh---- 633
Democratic League---- 698
Dennery---- 471
Dennett, Raymond---- 494, 628
Dennett, Tyler---- 425, 426, 433
Dennis, Eugene---- 605
Dennison, Eleanor---- 444
Department of the Army---- 386, 387, 388
Department of External Affairs of Canada---- 373, 376
Department of Justice---- 492, 529, 590, 591
Derba, Charles. (See Clarence Dirba.)
Des Moines Register and Tribune---- 433
Despres, Emile---- 443, 446
Dial Press, Inc---- 664, 674, 675, 676
Dickover, Erle R---- 618
Dies ---- 597
Dillingham, Walter F---- 568
Dirba, Clarence (Charles Derba)---- 678
Dirkson, Ambassador---- 373
Dobbs, Mrs---- 481
Dodd, William E., Sr---- 411
Dolivet, Louis---- 701
Dollard, Charles---- 433
Domei---- 373, 395
Donovan, Colonel---- 390
Donovan, General---- 413
Dooman, Eugene C---- 604, 616, 617, 618, 619, 623, 626, 639
Doreen (see also Doreen Holland)---- 660
Doriot---- 597
Douglas, Helen Gahagan---- 633
Downing---- 476
Duggan, Lawrence---- 488, 489, 490, 491, 694
Dulles, John Foster---- 452, 464
Dumbarton Oaks---- 607
Dunn, James C---- 639
Du Pont---- 666

E

Page
Earle, Edward M---- 444
ECA. (See Economic Cooperation Administration.)
Eckhardt, Tibor---- 603
Eckhart, Joseph---- 446, 447
Economic Cooperation Administration (ECA)---- 485
Eddy, Sherwood---- 411
Edith---- 695
Eighteenth Party Congress---- 646
Eighth Route Army---- 370, 407, 434, 532, 596, 599, 607, 615, 622, 688
Eisler, Gerhard---- 514, 555, 580
Eliot, Charles W---- 568, 570
Eliot, Thomas---- 444
Elsie---- 436, 661, 652
Emeny, Brooks---- 425, 526, 433, 444, 568
Emerson---- 547
Emerson, Rupert---- 432, 444, 445, 446, 475, 494, 568
Engels---- 517, 548
Enlai, Chou (Chow)---- 426
En-po, Gen. Tang---- 596
Epstein, Israel---- 435, 436, 452, 453, 455, 456, 458, 460, 463, 464, 465, 466, 545, 589, 590, 591, 620, 622, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 651, 662
Epstein, Mary. (See Elsie Fairfax Cholmeley.)
Espil, Ambassador---- 603
Executive Offices of the President---- 429, 430, 433, 568, 570, 586

F

Fahs, C B---- 432, 471, 577
Fairbank, John K---- 378, 383, 399, 426, 427, 436, 437, 474, 479, 480, 481, 482, 568, 628, 629, 630, 650, 651 652.
Fairbank, Wilma---- 389, 427, 479
Fair Employment Practices Commission (FEPC)---- 608
Far Eastern Division (See State Department.)
Far Eastern Survey---- 376, 377, 384, 385, 390, 394, 397, 435, 436, 468, 469, 481, 533, 534, 536, 538, 539, 574, 582, 621, 622, 643, 644, 645, 667, 668.
Farley, Miriam---- 387, 389, 390, 394, 395, 396, 397, 472, 474, 475, 476, 564, 628, 629
Farm Information---- 489
Farm Research---- 489
Farm Security Administration (FSA)---- 419
Farquhar, Sammy---- 660
Fascist Party---- 404, 560, 570, 603, 606, 607, 608, 612, 613, 638
Faymonville, Col. Carl---- 494, 586, 687
FEA. (See Foreign Economic Administration.)
Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI)---- 354, 412, 484, 492, 514
Federal Reserve Bank---- 390, 433, 444
Federal Reserve Board---- 444
Federated Press---- 493, 668, 669
FEPC. (See Fair Employment Practices Commission.)
Field, Frederick Vanderbilt (Frederick Spencer)---- 364, 365, 388, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 425, 426, 433, 438, 444, 460, 461, 465, 475, 477, 488, 490, 491, 494, 517, 518, 520, 521, 523, 526, 527, 528, 529, 539, 540, 541, 550, 551, 571, 572, 581, 584, 585, 588, 620, 622, 648, 653, 659, 661, 662, 680, 681, 682, 683, 686, 687, 694.
Field, Noel---- 489
Field, W. B. Osgood, Jr---- 687
Fighting French delegation---- 440
Finestone---- 668
Finkelstein, Moses---- 482, 483, 485
Finley. (See Moses Finkelstein.)
Fischer, Louis---- 645, 649
Fisher, G. W---- 568
Fisher, Francis MacCracken---- 427, 652
Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy---- 577

Page
Florence (Italy) University 403
Flynn, Elizabeth Gurley 605
Fo, Sun 455, 456, 457, 465
Ford, Miss Ann 452, 463, 464, 590
Ford Foundation 484
Ford, James 605
Fordham University 513
Foreign Affairs Council (Cleveland) 433
Foreign Correspondents Club 536, 538
Foreign Economic Administration (FEA) 417, 478, 479, 495
Foreign Policy Association 384, 468, 474, 481, 482
Forkner, Dr. Claude E 409
Forkner, Mrs. Lucy 409, 410
Forman, Dr. Clark 655
Forman, Harrison 460, 466, 556, 557, 636, 637, 638, 654
Forsyth, Margaret 409, 410
Fortune 390
Fortune Round Table 474
Foster, William Z 548, 556, 559, 605
Fourth Annual Women's Congress (Chicago) 684
Fourth Army 532, 596, 599, 607, 615, 622
Fowler, R. M 691
Fox, Melvin J 620, 622
France 596, 602, 603, 607
Frankfurter Zeitung 360, 504
Freeman, Mansfield 494
Freeman, Miller 568, 570
Freeman, R. E 494
Free World 562
Freiheit 643
French Communists. (See Communist Party, France.)
French Embassy (Tokyo) 400
French police 384
French secret police 355
Friedman, Irving 390, 481
Friends of Chinese Democracy 621, 622
Friends of Soviet Russia 631, 674
Frink, Mrs. Angelika 410
FSA. (See Farm Security Administration.)
Fuller, Richard E 568

G

Gail 695
Gallup Poll 569, 570
Gamble, Sidney D 568
Gannes, Harry 520, 521, 526
Gardner, Virginia 639
Gauss, Clarence E 638
Geiger, Theodore 484
General Electric Co 433, 445
General Staff. (See War Department, General Staff.)
Geoffrey (see Chen Han-seng) 660
George III 636
George Washington University 440
Gerbode, Martha A 568
Gerlach, Talitha 409, 410, 588, 589, 590, 591, 620, 622
German Army 508
German Embassy (Nagoya) 503, 504
German Embassy (Tokyo) 379, 508
German Statistical Yearbook 500
Gerson, Simon 542, 543
GHQ, SCAP 395, 396
Gianini Foundation 375, 450, 474, 476, 670
Gibson, Hugh 444
Glasser, Harold 441

Page
GMAC 660
Goglidze, Sergei 626, 627
Gold, Ben 555
Gold, Mike 652
Goldstein, M 645
Golos, Jacob 404, 405, 407, 412, 421, 437, 438, 439, 441, 447, 677, 678
Goodrich, L. Carrington 475, 568
Goshal, Kumar 654, 655
Grad, Andrew. (See Grajdanzev.)
Grady, Henry F 432, 444
Graham, Prof. Frank 411
Grajdanzev, Andrew 387, 389, 390, 391, 392, 394, 399, 475, 476, 687
Granich, Grace 529, 652
Granich, Max 652
Graves, Kizer & Graves 571
Graves, Mortimer 571, 630, 631, 693
Greater New York Industrial Council (CIO) 414
Green, Gilbert 605
Greenberg, Michael 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 440, 444, 445, 476, 481, 665
Greene, J. Woodall 358, 368
Green, Kay 477
Grew, Joseph B 604, 609, 610, 611, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 623, 665, 666
Griffith, Ernest S 674, 677
Gruening, Ernest H 432
Guggenheimer, Mrs. 411
Gulick, Luther H 432
Gumperz, Hede. (See Hede Massing.)

H

Habberton, B. John 590, 591
Hagen, Beulah 697, 698
Hager, Read 446
Haideo, Ohashi 369, 371
Hamano 578
Hamilton, Maxwell 428, 444
Handbook of the Sixth Conference (IPR) 362, 363
Hansen, Alvin H 444
Han-seng, Chen 431, 525, 660, 661
Haring, Douglas G 668
Harmon, Francis E 528
Harondar, E. V 645, 646, 647
Harper & Bros 696, 697, 698
Harper, Sam 687
Harris, Lem 541
Hart, Admiral 446
Hart, Dr. George H. C 440
Harvard University 445, 451, 474, 475, 603, 671
Havas 501
Hathaway, Comrade 555, 674
Hayang Arsenal 496
Hayden, J. R 432, 476
Hazard, John N 627, 687
Healey, Ned R 633
Hearst 545, 596, 597
Heaton, Dr. Claude E 409, 410
Herod, W. H 433, 444
Hidemi. (See Hotsumi Ozaki.)
Hindustani News 360
Hindustani Times 400, 401
Hippodrome (New York) 687
Hirohito, Emperor 609, 611, 616, 617, 666
Hiss, Alger 428, 432, 441, 445, 446, 481, 482, 489, 492, 494, 497
Hitler, Adolph 380, 464, 522, 527, 528, 567, 596, 597, 598, 602, 603, 606, 664, 675
Hitler-Stalin Pact 522, 527

Page
Hoey, Senator 407
Hoffman, Paul G 444
Holland, W. L 375, 378, 383, 384, 385, 393, 394, 395, 399, 408, 414, 415, 418, 427, 436, 440, 450, 451, 470, 471, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 479, 480, 481, 482, 535, 536, 537, 539, 568, 571, 574, 628, 629, 651, 652, 659, 660, 661, 663, 664, 670.
Holmes, Judge 571, 572
Hoover, Herbert 606, 607, 617, 633, 638
Hoover, J. Edgar 369
Hoover Republicans 632
Hopkins 446
Hopper 578, 579, 580
Hornbeck, Stanley K 428, 432, 443, 444
Hotel Claridge 478
Hot Springs Conference (IPR) 355, 628
Hotzumi. (See Hotsumi Ozaki.)
House of Representatives 433
Houston, General Sam 548
Howard, Roy 596, 597
Hsia, C. L 535, 536, 537, 538, 539
Hsiang 427
Hsu, Yung-ying 415
Hubbard, G. E 480, 481
Hudson, Roy 605
Huff, Henry 567
Hughes, Charles Evans 462
Hull, Secretary 396, 580
Hunter 494
Hurley, Gen. Patrick 604, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 620, 622, 623, 624, 626, 631, 632, 633, 634, 636, 637, 638, 639, 654, 655, 656, 678, 700
Hu Shih 427
Hutchins, Grace 496

I

Ickes, Mr. Harold 384
Immigration and Naturalization Service 590, 591
India-American Conference (IPR) 469, 474
India Government Trade Commissioners Office 480, 481
Indian Council of World Affairs 469
Indian railways 483
Indian Service 495
Indusco 590
Inquiry 684
INS. (See International News Service.) 386
Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton 444, 474
Institute of Oceanography 648
Institute of Pacific Relations (IPR) 375, 378, 381, 384, 386, 388, 389, 391, 392, 394, 395, 399, 406–409, 412–418, 424–438, 440, 441, 443, 445–447, 451, 452, 462, 467, 468, 470, 471, 474, 475, 477–484, 487, 488, 491, 492–494, 497, 506, 516, 517, 518, 522, 524, 525, 527–530, 535, 536–540, 541, 549–551, 567, 568–570, 571–576, 581–583, 587, 589, 591, 593, 620–622, 628, 629, 634, 640–646, 650–653, 659–661, 663–665, 667–670, 672, 674– 676, 682–686, 688–697, 699, 701.
Institute of Pacific Relations (American Council) 364, 366, 384, 385, 389, 390, 391, 394, 425, 426, 431, 432, 443, 446, 451, 469, 470, 472, 473, 474, 480, 481, 494, 515, 518, 527, 528, 533, 534, 536, 537, 538, 540, 564, 565, 566, 568, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 628, 646, 650, 663, 668, 682, 683, 687, 692, 693, 694, 696, 697.
Institute of Pacific Relations (American-Pacific conference) 504
Institute of Pacific Relations (biennial report) 564
Institute of Pacific Relations (Chinese) 427, 535, 537, 538, 539, 651
Institute of Pacific Relations (eighth conference) 571, 641, 663
Institute of Pacific Relations (fifth conference) 571
Institute of Pacific Relations (India-American Conference, American delegation) 469, 474

Page
Institute of Pacific Relations (international branch) 364, 389, 415, 425, 451, 468, 475, 536, 571, 582
Institute of Pacific Relations (Japanese council) 363, 364, 365, 366, 375, 450, 505, 653, 695
Institute of Pacific Relations (Latin-American division) 491
Institute of Pacific Relations (ninth conference) 394, 468, 494, 628, 641, 642
Institute of Pacific Relations (Pacific council) 365, 366, 425, 426, 480, 481, 494, 537, 663, 664, 694
Institute of Pacific Relations (political intelligence department) 480, 481
Institute of Pacific Relations (popular pamphlet series) 564
Institute of Pacific Relations (seventh conference) 468
Institute of Pacific Relations (sixth conference) 361-363, 364, 576, 641, 642
Institute of Pacific Relations (tenth conference) 571
Institute of Pacific Relations (U. S. S. R. Council) 645, 646
Institute of Pacific Relations (Virginia Beach conference) 641, 642
Institute of Pacific Relations (Yosemite conference) 361-363, 364, 576, 641, 642, 661, 662
Intelligence. (See Army Intelligence.)
Inter-Continent News 529, 531
Interior Department 475, 477
International Communist Party. (See Communist Party, International.)
International correspondence 511
International General Electric Co 433, 444
International Industrial Relations Institute 682, 683
International Labor Office 441, 489
International Missionary Council 432, 444
International News Service (INS) 386
International Publishers 517, 647
International Secretariat 389, 451, 468, 475, 536, 537, 571, 582, 641, 642, 661, 663, 664
International Workers Order 515, 540
Inverchapel, Lord 692
Iranian Institute 621, 622
Ishii 365
Italian Fascist Party 404
Italian Library of Information 404
Ives, Senator 452, 464

J

Jabitzu. (See Zaibatsu.)
Jacob 506
Jacoby, Annalee 458, 460, 465, 466
Jaffe, Philip J 409, 410, 437, 477, 618, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 686
Jaffe, Mrs. Philip J 686
Japanese Army 355, 359, 361, 368, 379
Japanese Attorney General's Office (special investigation bureau) 499
Japanese Broadcasting Co 614
Japanese Cabinet 367
Japanese Communist Party. (See Communist Party, Japan.)
Japanese Council. (See Institute of Pacific Relations, Japanese Council.)
Japanese Diet 667
Japanese Government 360, 366, 372, 398, 499, 500, 503, 579, 613, 617, 645
Japanese Navy 355, 361, 379
Japanese Peace Society 411
Japanese police 366
Japanese secret service 371
Japanese State Department 363, 367, 379
Jean, Sally Lucas 409, 410
Jenkins, Shirley 376
Jenkinson, Anthony 658, 659, 660, 661, 662
Jerome, V. J 554
Jessup, Dr. Philip C 425, 431, 432, 433, 443, 444, 477, 495, 527, 528, 663, 670, 687
Jessup, Mrs. Philip C 409, 410
Jiji Press (English edition) 395
Johns, Helen. (See Elizabeth Bentley.)
Johns Hopkins University 385, 474, 561, 570, 670

Page
Johnson, Joseph E---- 568
Johnson, Nelson T---- 582
Johnston, Eric---- 494
Johnstone, William C---- 440, 477
Joint Chiefs of Staff---- 382
Jones, Joseph---- 441
Journal-American---- 619
Justice Department. (See Department of Justice.)

K

Kai-shek, Chiang---- 381, 382, 390, 436, 450, 451, 456, 457, 461, 462, 496, 529, 530, 531, 533, 551, 557, 561, 594, 596, 599, 600, 606, 610, 612, 614, 615, 616, 617, 622, 623, 635, 637, 638, 639, 698, 701.
Kai-shek, Madam Chiang---- 435
Kates, Beatrice---- 410, 427
Katsuyo, Mrs. Takeshita---- 499
Kawai, Teikichi (see also Mrs. Max Klausen)---- 367, 369, 383
Kazakevich, Vladimir---- 441
Keenan, Joseph D---- 640
Keenleyside, Hugh L---- 472
Kennedy, George---- 475
Kentucky University---- 475
Kerensky, Alexander---- 566, 603
Kernpictai (gendarmerie)---- 395
Kerr, George H---- 392, 393, 394
Kesting---- 375
Kimball, Dan A---- 671, 672
Kintner, Robert---- 603
Kirchwey, Freda---- 620
Kirk, Grayson---- 494
Kizer, Benjamin H---- 425, 426, 433, 443, 444, 494, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578
Klausen, Max---- 370, 371, 372, 379, 381, 383, 500, 501, 507, 508, 509
Klausen, Mrs. Max (see also Teikichi Kawai)---- 367, 369, 383
Knopf, Alfred---- 473, 474, 655
Knox---- 446
Kokusai Tsuhin. (See International correspondence.)
Konoye Cabinet---- 363, 366, 367, 379, 381, 382, 501, 502, 503, 504, 506
Konoye, Prince. (See Konoye Cabinet.)
Koshiro---- 369
Kramer, Charles---- 441, 442
Kuhn, Mrs. Irene---- 377, 399
Kuomintang Government---- 455, 458, 460, 461, 464, 465, 466, 476, 532, 538, 596, 599, 600, 610, 612, 613, 614, 615, 635, 636, 638–651, 654, 655, 656, 658, 698
Kuroda, Rev. Andrew Y.---- 499
Kwantung Army---- 509, 616

L

Labor Committee (House)---- 515
Labor-Management Charter---- 608
Labor Monthly (London)---- 684
Lacam, Guy---- 668
Ladejinsky, Wolf---- 477
Lafayette---- 636
Lamont, Corliss---- 573, 574, 673, 674, 687
Lamott, Willis---- 668
Lancaster, William W---- 687
Landon---- 450
Lane, Clayton---- 474, 568
Lang, Olga---- 682
Lapin, Adam---- 602
Lasker, Bruno---- 571
Latin-American Section (OSS)---- 419

Page
Lattimore, Owen J---- 373–375, 378, 382, 385, 386, 390, 414, 415, 424, 425, 433, 439, 454, 455, 458–460, 462, 465, 472–478, 481, 483, 494, 521–526, 529, 549, 550–558, 560–563, 568–570, 578, 583, 584, 624, 625, 627, 654, 655, 657, 658, 669, 670, 678, 679, 685, 688, 689, 696.
Laval---- 597
League Against War and Fascism---- 447
League of Nations---- 489, 579
League of Women Shoppers---- 411
Leaning---- 476
Lee---- 476, 477, 580
Lee, Duncan Chapin---- 365, 409, 410
Lee, Dr. Kan---- 440
Legislative Reference Service (Library of Congress)---- 674, 677
Lengyel, Emil---- 675
Lenin, Vladimir I---- 515, 517, 559, 565, 647
Leonard---- 477
Levy, Roger---- 668, 670, 671
Lewis, John L---- 638
Liberte (steamship)---- 590, 591
Liberty League---- 546
Library of Congress---- 462, 674, 676, 677
Lila---- 695
Lilenthal, Philip E---- 450, 451, 471, 481, 659, 660
Lincoln Battalion---- 598
Linebarger---- 661
Lippmann, Walter---- 406, 494, 691, 692
Lipshitz, Dora---- 678
Little, Brown & Co---- 452, 463, 464, 465, 590, 609, 650, 665, 666, 668
Little, General---- 446
Little, Herbert S---- 568
Liu, Wellington---- 650, 651
Lochhead, Archie---- 433
Lockwood, William---- 383, 384, 385, 390, 395, 396, 399, 425, 426, 427, 428, 431, 432, 445, 446, 474, 477, 481, 568, 572, 573, 575, 576, 577, 661, 687.
Loomis, Charles F---- 568
Lovett, Prof. Robert M---- 411
Lowrey, Dr. Lawson G---- 410
Loyalist Spain---- 569, 570
Luce, Henry R---- 433, 444, 660
Ludden, Raymond T---- 636, 637, 638
Lyell, Sir Charles---- 545
Lynd, Robert S---- 687

M

MacArthur, Gen. Douglas---- 354, 395, 396, 618, 638, 639, 640
MacKay, James A---- 494, 568
MacNair, Harley F---- 474
Magruder, General---- 446
Mandel, William---- 662, 663, 664, 674, 675, 676, 677
Manhattan High School of Aviation Trades---- 473, 474
Mannerheim Finland---- 596
Maquis---- 464
Marine Corps---- 583, 584, 585, 597, 633
Marini, Ferruci---- 520
Marshall, Clifford B---- 568
Marshall, George C---- 452, 459, 463, 464, 465, 508, 633, 700
Martin, Charles E---- 568
Marx-Engels-Lenin Institute (Moscow)---- 517
Marx, Karl---- 515, 517, 545, 546, 547, 548, 552, 565, 630, 647
Maryland University---- 589, 590, 591
Massing, Hede---- 358, 489, 490
Matsukata---- 364, 365

Page
Matsuo ... 395, 477
Maxwell, General ... 390
Mayer, Arthur ... 574, 575
Mazuruk ... 626, 627
McCann ... 687
McCloy, John J ... 639
McConnell, Dorothy ... 409, 410
McConnell, Bishop Francis J ... 411
McCormick ... 596, 597
McCoy, General ... 495
McGraw-Hill ... 377
McGuffey Eclectic Readers ... 545
McLaughlin, Mrs ... 477
McLean, Evalyn Walsh ... 603
Meija restoration ... 366, 375
Meldon, John ... 619
Merchant Marine (U. S.) ... 405
Mercury ... 399
Merrill, Lewis ... 477, 620, 622
Methodist Federation for Social Service ... 411
Michigan University ... 474
MID (Military Intelligence Division). (See Army Intelligence.)
Midkiff, Frank E ... 568
Midwest Daily Record ... 514, 523
Mikhailov, Nicholas ... 663, 664
Military Intelligence Division (MID). (See Army Intelligence.)
Miller, Robert ... 439
Mills, Mr ... 375, 414
Mills College. (See Mills Summer Institute.)
Mills Summer Institute ... 584, 585
Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, CIO ... 622
Minor, Robert ... 548, 595, 598, 599, 600, 605
Mirror ... 619
Mitchell, Kate L ... 474, 477, 654, 655, 660, 663, 664
Mitsubishi ... 666
Mitsui ... 666
Mitsusada, Mr. Yoshikawa ... 359, 360
Moffat, Abbot Low ... 494
Molyneaux, Peter ... 433
Mon-lin, Dr. Chiang ... 651
Mont Tremblant Conference ... 425, 443, 446, 571, 573, 641, 650, 663, 674
Moore, Harriet Lucy ... 433, 438, 443, 444, 472, 530, 549, 550, 628, 629, 647, 687
Morgan, Gwen ... 560
Morgenthau, Mr ... 419, 420, 422, 423, 431, 556, 604
Morgenthau plan ... 556, 604
Morrison, George A ... 494
Morrison, Ian ... 668
Morse, Senator ... 452, 464
Morton, Rev. Richard ... 621, 622
Moscow Radio ... 395
Motylev, V. E ... 577, 578, 579, 580
Muhle ... 687
Munichmen ... 597, 598, 603
Munitions Assignments Board ... 446
Murphy, J. Morden ... 568
Murray full-employment bill ... 640
Murray, Philip ... 559
Murray, Wallace ... 428, 445
Mussolini, Benito ... 602
Myers, Frederick N ... 621, 622
Myyagi ... 372

N

Nagakura ... 578
NAM ... 605, 606
Nanking University ... 444

Page
Nathan, Robert ---- 432, 444
Nation ---- 563, 564, 620, 622
National Board (Politburo) ---- 398, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 526, 528, 529, 535, 543, 549, 550, 555, 556, 558, 559, 581, 600, 604, 605, 608, 616, 619, 625, 631, 650, 657, 659, 665, 667, 679.
National CIO Committee for American and Allied War Relief ---- 433
National Credit Office ---- 475
National Labor Relations Board ---- 555
National Lawyers Guild ---- 621, 622
National League of Women Voters ---- 444
National Maritime Union ---- 621, 622
National Peking University ---- 539
National Recovery Administration (NRA) ---- 488, 657
National Resources Planning Board ---- 432, 568, 570, 571, 572, 573
National War Fund, Inc ---- 410
National War Labor Board ---- 571
Nationalist Chinese Government ---- 390, 435, 450, 456, 457, 461, 462, 463, 475, 531, 533, 535, 536, 537, 538, 551, 563, 581, 599, 600, 612, 696, 697.
Natural History Museum (New York) ---- 686
Naval School of Military Government and Administration (Columbia University) ---- 494
Navy Department ---- 382, 390, 422, 433, 445, 446, 464, 583, 584, 597, 613, 614, 618, 639, 671, 672, 673
Nazi Party ---- 504, 596, 605, 606
Nelson, Donald ---- 638
Netherlands and Netherlands Indies Council ---- 440
Neutrality Act ---- 447
New Century Publishers, Inc ---- 540
New Life Movement ---- 476
New Masses ---- 460, 465, 495, 496, 540, 657, 658
New York China Daily News ---- 634, 635, 636
New York City Board of Education ---- 470, 486, 515
New York Herald Tribune ---- 542, 612, 613, 614, 633
New York Post ---- 609
New York Star (formerly PM) ---- 542
New York State Legislative Committee on the Public Schools (Coudert committee) ---- 469
New York State Legislative Record ---- 486
New York Times ---- 454, 455, 456, 458, 459, 465, 495, 614, 634, 635, 674, 676, 698
New York Worlds Fair ---- 685
New York World-Telegram ---- 485
Nine Power Treaty ---- 579, 580
Ninth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations (see also Institute of Pacific Relations) ---- 394
Nisei ---- 355, 362
Nixon, Senator Richard M ---- 492
NKVD. (See OGPU.)
NMU ---- 405
Nock, Albert J ---- 545
Norman, Herbert ---- 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 449, 450, 451, 471
North American Group (Military Intelligence Service) ---- 573
North Dakota Non-Partisan League ---- 565
North, Joe ---- 654
North Manchuria Railway ---- 579
Northern Pacific international planning project ---- 568, 569, 570
Northwest Regional Planning Commission ---- 444
Notestein, Ada Comstock ---- 494
Noyes, Mrs. C. Reinold ---- 410
NRA. (See National Recovery Administration.)

O

Oakie, John H ---- 584, 585
Office of Censorship (Washington, D. C.) ---- 568, 569, 570

Page
Office of Education. (See U. S. Office of Education.)
Office of Export Control ---- 481
Office of Price Administration (OPA) ---- 390, 432, 444, 446, 608
Office of Strategic Services (OSS) ---- 412, 413, 419, 428, 440, 443, 444
Office of War Information (OWI) ---- 378, 383, 399, 414, 437, 444, 446, 613, 652
OGPU (Soviet military intelligence) ---- 360, 404
Ohashi, Haideo ---- 369, 371
Okashi ---- 510
Oklahoma Republican State Convention (1926) ---- 637
OPA. (See Office of Price Administration.)
Orchard, John E ---- 474
OSS (See Office of Strategic Services.)
Ott, General ---- 379, 501, 503, 504, 508
Oumansky, Constantine ---- 603, 685, 686
Overseas Masonic Lodge (Providence, R. I.) ---- 638
Owen ---- 661
OWI. (See Office of War Information.)
Oxon Hill Manor ---- 693
Oya, Kuso ---- 614
Ozaki, Hotsumi ---- 355, 361–364, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 372, 379, 381, 501, 503, 504, 505, 506, 509

P

Pacific Affairs ---- 373, 375, 376, 377, 378, 389, 390, 415, 416, 417, 418, 462, 468, 473, 481, 522, 529, 550, 551, 582, 644, 645, 648, 649, 651, 653, 657, 661, 668, 669, 670, 681, 682, 684, 688
Pacific Northwest Regional Planning Commission ---- 433
Pacific Worker ---- 511
Paddock, Bishop Robert L ---- 411
Page, Walter Hines ---- 483, 561
Paine, Thomas ---- 548
Panama Canal Record ---- 647
Panay. (See U. S. S. Panay.)
Parker, Philo W ---- 528
Parliament ---- 617
Parsons, Miss Katrine ---- 440
Pasvolsky ---- 428
Paterson, Ellis E ---- 633
Patterson-McCormick ---- 596, 597
Peake, Cyrus H ---- 474, 670
Pearl Harbor ---- 419, 464, 501, 502, 510, 663, 664, 665, 667
Pearl Harbor hearing ---- 380, 381
Pearson, L. B ---- 440
Peffer, Nathaniel ---- 471, 474, 477, 670
Peking National University ---- 539
Pence, Captain ---- 494
Pentagon ---- 420
Peoples Anti-Japanese Military-Political University ---- 657
Perkins, Milo ---- 428, 432, 443, 444, 445
Perlo Group (see also Victor Perlo) ---- 441
Perlo, Victor ---- 441, 442
Petain ---- 669
Peters, J ---- 490, 493, 494, 514, 520, 526, 542, 543, 590, 634, 654, 688
Petrov, Ivan Petrovich ---- 566
Phil ---- 375
Phillips, J. W ---- 653
Phillips, William ---- 568, 656
Pinner, Dr. Max ---- 410
PM. (See New York Star.)
Politburo: (See National Board.)
Politburo (Moscow) ---- 517, 526, 539, 541, 551, 552, 555, 556, 558, 625, 630, 631, 657
Pollard, Mr ---- 692
Pope, Arthur Upham ---- 409, 621, 622
Popper, Martin ---- 621, 622
Populist ---- 565
Porter, Catherine ---- 390, 476, 477, 483, 536, 537, 689

Page
Porter, Paul 640, 661
Potsdam declaration 354, 368, 369, 395, 611
Powell, Webster Clay 488, 489
Pratt, Mrs. Eliot 687
Presidential directive 387, 388
Press Hotel 538
Price, Harry 477, 680, 681, 687
Price, Mary 406, 407, 413
Price, Mildred 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 436, 437, 438, 439, 677
Princeton University 444, 474, 481, 535, 537
Princeton University Press 468
Private IPR discussion group on United Nations cooperation 440
Procope, Hjalmar 603
Progressives 632
Progressive ticket 407
Pruitt, Miss Ida 680, 681
Pruitt, Ian 587
Public Affairs pamphlets 564

R

Radio news room (see also Coordinator of Information) 396
Railroad Brotherhood 607
Rand, Christopher 455, 465
Randolph A. Philip 411
Red Army (fourth section) 507
Red Army (Russia) 383, 501, 597, 605
Red Guards (Russian) 566
Register of State Department. (See Biographical Register, Department of State.)
Reichswehr 380
Reid, Mrs. Ogden 444
Remer, C. F 393, 443, 445, 446, 474, 476
Republican Party 544, 547, 638, 639
Research committee 477
Reynal & Hitchcock 626, 627
Reynaud 669
Riefler, Winfield 432
Riess, La Verne 566
Robinson, Reid 622
Rockefeller fellowship (Harvard) 451
Rockefeller Foundation 433, 451, 473, 474
Rockefeller, Nelson 439
Rockport Press 538
Rogge, Mr 357
Rogoff, Vladimir N 529, 530, 531, 539
Rogov, Vladimir. (See Vladimir Rogoff.)
Roosevelt, President 381, 382, 390, 528, 584, 586, 596, 597, 599, 600, 606, 607, 633, 637, 638, 639, 640, 656, 657, 683
Root, Elihu 462
Ropes, E. C 432
Rose 578
Rosinger, Lawrence K 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 481, 482, 654, 655, 670, 671, 687
Rossiter 477
Roth, Andrew 472, 477, 609, 625, 654, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673
Round table 577
Royal Commission 365
Royal Institute (London) 390
Royall, Mr 357
Rubin, Rose 687
Rue, Edgar H 409, 410
Ruskin 547
Russell Sage Foundation 682, 683

Russian-American Institute. (See American Russian Institute.) Page
Russian Army ---- 359, 361, 362, 364
Russian Calendar (old) ---- 566
Russian Secret Police. (See Soviet Military Intelligence.)
Russian War Relief ---- 438, 549, 630, 631

S

Saionji, Kimikazu ---- 364, 365, 366, 504, 506, 694
Saionji, Prince ---- 366
Salisbury, Lawrence E ---- 621, 622
Sam ---- 421
Sanger, Mr. Richard R ---- 384, 385
Sano Hotel ---- 371
Sansom, Sir George ---- 440
Santo ---- 514
Saposs, David ---- 640
Saturday Evening Post ---- 680, 681
Saturday Review of Literature ---- 674, 675
Savage, Charles ---- 633, 634
Sayers, Mentana ---- 407, 408, 409, 410
Sayers, Michael ---- 407
Sayre, Francis B ---- 432
SCAP ---- 373, 374, 386, 395, 396
Schillinglaw ---- 577, 579, 580
Schneiderman, William ---- 605
School of Chinese Studies (Columbia University) ---- 449
Schwellenbach, Judge Lewis B ---- 433, 444
Scripps-Howard newspapers ---- 444, 619
Secretariat ---- 390, 481, 629
Security Council ---- 691, 692
Security in the Pacific ---- 394
Sellers, Dick ---- 668
Service, Jack ---- 427, 652
Service, John Stewart ---- 618, 619, 624, 626, 631, 632, 633, 679
Shanghai Monthly Bulletin ---- 397
Sharp, Lt. Col. Frederick D ---- 391, 392
Sheean, Vincent ---- 622
Shepherd, Jack ---- 476, 659, 660, 687
Sherwood, Robert ---- 446
Shi-chieh, Wong ---- 651
Shields, Art ---- 614, 633, 639
Shih, Hu ---- 427
Shih-Kai, Yuan ---- 466
Shiman, Russell G ---- 475, 477
Shiskin, Boris ---- 444, 445
Shoemaker, Colonel ---- 494
Shoemaker, James H ---- 432, 568
Shotwell, James T ---- 444, 661, 662
Siberian Railways. (See Trans-Siberian Ry.)
Sillen, Samuel ---- 460, 466, 665, 666
Silverman, George ---- 423
Silvermaster, N. Gregory ---- 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 434, 439, 440
Simmons College ---- 474
Simms, William Philip ---- 597
Simon, Helen ---- 634, 635
Simpson, "Sockless Jerry" ---- 548
Sinclair, Gregg M ---- 568
Sino-American Corp ---- 475
Sixth Conference (IPR) ---- 362
Smedley, Agnes ---- 355–362, 367, 368, 369, 370, 377, 380, 383, 384, 399, 460, 466, 496, 506, 507, 658, 677
Smith, Paul C ---- 568
Smith, Sydney ---- 477
Snow, Edgar ---- 458, 460, 465, 680, 681, 682
Snow, Mrs. Edgar (Nym Wales) ---- 622, 680, 682
Social-Democrat ---- 640

Page
Somerville, Rose ---- 687
Soong, Dr. T. V ---- 537
Sorge, Richard ---- 354, 356, 358–362, 364, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 379, 380, 381, 383, 384, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 511
Southern Council for Human Welfare ---- 407
South Manchurian Railway ---- 509
Southwest Associated University (Kunming) ---- 651
Soviet Army ---- 379
Soviet Embassy ---- 631, 685
Soviet Embassy (Tokyo) ---- 372
Soviet Embassy Consulate ---- 529, 555
Soviet Fourth Army ---- 383
Soviet military intelligence ---- 360, 404, 412, 417, 424, 435, 507, 520, 678
Soviet Russia Today ---- 530, 549, 662, 684
Soviet Trade Union ---- 529, 531
Soviet Union ---- 377, 381, 398, 404, 459, 508, 516, 517, 523, 525, 530, 546, 548, 550, 554, 562, 563, 567, 577, 578, 579, 580, 587, 603, 604, 606, 613, 623, 638, 645, 646, 647, 663, 664, 675, 676, 677, 683, 685, 687
Spanish Republican Government ---- 636
Spencer, Frederick. (See Frederick Vanderbilt Field.)
Spenser, Hazelton ---- 570
Sproul, Allan ---- 433, 444
Sproul, R. G ---- 444, 568
Sprout, Harold ---- 494
Stachel, Jack ---- 527, 535, 550, 552, 553, 555, 556, 558, 567, 595, 626, 679
Staley, Prof. Eugene ---- 411, 432, 651
Stalin, Josef ---- 517, 522, 527, 555, 559, 563, 565, 627, 647, 657
Standard Oil Co ---- 548, 666
Starobin, Joseph ---- 611, 632, 636, 637, 654, 655
Stassen, Commodore ---- 494
State Committee of New York ---- 588
State Department ---- 364, 380, 391, 417, 421, 424, 425, 428, 432, 439, 440, 443–445, 452, 462, 463, 464, 477–479, 488–490, 495, 497, 560, 576, 577, 580, 589, 591, 594, 595, 597–599, 601–604, 606, 607, 609, 610, 612–614, 616, 619, 623–627, 631–633, 636, 638, 639, 654, 655, 678, 679, 690, 691, 694–696.
State Department (Biographical Register) ---- 495, 497, 576, 577
State Department (Division of Chinese Affairs) ---- 618
State Department (Division of Cultural Relations) ---- 479
State Department (Far Eastern Division) ---- 417, 462, 463, 604, 616, 626, 628
State Department (Foreign Economic Administration for Chinese Affairs) ---- 627
State Department (Latin-American Division) ---- 488
State Department (Near Eastern Division) ---- 428, 445
Steele, Arch T ---- 455, 465, 612
Stefansson, Vilhjalmur ---- 685, 686, 687
Steiger, Andrew ---- 663, 664, 699
Steiger, G. Nye ---- 474
Stein, Guenther ---- 355, 356, 359–362, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 376, 377, 378, 383, 384, 385, 386, 398, 399, 400, 401, 460, 466, 506, 536, 538, 539, 556, 557, 634, 635, 636, 654, 655
Sterling, J. Wallace ---- 568
Stettinius ---- 606
Stevens, Adlai ---- 446
Stevens, Mackenzie ---- 589, 590
Stewart, John R ---- 475, 482
Stewart, Marguerite Ann ---- 565, 566, 660
Stewart, Maxwell S ---- 411, 563, 564, 565, 566, 629, 630
Stilwell, Gen. Joseph ---- 614, 615, 636, 637, 638
Stimson, Secretary ---- 446, 580
Stinebower, L. D ---- 432
Stone, I. N ---- 668
Stone, Mark ---- 668
Stone, William T ---- 432, 443, 444, 445
Straus, Donald B ---- 568
Straus, Robert K ---- 389, 390, 391

Page

Strong, Anna Louise ... 688
Stuart, Leighton ... 455, 456, 461, 465
Studebaker, John W ... 444
Sues, Ilona Ralf ... 622, 698, 699
Sumitomo ... 666
Sunday Worker ... 594, 611
Sundborg, George ... 572, 573
Sun Fo ... 455, 456, 457, 465
Sunset Farm ... 365
Sun Yat-sen ... 476
Sun Yat-sen, Madam ... 436, 437, 455, 456, 457, 465
Sweet ... 585
Sweetland, Monroe ... 433, 445
Swing, Raymond Gram ... 495, 565
SWINK ... 639
Swope, Gerard ... 568
Symposium on Chinese culture ... 427

T

Taft, Robert ... 603, 611
Taguchi ... 369
Taiheiyo Rodo-sha. (See Pacific Worker).
Takahashi ... 578
Takayanagi ... 366, 694
Tamura ... 579, 580
Tao-ming, Mme. Woi ... 409
Tariff Commission ... 481
Tarr, Mr. Edgar J ... 535, 537, 663, 664
Tasca ... 477
Tass ... 529, 539
Taylor, Admiral ... 578, 579
Taylor, George E ... 417, 418, 568
Taylor, William ... 421
Tee-Van, Mrs. John ... 410
Teh, Chou ... 377, 384, 614, 615, 657
Tehran Conference ... 606
Teikichi, Kawai ... 367
Tenney, Helen ... 419
Terrall, Robert ... 659
Tewksbury, Donal G ... 568
Texas Weekly ... 433
Thompson, John ... 694
Thompson, Laura ... 375
Thompson, Robert ... 605
Thompson, Virginia ... 476
Thoreau ... 547
Thorner, Daniel ... 483
Thurber, Mr. ... 391, 392
Tiffany, Mrs. Gordon M ... 409, 410
Tijo Cabinet ... 503
Time, Inc. ... 433, 444
Time Magazine ... 487
Timoshenko ... 597
Tirana, R ... 440
Tixier, A. P ... 440
Tojo Cabinet ... 503
Tokyo Asahi Shimbun ... 362, 363
Tokyo Criminal Court ... 500
Tokyo Criminal District Court, Procuration Bureau ... 500
Toledano, Ralph ... 399
Tong, Chu ... 634, 636
Tong, Hollington K ... 536, 538
Toynbee ... 471
Trachtenberg, Alexander ... 517, 529, 540, 647, 650
Trans-Siberian Railway ... 389, 390, 391, 392, 675, 676

Page

Treasury Department 390, 419, 420, 421, 428, 432, 434, 440, 441, 443, 444, 446, 464, 491, 493
Tribune 456
Trotsky, Leon 554, 674
Troyanovsky, Mr 684, 687
Truman, President 388, 607, 608, 613, 617, 620, 622, 623, 632, 633, 637, 639, 640, 691, 692
Tsarism 476
Tse-tung, Mao 615
Tsung-nan, Gen. Hu 610
Tsuru, Shigeto 510
Tuan-sheng, Chien 651
Tucker, Luther 687
Tugwell, Mr 546
Tydings, Senator 515

U

Ullman, William Ludwig 421
Un-American Activities Committee 492, 509, 510, 515
United China Relief, Inc 410, 444, 585
United Church Council for Democracy 621, 622
United Electrical Radio, and Machine Workers Union 516
United Nations 353, 435, 440, 562, 571, 598, 600, 611, 641
United Nations World 562
United Office and Professional Workers of America (UOPWA) 620, 622
United Press 539, 556, 557, 616
United States Army 353, 354, 356, 357, 359, 386, 387, 390, 405, 416, 417, 419, 568–570, 596, 597, 598, 608, 618, 623, 636, 642, 646
United States Army Corps of Engineers 646
United States Bureau of Navigation 672, 673
United States Chamber of Commerce 640
United States Congress 444, 462, 603, 606
United States Constitution 545
United States District Court (Spokane, Wash.) 433, 444
United States District Court (Washington, D. C.) 665, 671, 672
United States Government 387, 389, 390, 397, 405, 413, 419, 421, 435, 475, 480, 481, 484, 485, 486, 491, 527, 545, 558, 584, 586, 596, 599, 601, 672
United States-Japanese negotiations 381
United States Military Academy. (See West Point Military Academy.)
United States Naval Reserve 609, 671, 672
United States Navy 382, 390, 422, 433, 445, 446, 464, 583, 584, 597, 613, 614, 618, 639, 671, 672, 673
United States Office of Education 444
United States Steel Corp 546
Universal Trading Corp 390, 433, 474
University of California 375, 427, 444, 450, 474, 476, 670
University of Chicago 445, 474, 475, 485
University of Chicago Press 571
University of Cincinnati 474
University of Kentucky 475
University of Maryland 589, 590, 591
University of Michigan 474
University of Nanking 444
University of Princeton 444, 474, 481, 535, 537
UNRRA (Atlantic City conference) 478
UNRRA (China office) 571
UPOWA (United Office and Professional Workers) 408
Ushiba 363, 364, 365, 471, 510
U. S. S. Panay 618
U. S. S. R. ..... 377, 381, 398, 404, 459, 508, 516, 517, 523, 525, 530, 546, 548, 550, 554, 562, 563, 567, 577, 578, 579, 580, 587, 603, 604, 606, 613, 623, 638, 645, 646, 647, 649, 663, 664, 675, 676, 677, 683, 685, 687.

V

Page
Vandenberg, Arthur H. 452, 463, 464, 597, 606, 611, 633
Vandenbosch, Amry 475
Vanderbilt, Commodore 494
Van Kleeck, Mary 682, 683, 684, 685
Van Mook 578, 580
Vassar College 403
Veterans' Administration 608
Vichy France 596, 603
Viet-Nam 464
Vinacke, Harold M. 474
Vince, Jacob 432
Vincent, John Carter 452, 463, 464, 465, 478, 494, 618, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 679
"Vinegar Joe." (See General Joseph Stilwell.)
Viner, Jacob 445
Von Dirkson 503
Voorhis, Jerry 433
Voukelitch, Branko de 372, 373

W

Wagner-Murray-Dingell social security bill 608
Wahs 578
Wales, Nym. (See Mrs. Edgar Snow.)
Wallace, Henry A 432, 444, 550, 552, 553, 625, 626, 627, 679, 693, 694
Walter Hines Page School of International Relations 483, 561
Wang, Mr 651
Wang Ching-wei 476
War and the Working Class 529, 530, 531, 539
War Department (General Staff) 393, 394
War Department (United States) 353, 354, 357, 359, 367, 378, 382, 384, 388, 390, 391–394, 400, 406, 416, 417, 464, 481, 568-570, 572, 573, 603, 610, 639, 642, 646, 659, 660.
War Labor Board 571
War Production Board 432, 441, 444, 603
War Production Board (WPB) 640
Ward, Dr. Harry F 411
Ward, Lester F 548
Ware Group. (See Harold Ware.)
Ware, Harold 488, 489
Washington, George 636
Washington Information Center on the U. S. S. R 630, 631
Washington State University 575
Washington Treaty 576, 577, 578, 579
"Watchdog committee" (Committee on Appropriations) 485
Watt, Mr. Alan 440
Watt, Robert J 494
Watts, Richard 622, 668
Waymack, W. W 444, 495, 568
W. D. C 687
Webb, Beatrice 645, 649
Webb, Sidney 645, 649
Webster, Daniel 548
Webster Publishing Co 565, 566
Wedemeyer, Lt. Gen. Albert 604, 612, 613, 614, 617, 620, 622, 623, 624, 636
Weiner, Robert William 528, 540, 541
Weintraub, David 441
Welles, Benjamin 455, 465
Welles, Sumner 428, 444, 455, 494, 568, 595, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698.
Wellington 661
West Point Military Academy 432, 444
Wheatley, Dr. George M 410
Wheeler, Leslie 432
Wheeler, W. M 597

Page
White, Harry Dexter ---- 382, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 428, 431, 434, 443, 444, 445, 446, 491, 492, 494
White House ---- 382, 413, 414, 424, 425, 426, 427, 429, 430, 433, 434, 443, 444, 479, 480, 528, 586, 633, 639, 652.
White Russians ---- 441
White, Theodore ---- 458, 460, 465, 466
Wigmore ---- 519
Wilbur, Brayton ---- 425, 426, 494, 568
Wilbur, Ray Lyman ---- 444, 477
Wilkie, Wendell ---- 433
Williams, Albert Rhys ---- 645, 648, 649
Williamson, John ---- 605
Willie, Dirty ---- 619
Willits, Joseph H ---- 433
Willoughby, Maj. Gen. Charles A ---- 353–401
Wilson, C. E ---- 433, 445
Wilson, Howard ---- 445, 494
Wilson, Geoffrey ---- 687
Wilson, Woodrow ---- 603
Windows on the Pacific ---- 389
Winter, Ella ---- 688, 689, 690
Winter Palace (Russia) ---- 566
Wise, Rabbi Stephen S ---- 411
Wittfogel, Dr. Karl August ---- 373, 374, 375, 376, 386, 449, 450, 475, 476, 483
Womens Congress. (See Fourth Annual Womens Congress.)
Wood, Herbert J ---- 568
Worchester House ---- 680, 681
Worker ---- 639, 690
Workers and Peasants Party (Japan) ---- 667
World Federation of Trade Unions ---- 607
World Labor Conference ---- 606, 607
World Telegram ---- 441
World Tourist Agency ---- 678
World War I ---- 578, 637
WPB. (See War Production Board.)
Wrenn, Heaton L ---- 565
Wright ---- 579
Wright, Louise L ---- 568
Wu-Keu, Miss Liu ---- 436

X

Xavier University ---- 466

Y

Yakut Republic ---- 675
Yale University ---- 475
Yalta Agreement ---- 606, 607
Yamakawa, Dr ---- 364, 365
Yarnell, Adm. H. E ---- 433, 445, 477, 481, 495
Yasuda ---- 666
Yasou ---- 364, 365, 395, 450, 476
Yasuto ---- 375
Yat-sen, Sun ---- 476
Yat-sen, Madam Sun ---- 436, 437, 455, 456, 457, 565
Yergan, Dr. Max ---- 622
YMCA. (See Young Mens Christian Ass'n)
Yosemite Conference. (See Institute of Pacific Relations Yosemite Conference.)
Yoshikawa, Mitsusada ---- 499–511
Young Communist League ---- 594, 598
Young Mens Christian Association (YMCA) ---- 633
Young Womens Christian Association (YWCA) ---- 590, 591, 620, 621, 622
Yusami, Rokuro ---- 358

Page
Yutang, Mrs. Lin 409, 410
Yu-wan, Liu 426, 427, 537, 652
YWCA. (See Young Women's Christian Association.)

Z

Zacharias, Capt. E. M 613, 614
Zaibatsu 556, 560, 561, 562, 666

×

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 9999 05018 312 6

Boston Public Library
Central Library, Copley Square

Division of Reference and Research Services

Social Sciences
Department

The Date Due Card in the pocket indicates the date on or before which this book should be returned to the Library.

Please do not remove cards from this pocket.

No. 9335.44a 165
pts. 1-3
A

Complete set on Hearing #

3 9999 05018 312 6

1953.A1163

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

HEARINGS

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS

OF THE

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY UNITED STATES SENATE

EIGHTY-SECOND CONGRESS

FIRST SESSION

ON

THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

PART 3

SEPTEMBER 14, 18, 19, 20, 25, 1951

Printed for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary

Kirstein Business Branch
DEC 24 1952

UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
22848 WASHINGTON : 1951

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada, Chairman

HARLEY M. KILGORE, West Virginia	ALEXANDER WILEY, Wisconsin
JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi	WILLIAM LANGER, North Dakota
WARREN G. MAGNUSON, Washington	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan
HERBERT R. O'CONOR, Maryland	WILLIAM E. JENNER, Indiana
ESTES KEFAUVER, Tennessee	ARTHUR V. WATKINS, Utah
WILLIS SMITH, North Carolina	ROBERT C. HENDRICKSON, New Jersey

J. G. SOURWINE, Counsel

SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada, Chairman

JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan
HERBERT R. O'CONOR, Maryland	WILLIAM E. JENNER, Indiana
WILLIS SMITH, North Carolina	ARTHUR V. WATKINS, Utah

SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi, Chairman

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan

ROBERT MORRIS, Special Counsel
BENJAMIN MANDEL, Director of Research

CONTENTS

Testimony of—	Page
Carter, Edward C	896
Colegrove, Prof. Kenneth	905
Dooman, Eugene H	703
Fortier, Brig. Gen. L. Joseph (retired)	843
Kornfeder, Joseph Zack	864
Wedemeyer, Lt. Gen. Albert C. (retired)	775
Widener, Mrs. William Harry	755

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY
ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS
OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10 a.m., pursuant to call, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Senator Pat McCarran (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Eastland, and Smith of North Carolina.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

The chair regrets that, due to the absence of the chairman from the Senate for 2 weeks, the matter of these hearings has been delayed. They will proceed more expeditiously from now on.

Who is our witness today, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Eugene Dooman.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before this subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. DOOMAN. I do.

TESTIMONY OF EUGENE H. DOOMAN, LITCHFIELD, CONN.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give your name and address to the reporter, please, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. Eugene H. Dooman, and my home is at Litchfield, Conn.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present occupation, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. I am retired.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, will you tell us what positions you have held in the United States State Department?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, from the beginning, in 1912, when I entered the Foreign Service, I was first assigned to the Embassy at Tokyo to study the Japanese language.

After several years' tour of duty in several of the consulates in Japan, I was assigned to the American Embassy at Tokyo as third secretary in 1921.

I remained there until 1931, when I was transferred as first secretary of the Embassy at London.

From 1933 to 1937 I had the Japanese desk in the Far Eastern Division of the State Department, and in that last year I was transferred to Tokyo as counselor of the American Embassy.

In 1942 after my return from Japan I was assigned to the Embassy in Russia as minister consular. I returned to the State Department in 1942 and after doing various things I was assigned in February 1945 as Chairman of the Far East Subcommittee of the State, War, and Navy Coordinating Committee.

And I retired on the 31st of August 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you explain the importance of that Far Eastern Committee mentioned as your last position held in the State Department?

Mr. DOOMAN. It had previously been found that discussions between the various departments—that is, primarily the State Department, the War Department, and the Navy Department—in connection with problems that arose out of the war through negotiations were unsatisfactory.

And in 1944, I believe it was, a committee was formed, known as the State, War, and Navy Coordinating Committee. The members of that committee were the Assistant Secretaries of those repective Departments, the Chairman being James Dunn, who was Assistant Secretary of State.

Under the Coordinating Committee there were two subcommittees, one for Germany and one for Japan, and it was the function of those committees to formulate a joint agreement or meeting of the minds of the three Departments on various problems that had both political and military content.

The Subcommittee on the Far East, of which I was Chairman, then had the function of developing and formulating policies with respect to Japan primarily, which had both military and political content.

I would therefore say that it was the original source of all of the ultimate decisions that were made in the field of policy respecting Japan.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, Mr. Dooman, can you recall that Owen Lattimore was proposed at one time as a consultant to the chief of the China desk of the Department of State?

Mr. DOOMAN. I can; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us your recollection with respect to that particular incident, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. At that time, which must have been early in 1945, I was, as I have just said, acting as Chairman of this Far Eastern Subcommittee of SWINK, and I was therefore not primarily interested in the functions and operations of the Far Eastern Division, or the Far Eastern Office, as it was then called.

But one of the men in the office told me that papers were going through the State Department calling for the appointment of Dr. Lattimore as adviser to the China Division, the papers having been initiated by the Chief of the China Division.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was that?

Mr. DOOMAN. That was Mr. John Carter Vincent.

I discussed the matter with Mr. Ballantine, who was then Director of the Far Eastern Division, and pointed out that Lattimore at that time, and for several months previously, had been using every opportunity to discredit the then Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Grew.

And I pointed out that it would be incongruous for a man who had expressed himself so freely on Mr. Grew to be occupying a position under Mr. Grew.

With that I reported the matter to Mr. Grew, and he then called up the administrative people who had charge of appointments and ordered that the papers be quashed.

Senator EASTLAND. What did Mr. Lattimore have to say against Mr. Grew? What was the complaint against him?

Mr. DOOMAN. That would take a long time.

Senator EASTLAND. Was it because he had been opposing communism in the Far East and because he wanted a peace treaty that would prevent the Communists from getting Japan?

The CHAIRMAN. By "he," you refer to Mr. Grew?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOOMAN. The principal cause of complaint was that Mr. Grew had advocated an attitude on the part of the United States of noninterference with the Japanese themselves in the form of government which they wanted to institute.

In other words, if they wanted to keep the Emperor, by all means let them keep it. If they wanted to disestablish the monarchy, by all means let them disestablish it.

Senator EASTLAND. Why would the Communists want the Emperor overthrown?

Mr. DOOMAN. The point which you have mentioned, Senator, was one of the cardinal points of the Communists not only in the United States but also throughout the world. They knew perfectly well, of course, that communism and a monarchial system were incongruous.

Therefore, the first thing was to get rid of the monarchial system.

They knew also that the communalistic type of society which has existed in Japan for 2,000 years existed largely because of the Emperor being a sort of an element which brought the Nation together.

Now, this is the type of thing which I do not understand myself, and I do not believe any occidental can, but nevertheless, it is a fact.

Senator EASTLAND. Lattimore understood that fact?

Mr. DOOMAN. Lattimore understood the fact that it was the Emperor who did bring it together.

Senator EASTLAND. His opposition to Grew was that Mr. Grew was favoring a policy after the war was won that would prevent the Communists from getting Japan. That is it in a nutshell, is it not?

Mr. DOOMAN. That would be—if I were to answer your question, Senator, it would be largely question of opinion.

Senator EASTLAND. That is your judgment?

Mr. DOOMAN. That is my judgment.

Senator EASTLAND. And Mr. John Carter Vincent was urging the appointment of Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that a question?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator Eastland's proposed question was: Was Mr. John Carter Vincent urging the appointment of Owen Lattimore at that time?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

As I mentioned in my testimony, the papers calling for the assignment of Lattimore as adviser to the China Division were initiated by Vincent.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, at this point, since we have gotten into the subject, I think it is appropriate that we should introduce into the record a resolution of the Communist Party at this juncture with respect to the policy toward Japan.

Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate the resolution that has been discussed so far today?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a mimeographed copy of excerpts from a magazine called Political Affairs for July 1945, the official organ at that time of the Communist Political Association.

It is headed "The present situation and the next tasks."

The CHAIRMAN. That is published where?

Mr. MANDEL. In Political Affairs, July 1945, published in New York City.

These excerpts are taken from a draft resolution of the national board of the CPA, which is the abbreviation for the Communist Political Association, as amended and approved by the national committee on June 20.

This draft is now submitted for the further consideration of the membership and for final action by the emergency national convention of the CPA on July 26–28.

The following excerpts are quoted [reading]:

This growing reactionary opposition to a truly democratic and anti-Fascist Europe in which the people will have the right to freely choose their own forms of government and social system has been reflected in many of the recent actions of the State Department.

This explains why, at San Francisco, Stettinius and Connally joined hands with Vandenberg—the spokesman for Hoover and the most predatory sections of American finance capital. * * *

It is this reactionary position of the American big business which explains why Washington, along with London, are pursuing the dangerous policy of preventing a strong, united and democratic China; and why they bolster up the reactionary, incompetent Chiang Kai-shek regime and why they harbor the idea of coming to terms with the Mikado in the hope of maintaining Japan as a reactionary bulwark in the Far East.

In the vital struggle to crush feudal-Fascist-militarist Japan, it is necessary that American labor collaborate in the prosecution of the anti-Japanese war with all democratic forces who favor and support victory over Japanese imperialism.

However, labor and other anti-Fascists must take cognizance of the fact that, amongst those big-business circles who desire military victory over Japan, there are influential forces, including some in the State Department, who are seeking a compromise peace which will preserve the power of the Mikado after the war, at the expense of China and the other Far East peoples, and directed against the Soviet Union. Similarly, there are powerful capitalist groupings, including many in administration circles, who plan to use the coming defeat of Japan for imperialist aims, for maintaining a reactionary puppet Kuomintang regime in China, for obtaining American imperialist domination in the Far East. * * *

In the opinion of the Communist Policy Association, such a program should be based on the following slogans of action:

* * * * * * *

Remove from the State Department all pro-Fascist and reactionary officials. * * *

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have introduced into the record the excerpts of the extracts from Political Affairs of July 1945, which was read by Mr. Mandel. I would like to introduce that into the record and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be so marked and received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 234," and is as follows:)

[From Political Affairs, July 1945]

THE PRESENT SITUATION AND THE NEXT TASKS

Draft resolution of the National Board, CPA (Communist Political Association), as amended and approved by the national committee on June 20. This draft is now submitted for the further consideration of the membership and for final action by the emergency national convention of the CPA on July 26–28 (p. 579):

* * * * * * *

This growing reactionary opposition to a truly democratic and anti-Fascist Europe, in which the people will have the right to freely choose their own forms of government and social system, has been reflected in many of the recent actions of the State Department. This explains why, at San Francisco, Stettinius and Connally joined hands with Vandenberg—the spokesman for Hoover and the most predatory sections of American finance capital * * * (p. 580).

It is this reactionary position of American big business which explains why Washington, along with London, are pursuing the dangerous policy of preventing a strong, united and democratic China; why they bolster up the reactionary, incompetent Chiang Kai-shek regime and why they harbor the idea of coming to terms with the Mikado in the hope of maintaining Japan as a reactionary bulwark in the Far East * * * (p. 581).

In the vital struggle to crush feudal-Fascist militarist Japan it is necessary that American labor collaborate in the prosecution of the anti-Japanese war with all democratic forces who favor and support victory over Japanese imperialism.

However, labor and the other anti-Fascists must take cognizance of the fact that, amongst those big-business circles who desire military victory over Japan, there are influential forces, including some in the State Department, who are seeking a compromise peace which will preserve the power of the Mikado after the war, at the expense of China and the other Far East peoples, and directed against the Soviet Union. Similarly, there are powerful capitalist groupings, including many in administration circles, who plan to use the coming defeat of Japan for imperialist aims, for maintaining a reactionary puppet Kuomintang regime in China, for obtaining American imperialist domination in the Far East * * * (p. 583).

In the opinion of the Communist Political Association, such a program should be based on the following slogans of action:

* * * * * * *

Remove from the State Department all pro-Fascist and reactionary officials * * * (p. 584).

Mr. DOOMAN. May I add something to that story about the papers for appointment?

Mr. MORRIS. By all means, Mr. Dooman.

Mr. DOOMAN. I just recall now that about 2 weeks after this episode Dr. Isaiah Bowman, president of the Johns Hopkins University, came to see the President. That must have been then, I think it was, along about February of 1945. He came to see the President and asked the President to intervene on behalf of Dr. Lattimore with the State Department. And the matter was brought to the attention then of the State Department and no further action was taken.

May I correct it again? This must have been about April of 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did John Carter Vincent hold at that time, Mr. Dooman, at the time these papers for employing Mr. Lattimore as consultant were submitted?

Mr. DOOMAN. He was Chief of the China Division.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he hold any other position in the State Department?

Mr. DOOMAN. Not at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he associated with one of the area committees?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, yes. The far-eastern area was an intradepart-mental committee at which there was an attempt made to get a consensus of opinion about various policies concerning the Far East. And the composition of that committee varied with the problems that were discussed.

But, generally speaking, the standing members of that were Dr. Blakeslee, who was chairman, Dr. Hugh Borton, who was secretary, and then the Chief of the Japan Division, Mr. Earl Dickover; Mr. Ballantine, Director of the Far Eastern Office, and myself as chairman of this far eastern subcommittee.

And then, depending on the problems to be discussed, there was representation from other divisions of the Department who were interested in that particular problem.

For example, if we were discussing the question of the mandated islands, we would have representatives from the Legal Section and from, we will say, the European Section, and so on.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you say this was a policy-making committee, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. It was a policy-developing committee.

Mr. MORRIS. Was John Carter Vincent a member of that committee?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes; he could come in whenever he wanted to. As a matter of fact, he chose not to come very often. He was usually represented by a man from his office called Julian Friedman.

The CHAIRMAN. You were asked the question: Was John Carter Vincent a member of that committee.

I would like to have an answer to: Was he a member of that committee?

Mr. DOONAN. Well, as I tried to explain, the membership in that committee was a fairly loose thing, because it varied with the subjects to be discussed. There were no officially appointed members of the committee. There were certain standing members, those primarily concerned with Japan.

And then the composition of the committee was extended, depending upon the character of the subject to be discussed. Naturally, China would be very much influenced by whatever policies we set up for Japan, and, therefore, it was quite right and proper that the China Division should be fully familiar with whatever was going on in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. When John Carter Vincent did attend, did he have full authority the same as any other member of the committee both to speak, act, and vote?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you testify, Mr. Dooman, that when Mr. John Carter Vincent did not attend he sent a representative?

Mr. DOOMAN. Sometimes they both came.

Mr. MORRIS. Sometimes both Julian Friedman and John Carter Vincent came?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did Julian Friedman take a position and express himself at these meetings?

Mr. DOOMAN. Not very often.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever make any charges against Julian Friedman at that time in connection with his attendance at the area meetings?

Mr. DOOMAN. No; I did not make any charges because that implies that I complained to somebody else, some higher authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt again. I may have lost track of this.

Who was Julian Friedman?

Mr. DOOMAN. Julian Friedman was a member of the China Division of the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce into the record at this time a letter which indicates Julian Friedman's association with the State Department, and at the same time his connection with the Institute of Pacific Relations, which composition is being considered by this committee.

Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate both of those documents?

Mr. MANDEL. The first is a letter from the State Department to the Honorable Pat McCarran, dated April 23, 1951, signed by Eldridge Durbrow, Chief, Division of Foreign Service Personnel.

The letter reads as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Your letter of April 10, 1951, addressed to the Secretary, concerning Julian R. Friedman, has been referred to me for reply.

A review of Mr. Friedman's record indicates that he had served as a junior economic analyst in the Foreign Service Auxiliary from October 5, 1945, until the termination of his employment on November 12, 1946.

As you may recall, the Foreign Service Act of 1946, approved August 13, was effective November 13, 1946. Consequently, it had been decided to abolish the Auxiliary, a temporary wartime branch of the Foreign Service, as of November 12, 1946. In proceeding with the liquidation of the Auxiliary, it was necessary to order back to the United States for termination a number of temporary or Auxiliary officers, including Mr. Friedman. Mr. Friedman's record shows that his services were terminated without prejudice.

I trust that the foregoing information will meet your needs.

Sincerely yours.

The Biographical Register of the State Department, dated October 1, 1945, on page 106, lists the positions held by Julian Friedman, which I would like to put into the record.

I can read them, if you desire.

Mr. MORRIS. I do not think it is necessary, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANDEL. I also submit Security in the Pacific, a preliminary report of the ninth conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations held at Hot Springs, Va., January 6 to 17, 1945, on page 1061, which shows that Julian Friedman was a member of the conference secretariat.

And further I submit a circular distributed by the Institute of Pacific Relations showing a meeting held announcing a new IPR study, Notes on Labor Problems in Nationalist China, by Israel Epstein, with a supplement called Labor in Nationalist China, 1945–48, by Julian R. Friedman.

Introduce that circular into the record.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to introduce into the record, to have marked as the next consecutive exhibits, the four documents just described and read by Mr. Mandel.

The first is a letter from the State Department to the chairman on Julian Friedman's position in the State Department.

The second is the Biographical Register excerpt.

The third is the record from Security in the Pacific, the Institute of Pacific Relations publication, showing that Julian Friedman was a member of the conference secretariat, and the fourth being a throw-away indicating that Julian Friedman had written the publication under the auspices of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. They may be inserted in the record and properly identified.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 235, 236, 237, and 238," and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 235

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 23, 1951.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Your letter of April 10, 1951, addressed to the Secretary, concerning Julian R. Friedman has been referred to me for reply.

A review of Mr. Friedman's record indicates that he had served as a junior economic analyst in the Foreign Service Auxiliary from October 5, 1945, until the termination of his employment on November 12, 1946.

As you may recall, the Foreign Service Act of 1946, approved August 13, was effective November 13, 1946. Consequently it had been decided to abolish the Auxiliary, a temporary wartime branch of the Foreign Service, as of November 12, 1946. In proceeding with the liquidation of the Auxiliary, it was necessary to order back to the United States for termination a number of temporary or auxiliary officers including Mr. Friedman. Mr. Friedman's record shows that his services were terminated without prejudice.

I trust that the foregoing information will meet your needs.

Sincerely yours,

ELBRIDGE DURBROW,
Chief, Division of Foreign Service Personnel.

EXHIBIT No. 236

JULIAN R. FRIEDMAN: App. div. asst. in the Dept. of State, Sept. 2, 1943; asst. to chief Div. of Labor Relations, Sept. 1, 1944; divisional asst., Nov. 20, 1944; asst. sec. of comm., United Nations Conf. on Int. Org., San Francisco, 1945; research and analysis asst., May 17, 1945. (Biographic Register, Dept. of State, Oct. 1, 1945, p. 106.)

EXHIBIT No. 237

JULIAN R. FRIEDMAN

CONFERENCE MEMBERSHIP

Conference Secretariat:

* * *

Julian Friedman

* * *

(Security in the Pacific, a preliminary report of the Ninth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations, Hot Springs, Va., Jan. 6–17, 1945, p. 161.)

EXHIBIT No. 238

Announcing a new IPR study, Notes on Labor Problems in Nationalist China, by Israel Epstein (159 pp. mimeographed), $2.25.

With a supplement: Labor in Nationalist China, 1945–48, by Julian R. Friedman. Chapters: The War and Industry; Hours and Wages; Migrant Skilled Workers; New (Local) Workers; Women and Children in Industry; "Coolie" Labor; Conscript, Contract, and Slave; Kuomintang Labor Law and Decrees; Labor Organizations and the Labor Movement * * * with a documentary appendix with the text of important Nationalist and Communist labor laws and policy statements.

INTERNATIONAL SECRETARIAT, INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

1 East Fifty-fourth Street, New York 22, N. Y.

[Attached]

Please send me ____ copies of "Labor Notes on Nationalist China."
____ $2.25 enclosed____Bill me (Postage added).
____ I am an IPR member entitled to $1.80 price.
Name _____
Address _____

Mr. MORRIS. I think we have shown in past hearings the connection between Mr. Owen Lattimore and the Institute of Pacific Relations to a great extent, and John Carter Vincent.

I think we may as well at this point show the connection of John Carter Vincent with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MANDEL. I have a letter dated November 12, 1945, addressed to E. C. Carter, that was taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I read the first paragraph:

In answer to your letter of November 1, there is attached hereto a list of the present board of trustees of the American Council, listing the dates of their election, the amounts of their current contribution, and the largest amount they have ever contributed.

On this list we have the name of John Carter Vincent.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, this shows that John Carter Vincent was in 1945 a member of the board of trustees of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I would like that introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

The CHAIRMAN. From what source does this come?

Mr. MANDEL. It comes from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. It may be marked and filed with the committee.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 239" and is as follows:)

NOVEMBER 12, 1945.

DEAR MR. CARTER: In answer to your letter of November 1, there is attached hereto a list of the present board of trustees of the American Council, listing the dates of their election, the amount of their current contribution, and the largest amount they have ever contributed.

The answers to your other questions can be summarized as follows:

The most active trustees in the New York area are those on the executive committee. Of these, Calkins, Barnett, Huggins, Jessup, and McConaughy have been the most active. Morris has regularly attended meetings, made a special gift to the library of some books in his father's collection, is available for advice, but is neither a large contributor nor will he assume any responsibility for fund raising. Seymour regularly attended meetings the first 6 months after my arrival but has been reorganizing a new company and so has been unavailable for anything more than telephone comment for some months. He is more allergic to Kohlberg's charges than most members of the committee, but is unquestionably of value in money raising, as he is well known downtown and generally well liked. The most important person to rely upon Seymour's judgment currently is E. B. Kilner of the Associated Telephone Services, who has repeatedly told me that his company is on the verge of supporting us by a contribution of $1,000 to $5,000 or withdrawing their current $250 support entirely.

In Seattle, the most active members of the board are Martin and Allen. Other active people in Seattle are Greenwood, Baillargeon, and Fuller, although Reginald Parsons has renewed a good deal of his old interest. Allen is a potential troublemaker but I find he can be handled by talking as tough to him as he talks to you. If the current plans for a National Conference of Amco go through and Allen is completely sold on our bona fides, he will be of considerable use in money raising in the Northwest. It would be unwise to rely on Ben Kizer in that area as many of the Seattle businessmen, although close friends of Ben, regard him as an outsider by virtue of his Spokane connections.

The most active members of the board in San Francisco are Greenslade, Allen, Emma McLaughlin, Hunter Galen Fisher, Brayton Wilbur, and Wickett. Of these, Brayton Wilbur and Wickett are the most important in money raising. Galen Fisher has contributed articles to the Far Eastern Survey. Mrs. McLaughlin, Mrs. Dorothy Rogers (not a national board member), and Lynn White, Jr., president of Mills (not a national board member) have been most active in the school program and in general membership activities.

In Los Angeles, Rosecrans, although technically chairman of the now defunct Los Angeles committee, has done little more than make his annual contribution. Arthur Coons is the spearhead in that neighborhood and, if Rosecrans can be persuaded to give Coons a go-ahead signal, a Los Angeles committee can very easily be reconstituted. Harvey Mudd is interested—almost entirely in research—but would probably be available for financial support if a research program centered at the Huntington Library were undertaken. Dr. Millikan is interested in such a program and would put on a meeting in Huntington Library for discussion of such activities.

In Chicago, an entire new slate of trustees is required with the exception of the Quincy Wrights. Edward Embree freely admits that he has only a small portion of his time available for the IPR and would like to be relieved of responsibility. The same is true of McNair; and, Colegrove, although willing to talk, is carrying a torch against us because of our handling of India and the use of people like Kate Mitchell and Kumar Goshal.

In other sections of the country, the most interested trustees, as shown by correspondence, are Jerome Green and Mortimer Graves, both of whom have written coments on articles in the Survey and are interested in activities generally.

Apart from the executive committee, Fisher, Ned Allen, Mortimer Graves, Arthur Coons, Brayton Wilbur, and Morison represent the only individuals on the national board of trustees with whom there has been correspondence on anything other than renewing their contributions.

EXHIBIT No. 239

AMCO board of trustees

	Year elected	Present contribution		Highest contribution
		Date	Amount	Date	Amount
Greene, Jerome D	1928	Nov. 15, 1944	$10	1930	$10,000
Wild, Payson		Aug. 7, 1945	5
Chapman, Mrs. Ralph		Nov. 2, 1944	10
Embree, Edwin R	1943	Mar. 19, 1945	10	Jan. 23, 1943	25
Wright, Mrs. Louise	1924-37	June 18, 1945	10
Allen, Riley H		1943	25
Atherton, Frank C		1943	650
Dillingham, W. F		1943	100	1941	250
Loomis, Charles F		Dec. 16, 1944	250
Morison, George Abbot		June 5, 1945	10
Barnett, Eugene E		Dec. 21, 1944	10	Dec. 21, 1943	25
Calkins, Robert D	1943	Mar. 12, 1945	10
Chamberlain, Joseph P	1929	Aug. 4, 1944	500	July 26, 1943	1,000
Field, Frederick V	1932	1944	760	1938	12,600
Gilchrist, Huntington		Dec. 29, 1944	25
Huggins, G. Ellsworth	1937	1944	650
Jessup, Philip C	1933	July 20, 1945	10
Luce, Henry R		Dec. 16, 1944	2,500
McConaughy, James L	1943	Jan. 12, 1945	10
McCoy, Frank R	1943	Oct. 13, 1944	25
Morris, Lawrence		Oct. 20, 1944	25	Oct. 23, 1943, WPF, 3 years.	300
Parker, Philo W	1937	Aug. 7, 1945	25	Feb. 24, 1942	50
Seymour, Lawrence D	1943	July 13, 1945	25
Kizer, Benjamin H	1935	Dec. 15, 1944	50	Aug. 17, 1943, WPF.	10
Martin, Charles E	1927	Jan. 30, 1945	10
Allen, Captain		Feb. 12, 1945	10
Charles, Allan E		Jan. 20, 1945	15
Davis, Joseph S		Dec. 1, 1944	5
Fisher, Galen M	1927	July 3, 1945, New York.	25	1940, New York	275
Do		Mar. 6, 1945	50	1940, San Francisco.	315
Grady, Henry F		Oct. 31, 1944	100
Greenslade, Admiral		Feb. 7, 1944	10
Do		Dec. 6, 1944	50
McLaughlin, Mrs. A	1927	Dec. 6, 1944	75	1940	450
Rowell, Chester	1927	Feb. 8, 1945	10	December 1929	500
Sproul, Robert G		Apr. 6, 1945	10	June 30, 1941	25
Wickett, F. A		Jan. 26, 1945	40	Mar. 29, 1944	5
Do		Jan. 26, 1945		Sept. 21, 1944	100
Do				Dec. 14, 1944	350
Wilbur, Brayton				1942	100
Wilbur, Ray Lyman	1934	Mar. 14, 1945	150	1940	300
Rosecrans, W. S		May 2, 1944	100
DeCaux, Len	1943	Jan. 5, 1945	10
Fairbank, John		Feb. 26, 1945	5
Graves, Mortimer	1943	Mar. 8, 1937	5
Lattimore, Owen		Nov. 20, 1944	10	June 8, 1938	20
Thomas, Elbert D		Mar. 6, 1945	10
Vincent, John Carter		Complimentary
Buck, Pearl S		Dec. 26, 1944	25
Emeny, Brooks		Oct. 25, 1943	500
Emeny, Brooks and Mrs		WPF	2,500
Hoffman	1943	Mar. 28, 1945	100
Notestein, Mrs. A	1927	July 18, 1945	100
Trippe, Juan		Dec. 30, 1944	2,500
Yarnell, Admiral H. E		Nov. 6, 1944	25

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, could you describe for us Owen Lattimore's position with respect to Japan at the time of the episode we have just had testimony concerning?

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Morris, may I remind you that I have not answered the last question that you put to me?

Mr. MORRIS. I am sorry.

The CHAIRMAN. I was going to draw that to your attention. I did not think the last question had been answered. You interrupted him with the insertion of some material.

Mr. DOOMAN. You asked me whether I had made any charges against Julian Friedman, and I said I had not made any charges because that implied that I had complained to some higher authority.

The fact was that a very short time after statements had been made in secret meetings of this Far East Area Committee, the proceedings and the statements made by various individuals immediately were quoted in various left-wing periodicals and newspapers There were literally dozens of such occasions

Senator EASTMAN. Such at PM?

Mr. DOOMAN. That would include PM.

It so happens that among all these instances that actually occurred, I happened to keep one, and that was in the Nation of February 3, 1945, where there appears an article by one Pacificus, entitled "Dangerous Experts."

Among other things here is the following paragraph which I would like to read, if I may. I might say that Dangerous Experts refers among others to myself.

> Mr. Dooman not only believes in retaining the emperorist system minus some of the more militaristic forms of emperor worship, but also thinks that the only elements we can rely on in Japan are the business leaders, court circle aristocrats, and bureaucrats.

It so happened that at one of the meetings of the Far Eastern Area Committee, a few days before this article was published, we were discussing the question of education, and I pointed out that the big business leaders, members of the aristocracy, the people in the professions in the higher levels, included by far the largest majority of those who had been educated at Yale and Harvard and Cambridge and Oxford, and other universities, both in England and the United States.

If there was any value whatsoever in reeducation along our lines it was obvious, then, that either these people had enjoyed the benefits of our educational facilities and were, therefore, the most progressive elements, or there was no value whatever in reeducation. You could not have both.

Now, I did make that statement. This is a garbled version of what I said. But the important thing is that it appeared a few days later in The Nation.

Well, by a process of elimination in a number of instances of this kind, I found that outside of those who were more or less standing members of the committee who appeared every time and who were completely reliable, that Friedman was the constant element.

I therefore went to Friedman and I taxed him with being the source of information for these articles that appeared in Amerasia, in PM, The Nation, New Republic, and so on. He denied that he had given any of this information to unauthorized persons.

He said that he reported only to his chief, who was then Mr. Vincent.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. who?

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Vincent.

Mr. MORRIS. That being John Carter Vincent?

Mr. DOOMAN. John Carter Vincent.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, would you tell us to the best of your ability the position that Owen Lattimore took at that time with respect to Japan? This is in 1945.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, there is a whole library that could be made up of statements made by Mr. Lattimore during that period. I suppose the best known, the one most frequently quoted, is a book called Solution in Asia, which was published, I think, in about February 1945, and was very widely circulated during the spring and early summer, in fact until the surrender of Japan.

In general, he took the position that the Japanese people, when they were defeated, would rise in rebellion against the system and overthrow the monarchy; that there were elements in the State Department, the so-called reactionary Fascist elements, who knew nothing whatever about Japan except what they had picked up from people in high social levels in Japan, and that these elements were intended to use the prestige and the force of the influence of the United States to keep the Emperor in power against the will of the Japanese people.

Another point which he made was that the chief militarists were not the war lords, General Tojo and others, but the big industrial leaders. That these, the army and the navy, were merely puppets and instruments of the big industrialists.

Therefore, his position was that we should allow the Japanese people to have their revolt and disestablish the monarchy and that we should then try these industrialists as war criminals and put them out of the way so that they would never be in a position of influence.

And, third, that the Japanese system, economic system, should be completely broken up and a highly developed competitive economic system should be instituted.

Now, as I say, these statements can be found in a great many places.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give us whatever documentation you can?

Mr. DOOMAN. I have here, for example, a radio discussion, a round-table discussion that was carried out, I believe, under the auspices of the University of Chicago. It was along about July 8, 1945.

Now, I notice that the press recently quoted Dr. Lattimore as having said that his position had been consistently one of urging that we do not interfere in the event that the Japanese wanted to disestablish the monarchy. That is not the whole story.

In Solution in Asia, he makes this statement, which I cannot quote textually, but it runs somewhat along these lines. He says:

> I will venture the political prophecy that the Japanese people will themselves revolt and disestablish the monarch.

Now, the suggestion at the same time, at that time—that is, before the surrender—that people like Mr. Grew and myself were intending to keep the Emperor in power implied, then, that we proposed to use the influence and the position of the United States to prevent the exercise by the Japanese people of their own will.

Well, let me say at this point that this whole discussion about the Emperor carried on by the leftist press at that time was a piece of sheer lunacy. If the Japanese people wanted to get rid of the Emperor there was obviously nothing we could do to keep him in; if, on the other hand, the Japanese people wanted to keep the Emperor it would have been a piece of folly on our part to have disestablished a monarchy.

Senator EASTLAND. Did John Carter Vincent endorse those views of Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. DOOMAN. I never heard him express that opinion, except probably indirectly through—and this is only an assumption—no, Senator; if I may correct my statement, I will say no, I have never heard him express it.

Senator EASTLAND. When Mr. Grew resigned, what place in the Department did Mr. Vincent get?

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Grew retired, or at least presented his resignation on or about the 14th of August. I may be off a matter of a few days or so. But the day he retired, or presented his resignation, it was announced in the papers that Mr. Dean Acheson has been appointed as Under Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Acheson having previously retired as Assistant Secretary of State with the announcement that he was going to resume private practice.

Mr. Acheson then returned to the State Department somewhere around the 25th of August 1945. And the day after he returned there he announced that I would be replaced as chairman of the Far Eastern Subcommittee of Swink by Mr. Vincent.

Senator EASTLAND. I would like also to know, if I am not getting too far afield——

Mr. MORRIS. That is all right.

Senator EASTLAND. The difference in what was advocated by John Carter Vincent for Japan and the policies that the Communists put over in Eastern Europe. I would like to know the difference between the policies that he advocated for Japan and the policies that the Communists put over in Eastern Europe.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, sir, I am not competent to discuss authoritatively what the Communists put over in Eastern Europe, but I can tell you what was done in Japan.

And it may, perhaps, occur to you that there are certain very distinct analogies between what was done there and what was done in Eastern Europe.

Senator EASTLAND. They were practically the same; were they not?

Mr. DOOMAN. I would prefer, if I may, Senator, to describe——

Senator EASTLAND. What is it? You have discussed it, in executive session. Is it not your judgment, now, that the policies that Mr. Vincent attempted to put over in Japan were the same as the policies that Russia dictated for the satellite countries?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, I am trying to be as accurate——

Senator EASTLAND. What is your judgment?

Mr. DOOMAN. My judgment is it is the same.

Senator EASTLAND. They were the same?

Mr. DOOMAN. Obviously the same. But I would like to amplify that, if I may.

Senator EASTLAND. I want you to. I want you to explain what our State Department attempted to do in Japan, and the similarity with what Russia did in the satellite countries.

Mr. DOOMAN. On September 22, 1945, the White House released a paper, which was entitled, "The United States Initial Post-Surrender Policy for Japan." That paper was the work of our committee, the Far Eastern Subcommittee of SWINK, for a period of about 7 or 8 months, except for certain important changes which I will refer to.

As I was to retire from the State Department on the 31st of August I asked Mr. Dunn, as chairman of SWINK, to call a meeting for the express purpose of adopting this paper that we had been working on for a long time; namely, the United States Initial Post-Surrender Policy for Japan.

That paper was adopted by SWINK on the 29th of August, and on the 29th of August that was telegraphed out to General MacArthur as a firm United States policy for Japan.

However, in this release that was issued on the 22d of September, it was pointed out, or it was clear, that the paper had been reopened.

On September 6—mind you, on September 6—by September 6, Mr. Grew had retired as Under Secretary, and had been replaced by Mr. Acheson. I had retired and had been replaced as chairman of the far eastern subcommittee by Mr. Vincent.

Well, I was very much interested in seeing whether there had been any changes. And I found these, which I will quote. These were among the changes that had been made in the paper after it had been adopted on the 29th of August [reading]:

Policies shall be favored which permit the wide distribution of income and of the ownership of the means of production and trade. To this end it shall be the policy of the Supreme Commander—

(a) To prohibit the retention in or selection for places of importance in the economic field of individuals who do not direct future Japanese economic effort solely toward peaceful ends.

Please do not ask me to explain what that means.

(b) To favor a program for the dissolution of the large industrial and banking combinations which have exercised control of a large part of Japan's trade and industry.

It is on the basis of these two clauses that work was undertaken to destroy, first of all, to eliminate the capitalist class in Japan.

Senator EASTLAND (presiding). Who attempted to eliminate the capitalist class in Japan?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Who attempted to eliminate it?

Mr. DOOMAN. These were the instructions sent from Washington.

Senator EASTLAND. That was the American State Department?

Mr. DOOMAN. With the concurrence of the Navy Department and the War Department.

These were the instructions sent to General MacArthur through the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Senator EASTLAND. That was the work of John Carter Vincent, was it not?

Mr. DOOMAN. He was chairman at that time of this Far East subcommittee.

Senator EASTLAND. Go ahead. Excuse me.

Mr. MORRIS. May I just keep the record straight. It may be unnecessary, but may I point out that Mr. Dooman is testifying that this is the promulgation of American policy, and it represents a document that Mr. Dooman worked upon while he was officially connected with the State Department.

And he noticed that when the program was finally promulgated these were the changes that had been made by his successors from the program that had been adopted by Mr. Dooman and Mr. Grew prior to that time.

Mr. DOOMAN. That is so.

Senator EASTLAND. That was the Acheson-Vincent program there?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. What did they attempt to put over under that program?

Mr. DOOMAN. The first thing that was done, and this was in 1946, was to levy a capital tax of from 60 to 90 percent on all property in excess of $1,000.

Senator EASTLAND. Did Russia do that in the countries of Eastern Europe?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, that is why I hesitate to answer your questions directly, Senator, because I do not know whether they did, or not. I know that the end means was achieved by perhaps the same means, or by other means; I don't know.

Senator EASTLAND. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. DOOMAN. You can imagine what that meant. That is, a capital tax of from 60 to 90 percent of all property above $1,000. That almost at one stroke wiped out the capitalist class.

The excuse for that was that it was necessary to prevent an inflation.

At that time, if I am correct, in my recollection, the Japanese yen was pegged to the dollar at 15 yen to the dollar. And this was a measure purportedly to prevent any further inflation.

It was not more than a month or two after this thing was carried out that the yen then was pegged at 50 to 1. In other words, it had declined by more than a third. That was the ostensible reason given.

Of course, as anybody could see, it would not have been an effective one. But it did have the effect——

Senator EASTLAND. Go ahead. What were the other things that were proposed?

Mr. DOOMAN. The next thing was, and this is somewhat controversial, but perhaps a good case might be made out for it, but as everybody has seen today, after this thing has been in effect for some years, the thing is not working.

The next thing was to expropriate all land in excess of 5 acres held by any one owner.

Senator EASTLAND. That was a Communist system, was it not?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, Senator, in Poland I think they put the limit at 200 acres at that time. But in Japan, where 85 million people are trying to make a living off an area——

Senator EASTLAND. I understand, but they were following now the Communist system, were they not?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. Go ahead.

Senator SMITH. May I ask him one question?

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Smith.

Senator SMITH. I understood you to say just now the yen was first pegged at 15 to 1.

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Later on at 50 to 1. And then you made the observation that that was a decline of one-third. It would decline 300 percent, would it not?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes; that is right.

Senator SMITH. You were in error about the one-third?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Well, all land was expropriated in excess of 5 acres. There was an ostensible effort to pay them compensation for this land, but by this time they were paying for land in yen which had depreciated to one one-hundred-and-eightieth of the nominal value of the land.

For example, if the land had been valued in 1920, as it was—that was when the financial panic was taking place—if the land was valued at $1,000 an acre, they paid the owners of the land at $1,000, but in currency that had depreciated to one one-hundred-and-eightieth of the value.

In other words, if a man had $1,000 in land, he was paid one-one-hundred-and-eightieth.

There was virtually confiscation of all land above 5 acres.

Senator EASTLAND. Go ahead and describe what else there was.

Mr. DOOMAN. Then all holdings by any one individual in any large corporation in excess of 3 percent were confiscated. There were more polite terms used. That is, they were transferred to a government pool.

And then the Japanese Government was ordered to sell those shares in a certain order of priority to farmers' cooperatives, labor unions, and shopkeepers, at whatever price might be offered.

And, furthermore, the Japanese Government was ordered to disregard any relationship between the price offered and the real value; and, furthermore, the Japanese Government was ordered to finance any bids for the shares by farmers' cooperatives and labor unions.

So that the net result was then to destroy the previously existing capitalist class. As a capitalist class they no longer exist. Their places have been taken by hordes of black marketeers and Chinese and Formosan thugs of various kinds who have been engaged in illicit trade of various kinds and have then amassed this enormous fortune.

The net result was then to replace people who had traditionally had property with these black marketeers and thugs and blackguards of various kinds.

Senator EASTLAND. Were those recommendations favored by General MacArthur?

Mr. DOOMAN. Let me cite in reply to that the statement made by Mr. Acheson in reply to General MacArthur's pronouncement to the Japanese people. I think it was on the first anniversary of the occupation where General MacArthur had indicated that he looked forward to the time when the American occupation in Japan could be reduced to some figure below 200,000 soldiers.

That aroused great resentment in the State Department, and at that time Mr. Acheson issued the statement that General MacArthur or the military occupation were there merely to carry out the orders of the executive in Washington; that they were not the formulators of policy.

By implication policy was formulated in Washington.

Therefore, in general, one would say that it didn't really make—I don't know whether General MacArthur approved or disapproved.

Senator EASTLAND. What other policies were there?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, in the draft of this initial policy paper, which had been prepared under my chairmanship, with regard to people who were suspected of being war criminals or being militarists, it was provided that they should be purged; that is, removed from any position of authority, in the light of their own personal record, as brought out by some form of judicial investigation.

In other words, a man would stand or fall on his own personal record.

As you will see from that statement that I just read out, people were removed from office on the basis of their occupation. Practically the whole executive branch of Japanese business, from chairmen of boards down to section chiefs, practically the whole white-collar element in Japanese big business was removed at one stroke. Not because there was any record against them, but because they occupied certain positions. They destroyed it.

Senator EASTLAND. Was it not an attempt to destroy Japanese capitalism?

Mr. DOOMAN. It was an attempt to destroy and eliminate the brains of Japanese business.

Senator EASTLAND. If you destroy the brains, you destroy——

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a minute. Let us see if we can get the question and answer together. The question was: Was this not an effort to destroy Japanese capitalism, and you converted that into saying Japanese brains. Let us get them together.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, I am saying——

The CHAIRMAN. Answer the Senator's question.

Mr. DOOMAN. In my opinion it was. I would like to stress that in my opinion it was.

Senator EASTLAND. All right.

What else did they attempt to put over?

Mr. DOOMAN. Just following that question, following that point, I want to quote from this round-table discussion of the University of Chicago on July 8, this statement attributed to Mr. Lattimore [reading]:

> That includes a lot of economic and political action as well because we cannot forget that the civilian warmakers, that is the big industrialists and financiers of Japan, are really primarily even more responsible for Japan's going to war than the military and the navy, since the army and navy are only the striking instruments and the tools.

Now, after the occupation about 12 of the leading Japanese industrialists were put in prison, and they were held in prison for 18 months while every effort was made to dig up evidence which would warrant their being put on trial, just as the military and political people were put on trial and later condemned.

They were held, as I say, for 18 months, and released because there was no evidence.

Now, if we are then to follow Mr. Lattimore, we obviously did a great injustice to General Tojo in hanging him, because according to Mr. Lattimore, we released his lords and masters and hung the tool and the instrument.

Senator EASTLAND. What other things were in the policy for Japan?

Mr. DOOMAN. I have with me a copy of a paper known as Far East Commission 230. This is a paper of considerable length, Senator, in which all of the principles are laid out for the atomizing of Japanese industry.

Senator EASTLAND. The what? I did not understand.

Mr. DOOMAN. The atomizing, the fragmentation of Japanese industry. It is a very long paper.

The general purport was to see to it that the Japanese economy, not only in industry but in banking and in every other field, should be reduced to the smallest possible element.

The CHAIRMAN. How is that tied in here? Who is the article by?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, it was a paper. It was introduced as follows: To the Far Eastern Commission by the Secretary General, Mr. Nelson T. Jonathan, under a paper which reads as follows [reading]:

The enclosure, a statement of proposed policy with respect to excessive concentrations of economic power in Japan, submitted by the United States, is circulated herewith for the consideration of the Far East Commission and is referred to Committee No. 2, economic and financial affairs.

Who prepared this paper, I have no means of knowing.

Mr. MORRIS. Is it an official publication of the State Department?

Mr. DOOMAN. This has been released——

The CHAIRMAN. You can answer that yes or no.

Mr. DOOMAN. I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an official publication of the State Department?

Mr. DOOMAN. I do not know.

This is a privately printed paper I have before me.

Mr. MORRIS. Where did you obtain that, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. This was obtained, and given to me by a friend of mine, Mr. James Lee Kaufman, an American lawyer in New York, who went out to Japan and discovered the existence of this paper, and he had it privately printed and distributed among his friends, and he also had a copy of it reproduced, or summarized in an issue for News Week 2 years ago.

Senator EASTLAND. Where did he get the paper in Japan?

Mr. DOOMAN. He was told of the existence of this paper, and was told if he went to a certain office he could find it. So he went to this—I don't know where—some repository of documents and asked a young lady——

Senator EASTLAND. It was there to guide the occupation forces, was it not? It was a policy to guide our occupation, was it not?

Mr. DOOMAN. I was getting around to that in just a second, Senator, if I may. I am answering the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question has been propounded to you. Was it or was it not there to guide our occupation forces?

Mr. DOOMAN. This paper was submitted through the Far Eastern Commission for consideration, and it was never adopted by the Far Eastern Commission.

However, in draft form, it was sent out to Tokyo to the occupation authorities in the economic section and they acted on it.

Senator EASTLAND. It was sent by our State Department?

Mr. DOOMAN. Sent by whom, I do not know. But it was sent to the occupation authorities and they acted on it.

And when the disclosure was made by my friend, Kaufman, that this paper had been acted on, it was then disavowed as merely being a draft and merely presented to the Far Eastern Commission for consideration.

But the point I want to emphasize was that it was, for all practical purposes, an official document, because it was on the basis of this that various instructions were sent to the Japanese Government.

Senator EASTLAND. As a matter of fact, to put it very mildly, there is a striking similarity between the American policy toward Japan and the policies laid down by Russia to the satellite states in Eastern Europe, is there not?

Mr. DOOMAN. I think that would be a fair statement to state.

Let me amplify that, if I may. You may remember that there had been, before this establishment of this Far Eastern Commission, in existence in London, the so-called European Commission of which the members were representatives of the United States, England, Russia, and, I believe, France. And it was pretty well known in the discussions before the Far Eastern Commission what the ideas of the Russians were with regard to Germany, with regard to the treatment of Japan.

Therefore, when it came to the question of Japan, there were those elements who, knowing what the Russians wanted in Germany, assumed that they would be satisfied with parallel policies in Japan.

Senator EASTLAND. Of course, what Russia wanted was to set up a chaos and a system by which they could move in; was that not it?

Mr. DOOMAN. I think so.

Senator SMITH. May I ask a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Smith.

Senator SMITH. Are there now in positions of power and trust in the American Government any of the men who were responsible for the enunciation of this policy you have described to us?

Mr. DOOMAN. Oh, yes.

Senator SMITH. Who are they?

Mr. DOOMAN. Some, I say are responsible, from the chain of command.

Senator EASTLAND. Name them, please.

Mr. DOOMAN. In 1945 when this initial post surrender policy was promulgated, the responsible people were, from the top, Mr. Byrnes, Secretary of State.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Byrnes.

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Byrnes, Secretary of State; Mr. Acheson, Under Secretary of State; John Carter Vincent, as chairman of the Far Eastern Subcommittee of SWINK, and also Director of the Far Eastern Division; Mr. Edward Barton, who is still an economist, I believe; he is the economist in charge of economic affairs for the occupation of this area; James Pennfield, and then——

Senator SMITH. What position is he in now?

Mr. DOOMAN. I believe he is in Yugoslavia as counselor of the Embassy, I believe.

Mr. MORRIS. What was his position at that time?

Mr. DOOMAN. He had just returned from the Far East and was assigned as deputy to Mr. Vincent in the Far East Subcommittee of SWINK.

Now, subsequently—and this is hearsay—the people who have been busy on Japanese affairs, Japanese policies, in addition to those I have named, would include Mr. John Allison, and—what is his name now—an economist, Barnett. I don't know what his first name is. Barnett.

I think those are the principal ones.

Senator SMITH. Well, now, is there any indication of any activity by the top two men you mentioned in the furtherance of this policy, Mr. Byrnes or Mr. Acheson? Is there any evidence at all, indication of activity on their part toward favoring the carrying out of that policy?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, in my personal knowledge, and this requires—well, my personal knowledge, I can recite one case.

In the spring of 1945 there was a meeting of the full Committee of SWINK, the chairman at that time for that day being Mr. McCloy, John McCloy, who was then Assistant Secretary of War. And the committee as a whole had been discussing some European matter with which I was not concerned, and, therefore, I came into the room when they had completed their discussion of this European problem.

And I noticed among the people present was Mr. Dean Acheson. Now, he had been called in, apparently, for consultation on the European problem, and he had nothing whatever to do with the problem that I was to discuss, which was the question of the Japanese political system.

However, he stayed on. He was then Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations. He had nothing to do with this officially.

And I made my report to the committee, and at the end of that report Mr. McCloy said, turning to Mr. Acheson:

> Dean, you are a great authority on far eastern matters. What do you think of what we have just heard?

And the reply was:

> I have discovered that far eastern experts are a penny a dozen. And you can find some experts which will support any point of view that you care to have. And I, myself, do not go along with what we have just heard. I prefer to be guided by experts who think more along my point of view.

From then on he quoted virtually textually from this Solution in Asia by Dr. Lattimore.

Senator SMITH. Do you mean he quoted from this paper that you mentioned?

Mr. DOOMAN. Where Dr. Lattimore had said that the Japanese people, he predicted that the Japanese people would rebel and disestablish the monarchy, and that if the monarchy existed it would be only because there are certain Fascist groups in the State Department who used the prestige of the United States.

Senator SMITH. Did he approve of this policy that was enunciated about practically confiscation of property?

Mr. DOOMAN. Oh, yes; he was Under Secretary of State.

And, as I say, I don't know, except from the fact that he would have been in the chain of command. That paper could never have gone through.

Senator EASTLAND. Who appointed Vincent?

Mr. DOOMAN. I think I testified that the day after Mr. Acheson returned as Under Secretary of State——

Senator EASTLAND. Just name him. Who appointed Vincent? Just name the man.

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Acheson.

Senator SMITH. Is there any indication that Mr. Byrnes, the Secretary of State, knew about this at all?

Mr. DOOMAN. No; there is no indication.

Senator SMITH. That surprises me that that had developed, and I ask you specifically was there any evidence that Mr. Byrnes himself knew about this promulgation or enunciation of policy?

Mr. DOOMAN. No; there is no indication to my knowledge.

Mr. MORRIS. May I get back to the episode you have just testified to. When did that take place?

Mr. DOOMAN. It was in the spring of 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you thoroughly conversant with Owen Lattimore's Solution in Asia at that time?

Mr. DOOMAN. Thoroughly.

Mr. MORRIS. When you heard Mr. Acheson enunciate his views on Japan, is it your testimony that they coincided with the views expressed by Owen Lattimore in Solution in Asia?

Mr. DOOMAN. Exactly.

Mr. MORRIS. Did his view on experts being a dime a dozen coincide with the views of Owen Lattimore at that time?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes; his opinions about certain types of experts; yes. He had a very dim view of experts who did not agree with him.

As a matter of fact, he said, in effect, in his book, Solution in Asia, that people like myself had spent a long time in Japan, but we were spending all of our time with very polite people, and we really didn't know very much about what was going on.

Mr. MORRIS. May I get back to some previous testimony that we have not completely finished.

I asked you earlier if you would document as much as possible your expression of Owen Lattimore's views at that time. You had given a rather precise summary of what his views were, and then I asked you if you had any documentation to support that.

I also offer you just by way of assistance in connection with that extracts from Mr. Lattimore's Solution in Asia that may aid you in answering the question I have just put to you.

Mr. DOOMAN. Here is a very reminiscent phrase.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a minute. What are you testifying from?

Mr. MORRIS. These are extracts from Owen Lattimore's book, Solution in Asia.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. DOOMAN (reading):

> Washington is full of experts who will tell you that the Japanese are mysterious, fanatical, and not to be understood by any ordinary use of the intellect. The same experts are also addicted to citing bits of lore which, they tell you condescendingly, explain why the Japanese always do this or never do that.

Here is an example of the attempts on the part of Dr. Lattimore to put into ridicule people who did not agree with his point of view.

There is missing from this that quotation to which I have just referred, and I think it runs:

As a political prophecy—

whatever that may mean—

As a political prophecy, the Japanese people will disestablish the monarchy unless there is interference on the part of people in the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. You are attempting to quote now from Lattimore's——

Mr. DOOMAN. From memory, yes. I do not have a copy of the book.

Mr. MORRIS. We have a copy here, Mr. Chairman. I think we might ask Mr. Dooman if he would put the precise quotation in if possible.

Is it page 189, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, this is not the quotation I have in mind:

I assume that the Japan of the future will be a republic.

That follows another reference where he says, as a matter of political—will you give me just a minute?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, Mr. Dooman.

Mr. DOOMAN. Here it is. It is on page 187 [reading]:

As a matter of political prophecy, I agree that the Japanese people are likely to overturn the throne unless we prevent them.

Mr. MORRIS. Thank you, Mr. Dooman. Will you proceed with your documentation of views of Owen Lattimore which you have testified to here today?

Mr. DOOMAN. Would you like further references to Mr. Lattimore's opinion about the Emperor?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; I think if you would put in a few more of those, Mr. Dooman; those extracts are of no assistance to you, are they, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes; on page 189, I quote as follows [reading]:

If the Japanese themselves decide to do without an Emperor, well and good. If not, we should show that militarism has been so catastrophically defeated that we, the victors, do not need to use the Emperor. He and all males eligible for the throne by Japanese rules of succession and adoption should be interned, preferably in China, but under the supervision of a United Nations Commission to emphasize united responsibility. His estates, and estates belonging to members of Zaibatsu families and important militarists, should be made over to an agrarian reform program, conspicuously without his sanction and by order of the United Nations. Eventually, after his death and after a new civil service and a new management of finance and industry have taken hold, the remaining members of the imperial line can be allowed to go where they like. New vested interests will by that time be able to prevent the restoration of a monarchy.

The CHAIRMAN. From what did you read that extract?

Mr. DOOMAN. I am reading from page 189 of Solution in Asia, by Owen Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the whole of the Solution in Asia laid in the record?

The CHAIRMAN. You mean that book?

Mr. Morris. Yes; as well as the document referred to by the witness on the Round Table Conference from which quotes have been taken.

The Chairman. I do not think we will put the book in the record. We will make it a part of the files of this committee.

Mr. Morris. I meant make it a part of the files of the committee.

The Chairman. The excerpts are from the book, are they not?

Mr. Morris. We have read the excerpts from the record, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. They are from this?

Mr. Morris. Some excerpts are from Solution in Asia, Mr. Chairman, and others are from this publication of the Round Table Conference.

The Chairman. You want all of these put into the record?

Mr. Morris. So much of them as have been quoted by Mr. Dooman.

The Chairman. Very well.

Mr. Morris. Meanwhile, I would like both of these documents made a part of the file of the record.

The Chairman It will be made part of the record so much as you select as having been testified to by the witness, but I may say that it all has not been testified to.

(The documents referred to were filed for the information of the committee.)

The Chairman. You may proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Dooman, we have not finished the line of questioning before which concerns the official attitude or the attitude of John Carter Vincent with respect to these particular discussions.

Now, you said, to your own knowledge you have never heard John Carter Vincent give expression to any views that coincided with those of Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. Dooman. That is right.

Mr. Morris. Do you know of any official publications of the Far Eastern Division of the State Department that would show that the views of the head of that Department coincided with the views expressed by Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. Dooman. Yes; I have already—I thought I made it clear that primarily this initial post-surrender policy for Japan was one for which Mr. Vincent would have primary responsibility, and I have tried to show that.

Mr. Morris. How do you know that, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. Dooman. Because ipso facto he was an ex officio. He was chairman of this committee that produced that document.

Mr. Morris. In other words, he was the working chairman of the committee?

Mr. Dooman. He was the working chairman of that committee.

Mr. Morris. The reason I ask that, Mr. Dooman, is that awhile ago you gave expression to the view that Mr. Byrnes, as Secretary of State, you did not know that he personally shared the views put forth in this publication?

Mr. Dooman. No; I did not.

The question was whether I knew the people who were responsible and I mention Mr. Byrnes as being responsible by reason of the chain of command, he being the Secretary of State and the person ultimately responsible.

Mr. Morris. But is it your testimony, then, that John Carter Vincent, in addition to being the nominal head of the Far Eastern Division of the State Department and your successor in SWINK, that he was an active member, working member?

Mr. Dooman. Yes. May I say that he was more than the nominal director of the Far Eastern Office, he was the actual working director as of the 7th of September, 1945.

Mr. Morris. That is right. It is your testimony that Mr. Byrnes, as Secretary of State, his work in that position did not necessarily coincide with the position taken by——

Mr. Dooman. Mr. Byrnes actually had very little interest in the Far East.

Senator Smith. What I was trying to fix, Mr. Dooman, was that it was inconceivable to me that Mr. Byrnes had any such ideas.

Mr. Dooman. I tried to make it clear. I mentioned Mr. Byrnes among those responsible purely on grounds of chain of command.

Senator Smith. Yes.

The Chairman. The responsibility that you apply to Mr. Byrnes, if I understand it, stems from the fact that he was Secretary of State and that all mentioned in your testimony were under him; is that correct?

Mr. Dooman. That is right.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Dooman, are there any other promulgations of policy that you are acquainted with either directly or from your reading knowledge of them that you care to put into the record at this time?

Mr. Dooman. Very much.

Mr. Morris. Will you proceed, then, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. Dooman. Mr. Chairman, this is a fairly long story, and I hope you will bear patiently with me while I go into it.

The Chairman. Well, I want to know what the question is now, please.

Mr. Morris. Will you read the question back, please?

(The reporter read the pending question, as follows:)

Mr. Morris. Mr. Dooman, are there any other promulgations of policy that you are acquainted with either directly or from your reading knowledge of them that you care to put into the record at this time?

The Chairman. Promulgation of policies as to what?

Mr. Morris. Promulgation of far-eastern policy with respect to Japan.

The Chairman. All right.

Senator Smith. By whom? Anybody connected with the State Department?

Mr. Morris. By the State Department, particularly the Far Eastern Division thereof.

Senator Smith. That is all right.

Mr. Dooman. You will notice that all through my testimony I have referred constantly to this question of the Emperor.

In March or April of 1945, Colonel Dana Johnson, who was Chief of Psychological Warfare in Hawaii, came to Washington and saw Mr. Grew and myself. His conclusion, drawn from interrogating high-ranking Japanese prisoners of war, was that the Japanese were ready to surrender but that the various statements and the trend of public opinion with regard to the question of the monarchy was such that so long as the Japanese were left with the impression that the Emperor was personally to be tried as a war criminal and punished, that the monarchial system would be disestablished, so long as those ideas were assumed to be public opinion and would be implemented as American policy after Japan's surrender, that the Japanese would not surrender.

Shortly thereafter on, I think it was the 17th of April——

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he tell you that was his opinion?

Mr. DOOMAN. He did, sir.

On April 17, there was a change of government, a general retired as Prime Minister and there was a reconstitution of the Government at the head of which was Admiral Suzuki, who was then Chamberlain to the Emperor and who had been throughout his career a moderate. He took that as a very clear signal that the Japanese were ready to surrender, ready to talk about this matter.

Furthermore, we had the advantage of reading messages between the Japanese Government and their Ambassador in Moscow, and it was clear from these and other indications that the Japanese were ready to surrender if only it were made clear that this trend of opinion that had been developed by the leftist press in the United States, namely, that the Emperor would be tried as a war criminal and the monarchial system disestablished, it was made clear that those were not policies of the United States.

We then started on preparing a document. About the middle of May, Mr. Henry Luce came back from a visit to the Pacific, and he was very much aroused. He said that the failure of the American Government to persuade the Japanese to surrender was causing, was doing, great damage to the morale of the American forces who had fought through Saipan and Tarawa, and who were anticipating then the assault on Japan and were fearful of the losses that would have to be paid there.

Mr. Grew, who saw Henry Luce, explained to him that we were working on that effort, we were working on a plan along those lines.

It was, I think, on the 24th of May, if that happens to be, if my recollection is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. 1945?

Mr. DOOMAN. 1945. It was on a Saturday that Mr. Grew called me in and instructed me to have ready Monday morning a paper which he would then present to the President outlining the policies that the United States would follow if Japan surrendered.

I then prepared that paper and took it to Mr. Grew on Monday morning.

So far as the portion relating to the Emperor is concerned, my original draft reads as follows—this was paragraph 12 [reading]:

> The occupying forces of the Allies shall be withdrawn from Japan as soon as these objectives—namely, those previously enumerated—

> have been accomplished and there has been established beyond doubt a peacefully inclined, responsible government of a character representative of the Japanese people. This may include a constitutional monarchy under the present dynasty if the peace-loving nations can be convinced of the genuine determination of such a government to follow policies of peace which will render impossible the future development of aggressive militarism in Japan.

Mr. Grew approved the draft and called a meeting of the Policy Committee of the State Department. The Policy Committee of the State Department at that time consisted of the Assistant Secretaries of State and the Legal Adviser. He read this document to them, and there was no dissent until he came to that paragraph which I have just read. There was then a violent reaction on the part of Mr. Acheson and Mr. MacLeish.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did both of those gentlemen hold at that time?

Mr. DOOMAN. I was not present at the meeting but the whole idea of allowing the monarchy to remain was distasteful.

Mr. MORRIS. To Messrs. Acheson and MacLeish?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Dooman, if you were not present at the meeting, I think you ought to explain how you knew what took place.

Mr. DOOMAN. This was immediately told to me by Mr. Grew after the meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. What you are describing, then, is Mr. Grew's description of what took place at the meeting?

Mr. DOOMAN. That is correct. Mr. Grew said that this committee was, after all, advisory to him, and that he was ultimately responsible, and that he would take the responsibility for presenting that document to the President with the recommendation that he include that document within a speech which he was to deliver at some appropriate occasion.

On the 28th of May, with Judge Rosenman, he went in to see the President. The President read it over and he said that he would approve, accept, the document, provided that it was agreeable to the armed services.

On the 29th of May, Mr. Grew, Judge Rosenman, and myself attended a meeting in Mr. Stimson's office.

The CHAIRMAN. Whose office?

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Stimson, who was then Secretary of War.

This was at the Pentagon. There were present Secretary Forrestal, Mr. McCloy, Mr. Elmer Davis, who was then Director of the Office of War Information, Mr. Grew, myself, General Marshall, and I should say in addition about 10 to 12 of the highest military and naval officers—who they were I do not remember at this time.

We had prepared copies of this paper for distribution so that each member present would have a copy.

Mr. Stimson, who was in the chair at the meeting, said that he approved the document right along, he went right along with the paper. In fact, he thought, as a matter of fact, that we did not give sufficient allowance to the Japanese for their capacity to produce as they had in the past such progressive men as Baron Shidihara, Hamaguchi, and Wakatsuki, and others. These are former Japanese Prime Ministers.

Mr. Forrestal read it over and he agreed. Mr. McCloy agreed also.

The CHAIRMAN. Agreed, or approved?

Mr. DOOMAN. Approved. Mr. Elmer Davis reacted very violently and would have none of it.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did he hold at this time?

Mr. DOOMAN. He was, as I said, Director of the Office of War Information. Various other officers approved of it, but there was a feeling that the publication of that document——

Mr. MORRIS. Vincent was not present?

Mr. DOOMAN. No. As a matter of fact, information on this was restricted to a very small number of people, those people that I have just indicated.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were present at this conference?

Mr. DOOMAN. I was present.

Mr. SOURWINE. When you speak of Mr. Davis having reacted violently, you were there and saw the reaction?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did Mr. Davis react, what was the nature of his violent reaction?

Mr. DOOMAN. He did not approve, he did not approve of anything which might be construed in any way as forming a basis for a negotiated surrender.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that what he said?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes; that was, in effect, what he said. However, the thing was pigeonholed because of the view among the military people that the publication of this document at that time would be premature.

Mr. MORRIS. What military people?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, principally, General Marshall.

Mr. MORRIS. Did not General Marshall express disagreement?

Mr. DOOMAN. No; he went along with the paper but his statement was that the publication of the document at that time would be, and this word I remember textually, "premature." With that, the paper was set aside for the time being. However, a very short time after that, it was a matter of perhaps 2 or 3 weeks——

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us the time again, the week and month, if possible?

Mr. DOOMAN. The 29th of May 1945, that this meeting took place in Secretary Stimson's office. Within a very short time, I should say a matter of a fortnight, information was available in the State Department that Dr. Lattimore had called on the President and had remonstrated very strongly against any position or decision taken by this Government which would enable the monarchy to remain in Japan.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you mean "information was available in the State Department," Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, you understand, Mr. Sourwine, that so far as Japan was concerned, I was in a rather key position, and there was information passing back and forth between the State Department and the White House which was very closely guarded.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean official information?

Mr. DOOMAN. Official information.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you learned of Mr. Acheson's protest to the President from official——

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Lattimore's

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Lattimore's protest from official papers which came across your desk?

Mr. DOOMAN. No: word of mouth.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who told you?

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Grew.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did anyone else tell you?

Mr. DOOMAN. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. What you meant by information becoming available was that Mr. Grew told you?

Mr. DOOMAN. It was Mr. Grew who told me.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. DOOMAN. Now, Mr. Lattimore had been using every opportunity for a period of a year or more to propound the doctrine that the Japanese people would overturn the monarchy and that there were a group of people in the State Department, Fascists and reactionaries, who were going to keep the Emperor in power against the will of the Japanese people.

But, to me, it was very queer that once a decision—now, mind you, up to that time, there had been no decision within the State Department on the question of the Emperor. There was a trend of thinking but there was no decision until the recommendation was made to the President. To me, it was very queer that immediately, well, within a matter of weeks, 2 or 3 weeks after that decision was made, that Mr. Lattimore went to the President and remonstrated with this decision.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, are there any other incidents or episodes or official reports that you know that would document your views on Owen Lattimore, which you are now testifying to?

Mr. DOOMAN. I would like to identify this document that I have been talking about if I may.

Mr. MORRIS. I think we should put that into this record, too, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DOOMAN. This document, as I say, was put aside.

The CHAIRMAN. You say "this document," and we have been dealing with a number of documents. Is this the document which you prepared at the instance of the Secretary?

Mr. DOOMAN. As the Acting Secretary of State.

I am proceeding now to identify the document.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. DOOMAN. This paper, then, was taken by Mr. Stimson to Potsdam. I arrived myself at Potsdam on the 13th of July, and I was told by Mr. McCloy, who was then there, that Mr. Stimson was in active discussion with Mr. Churchill with regard to that document and I heard later, I believe also from Mr. McCloy, that there was an agreement between Mr. Stimson and Mr. Churchill, and that they had then gone to Mr. Truman and Mr. Byrnes and had received an acceptance of the document. It was then telegraphed to General Chiang Kai-shek, and on May 29, it was promulgated then as the Potsdam Proclamation to Japan, and it was on the basis of that document that Japan surrendered.

May I also add, for the benefit of—I do not want to take credit that really belongs to somebody else, but I would like to put on record here that the preamble to the Potsdam Proclamation was taken from a document prepared by Douglas Fairbanks, who was then in the Navy Department in the Psychological Warfare Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Douglas Fairbanks?

Mr. DOOMAN. Douglas Fairbanks.

I would like to make acknowledgment, if I could, of his contribution to a paper which, after all, is part of history.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are referring to the movie actor?

Mr. DOOMAN. The movie actor.

Mr. SOURWINE. Father or son?

Mr. DOOMAN. Son.

Mr. SOURWINE. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you finished with that episode, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand now that he started out to identify this instrument and he does not identify it?

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe in detail so that we might make that a part of our record if the chairman deems it necessary?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes. This was entitled when prepared: "Draft Proclamation by the Heads of the State, U. S.–U. K.–China," and it was then ultimately issued on the 29th of July at Potsdam, by Prime Minister Attlee, Mr. Truman, and General Chiang Kai-shek, and when Russia came into the war, the Soviet Union then adhered to this document.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me go back and get the document straight again, please.

Is this the document that you are now testifying to the same document that you prepared at the instance of the Assistant Secretary of State?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the one that was rejected at the instance of General Marshall?

Mr. DOOMAN. It was later signed.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I mean, but temporarily, at least, laid aside?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the document that afterwards was adopted at Potsdam?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And the preliminary to that, the preamble to that was prepared by Douglas Fairbanks?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes, sir. I would like to mention this thing that the only portion of my draft which was changed, not in substance but in text, was that paragraph 12 which I have just read; that was cut down to read that the Japanese might have such form of Government as they desired.

The CHAIRMAN. Had your document set up or attempted to set up the continuation of a monarchy?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, I haven't read it; that the occupation of Japan should cease—> when a responsible government of a character representative of the Japanese people had been set up. This may include a constitutional monarchy under the present dynasty if the peace-loving nations can be convinced of the genuine determination of such a government to follow policies of peace which will render impossible the future development of aggressive militarism in Japan.

As I say, that particular paragraph was cut down to the effect that such type of government as they pleased, in accordance with the wishes of the Allies, or something of that sort.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer this now.

Mr. Dooman. Excuse me, that includes some other papers.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have this introduced into the record in its entirety, it is only three pages and I would like to have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit. It reads: "Draft Proclamation by the Heads of State, U. S., U. K., USSR-China."

The Chairman. Now, this instrument that I now hold in my hand, consisting of three pages, was that the entire instrument that you prepared at the instance of the Assistant Secretary of State?

Mr. Dooman. That was prepared at the direction of Mr. Grew, then Acting Secretary of State.

The Chairman. Acting Secretary of State.

Mr. Dooman. Yes.

The Chairman. Was this the entire instrument?

Mr. Dooman. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. Going back a little bit, this was the instrument which was discussed in the Pentagon at the time Mr. Marshall was present, and it was at his instance, laid aside?

Mr. Dooman. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. This is the instrument that was shown to the President in the White House?

Mr. Dooman. As I recall, on the 28th of May.

The Chairman. This may be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 240" and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 240

Draft Proclamation by the Heads of State U. S.–U. K.–[U. S. S. R.]–China

[Delete matters inside brackets if U. S. S. R. not in war]

(Completed in Department of State May, 1945)

(1) We,—The President of the United States, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, [the Generalissimo of the Soviet Union] and the President of the Republic of China, representing the hundreds of millions of our countrymen, have conferred and agree that the Japanese people shall be given an opportunity to end this war on the terms we state herein.

(2) The prodigious land, sea and air forces of the United States, the British Empire and of China, many times reinforced by their armies and air fleets from the west [have now been joined by the vast military might of the Soviet Union and] are poised to strike the final blows upon Japan. This military power is sustained and inspired by the determination of all the Allied nations to prosecute the war against Japan until her capitulation.

(3) The result of the futile and senseless German resistance to the might of the aroused free peoples of the world stands forth in awful clarity as an example to the people of Japan. The might that now converges on Japan is immeasurably greater than that which, when applied to the resisting Nazis, necessarily laid waste to the lands, the industry and the method of life of the whole German people. The full application of our military power backed by our resolve will mean the inevitable and complete destruction of the Japanese armed forces and just as inevitably the utter devastation of the Japanese homeland.

(4) Are the Japanese so lacking in reason that they will continue blindly to follow the leadership of those self-willed militaristic advisers whose unintelligent calculations have brought the Empire of Japan to the threshold of annihilation? The time has come for the Japanese people to decide whether to continue on to destruction or to follow the path of reason.

(5) Following are our terms. We will not deviate from them. There are no alternatives. We shall brook no delay.

(6) There must be eliminated for all time the authority and influence of those who have deceived and misled the people of Japan into embarking on world conquest, for we insist that a new order of peace, security and justice will be impossible until irresponsible militarism is driven from the world.

(7) Until such a new order is established and until there is convincing proof that Japan's war-making power is destroyed, Japanese territory shall be occupied to the extent necessary to secure the achievement of the basic objectives we are here setting forth.

(8) The terms of the Cairo Declaration shall be carried out and Japanese sovereignty shall be limited to the islands of Honshu, Hokkaido, Kyushu, Shikohu and such minor islands as we determine.

(9) The Japanese military forces, after being completely disarmed, shall be permitted to return to their homes, with the opportunity to lead peaceful and productive lives.

(10) We do not intend that the Japanese shall be enslaved as a race or destroyed as a nation, but stern justice shall be meted out to all war criminals, including those who have visited cruelties upon our prisoners. Democratic tendencies among the Japanese shall be supported and strengthened. Freedom of speech, of religion and of thought, as well as respect for the fundamental human rights shall be established.

(11) Japan shall be permitted to maintain such industries as are determined to offer no potential for war but which can produce a sustaining economy and permit the Japanese to take their part in a world economic system, with access to raw materials and opportuniies for peaceful trade.

(12) The occupying forces of the Allies shall be withdrawn from Japan as soon as these objectives have been accomplished and there has been established beyond a doubt a peacefully inclined, responsible government of a character representative of the Japanese people. This may include a constitutional monarchy under the present dynasty if the peace-loving nations can be convinced of the genuine determination of such a government to follow policies of peace which will render impossible the future development of aggressive militarism in Japan.

(13) We call upon the Japanese people and those in authority in Japan to proclaim now the unconditional surrender of all the Japanese armed forces and to provide proper and adequate assurances of their good faith in such action. The alternative for Japan is prompt and utter destruction.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me go back again for a question or two. What part of that was prepared by Douglas Fairbanks?

Mr. DOOMAN. It was the preamble.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you call the preamble?

Mr. DOOMAN. The preamble consists of those paragraphs preceding the numbered paragraphs in that paper.

The CHAIRMAN. Preceding?

Mr. DOOMAN. Preceding the numbered paragraphs.

Mr. MORRIS. The first paragraph here is a numbered paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct, the first paragraph is a numbered paragraph.

Mr. DOOMAN. My recollection was faulty. It consists of paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4. In other words, paragraphs 1 to 4, inclusive, were prepared by, largely by, Mr. Fairbanks.

The CHAIRMAN. Where was Mr. Fairbanks at that time?

Mr. DOOMAN. He was in the Psychological Warfare Section of the Navy Department at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, when you testified in executive session on July 11, 1951, at the beginning of your testimony with respect to a conflict of views between yourself and Mr. John Carter Vincent, you said then:

> My view was then that a country such as Japan with a population far in excess of what it could support without colonies was in very grave danger of being communized unless certain of the natural resources available on the continent could be made available to the Japanese. Vincent's position always was that the opportunities for these 70- or 80-million Japanese to make a livelihood should be restricted as much as possible to what they could find on their own metropolitan area of Japan, the four main islands.
>
> Senator EASTLAND. Whose policy was that?

Mr. DOOMAN. That was the general policy, Vincent's.
Senator EASTLAND. Vincent's?
Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Now, I wonder, Mr. Dooman, if you would, either from your own personal experiences or from your reading of official documents published by Mr. Vincent or Mr. Vincent's division, support that testimony.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, those views were set forth in a broadcast under the auspices of the State Department. I think it was carried on in D. C. on the night of October 6, 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your recollection of that broadcast? Did you hear the broadcast, or did you read a transcription of it?

Mr. DOOMAN. I read a transcription of it in the newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom was the broadcast made?

Mr. DOOMAN. There were several people who participated in it, General Hilldring, who was a member of SWINK for civil affairs matters, Captain—I can't remember his name now, but he is now the President's naval aide—Captain Davidson.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have a copy of that transcription with you, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your recollection of what took place on that broadcast?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, it was substantially along the lines testified to previously by me in the executive session.

Mr. MORRIS. Namely, that Vincent's position always was that the opportunity for these 70 or 80 million Japanese to make a livelihood should be restricted as much as possible to what they could find on their own metropolitan area, the four main islands?

Mr. DOOMAN. That's right. In other words, emphasis was to be laid on agriculture and fishing and such minor industries as they could support.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that transcription inserted in the record because of its considered importance.

The CHAIRMAN. What transcription?

Mr. MORRIS. This is the transcript.

Mr. Mandel, will you identify this document?

Mr. MANDEL. This is headed "Department of State Bulletin, Our Occupation Policy for Japan." The date of the bulletin is October 7, 1945, and it gives the participants in this broadcast to which Mr. Dooman has referred.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, I offer you this and ask you if there are any particular passages you would like to underscore in that transcript.

Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I would like to introduce the whole transcript into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a photostatic copy of the original?

Mr. MORRIS. Pardon, sir?

The CHAIRMAN. This is a photostatic copy of the original?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel has so identified it.

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That is taken from the files of the State Department?

Mr. MANDEL. That photostat was made at my direction by the Library of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. It will be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 241" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 241

[From the Department of State Bulletin, October 7, 1945]

OUR OCCUPATION POLICY FOR JAPAN

Participants

JOHN CARTER VINCENT: Director, Office of Far Eastern Affairs, Department of State, and Chairman, Far Eastern Subcommittee, State, War, Navy Coordinating Committee.

Maj. Gen. JOHN H. HILLDRING: Director of Civil Affairs, War Department.

Capt. R. L. DENNISON: U. S. Navy, Representative of the Navy Department on the Far Eastern Subcommittee, State, War, Navy Coordinating Committee.

STERLING FISHER: Director, NBC University of the Air.

[Released to the press October 6]

ANNOUNCER: Here are headlines from Washington:

General Hilldring Says the Zaibatsu, or Japanese Big Business, Will Be Broken Up; States We Will Not Permit Japan To Rebuild Her Big Combines; Promises Protection of Japanese Democratic Groups Against Attacks by Military Fanatics.

John Carter Vincent of State Department Forecasts End of National Shinto; Says That the Institution of the Emperor Will Have To Be Radically Modified, and That Democratic Parties in Japan Will Be Assured Rights of Free Assembly and Free Discussion.

Captain Dennison of Navy Department Says Japan Will Not Be Allowed Civil Aviation; Predicts That Japanese Will Eventually Accept Democracy, and Emphasizes Naval Responsibility for Future Control of Japan.

ANNOUNCER: This is the thirty-fourth in a series of programs entitled "Our Foreign Policy," featuring authoritative statements on international affairs by Government officials and Members of Congress. The series is broadcast to the people of America by NBC's University of the Air, and to our service men and women overseas, wherever they are stationed, through the facilities of the Armed Forces Radio Service. Printed copies of these important discussions are also available. Listen to the closing announcement for instructions on how to obtain them.

This time we present a joint State, War, and Navy Department broadcast on "Our Occupation Policy for Japan". Participating are Mr. John Carter Vincent, Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs in the State Department; Maj. Gen. John H. Hilldring, Director of Civil Affairs in the War Department; and Capt. R. L. Dennison, U. S. N., Navy Department representative on the Far Eastern Subcommittee of the State, War, Navy Coordinating Committee. They wil be interviewed by Sterling Fisher, Director of the NBC University of the Air. Mr. Fisher—

FISHER: No subject has been debated more widely by the press, radio, and general public in recent weeks than our occupation policy in Japan. That debate has served a very useful purpose. It has made millions of Americans conscious of the dangers and complications of our task in dealing with 70 million Japanese.

Publication by the White House of our basic policy for Japan removed much of the confusion surrounding this debate.[1] But it also raised many questions—questions of how our policy will be applied. To answer some of these, we have asked representatives of the Departments directly concerned—the State, War, and Navy Departments—to interpret further our Japan policy.

General Hilldring, a great many people seemed to think, until recently at least, that General MacArthur was more or less a free agent in laying down our policy for the Japanese. Perhaps you would start by telling us just how that policy is determined.

HILLDRING: Well, although I help execute policy instead of making it, I will try to explain how it is made. The State, War, Navy Coordinating Committee—

[1] BULLETIN of Sept. 23, 1945, p. 423.

"SWINC", we call it—formulates policy for the President's approval, on questions of basic importance. On the military aspects, the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff are obtained and carefully considered. Directives which carry the approved policies are then drawn up, to be transmitted by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to General MacArthur. As Supreme Commander of our occupation forces in Japan, he is charged with the responsibility for carrying them out. And we think he is doing it very well.

FISHER: Mr. Vincent, the Far Eastern subcommittee of which you are chairman does most of the work of drafting the policy directives, as I understand it.

VINCENT: That's right, Mr. Fisher. We devote our entire energies to Far Eastern policy and meet twice a week to make decisions on important matters. We then submit our recommendations to the top Coordinating Committee, with which General Hilldring is associated and with which Captain Dennison and I sit in an advisory capacity.

HILLDRING: The key members of the Coordinating Committee, representing the Secretaries of the three departments, are Assistant Secretary of State James Dunn, the Assistant Secretary of War, John J. McCloy, and the Under Secretary of the Navy, Artemus Gates.

FISHER: Mr. Vincent, I'd like to know whether there is a—shall we say—strained relationship between General MacArthur and the State Department.

VINCENT: No, there is absolutely no basis for such reports, Mr. Fisher. There is, as a matter of fact, no direct relationship between General MacArthur and the State Department. I can assure you that General MacArthur is receiving our support and assistance in carrying out a very difficult assignment.

FISHER: There have been some reports that he has not welcomed civilian advisers.

VINCENT: That also is untrue. A number of civilian Far Eastern specialists have already been sent out to General MacArthur's headquarters, and he has welcomed them most cordially. We're trying right now to recruit people with specialized knowledge of Japan's economy, finances, and so on. We expect to send more and more such people out.

FISHER: As a Navy representative on the Far Eastern subcommittee, Captain Dennison, I suppose you've had a good opportunity to evaluate the situation. Some people don't realize that the Navy Department has a direct interest in, and voice in, the policy for Japan.

DENNISON: We have a vital interest in it. The 2 million men and the 5,000 vessels of the United States Navy in the Pacific and the vital role they played in the defeat of Japan are a measure of that interest. Japan is an island country separated from us by 4,500 miles of ocean. Its continued control will always present a naval problem.

FISHER: What part is the Navy playing now in that control?

DENNISON: Our ships are patrolling the coasts of Japan today, and in this duty they support the occupation force. Navy officers and men will aid General MacArthur ashore, in censorship (radio, telephone, and cable) and in civil-affairs administration. The Navy is in charge of military government in the former Japanese mandates in the Pacific and also in the Ryukyu Islands.

FISHER: Does that include Okinawa?

DENNISON: Yes.

FISHER: That's not generally known, is it?

DENNISON: No, I believe not. I'd like to add—besides these immediate duties the United States Navy will have to exercise potential control over Japan long after our troops are withdrawn.

FISHER: Now, I'd like to ask you, Mr. Vincent, as chairman of the subcommittee which drafts our occupation policy, can you give us a statement of our over-all objectives?

VINCENT: Our immediate objective is to demobilize the Japanese armed forces and demilitarize Japan. Our long-range objective is to democratize Japan—to encourage democratic self-government. We must make sure that Japan will not again become a menace to the peace and security of the world.

FISHER: And how long do you think that will take?

VINCENT: The length of occupation will depend upon the degree to which the Japanese cooperate with us. I can tell you this: The occupation will continue until demobilization and demilitarization are completed. And it will continue until there is assurance that Japan is well along the path of liberal reform. Its form of government will not necessarily be patterned exactly after American democracy, but it must be responsible self-government, stripped of all militaristic tendencies.

FISHER: General Hilldring, how long do you think we'll have to occupy Japan?

HILLDRING: To answer that question, Mr. Fisher, would require a degree of clairvoyance I don't possess. I just don't know how long it will take to accomplish our aims. We must stay in Japan, with whatever forces may be required, until we have accomplished the objectives Mr. Vincent has mentioned.

FISHER: To what extent will our Allies, such as China and Great Britain and the Soviet Union, take part in formulating occupation policy?

HILLDRING: That is not a question which soldiers should decide. It involves matters of high policy on which the Army must look to the State Department. I believe Mr. Vincent should answer that question.

FISHER: Well, Mr. Vincent, how about it?

VINCENT: Immediately following the Japanese surrender, the United States proposed the formation of a Far Eastern Advisory Commission as a means of regularizing and making orderly the methods of consulting with other countries interested in the occupation of Japan. And Secretary of State Byrnes announced recently that a Commission would be established for the formulation of policies for the control of Japan.[2] In addition to the four principal powers in the Far East, a number of other powers are to be invited to have membership on the Commission.

FISHER: Coming back to our first objective—General Hilldring, what about the demobilization of the Japanese Army? How far has it gone?

HILLDRING: Disarmament of the Japanese forces in the four main islands is virtually complete, Mr. Fisher. Demobilization in the sense of returning disarmed soldiers to their homes is well under way, but bombed-out transport systems and food and housing problems are serious delaying factors.

FISHER: And what's being done about the Japanese troops in other parts of Asia?

HILLDRING: It may take a long time for them all to get home. Demands on shipping are urgent, and the return of our own troops is the highest priority. Relief must also be carried to the countries we have liberated; the return of Japanese soldiers to their homes must take its proper place.

FISHER: Captain Dennison, how long do you think it will take to clean up the Japanese forces scattered through Asia?

DENNISON: It may take several years, Mr. Fisher. After all, there are close to three million Japanese scattered around eastern Asia and the Pacific, and for the most part it will be up to the Japanese themselves to ship them home.

FISHER: And what is being done with the Japanese Navy?

DENNISON: The Japanese Navy has been almost completely erased. There's nothing left of it except a few battered hulks and these might well be destroyed.

FISHER: Now, there are some other, less obvious parts of the military system—the police system, for example. The Japanese secret police have been persecuting liberal, anti-militarist people for many years. Mr. Vincent, what will be done about that?

VINCENT: That vicious system will be abolished, Mr. Fisher. Not only the top chiefs but the whole organization must go. That's the only way to break its hold on the Japanese people. A civilian police force such as we have in America will have to be substituted for it.

DENNISON: We've got to make sure that what they have is a police force, and not an army in the guise of police.

HILLDRING: As a matter of fact, Mr. Fisher, General MacArthur has already abolished the Kempai and political police.

FISHER: It seems to me that a key question in this whole matter, Mr. Vincent, is the relationship of our occupation forces to the present Japanese Government, from the Emperor on down.

VINCENT: Well, one of General MacArthur's tasks is to bring about changes in the Constitution of Japan. Those provisions in the Constitution which would hamper the establishment in Japan of a government which is responsible to the people of Japan must be removed.

FISHER: Isn't the position of the Emperor a barrier to responsible government?

VINCENT: The institution of the Emperor—if the Japanese do not choose to get rid of it—will have to be radically modified, Mr. Fisher.

DENNISON: The Emperor's authority is subject to General MacArthur and will not be permitted to stand as a barrier to responsible government. Directives sent to General MacArthur establish that point.

---

[2] See p. 545.

FISHER: Can you give us the substance of that directive that covers that point, Captain Dennison?

DENNISON: I can quote part of it to you. The message to General MacArthur said:

"1. The authority of the Emperor and the Japanese Government to rule the state is subordinate to you as Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers. You will exercise your authority as you deem proper to carry out your mission. Our relations with Japan do not rest on a contractual basis, but on an unconditional surrender. Since your authority is supreme, you will not entertain any question on the part of the Japanese as to its scope.

"2. Control of Japan shall be exercised through the Japanese Government to the extent that such an arrangement produces satisfactory results. This does not prejudice your right to act directly if required. You may enforce the orders issued by you by the employment of such measures as you deem necessary, including the use of force."[3] That's the directive under which General MacArthur is operating.

FISHER: That's clear enough. . . . Now, General Hilldring, you have to do with our occupation policy in both Germany and Japan. What is the main difference between them?

HILLDRING: Our purposes in Germany and Japan are not very different. Reduced to their simplest terms, they are to prevent either nation from again breaking the peace of the world. The difference is largely in the mechanism of control to achieve that purpose. In Japan there still exists a national Government, which we are utilizing. In Germany there is no central government, and our controls must, in general, be imposed locally.

FISHER: Are there advantages from your point of view in the existence of the national Government in Japan?

HILLDRING: The advantages which are gained through the utilization of the national Government of Japan are enormous. If there were no Japanese Government available for our use, we would have to operate directly the whole complicated machine required for the administration of a country of 70 million people. These people differ from us in language, customs, and attitudes. By cleaning up and using the Japanese Government machinery as a tool, we are saving our time and our manpower and our resources. In other words, we are requiring the Japanese to do their own housecleaning, but we are providing the specifications.

FISHER: But some people argue, General, that by utilizing the Japanese Government we are committing ourselves to support it. If that's the case, wouldn't this interfere with our policy of removing from public office and from industry persons who were responsible for Japan's aggression?

HILLDRING: Not at all. We're not committing ourselves to support any Japanese groups or individuals, either in government or in industry. If our policy requires removal of any person from government or industry, he will be removed. The desires of the Japanese Government in this respect are immaterial. Removals are being made daily by General MacArthur.

DENNISON: Our policy is to use the existing form of government in Japan, not to support it. It's largely a matter of timing. General MacArthur has had to feel out the situation.

FISHER: Would you say, Captain Dennison, that when our forces first went to Japan they were sitting on a keg of dynamite?

DENNISON: In a sense, yes. But our general policies were set before General MacArthur landed a single man. As he has brought in troops, he has correspondingly tightened his controls in order to carry out those policies.

FISHER: He certainly has, Captain. But what about the Japanese politicians, Mr. Vincent? Some of them look pretty guilty to me.

VINCENT: Well, the Higashi-Kuni cabinet resigned this week. The report today that Shidehara has become Premier is encouraging. It's too early to predict exactly what the next one will be like, but we have every reason to believe it will be an improvement over the last one. If any Japanese official is found by General MacArthur to be unfit to hold office, he will go out.

FISHER: Will any of the members of the Higashi-Kuni cabinet be tried as war criminals?

VINCENT: We can't talk about individuals here, for obvious reasons. But we can say this: All people who are charged by appropriate agencies with being war criminals will be arrested and tried. Cabinet status will be no protection.

---

[3] BULLETIN of Sept. 30, 1945, p. 480.

HILLDRING: We are constantly adding to the list of war criminals, and they are being arrested every day. The same standards which Justice Jackson is applying in Germany are being used in Japan.

DENNISON: Our policy is to catch the war criminals and make sure that they are punished—not to talk about who is a war criminal and who is not.

FISHER: All right, Captain Dennison, leaving names out of the discussion, let me ask you this: Will we consider members of the Zaibatsu—the big industrialists—who have cooperated with the militarists and profited by the war, among the guilty?

DENNISON: We'll follow the same basic policy as in Germany. You will recall that some industrialists there have been listed as war criminals.

FISHER: General Hilldring, what are we going to do about the big industrialists who have contributed so much to Japan's war-making power?

HILLDRING: Under our policy, all Fascists and jingos—militarists—will be removed, not only from public office but from positions of trust in industry and education as well. As a matter of national policy, we are going to destroy Japan's war-making power. That means the big combines must be broken up. There's no other way to accomplish it.

FISHER: What do you say about the big industrialists, Mr. Vincent?

VINCENT: Two things. We have every intention of proceeding against those members of the Zaibatsu who are considered as war criminals. And, as General Hilldring has just said, we intend to break the hold those large family combines have over the economy of Japan—combines such as Mitsui, Mitsubishi, and Sumitomo, to name the most prominent.

FISHER: And the financial combines as well?

VINCENT: Yes. General MacArthur, as you've probably heard, has already taken steps to break the power of the big financial combines and strip them of their loot.

FISHER: Well, there's no feeling here of "Don't let's be beastly to the Zaibatsu." Captain Dennison, do you want to make it unanimous?

DENNISON: There's no disagreement on this point in our committee, Mr. Fisher. There has been a lot of premature criticism. But the discovery and arrest of all war criminals cannot be accomplished in the first few days of occupation. Our policy is fixed and definite. Anyone in Japan who brought about this war, whether he is of the Zaibatsu, or anyone else, is going to be arrested and tried as a war criminal.

FISHER: General Hilldring, one critic has charged that our policy in Germany has been to send Americans over to help rebuild the big trusts, like I. G. Farbenindustrie. He expressed the fear that a similar policy would be followed in Japan. What about that?

HILLDRING: I can say flatly, Mr. Fisher, that we are not rebuilding the big trusts in Germany, we have not rebuilt them, and we are not going to rebuild them in the future. The same policy will prevail in Japan. Moreover, not only will we not revive these big trusts but we do not propose to permit the Germans or the Japanese to do so.

FISHER: And that applies to all industries that could be used for war purposes?

HILLDRING: The Japanese will be prohibited from producing, developing, or maintaining all forms of arms, ammunitions, or implements of war, as well as naval vessels and aircraft. A major portion of this problem will involve the reduction or elimination of certain Japanese industries which are keys to a modern war economy. These industries include production of iron and steeel, as well as chemicals, machine tools, electrical equipment, and automotive equipment.

VINCENT: This, of course, implies a major reorientation of the Japanese economy, which for years has been geared to the requirements of total war. Under our close supervision, the Japanese will have to redirect their human and natural resources to the ends of peaceful living.

FISHER: Mr. Vincent, won't this create a lot of unemployment? Is anything being done to combat unemployment—among the millions of demobilized soldiers, for example?

VINCENT: Our policy is to place responsibility on the Japanese for solving their economic problems. They should put emphasis on farming and fishing and the production of consumer goods. They also have plenty of reconstruction work to do in every city. We have no intention of interfering with any attempts by the Japanese to help themselves along these lines. In fact, we'll give them all the encouragement we can.

FISHER: What do you think they'll do with the workers who are thrown out of heavy war industry?

VINCENT: They'll have to find jobs in the light industries Japan is allowed to retain. The general objective of this revamping of Japan's industrial economy will be to turn that economy in on itself so that the Japanese will produce more and more for their domestic market.

FISHER: They'll have to have some foreign trade of course to keep going.

VINCENT: Of course, but not the unhealthful sort they had before the war. A large portion of Japan's pre-war foreign trade assets were used for military preparations, and not to support her internal economy; after all, scrap-iron and oil shipments didn't help the Japanese people. You could reduce Japan's foreign trade far below the pre-war level and still have a standard of living comparable to what they had before the war.

FISHER. There have been some dire predictions about the food situation over there, and even some reports of rice riots. General Hilldring, what will our policy be on food?

HILLDRING: General MacArthur has notified the War Department that he does not expect to provide any supplies for the enemy population in Japan this winter. This statement is in harmony with the policy we have followed in other occupied enemy areas. That is to say, we will import supplies for enemy populations only where essential to avoid disease epidemics and serious unrest that might jeopardize our ability to carry out the purposes of the occupation. The Japanese will have to grow their own food or provide it from imports.

FISHER: They'll need some ships to do that. Captain Dennison, are we going to allow Japan to rebuild her merchant marine?

DENNISON: We've got to allow her to rebuild a peacetime economy—that's the price of disarming her. That means trade. But the question of whose ships shall carry this trade hasn't been decided yet. We know we must control Japan's imports, in order to keep her from rearming—and the best way to do that may be to carry a good part of her trade on Allied ships.

FISHER: Then, Captain Dennison, what about Japan's civil aviation? A lot of people were quite surprised recently when General MacArthur allowed some Japanese transport planes to resume operations.

DENNISON: That will not be continued, Mr. Fisher. Under the terms of General MacArthur's directive in this field, no civil aviation will be permitted in Japan.

VINCENT: Such aviation as General MacArthur did allow was to meet a specific emergency. It will not be continued beyond that emergency.

FISHER: In this revamping of Japan's economy, Mr. Vincent, will the hold of the big landholders be broken, as you have said the power of the big industrialists will be?

VINCENT: Encouragement will be given to any movement to reorganize agriculture on a more democratic economic basis. Our policy favors a wider distribution of land, income, and ownership of the means of production and trade. But those are things a democratic Japanese government should do for itself—and will, we expect.

FISHER: And the labor unions? What about them?

VINCENT: We'll encourage the development of trade-unionism, Mr. Fisher, because that's an essential part of democracy.

FISHER. I understand a lot of the former union leaders and political liberals are still in jail. What has been done to get them out?

VINCENT: General MacArthur has already ordered the release of all persons imprisoned for "dangerous thoughts" or for their political or religious beliefs.

FISHER: That ought to provide some new leadership for the democratic forces in Japan. Captain Dennison, to what extent are we going to help those forces?

DENNISON: Our policy is one of definitely encouraging liberal tendencies among the Japanese. We'll give them every opportunity to draw up and to adopt a constructive reform program.

VINCENT: All democratic parties will be encouraged. They will be assured the rights of free assembly and free public discussion. The occupation authorities are to place no obstruction in the way of the organization of political parties. The Japanese Government has already been ordered to remove all barriers to freedom of religion, of thought, and of the press.

FISHER: I take all this to mean that the democratic and anti-militarist groups will be allowed free rein. But, Mr. Vincent, suppose some nationalistic group tried to interfere with them, using gangster methods?

VINCENT: It would be suppressed. One of General MacArthur's policy guides calls for "the encouragement and support of liberal tendencies in Japan". It also says that "changes in the direction of modifying authoritarian tendencies of the government are to be permitted and favored".

FISHER: And if the democratic parties should find it necessary to use force to attain their objectives?

VINCENT: In that event, the Supreme Commander is to intervene only where necessary to protect our own occupation forces. This implies that to achieve liberal or democratic political ends the Japanese may even use force.

DENNISON: We are not interested in upholding the status quo in Japan, as such. I think we should make that doubly clear.

FISHER: One of the most interesting developments in recent weeks has been the apparent revival of liberal and radical sentiment in Japan. I understand that the leaders of several former labor and socialist political groups are getting together in one party—a Socialist party. What stand will we take on that, General Hilldring?

HILLDRING: If the development proves to be genuine, we will give it every encouragement, in line with our policy of favoring all democratic tendencies in Japan. And we'll protect all democratic groups against attack by military fanatics.

FISHER: You intend to do anything that's necessary, then, to open the way for the democratic forces.

HILLDRING: We're prepared to support the development of democratic government even though some temporary disorder may result—so long as our troops and our over-all objectives are not endangered.

FISHER: I have one more question of key importance, Mr. Vincent. What will be done about Shintoism, especially that branch of it that makes a religion of nationalism and which is called "National Shinto"?

VINCENT: Shintoism, in so far as it is a religion of individual Japanese, is not to be interfered with. Shintoism, however, as a state-directed religion is to be done away with. People will not be taxed to support National Shinto, and there will be no place for Shintoism in the schools.

FISHER: That's the clearest statement I have heard on Shinto.

VINCENT: Our policy on this goes beyond Shinto, Mr. Fisher. The dissemination of Japanese militaristic and ultra-nationalistic ideology in any form will be completely suppressed.

FISHER: And what about the clean-up of the Japanese school system? That will be quite a chore, Mr. Vincent.

VINCENT: Yes, but the Japanese are cooperating with us in cleaning up their schools. We will see to it that all teachers with extreme nationalistic learnings are removed. The primary schools are being reopened as fast as possible.

DENNISON: That's where the real change must stem from—the school system. The younger generation must be taught to understand democracy. That goes for the older generation as well.

FISHER: And that may take a very long time, Captain Dennison.

DENNISON: How long depends on how fast we are able to put our directives into effect. It may take less time than you think, if we reach the people through all channels—school texts, press, radio, and so on.

FISHER: What's the basis for your optimism, Captain?

DENNISON: Well, Mr. Fisher, I've had opportunity to observe a good many Japanese outside of Japan. Take for example the Japanese-Americans in Hawaii. They used to send their children to Japan at the age of about 7, I think, to spend a year with their grandparents. The contrast between the life they found in Japan and the life they had in Hawaii was so clear that the great majority returned to Hawaii completely loyal to the United States. They proved their loyalty there during the war.

FISHER: What accounts for that loyalty?

DENNISON: Simply that they like the American way of life better. At seven, it's the ice cream, the movies, the funny papers they like, but as they get older they learn to understand and appreciate the more important things as well. I believe the people in Japan will like our ways too. I think once they have a taste of them—of real civil liberties—they'll never want to go back to their old ways.

HILLDRING: I'm inclined to agree, Captain. As a matter of fact, it's quite possible we may find Japan less of a problem than Germany, as far as retraining the people for democracy is concerned. The Nazis are hard nuts to crack—they've been propagandized so well, trained so well. The Japanese are indoctrinated with one basic idea: obedience. That makes it easier to deal with them.

VINCENT: Or it may make it more difficult, General. It depends on how you look at it. That trait of obedience has got to be replaced by some initiative, if there's to be a real, working democracy in Japan.

HILLDRING: I don't mean to say it will be easy. It won't be done overnight. And we'll have to stay on the job until we're sure the job is done.

FISHER: Mr. Vincent, what can you tell us about the attitudes of the Japanese under the occupation?

VINCENT: The press has told you a lot, Mr. Fisher. I can say here that recent indications are that the Japanese people are resigned to defeat, but anxious about the treatment to be given them. There is good evidence of a willingness to cooperate with the occupying forces. But, because of the long period of military domination they've undergone, only time and encouragement will bring about the emergence of sound democratic leadership. We shouldn't try to "hustle the East", or hustle General MacArthur. Reform in the social, economic, and political structure must be a gradual process, wisely initiated and carefully fostered.

FISHER: Well, thank you, Mr. Vincent, and thanks to you, General Hilldring and Captain Dennison, for a clear and interesting interpretation of our occupation policy for Japan. You've made it very plain that ours is a tough, realistic policy—one that's aimed at giving no encouragement to the imperialists and every possible encouragement to the pro-democratic forces which are now beginning to reappear in Japan.

ANNOUNCER: That was Sterling Fisher, Director of the NBC University of the Air. He has been interviewing Mr. John Carter Vincent, Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs of the State Department; Maj. Gen. John H. Hilldring, Director of Civil Affairs, War Department; and Capt. R. L. Dennison, Navy representative on the Far Eastern Subcommittee of the State, War, Navy Coordinating Committee. The discussion was adapted for radio by Selden Menefee. This was the thirty-fourth of a series of broadcasts on "Our Foreign Policy," presented as a public service by the NBC University of the Air. You can obtain printed copies of these broadcasts at 10 cents each in coin. If you would like to receive copies of the broadcasts, send $1 to cover the costs of printing and mailing. Special rates are available for large orders. Address your orders to the NBC University of the Air, Radio City, New York 20, New York. NBC also invites your questions and comments. Next week we expect to present a special State Department program on our Latin American policy, with reference to Argentina and the postponement of the inter-American conference at Rio de Janeiro. Our guests are to be Assistant Secretary of State Spruille Braden, who has just returned from Buenos Aires, and Mr. Ellis O. Briggs, Director of the Office of American Republic Affairs. Listen in next week at the same time for this important program. . . . Kennedy Ludlam speaking from Washington, D. C.

Mr. DOOMAN. Will you give me just a minute? Here is one quotation.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me have the question now, please.

(The record was read by the reporter as follows:)

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, I offer you this and ask you if there are any particular passages you would like to underscore in that transcript.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record show that the counsel handed the witness the photostatic copy of the transcript of a radio speech.

Mr. DOOMAN. I will have to read several quotations from other people here.

Mr. MORRIS. Please do.

Mr. DOOMAN. This is General Hilldring speaking [reading]:

HILLDRING. The Japanese will be prohibited from producing, developing, or maintaining all forms of arms, ammunitions, or implements of war, as well as naval vessels and aircraft. A major portion of this problem will involve the reduction or elimination of certain Japanese industries which are keys to a modern war economy. These industries include production of iron and steel, as well as chemicals, machine tools, electrical equipment, and automotive equipment.

VINCENT. This, of course, implies a major reorientation of the Japanese economy, which for years has been geared to the requirements of total war. Under our close supervision, the Japanese will have to redirect their human and natural resources to the ends of peaceful living.

FISHER. Mr. Vincent, won't this create a lot of unemployment? Is anything being done to combat unemployment—among the millions of demobilized soldiers, for example?

VINCENT. Our policy is to place responsibility on the Japanese for solving their economic problems. They should put emphasis on farming and fishing and the production of consumer goods. They also have plenty of reconstruction work to do in every city. We have no intention of interfering with any attempts by the Japanese to help themselves along these lines. In fact, we'll give them all the encouragement we can.

That, I think, is indicative of the thinking of Mr. Vincent, in other words, that the Japanese would have to subsist primarily on the resources that they found within their own islands, main islands, and confine their efforts largely to agriculture and fishing and the development of consumer goods.

As I remarked previously, here were today 85,000,000 people supposed to be able to make a living off an area equivalent, roughly, to one-quarter of Pennsylvania, and with no natural resources in the way of iron, steel, coal, cotton, wool, or any of the primary raw materials.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, are there any other documents that you care to introduce into the record at this time to support the conclusion just arrived at, your conclusion?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, I refer to a statement made by General MacArthur, I think it was on the 1st of September, in which——

Mr. MORRIS. What year?

Mr. DOOMAN. 1946, excuse me. This was the first anniversary of the setting up of the occupation in Japan. At that time, he issued a statement to the Japanese people warning them of the dangers from the left as well as from the right.

In other words, he was warning them of the dangers of communism. As a matter of fact, a short time after that, in February 1947, the Communists tried to take over the country by means of a general strike which was prevented only by General MacArthur preventing it. However, the Herald Tribune, as of September 3, 1946, publishes a dispatch from Mr. John C. Metcalfe, its correspondent in Washington, stating that there was in effect, that there was considerable unfavorable reaction in the State Department to General MacArthur's pronouncement to the Japanese people.

It quoted at that time, this article quoted, as follows; if I may read:

State Department sources said no directives had been sent to General MacArthur indicating any desire on the part of the administration here to raise the cry of "communism" in Japan. The source said they were taken completely by surprise by comments in the MacArthur statement, such as that the Japanese islands might become either "a powerful bulwark for peace or a dangerous springboard for war."

The incident was considered here as particularly irritating since it came in the midst of delicate American-Soviet relations elsewhere in the world.

The aim of American foreign policy in the Far East is establishment of a just and durable peace, the State Department sources said. It is aimed at "building a bridge of friendship to Soviet Russia" and is not intended to set up "a bulwark against communism" or to inspire anti-Soviet feeling, the sources added.

The CHAIRMAN. That was what year?

Mr. DOOMAN. September 3, 1946.

The CHAIRMAN. 1946?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And published in what publication?

Mr. Dooman. The New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Morris. Do you know who the sources referred to in that article are?

Mr. Dooman. I do not know first-hand, I only know from rumor.

The Chairman. Do you know that writer, byline writer?

Mr. Morris. John C. Metcalfe?

Mr. Dooman. No; I do not know him.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, I offer that, introduce it into the evidence, for whatever probative value it may have.

The Chairman. It may be admitted.

(The document marked "Exhibit No. 242" is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 242

[From the New York Herald Tribune, September 3, 1946]

MacArthur Blast Against Reds Draws State Department's Fire

(By John C. Metcalfe)

Washington, September 2.—General Douglas MacArthur, Allied Supreme Commander in Japan, was charged by State Department sources today with having launched on his own initiative an anti-Communist campaign in violation of American policy directives to him from President Truman.

The charge, unofficial in character, was based on General MacArthur's published statement yesterday on the first anniversary of Japan's formal surrender. In the statement, he suggested that in certain circumstances the Japanese people might fall prey to those seeking to impose the "philosophy of the extreme radical left."

It was stated bluntly at the State Department today that General MacArthur made public his statement "without any consultation" in advance with American officials directly responsible for the foreign policy of the United States.

CONTROVERSY THREATENS

The development threatened to revive an old controversy between General MacArthur and Washington policy makers. President Truman made it clear 6 months ago that he, in consultation with James F. Byrnes, Secretary of State, is responsible for policy and that General MacArthur's job is solely to carry out that policy under White House directives forwarded to him by the War Department.

State Department sources said no directives had been sent to General MacArthur indicating any desire on the part of the administration here to raise the cry of "communism" in Japan. The sources said they were taken completely by surprise by comments in the MacArthur statement such as that the Japanese islands might become either "a powerful bulwark for peace or a dangerous springboard for war."

The incident was considered here as particularly irritating since it came in the midst of delicate American-Soviet relations elsewhere in the world.

The aim of American foreign policy in the Far East is establishment of a just and durable peace, the State Department sources said. It is aimed at "building a bridge of friendship to Soviet Russia" and is not intended to set up "a bulwark against communism" or to inspire anti-Soviet feeling, the sources added.

STATEMENT HELD UNWARRANTED

"There is nothing which the Japanese have done since their surrender to warrant the statement issued by General MacArthur," one official commented.

General MacArthur's task is to "neutralize Japan" and to get along with the other interested Allied powers, it was explained. If the United States holds any fears about its security, it will counter any Soviet threat with a strong Navy and Air Force, it was said.

Private advices from Tokyo gave the following information today:

"The emphasis on important developments in Japan has shifted from General MacArthur to the doings of the Japanese. One is apt to get (from headquarters) a completely false view of what is going on in this country. Listening to the military authorities one wonders why the occupation is not ended right now. Actually, however, the Japanese are no more ready to govern themselves on a democratic basis than they were a year ago. The Conservatives are firmly in the saddle and are doing all in their power to preserve the status quo.

"Everyone must be aware by now that the Allied Council here is a farce and that the Far Eastern Commission seems to us out here like something on another planet."

DEMOCRACY PREFERRED

At the State Department it was said that if the Japanese have a tendency to go anywhere they will "most likely turn toward democracy" as the preferred type of government. But it was also pointed out that the Japanese, like the Germans, are primarily interested in extricating themselves from their unhappy situation and will take any course that might lead to a way out. They are playing off democracy against communism, it was said, and statements like those by General MacArthur are extremely helpful to them.

Department officials, moreover, were particularly annoyed by the MacArthur statement because of the disturbing situations in Korea and China.

"Maybe General MacArthur thinks he is bolstering Mr. Byrnes at the Paris Peace Conference, but he is not helping the situation in the Far East with his comment," a State Department official said.

Diplomatic observers also pointed out that American-Soviet relations at the Paris Conference, in Yugoslavia, Poland, Greece, and at the United Nations Security Council are none too calm. They were, therefore, particularly disturbed by anything resembling a move to launch an anticommunist campaign in Japan.

State Department sources considered the whole incident as "undoubtedly especially embarrassing" to Maj. Gen. Kuzma Derevyanko, Soviet representative on the Allied Council for Japan, which meets at Tokyo.

There was no indication tonight whether the State Department would make any official comment, since most officials were away for the Labor Day week end.

Mr. MORRIS. Are there any other incidents or episodes concerning this part of the testimony that you care to add at this time? If there are, we ask you to do so.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, I can't recall any, offhand, bearing on this particular point.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, do you know what the attitude of the State Department, or any individuals in the State Department, was with respect toward Japanese Communists?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have any personal experience with Japanese Communists?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you explain those to the committee, Mr. Dooman?

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any personal experience with Japanese Communists, that is your question?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

Did you experience the State Department's policy with respect to Japanese Communists first hand?

Mr. DOOMAN. May I submit that the question is perhaps not relevant to the situation as it existed, because the State Department had no policy at that time with regard to——

Mr. MORRIS. Any individuals in the State Department, Mr. Dooman.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, some time in May I believe it was, May or June, I think it was May, there returned——

Mr. MORRIS. 1945?

Mr. DOOMAN. 1945.

There returned from China a Foreign Service officer named John K. Emerson, who, before the war, had been one of my subordinates at the American Embassy in Tokyo. I understood that he had been sent to Yenan. Yenan in China then was the capital of the Chinese Communists. There were present at that time in Yenan a Nosaka, the leading Japanese Communist, and other leading Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. Is Nosaka the same as Susumo Okano, head of the Japanese Communist Party?

Mr. DOOMAN. I believe the latter is a pseudonym. I believe that Emerson had been sent to Yenan to study methods used by the Japanese Communists in Yenan in indoctrinating Japanese prisoners of war taken by the Chinese. As I said, he returned to Washington in about May of 1945.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did?

Mr. DOOMAN. Emerson. He brought back a report describing at considerable length the method used by the Japanese Communists with respect to Japanese prisoners of war, and as I recall, he recommended that Japanese prisoners in American stockades be then turned over to Japanese Communists in the United States for indoctrination along methods used by the Japanese Communists in Yenan.

At that time he was also invited to come over to OSS, the Office of Strategic Services, where I was helping with my own services in the field of psychological warfare to address a group on what he had found in Yenan. At that time he displayed a large number of posters and papers of various kinds and he also showed me a number of letters that he had brought from Yenan. These letters were written by Japanese Communists in Yenan to certain Japanese Communists who were then employed by OSS in psychological warfare against Japanese.

Mr. MORRIS. That was the episode, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you acquainted with a publication that is entitled "Eighteen Years in Prison" by Tokuda and Yoshio Shiga, published by the Japanese Communist Party in 1948?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes; I have a copy of that book. The title in Japanese is "Gokuchi juhachi-nen" which means Eighteen Years in Jail.

Mr. MORRIS. That publication, which is in Japanese, which you understand, Mr. Dooman, indicates that it was published by the Japanese Communist Party? A translation here from the Library of Congress, Mr. Dooman, indicates that it was published by the Japanese Communist Party in 1948.

Mr. DOOMAN. Oh, yes. I see. It was published by the Japanese Communist Party, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, on page 159 to 161, there is described an episode which involves individuals concerned with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

I ask you if you have any supplementary or corroborative knowledge of the facts described by these two Japanese Communists in the publication that you have in your hand.

I think it would be best if I read the episode referred to, Mr. Dooman, and ask you if you had read it in the book and whether you know of any corroboration of it.

Mr. DOOMAN. All right, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you describe what this is, please?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a translation from the book entitled "Eighteen Years in Prison," the last chapter written by Yoshio Shiga, pages 159 to 161, published by the Japanese Communist Party in 1948 and translated by Andrew Y. Kuroda, Japanese Section, Orientalia Division, the Library of Congress.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read the episode to which we are referring, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

THE DOOR OF FREEDOM

At last the day came when we could become active again. That day came after those who called us traitors had turned Japan into a ruined wasteland, had taken the lives of a million people and had destroyed all peace and happiness.

On August 15 (1945) all hands in the prison, from the warden on down, assembled around a radio speaker, to hear a transcribed broadcast of the so-called August Voice. It was hardly intelligible because of the terrible static, but I caught the passing phrase of "bear the unbearable." At any rate, I was sure that Japan had lost the war.

The prison officials, from then on, had become like men without spirit. We had demanded many times our immediate release. However, it was to no avail. We were still held in the jail even at the end of September. On October 4, however, the SCAP directive was issued ordering the release of political prisoners, and that settled the situation.

By the end of September, a reporter of the American Army had come three times to investigate. He asked the warden if he still kept political prisoners in his jail. The warden's answer was always "No." On September 30, however, Mr. Isaac of Newsweek, and M. Marukyusu and M. Giran of a French news agency came to the prison. They did not ask about the political prisoners. Instead, they merely requested to see the prison. The prison authorities reluctantly showed them first the work shop. Next they requested to see the wards. After they went through the wards, they requested next to see the solitary cells. The Fuchu Prison is an American style cross-shaped building, with the solitary cells at the center. As they came to the section which contained the solitary cells, the three newsmen asked the prison authorities point-blank: "You have political prisoners here, don't you?" The officials, taken off guard, tried to evade the question and replied, "No; we don't." They told them, "Then we will bring in American soldiers and see. Is that all right?" So finally the prison officials admitted holding such prisoners and said, "That over there is their detention quarters." The three newsmen came rushing to our section, M. Marceuse shouting aloud, "Where is Mr. Tokuda? Where is Mr. Shiga?" That was the first voice of the outside world we heard for those long years.

From that day on, until we came out of the jail—about 10 days—war correspondents of various newspapers came to see us. From SCAP also came Mr. Emerson, Dr. Norman, and Lieutenant Colonel Davies. They asked, "What are you going to do after your release?" They also told us about the policies of SCAP. "On October 10, at 10 o'clock in the morning, we came out of the prison. It was raining. The great iron doors were swung open and we comrades arm-in-arm stepped out into the world of freedom after an imprisonment of 18 years. We were all moved very deeply when we were met by those comrades who, with red flags in their hands, were waiting for us in the rain. Some of them had been there since the previous night.

"Then we plunged into our new activities with renewed spirit."

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Dooman, this committee is interested in the episodes that are reported in that book.

I ask you if you will supplement the facts presented in this book from whatever knowledge you have of the episode.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, what knowledge I have is derived largely from—is largely second-hand. I was not there, naturally, and I have no first-hand information.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you heard about these episodes from State Department officials?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what you know about it from the sources that we recognize are second-hand?

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, there are two categories. I have heard from State Department people, other State Department people, who were there at that time. Also I have heard of this from a large number of Japanese whom I met in New York since the war, because this thing became a sensation among the Japanese people, it was talked about from hand to mouth, it was talked about from person to person, although there was no reference to this in the papers. It was a matter of general discussion among the Japanese.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it a matter of common knowledge among the Japanese?

Mr. DOOMAN. It was a matter of common knowledge among the Japanese. I gather so from the fact that perhaps a dozen people, dozen Japanese, with whom I have talked of the matter since the war in New York were quite familiar with the story.

Now, combining these two sources, that is, from State Department officials who were there and from what the Japanese themselves said, this was in effect the substance of what I heard; that Harold Isaac and a French correspondent who was known to be a Communist went to this prison, Fuchu Prison, and the events took place pretty much as described by Shiga, in his book.

The story then continues that they came back, Isaac and this Frenchman came back and reported their experience to John Emerson in SCAP headquarters.

A few days later, Emerson and, I believe, Herbert Norman——

Mr. MORRIS. Who was Herbert Norman?

Mr. DOOMAN. Herbert Norman was a Canadian, member of the Canadian Foreign Service, who had been in Tokyo before the war, and who had been sent back by the Canadian Government to Japan as soon as the occupation started to undertake the repatriation of Canadian citizens left in Japan during the war. When he got through with that, he was assigned to Counter-Intelligence under SCAP. The story goes on to say that Emerson, and I believe they weren't quite certain whether Norman went with Emerson or not, a few days later went back to this prison and demanded to see Tokuda and Shiga and the other Communists.

The story further continues, and this was a matter that was generally talked about by the Japanese in Tokyo at that time, was that on the day they were released, apparently October 10, following the order by General MacArthur for the release of political prisoners, that Emerson and Norman went in a staff car to the prison and brought Shiga and Tokuda back to their homes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who are Shiga, and Tokuda?

Mr. DOOMAN. Shiga was one of the top leaders of the Japanese Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the effect of that on the Japanese population from what you know, Mr. Dooman?

Mr. DOOMAN. The effect of that, as said by one of the Japanese to me, was to add 100,000 new members to the Japanese Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, the prestige accorded by the American and Canadian officials in transporting Japanese Communists in an official limousine afforded the Japanese Communists a certain amount of reputation?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes, a substantital increase in prestige and standing, of course.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, do you know from your own knowledge anything of the report prepared by Ambassador Pauley on Japanese reparations? Are you acquainted with that document?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what you know about that document with respect to the policy he enunciated therein?

Mr. DOOMAN. Mr. Pauley, who was sent out as Reparations Commissioner or Ambassador, made a survey, was supposed to make a survey, of the Japanese industry potential and needs and what could be removed for reparation purposes. He took with him, as his economic adviser, Mr. Lattimore, Owen Lattimore; and, without knowing first-hand, the belief is quite general that Mr. Lattimore wrote the report which Mr. Pauley submitted when he returned to the United States.

Well, the report, which I believe, is readily accessible, in effect provided for the "pasteurizing" of Japan—that is, the reduction of Japan to, as has been previously indicated in that broadcast by Vincent, to a very simple economy; that is, one of primarily agriculture and fishing, plus small consumer industries.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to press Mr. Dooman as to his knowledge that Mr. Lattimore did write the Pauley reparations report inasmuch as Mr. Lattimore has acknowledged in executive session, his connection with that particular report.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lattimore has acknowledged?

Mr. MORRIS. In executive session.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you propose to offer that to the committee in open session?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; I will do that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DOOMAN. I may add that, in general, the report reflects the view set forth by Mr. Lattimore and others and the Nation, and so on: the general concept that Japan should be reduced to a very simple type of economy.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention so much to introduce, although I will do that since you ask, any of the executive session we had with Mr. Lattimore, but I was making that suggestion to account for the fact that I was not going to press Mr. Dooman as to how he knew that Mr. Lattimore wrote that particular report.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no desire to direct you as to how you present the evidence, but I just thought, if you had it available for the open session, it would probably clarify some things because Mr. Dooman testifies largely from hearsay in that regard.

Mr. DOOMAN. On that particular point.

Mr. MORRIS. In that particular point.

We have sat for it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Dooman, did you have any dealings with John K. Fairbank?

Mr. DOOMAN. No. Only periodically.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, you did encounter John K. Fairbank in your official capacity; did you not?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you describe your connections with John K. Fairbank, whatever they were?

The CHAIRMAN. Who is he?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have had John K. Fairbank's association with the Institute of Pacific Relations set forth in the record at great detail.

We have also had testimony on the part of three witnesses in connection with his association in connection with the Communist Party.

I am asking Mr. Dooman if he had encountered at all Mr. John K. Fairbank in his associations.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. DOOMAN. I understood Mr. Fairbank was in that section of the Office of War Information which dealt with psychological warfare against Japan.

Now, the practice was that—I believe it was—once a month a group would come over from the Office of War Information with a draft program of the propaganda that was to be directed against Japan for the ensuing month, and the various targets and subjects which were to be dealt with were set forth on a piece of paper, and the purpose of their visit to the State Department was to get clearance on these targets.

As I say, my contacts with Mr. Fairbank were limited primarily to those visits to the State Department when he brought over these programs of proposed psychological warfare.

Mr. MORRIS. From your association, what was his view toward these——

Mr. DOOMAN. I don't know what responsibility or what part Mr. Fairbank played in the formulation of these programs—that is, the setting up of the targets—but I found that invariably in these programs there would be found an item directing the psychological warfare toward creating in the minds of the Japanese an attitude of resentment and opposition to the Emperor and to the monarchial system.

At that time we had not come to any decision as to what our policy should be in that resepect, and I invariably red-penciled these items referring to the Emperor. However, they would always appear either overtly or covertly in the next program that would be presented.

There was, in other words, a persistent effort on the part of the Office of War Information to get our approval toward phychological warfare directed at the relationship between the Japanese people and the Emperor.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you underscored it in red?

Mr. DOOMAN. I crossed out with a red pencil.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I made reference to the executive session that we had with Mr. Owen Lattimore here on the 13th of July 1951; and from the executive minutes, on page 15, I would like to read the following excerpt.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the witness testifying under oath at that time?

Mr. MORRIS. The witness, Mr. Owen Lattimore, was testifying under oath.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MORRIS (reading):

Mr. MORRIS. After you returned, Mr. Lattimore, what was your next assignment as far as the Government was concerned?

Mr. LATTIMORE. I was a member of the American Mission to Japan on the subject of reparations.

Mr. MORRIS. In that assignment, you were on the payroll of the State Department; were you not?

Mr. LATTIMORE. I understand that it was a White House mission; that all or some of the members including myself were on the State Department payroll.

Mr. MORRIS. How long were you on that payroll, Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. LATTIMORE. Four or five months, from about October 1945 to about February or March 1946.

Mr. MORRIS. What part did you play in the preparation of the report of that mission?

Mr. LATTIMORE. I helped to draft the report in Tokyo.

Mr. MORRIS. To what extent did you help?

Mr. LATTIMORE. Quite largely.

That is the acknowledgement I referred to.

Mr. Chairman, I may as well finish the paragraph, however. [Continues reading:]

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe that for us, Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. LATTIMORE. Well, when we were in Tokyo, we had a number of experts with us, economists, engineers, and so forth; each expert was given access through General MacArthur's headquarters to figures and data on Japan. Each person assembled his own material, and I was largely responsible for the continuous writing of the report. Each expert was responsible for his own figures.

I would like to have that incorporated in the record, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in the record now; you have read it.

Mr. MORRIS. I think with respect to the extracts from the book Eighteen Years in Prison, inasmuch as it was read by Mr. Mandel, nothing more is necessary.

With respect to the book itself, I suggest that it be filed with the records of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

(The book referred to was filed for the information of the committee.)

Mr. MORRIS. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. That instrument that you had there a minute ago, which is a transcript from this book, has not been admitted in the record; it was read by Mr. Mandel.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel read that. However, if you think it is necessary, I will introduce that into this record.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 243" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 243

[Translation [1]]

THE DOOR OF FREEDOM [2]

At last the day came when we could become active again. That day came after those who called us traitors had turned Japan into a ruined wasteland, had taken the lives of a million people, and had destroyed all peace and happiness.

On August 15 [1945] all hands in the prison, from the warden on down, assembled around a radio speaker to hear a transcribed broadcast of the so-called august voice. It was hardly intelligible because of the terrible static, but

[1] Translated by Andrew Y. Kuroda, Japanese Section, Orentalia Division, the Library of Congress.

[2] Last chapter, written by Yoshio Shiga, pp. 159–161. From Gokuchu juhachi-nen (18 years in prison) by Kyuichi Tokuda and Yoshio Shiga, published by the Japan Communist Party, 1948.

I caught the passing phrase of "bear the unbearable." At any rate, I was sure that Japan had lost the war.

The prison officials, from then on, had become like men without spirit. We had demanded many times our immediate release. However, it was to no avail. We were still held in the jail even at the end of September. On October 4, however, the SCAP directive was issued ordering the release of political prisoners, and that settled the situation.

By the end of September, a reporter of the American Army had come three times to investigate. He asked the warden if he still kept political prisoners in his jail. The warden's answer was always "No." On September 30, however, Mr. Isaac, of Newsweek, and M. Marukyusu [Marceuse?] and M. Giran [Gilland?],[3] of a French news agency, came to the prison. They did not ask about the political prisoners. Instead, they merely requested to see the prison. The prison authorities reluctantly showed them first the workshop. Next they requested to see the wards. After they went through the wards, they requested next to see the solitary cells. The Fuchu Prison is an American-style cross-shaped building, with the solitary cells at the center. As they came to the section which contained the solitary cells, the three newsmen asked the prison authorities point-blank: "You have political prisoners here; don't you?" The officials, taken off guard, tried to evade the question, and replied, "No; we don't." They told them, "Then we will bring in American soldiers and see. Is that all right?" So, finally the prison officials admitted [holding such prisoners] and said, "That over there is their detention quarters." The three newsmen came rushing to our section, M. Marcense shouting aloud, "Where is Mr. Tokuda? Where is Mr. Shiga?" That was the first voice of the outside world we heard for those long years.

From that day on, until we came out of the jail—about 10 days—war correspondents of various newspapers came to see us. From SCAP also came Mr. Emerson, Dr. Norman, and Lieutenant Colonel Davies. They asked "What are you going to do after your release?" They also told us about the policies of SCAP.

On October 10, at 10 o'clock in the morning, we came out of the prison. It was raining. The great iron doors were swung open, and we comrades, arm in arm, stepped out into the world of freedom after an imprisonment of 18 years. We were all moved very deeply when we were met by those comrades who, with Red flags in their hands, were waiting for us in the rain. Some of them had been there since the previous night.

Then we plunged into our new activities with renewed spirit.

Mr. MORRIS. The volume itself is in Japanese, which Mr. Dooman has translated for us.

The CHAIRMAN. It will become a part of the files of this committee.

Mr. DOOMAN. Just to bring that Pauley report into proper perspective, may I add that the following year—I think it was 1947—a mission was sent out by Mr. Strike, one of the leading consulting engineers in this country. He sent to Japan a large group of, I think, over 20 consulting engineers that went out to Japan, and they returned with a report generally overruling the Pauley report, and the report of the Strike committee in turn was then upheld by another mission consisting of Mr. Johnson, who was president of the Chemical Bank in New York or chairman of the board of the Chemical Bank, and Mr. Paul Hoffman, who, between them, submitted a report which virtually wiped out the recommendations of the Pauley mission.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dooman, do you know Lawrence Salisbury, who was editor of Far Eastern Affairs, which was the publication of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DOOMAN. I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he ever make any effort to change the personnel in the State Department, to your knowledge?

---

[3] These names are difficult to identify from their transcription into the Japanese syllabary.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, he is the ringleader of a group of men in the Far Eastern Division, who protested against the assignment of Dr. Hornbeck as director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, when Secretary of State Stettinius organized, carried out, his reorganization of the State Department in, I believe, January 1944.

As a result of that rebellion, which was successful, Dr. Hornbeck was then, I believe, sent to the Netherlands as Ambassador.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, it was a successful movement?

Mr. DOOMAN. It was a successful movement.

Mr. MORRIS. And you say Mr. Salisbury was the ringleader?

Mr. DOOMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You know that from your own experience?

Mr. DOOMAN. I know that from personal knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything further, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. I think not.

Have we neglected anything that we should know, Mr. Dooman? If you know of anything within the scope of our inquiry, the chairman and I ask that you present that knowledge to this committee.

Mr. DOOMAN. Well, my purpose, Mr. Morris, has not been to give you any evidence as to whether this, that, or the other man was a Communist or not, because I am in no position to give you any such evidence.

My purpose in testifying here was to indicate in general that policies put forward by the left-wing press, from the Daily Worker right down through the line, were in effect substantially translated into United States policies and to indicate from personal knowledge how that operation was carried out.

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

May the record show, Mr. Chairman, that at no time was Mr. Dooman asked whether or not any particular person was a Communist.

The CHAIRMAN. The record will speak for itself in that regard.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, would you identify for the record as much as you can, who Lawrence Salisbury was, with respect to his connection with the IPR?

Mr. MANDEL. Our files show that Lawrence Salisbury was at one time the editor of Far Eastern Survey, official organ of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he a State Department officer, according to your files?

Mr. MANDEL. Editor of Far Eastern Survey, Official Organ of the American Council of IPR, former Foreign Service official, 12 years in Japan, 5 years in China, and 2 in Manila, and 5 in the Department of State.

Mr. MORRIS. You know that from our records, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. That comes from the biographical register of the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he serving in the State Department while he was writing for that publication?

Mr. MANDEL. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. When is your next meeting, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Next Tuesday at 10 a. m.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will stand adjourned until that time.

(Whereupon, at 12:35 p. m., Friday, September 14, 1951, the hearing was recessed until 10 a. m. Tuesday, September 17, 1951.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS, OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10 a. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Senator Pat McCarran (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Eastland, and Ferguson.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel, and Benjamin Mandel, research director.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will come to order.

Are you ready to proceed, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you kindly stand and be sworn?

You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mrs. WIDENER. I do.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. WILLIAM HARRY WIDENER, NEW YORK, N. Y.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record show the witness is here under subpena.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, last Friday during the testimony of Eugene Dooman the name of Julian Friedman turned up. According to Mr. Dooman's testimony, Julian Friedman was John Carter Vincent's assistant. John Carter Vincent was then head of the Far Eastern Division of the State Department and Mr. Dooman would attend the Far Eastern area committee meetings for John Carter Vincent. Mr. Dooman testified in the course of the day that he suspected that Julian Friedman was the person responsible for leaks of classified information from those meetings to the left wing press and, according to Mr. Dooman's testimony, he made specific charges against Julian Friedman to Julian Friedman.

I thought it would be appropriate this morning to have someone here who had encountered Mr. Julian Friedman.

Mrs. Widener, will you give your name and address to the reporter, please.

Mrs. WIDENER. I am Mrs. William Harry Widener. My address is 829 Park Avenue, New York City.

Mr. Morris. What is your occupation, Mrs. Widener?

Mrs. Widener. I am a writer and a housewife, a professional writer.

Mr. Morris. Are you qualified in any way as a writer for the United States Government, Mrs. Widener?

Mrs. Widener. Yes. I wrote free lance scripts on a WAE basis for the Voice of America from January 1, 1951, to the end of May 1951. I applied for classification as an information expert and I received such classification.

Mr. Morris. Do you have any record of that classification with you?

Mrs. Widener. Yes; I have.

Mr. Morris. Would you mind letting me have it so I might put it in the record, please?

Mrs. Widner. Here it is.

Mr. Morris. Will you identify these papers for us, Mrs. Widener? What are these papers?

Mrs. Widener. They give a classification for me as an information specialist from the United States Civil Service Commission, a notice of rating from the Department of State.

Mr. Morris. What is your rating?

Mrs. Widener. They are dated June this year—radio, GS–12, radio, GS–11, radio, GS–11, periodicals and publications, GS–11.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, I would like these in the record.

The Chairman. I would like to know what these signify and what the designations testified to by the witness signify. What does GS–11 mean?

Mrs. Widener. As I understand it, Senator, when I was taken into the Voice of America on a WAE basis, I filled out a civil service application stating my qualifications.

The Chairman. What is a WAE basis and what does it mean?

Mrs. Widener. I was on a purchase order basis. The Voice of America ordered from me eight scripts a month. They paid me $40 per script. I was up for what they called classification under civil service and investigation by the security officers.

When I filed my papers, I had to state what qualifications I would have for such an appointment with the State Department. I happen to speak several languages. I had to give the entire history of my education, my background for security investigation and for professional qualifications a list of my publications in the writing field and my experience.

I was told to start out to be classified in that field; GS–12 was a very good classification. I believe it was not in the lowest category.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Mr. Morris. I would like to have those introduced in the record by way of describing the witness.

The Chairman. Those instruments, are they from your own hand, or just what are they?

Mrs. Widener. Those were sent to me by the Department of State, Senator.

The Chairman. What is the object of this, Mr. Morris?

Mr. Morris. To establish who Mrs. Widener is. They are just for a description of the witness.

The Chairman. A copy of each will be inserted in the record by reference and filed with the committee.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 244 and 245" and filed in the committee's files for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know a man named Clark Andrews?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How long have you known Clark Andrews?

Mrs. WIDENER. I first met Mr. Andrews, I believe, in 1946.

Mr. MORRIS. On how many occasions, approximately, have you met Mr. Andrews?

Mrs. WIDENER. A great many. He was a fiancé of a friend of mine.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Widener, can you recall an experience that you had regarding Clark Andrews in the spring of 1947 that would be of interest to this committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Read the question again, please, Mr. Reporter.

(The question was read by the reporter.)

Senator FERGUSON. Do you not think that you could pin that down more, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Widener, would you tell us who Clark Andrews is?

Mrs. WIDENER. Mr. Andrews was a radio producer.

Mr. MORRIS. What was his occupation when you first met him?

Mrs. WIDENER. He had returned from China where he had been in radio, I believe, in Chungking.

Mr. MORRIS. What year was this?

Mrs. WIDENER. In 1946 when I first met him. The pertinence would be in reference to Mr. Julian Friedman whom you mentioned to Senator McCarran.

Senator FERGUSON. Andrews had been in private radio work in China?

Mrs. WIDENER. No, sir; with the Armed Forces, I believe.

Senator FERGUSON. Working for the United States Government?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. What was he doing in the spring of 1947?

Mrs. WIDENER. He was a radio producer for the American Broadcasting System.

Mr. MORRIS. You have testified that you had previously met him on numerous occasions?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you recall an episode that involved Mr. Friedman and Mr. Andrews?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give us an account of what happened on that particular occasion?

Mrs. WIDENER. One evening in the spring of 1947 Mr. Andrews telephoned my home——

The CHAIRMAN. Where was this?

Mrs. WIDENER. In New York City—and asked if I would care to join him and his fiancée after dinner to meet a very special friend that he would like me to meet, a very brilliant man and a man who had been in China.

At that time I was not married to Mr. Widener, but I was married to a composer, and my husband was not really included in the invitation. He was busy with music and professional duties. I accepted the invitation to go along. When I reached the home of my friend, my friend didn't feel well and retired. I remained with Mr. Andrews.

We had a long talk and discussion. He said to me that his friend was expected but might be a little late. We chatted and waited. I should say certainly more than an hour later Mr. Andrews said to me, "Confidentially, I want to tell you that the man you are going to meet is absolutely brilliant. In fact, he is one of the top brains of the Communist Party."

At that moment the doorbell rang and the gentleman appeared.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he account for the delay in any way of Julian Friedman in arriving?

Mrs. WIDENER. Mr. Friedman accounted for the delay. Mr. Friedman came in. I didn't know his name at that moment. Mr. Andrews introduced Mr. Friedman to me as Mr. Julian Friedman. He said that he was very sorry to be late and to have kept us waiting, but that he had been occupied with a case that was being heard, a very important case, in arbitration in New York City before Mr. James Fly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that James Lawrence Fly?

Mrs. WIDENER. I don't know his middle name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is it the Mr. Fly formerly with the Federal Communications Commission?

Mrs. WIDENER. I believe so.

Mr. Friedman said he was delighted that the case seemed to be going very well and that——

Mr. MORRIS. This is the case of which James Fly was the arbitrator?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir. And he said, "You see, I am conducting the defense from behind the scenes." I said, "May I ask what you mean by 'behind the scenes?'" He said to me, "It is an extremely complicated case. It is a case involving a worker"—I think he said social welfare worker or social service worker—"who was dismissed from New York City employ and who claimed she was unjustly dismissed because of her political beliefs."

I said, "What are her political beliefs?" He said, "Well, of course, she is a Communist but she is saying that she is not a Communist." I said that that struck me as very complicated indeed. Mr. Friedman said, "Of course, since she is a member of our party, I am defending her, but not out in the open."

Then Mr. Andrews interrupted the conversation and talked about me and my professional activities and what I had done. He and Mr. Friedman began to discuss China and international politics. I listened for quite a while. Mr. Friedman said to me, "I had a very interesting time in China." I said, "Well, when did you leave?" I remember I asked him what he was doing. He said that he was with the State Department. Prior to Mr. Friedman's arrival Mr. Andrews had told me that Mr. Friedman had graduated with the highest honors from Harvard University. I believe he graduated either with magna or summa cum laude.

Mr. Friedman took up the story of his going to China. He said to me that after he graduated from Harvard University he entered the State Department and that eventually he was sent to China where he was connected, I believe, with the Embassy in Shanghai, our Embassy there. He said, "I was able to do very useful work there, but eventually I got in a very tough spot." I asked him what he meant by a "tough spot." He said, "I really was on the spot. I was doing very good work for our cause, the Communist cause."

Mr. MORRIS. He said it was the Communist cause.

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir; "in China, but somebody must have gotten wise to me."

He was asked to write a report on the Communist Chinese labor movement.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me have that again, please. "He said——"

Mrs. WIDENER. Mr. Friedman said to me: "I was asked to write a report on the Chinese Communist labor movement." He said, "That put me in a tough spot. Naturally I wouldn't write anything against the party. If I did write what I wanted to write, it would tip my hand and destroy my usefulness. So I wrote a report that any 14-year-old boy could have written and got myself dismissed without prejudice."

Senator FERGUSON. Dismissed from the State Department, you mean?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Without prejudice?

Mrs. WIDENER. I asked him then what does "dismissed without prejudice" mean? He said, "It means exactly what it says."

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Widener, may I interrupt at this time? Mr. Chairman, at our last session we introduced a letter from the State Department official indicating that Mr. Friedman had been dismissed without prejudice. That is a part of our record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that letter available now?

Senator FERGUSON. Did you understand that he was dismissed because he had written such a poor report?

Mrs. WIDENER. I understand Mr. Friedman told that he wrote a report that any 14-year-old child could have written.

Senator FERGUSON. Can you tie that with his dismissal, the report? I mean what he said.

Mrs. WIDENER. He said to me that he got himself dismissed without prejudice.

Senator FERGUSON. Because of writing this report?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what he said?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir. That isn't exactly his every word.

Senator FERGUSON. But that is the substance of what he said?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir; that was my understanding.

Senator EASTLAND. Was Mr. Andrews in China?

Mrs. WIDENER. I have no knowledge of Mr. Andrews' activities in China whatsoever.

Senator EASTLAND. Was he in China?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. He did show a sympathy and friendliness toward the Communist movement?

Mrs. WIDENER. He showed friendliness toward Mr. Julian Friedman.

Senator EASTLAND. Had Mr. Andrews been with the State Department?

Mrs. WIDENER. I do not know.

Senator EASTLAND. Who was he with in China?

Mrs. WIDENER. I only know that he said he had been with radio. He was in the Armed Forces and had been with our United States radio in China.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair interrupt here. The letter referred to is one dated April 23, 1951, over the signature of Elbridge Dubrow, Chief, Division of Foreign Service Personnel, and is addressed to me. It has "Exhibit No. 235" on it. It says [reading]:

Your letter of April 10, 1951, addressed to the Secretary concerning Julian R. Friedman has been referred to me for reply.

A review of Mr. Friedman's record indicates that he had served as a junior economic analyst in the Foreign Service Auxiliary from August 5, 1945, until the termination of his employment on November 12, 1946.

As you may recall, the Foreign Service Act of 1946, approved August 13, was effective November 13, 1946. Consequently it had been decided to abolish the auxiliary, a temporary wartime branch of the Foreign Service, as of November 12, 1946. In proceeding with the liquidation of the auxiliary, it was necessary to order back to the United States for termination a number of temporary or auxiliary officers including Mr. Friedman. Mr. Friedman's record shows that his services were terminated without prejudice.

I trust that the foregoing information will meet your needs.

Sincerely yours—

That is now an exhibit in this case.

Senator FERGUSON. Hasn't the State Department ever made an explanation as to what they mean "your services are terminated without prejudice"? Prejudice to what?

The CHAIRMAN. I take it to mean prejudice, but you may apply again and be reemployed. That is just a guess on my part.

Go ahead, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. What happened then, Mrs. Widener?

Mrs. WIDENER. Up to that stage I had been listening very carefully to what Mr. Friedman had been saying. He stopped talking. I said, "Mr. Friedman, I would like to ask you a couple of questions if I might." He said, "Certainly." I said, "When you said to me before you were conducting a defense in an arbitration hearing for someone who claimed that she was being unjustly treated because of a charge against her political beliefs, you also told me that she was a member of the Communist Party. I can't understand the need for 'behind the scenes.' If she is sincere in her membership in the Communist Party and it is a legal party, why doesn't she say she is a member of the Communist Party and stand on her rights to belong to it, and why do you need to be 'behind the scenes' if you believe that she is right?"

He said to me, "Those things are very complicated and you have to go about them in the most suitable way."

I said, "I would like to ask you another question. When you joined the State Department, didn't you take an oath of allegiance to the United States Government?" He said, "Yes, I did." I said, "Well, you yourself say to me you graduated from Harvard with honors and you told me that in the performance of your duties you wrote a report that any 14-year-old child could have written. How do you reconcile that with your sworn duties?

He said to me, "Well, I believe that the end justifies the means."

We got into a discussion of ends and means.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he say what his end was?

Mrs. WIDENER. No, he did not; not specifically in that way, but I think it came out what at least I believed his end was eventually. I said to him that I believed the use of the wrong means can preclude a right end. He went into further discussion, saying that to achieve the objective you have to use whatever tools were necessary to that objective. I said to him, "I think what you have just told me is the most immoral story that I have ever heard, and I would like to ask you one more question: Do the means that you advocate to achieve an end include violence?"

The CHAIRMAN. Include what?

Mrs. WIDENER. "Include violence."

He said, "Yes, if necessary."

I stood up and I said: "Sir, it is my own belief that what you have just said to me is treason, and I cannot remain here." I said, "I want you to know that I don't consider myself bound by any confidence as to what I have listened to here and I want you to know that I am going to report you to the proper authorities."

Senator FERGUSON. Did you report him to anyone?

Mrs. WIDENER. Eventually I did.

Senator FERGUSON. To whom?

Mrs. WIDENER. To the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

But I would like your indulgence to continue, if I may.

Senator FERGUSON. I did not want to interrupt you, but I wanted to know what you did and whether you did report.

Mrs. WIDENER. I did eventually as the result of more knowledge, I would say, of that particular subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt you there.

At this interview that took place, who was present in the course of this conversation? The picture I have, it was your friend who had invited you there and Mr. Friedman and yourself; is that correct?

Mrs. WIDENER. There was Mr. Andrews, Mr. Julian Friedman, and myself.

Senator FERGUSON. Was this to be a dinner party?

Mrs. WIDENER. No, sir. I was invited after dinner.

Senator FERGUSON. Just merely to come to the home?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Was it Mr. Andrews' home?

Mrs. WIDENER. It was the home of his fiancée.

Senator FERGUSON. Did she just retire to another room?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir. She was not feeling well.

Senator FERGUSON. She retired to another room in her home?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Which left you and Andrews and Friedman together talking?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir, Mr. Andrews and myself. Then after Mr. Friedman's arrival, Mr. Friedman, Mr. Andrews and myself.

Senator FERGUSON. The invitation came from Andrews and not your friend?

Mrs. WIDENER. Let's put it this way: Mr. Andrews telephoned me and I spoke to him on the telephone.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you gather they were trying to get you to do something for them? Was that the purpose of this visit?

Mrs. WIDENER. I didn't gather anything. I was simply—I went home alone. It was 2 o'clock in the morning. I am not accustomed to going home unaccompanied at that hour. I left.

Senator FERGUSON. What could you have done to help them in any manner? I am not clear as to the reason they would invite you and carry on this conversation. I can see part of the conversation, that part about his being late and he gave you that, and that started this conversation; but he carried it on into China and how he got discharged and all.

Mrs. WIDENER. I suppose, Senator—I don't like to suppose——

Senator FERGUSON. I do not want you to suppose. I am trying to get a reason.

Mrs. WIDENER. I have a certain record as a professional writer. As a person during the war I had a radio show called Women of the World. It won a citation of merit from the Radio Institute of America for the promotion of international understanding in the women's field. I had a certain reputation. I think it was natural that anyone interested in politics might discuss them with me, especially foreign politics.

Senator FERGUSON. Particularly anyone who was desirous of carrying out propaganda would have a source through you to get certain propaganda carried out; is that correct?

Mrs. WIDENER. That would be a possible source.

Senator FERGUSON. If you took up their cause?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did they in any way ask you to take up this cause of communism?

Mrs. WIDENER. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Or the cause for this worker that had been discharged?

Mrs. WIDENER. No, sir. Most of the conversation that took place was between Mr. Friedman and me after Mr. Friedman's arrival.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you say your success with your radio show Women of the World marked you in circles familiar with that production as a liberal?

Mrs. WIDENER. I think, Mr. Sourwine, perhaps the fairest way to answer is to say I think if anyone is in professional activity and field of public information they speak out in public. They say what they think out in public and the public, the press, and the critics judge them.

I had had favorable press notices and favorable comment. I feel that I would have—in general, people like to discuss politics with you or any professional activity if you are in that field. I was in that field.

The CHAIRMAN. The query naturally arises, as has been evinced by the questions of Senator Ferguson, and it is in my mind, as to why would one in Mr. Friedman's position open up the whole subject to you without first having known what your turn of mind was on that subject. In other words, he disclosed to you his communistic leanings and his communistic attitude, according to your statement, without having first determined, so far as we know now, what your turn of mind was.

Mrs. WIDENER. I would like to say this: I think Mr. Andrews on several occasions had made very complimentary remarks about whatever qualities I possessed. Mr. Friedman knew when I met him, or seemed to know, that I was a professional writer and commentator, a speaker. I don't think my work was of national importance or of such prominence that everybody would know about me.

Mr. MORRIS. Clark Andrews met you on numerous occasions?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes. He knew all about my activity.

Mr. MORRIS. You had seen him on very many occasions?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You were introduced to Mr. Friedman by Mr. Andrews?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes; I was.

Mr. MORRIS. Everything he indicated was that he had discussed you prior to your meeting?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes. Mr. Friedman, the first thing he did was apologize for his being late, apologize to me.

Mr. MORRIS. He knew you were going to be present when he arrived?

Mrs. WIDENER. I assume if he apologized to me for being late that he must have expected to meet me.

Senator FERGUSON. Was your profession discussed?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes; oh yes; certainly, in the course of normal conversation.

Senator FERGUSON. How long did this conversation take with Friedman? You say you left about 2 o'clock.

Mrs. WIDENER. My best recollection is that Mr. Friedman arrived about 11 o'clock or shortly thereafter, 11 o'clock at night. And I know that I left close to 2 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Widener, in the course of the 1-hour conversation with Mr. Andrews and the 3-hour conversation with Mr. Friedman, did Mr. Andrews tell you that Friedman was a Communist?

Mrs. WIDENER. Mr. Andrews said to me: "Confidentially, I want you to know that this man is one of the top brains in the Communist Party."

Mr. MORRIS. Then subsequently did Mr. Friedman acknowledge he was a Communist?

Mrs. WIDENER. When he said, "our party" and said the social worker or social-service worker was a Communist "in our party," and when he spoke of "our cause in China" and said "Naturally, I would not do anything to hurt our cause, the Chinese Communist cause," it was obvious.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you report this conversation to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Mrs. Widener?

Mrs. WIDENER. I did after making an inquiry.

Mr. MORRIS. What inquiry did you make?

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment before she answers.

Some time back the witness asked to be permitted to continue and Senator Ferguson, Senator Eastland, and I think myself broke in on what you wanted to continue with. Do you have something that you want to bring out there? There was an interruption.

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Excuse me.

Mrs. WIDENER. Thank you.

The following morning after that conversation I received a telephone call from Mr. Andrews who said that "Well, we certainly took you for a ride last night. You really fell for a practical joke."

I said, "Maybe it was and maybe it wasn't, but I would like to tell you this: I am going to make every effort and do my level best to find out if it was or it wasn't." I did make that effort.

I knew a presswoman in the United States Mission to the United Nation. Her name is Sarah Hodgekinson.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you spell that?

Mrs. WIDENER. H-o-d-g-—I am not sure whether there is an "e"—k-i-n-s-o-n.

I telephoned Miss Hodgekinson and said that I would like to come and see her. I went down to the United States Mission to the U. N. and saw her. I said, "If I am not imposing on you, I would like to ask you if you can get some information for me. I would like to know if there was a Julian Friedman in the employ of the State Department in China."

She said, "That is not hard to find out and I will be glad to do so." So she excused herself and came back and said, "Yes, there was." I said, "Well, then, may I ask you could you get me more information about Mr. Friedman? And she said, "Well, I can try. What would you like to know?" I said, "Can you find out for me if he is a graduate of Harvard University and if he graduated with honors."

She said, "You know, we have a direct line to Washington here and I will go in and ask the Department if I can use it, and I will try to find out for you." So I waited for, I guess, 20 minutes or half an hour. She came back and said, "I have checked on it for you. Yes, Mr. Friedman did graduate from Harvard and he graduated with high honors."

Then I said "Could I ask you to find out one more thing for me if I am not intruding or embarrassing you in any way?" She said, "No; not at all. It is all a matter of record." I said, "Would you find out if Mr. Friedman was dismissed without prejudice?"

She again left the room and came back and said "Mr. Friedman was dismissed without prejudice." She said, "Why do you want to know all this?" I said, "Because I had a long conversation with Mr. Friedman last night and it disturbed me very much." I said, "Do you know anything about an arbitration case taking place before James Fly?" She said, "No; I don't know." I said, "Well, I would like to find out."

I phoned a reporter that I knew and he was out. She said, "Why don't call—" I forget what name, the name of a reporter she knew. She said, "I will get him on the phone and find out." She did get her friend on the phone. He said, "Yes, there was a case before Mr. James Fly and it was being heard and it was a question of a dismissed worker."

Then I told Miss Hodgekinson about the conversation I had with Mr. Friedman. In the meantime the newspaper reporter had said that the World-Telegram newspaper had been following this case very closely, the New York World-Telegram. Sarah Hodgekinson said to me, "Well, if it has to do with a Communist problem, Mr. Frederick Woltman on the New York Telegram knows a great deal about the Communist activities, and why don't you call him?" I said that I had never met Mr. Woltman but I said I would. She said, "You can call him up and say I said to call him," which I did.

I asked Mr. Woltman was there such as case as had been described to you and did he know if a Mr. Julian Friedman was appearing in the case. He said "Not on the record but off the record he is; not on the scene, off the scene." I felt that verified the information that had been given to me. I reported it to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Widener, is it your testimony that at the termination of your session with Julian Friedman you told him you felt free to report the incident to the necessary authorities.

Mrs. WIDENER. I did.

Mr. Morris. Is it your testimony that the next day you corroborated certain parts of the story told to you by Mr. Friedman in order to determine whether or not he was telling you those things in jest?

Mrs. Widener. Yes.

Mr. Morris. In making those efforts to verify details of the story, did you find that in fact those things he told you the night before were indeed true?

Mrs. Widener. I did.

Mr. Morris. Did you as a matter of fact report the incident to the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

Mrs. Widener. Yes; I did.

The Chairman. Do you remember how long after this incident you made the report to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, approximately?

Mrs. Widener. The morning I went down to the United States Mission to the United Nations and saw Sarah——

The Chairman. That was the morning after?

Mrs. Widener. That was the morning after. In the afternoon I spoke to Mr. Woltman.

The Chairman. To whom?

Mrs. Widener. Mr. Woltman on the New York World-Telegram. I believe it was that afternoon or the next morning I reported it to the authorities.

The Chairman. You reported it where, to the Washington office of the FBI or to the FBI representative in New York?

Mrs. Widener. To the New York office.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, may I recommend that we request of the State Department the report by Julian Friedman referred to by Mrs. Widener in her testimony on the Communist Chinese labor movement?

The Chairman. Will you kindly write that out so that I can make the request?

Mr. Morris. I have it here. It is in regard to the Chinese Communist labor movement, and I will use the exact wording in the testimony by Friedman.

Mrs. Widener has testified Friedman told her he wrote such a report and described the report.

The Chairman. That request will be made at once.

Senator Ferguson. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask that you request also further information about his discharge, what they meant by without prejudice, the facts surrounding his dismissal.

The Chairman. Very well.

Mr. Morris. Mrs. Widener, while you were working with the Voice of America did you encounter any publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations in any way?

Mrs. Widener. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Will you describe whatever you did encounter?

Mrs. Widener. I think I must have a record of the date. I was given an assignment to write a script for the Voice of America covering confidential material that was sent by our Embassy in Moscow back to the United States. The report was written by, if my memory serves me correctly, Mr. John Stines. It covered conditions for women—I only wrote about the women's field, of course, for the Voice of America—it covered conditions for women in central and southeast Asiatic parts of the Soviet Union. Mr. Stines' report covered in a very thorough way the deplorable or what he considered the deplorable conditions for women there, the fact they were being forced into heavy industry, into labor in pig iron production and heavy production destined for, I suppose, such things as armaments and so on.

The report was given to me to cover for a script for the Voice. I took it home. It was given to me to take home. When I studied it, I felt I needed a great deal of research material to write an effective script for it. So I went back to the Voice and I put in a request to the editor-in-chief if he could suggest good sources of research material. He said to me that the Foreign Affairs Publication section of the State Department had issued a very excellent bulletin on these deplorable conditions in the Asiatic regions of the Soviet Union and he would give that to me to study. No one at the Voice could find it. I waited a long time and though all other copies were in order in the files, this particular copy was missing. I waited quite a while, while they looked it up. Then the editor-in-chief said he would send me over to the research library of the Voice of America, which is about a block and a half away from the building in which I work. I did go over there. I was given a book issued under the sponsorship of the Institute of Pacific Affairs as research material for this script.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes. I am sorry, Institute of Pacific Relations.

When I took the book home and I started to try to do my research, really, I am sorry, I just burst out laughing, because it was diametrically opposite Mr. Stines' report. The research in this book was diametrically opposed to everything in Mr. Stines' report.

Senator FERGUSON. What was the name of it?

Mrs. WIDENER. Let me see. Either the Central Southeastern Soviet Russia—let me think—or Middle Eastern. I just can't quote the title to you. I know the author.

Senator FERGUSON. Who was it?

Mrs. WIDENER. William Mandel. When I opened the book I was very much interested to see the Office of War Information was in it. When I noticed that I thought I would get some really good material for my script. But I couldn't use it. It was my belief and feeling that the book was largely Communist propaganda. At least if Mr. Stines' report and other material that I had studied on the subject consistently is accurate, then this book is inaccurate. It paints conditions there in those regions of the Soviet Union as a kind of paradise.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the record to show that we have introduced into the record evidence that Mr. William Mandel is a member of the Communist Party, in addition to the fact that we did show some connection of his with the Institute of Pacific Relations. I mention that to show the fact this is germane testimony.

Was that the end of that episode, Mrs. Widener?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have taken, in executive session, testimony by an adviser of the Free China Labor League who spent some time on Formosa and in Shanghai. This gentleman is now currently in Europe. We have the choice today of either taking his executive session testimony and introducing it into the public record, or we can wait until he returns from Europe and he will give the testimony in person. I think it is a decision that should be made by the chairman and the committee, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FERGUSON. He was sworn. The testimony was taken in regular executive session?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was present? What Senators were present and where was it taken?

Mr. MORRIS. It was taken in executive session here in Washington. I know Senator Ferguson was present because it took place in the Senator's room. I think Senator Eastland was also present, but the transcript will show it.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness is now in Europe?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. We summoned him to be here today. His wife notified us last week he could not be present for he is in Europe for a period of about 2 months. We have the decision of deciding whether or not we should use his executive session testimony and make it public, or wait until he returns from Europe.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be the view of the Chair that we would defer until we can have the witness present, but that view of the Chair will be governed by the will of the committee.

Senator FERGUSON. I would say normally that should be the program. I do not think we should delay the hearings because of the present condition when this could be made public.

The CHAIRMAN. I think I will take that up in committee in executive session at a later date as to what the decision will be. If it is necessary, we can use the executive testimony. I would prefer to have the witness appear and testify in open session.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, for security purposes I feel we should not give his name, but this is the executive session taken Friday, July 6, 1951, Senator Homer Ferguson presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. That will be taken up by the committee in executive session and we will come to a conclusion on it.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have here some evidence by Mr. Mandel which would corroborate the episode related by Mrs. Widener in connection with Mr. William Mandel's book.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Mr. Mandel.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a little pamphlet entitled "IPR books, 1950–51, Institute of Pacific Relations." It lists new and forthcoming publications on the Far East and the Pacific area. On page 24 of this list we find The Soviet Far East and Central Asia, by William Mandel, inquiry series. This is the book we have.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that title "The Soviet Far East" refresh your memory any?

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes, it does. Could I see the book?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Senator FERGUSON. Please see whether you can identify that as the book.

Mrs. WIDENER. Yes; this is the book that was given to me.

I would, if I may, like to call attention to something that struck me when I looked at the book. It has a foreword. I read the foreword. It was the first thing I read. Before I had read any of the book, it struck me that the foreword is, well, it is double talk.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you read it?

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, at this point I think the entire foreword should be made a part of the record and then the witness can comment on it if she likes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

THE SOVIET FAR EAST

(By William Mandel)

FOREWORD

This study forms part of the documentation of an inquiry organized by the Institute of Pacific Relations into the problems arising from the conflict in the Far East.

It has been prepared by Mr. William Mandel, research associate, American Russian Institute.

The study has been submitted in draft to a number of authorities, many of whom made suggestions and criticisms which were of great value in the process of revision.

Though many of the comments received have been incorporated in the final text, the above authorities do not of course accept responsibility for the study. The statements of fact or of opinion appearing herein do not represent the view of the Institute of Pacific Relations or of the Pacific Council or of any of the national councils. Such statements are made on the sole responsibility of the author.

During 1938 the inquiry was carried on under the general direction of Dr. I. W. Dafoe as chairman of the Pacific Council and since 1939 under his successors, Dr. Philip C. Jessup and Mr. Edgar J. Tarr. Every member of the international secretariat has contributed to the research and editorial work in connection with the inquiry, but special mention should be made of Mr. W. L. Holland, Miss Kate Mitchell, and Miss Hilda Austern, who have carried the major share of this responsibility.

In the general conduct of this inquiry into the problems arising from the conflict in the Far East the institute has benefited by the counsel of the following advisers: Prof. H. F. Angus, of the University of British Columbia; Dr. J. B. Condliffe, of the University of California; M. Etienne Dennery, of the Ecole des Sciences Politiques.

These advisers have cooperated with the chairman and the secretary-general in an effort to insure that the publications issued in connection with the inquiry conform to a proper standard of sound and impartial scholarship. Each manuscript has been submitted to at least two of the advisers and although they do not necessarily subscribe to the statements or views in this or any of the studies, they consider this study to be a useful contribution to the subject of the inquiry.

The purpose of this inquiry is to relate unofficial scholarship to the problems arising from the present situation in the Far East. Its purpose is to provide members of the institute in all countries and the members of IPR conferences with an impartial and constructive analysis of the situation in the Far East with a view to indicating the major issues, which must be considered in any future adjustment of international relations in that area. To this end, the analysis will include an account of the economic and political conditions which produced the situation existing in July 1937, with respect to China, to Japan, and to the other foreign powers concerned; an evaluation of developments during the war period which appear to indicate important trends in the policies and programs of all the powers in relation to the far eastern situation; and finally, an estimate of the principal political, economic, and social conditions which may be expected in a postwar period, the possible forms of adjustment which might be applied under these conditions, and the effects of such adjustments upon the countries concerned.

The inquiry does not propose to document a specific plan for dealing with the far eastern situation. Its aim is to focus available information on the present crisis in forms which will be useful to those who lack either the time or the expert knowledge to study the vast amount of material now appearing or already published in a number of languages.

The present study, "The Soviet Far East," falls within the framework of the first of the four general groups of studies which it is proposed to make as follows:

I. The political and economic conditions which have contributed to the present course of the policies of western powers in the Far East; their territorial and economic interests; the effects on their far-eastern policies of internal economic and political developments and of developments in their foreign policies vis-à-vis other parts of the world; the probable effects of the present conflict on their positions in the Far East; their changing attitudes and policies with respect to their future relations in that area.

II. The political and economic conditions which have contributed to the present course of Japanese foreign policy and possible important future developments; the extent to which Japan's policy toward China has been influenced by Japan's geographic conditions and material resources, by special features in the political and economic organization of Japan which directly or indirectly affect the formulation of her present foreign policy, by economic and political developments in China, by the external policies of other powers affecting Japan; the principal political, economic, and social factors which may be expected in a postwar Japan; possible and probable adjustments on the part of other nations which could aid in the solution of Japan's fundamental problems.

III. The political and economic conditions which have contributed to the present course of Chinese foreign policy and possible important future developments; Chinese unification and reconstruction, 1931–37, and steps leading toward the policy of united national resistance to Japan; the present degree of political cohesion and economic strength; effects of resistance and current developments on the position of foreign interests in China and changes in China's relations with foreign powers; the principal political, economic, and social factors which may be expected in a postwar China; possible and probable adjustments on the part of other nations which could aid in the solution of China's fundamental problems.

IV. Possible methods for the adjustment of specific problems, in the light of information and suggestions presented in the three studies outlined above; analysis of previous attempts at bilateral or multilateral adjustments of political and economic relations in the Pacific and causes of their success or failure; types of administrative procedures and controls already tried out and their relative effectiveness; the major issues likely to require international adjustment in a postwar period and the most helpful methods which might be devised to meet them; necessary adjustments by the powers concerned; the basic requirements of a practical system of international organization which could promote the security and peaceful development of the countries of the Pacific area.

EDWARD C. CARTER, Secretary General.

Mrs. WIDENER (reading):

This study forms part of the documentation of an inquiry organized by the Institute of Pacific Relations into the problems arising from the conflict in the Far East.

I took that to mean that the Institute of Pacific Relations sponsors this book. I think anybody would. [Continues reading:]

It has been prepared by Mr. William Mandel, research associate, American Russian Institute.

The study has been submitted in draft to a number of authorities, many of whom made suggestions and criticisms which were of great value in the process of revision.

Though many of the comments received have been incorporated in the final text, the above authorities do not of course accept responsibility for the study. The statements of fact or of opinion appearing herein do not represent the views of the Institute of Pacific Relations or of the Pacific Council or of any of the national councils. Such statements are made on the sole responsibility of the author.

During 1938 the inquiry was carried on under the general direction of Dr. J. W. Dafoe as chairman of the Pacific Council and since 1939 under his successors, Dr. Philip C. Jessup and Mr. Edgar J. Tarr. Every member of the international secretariat has contributed to the research and editorial work in connection with the inquiry, but special mention should be made of Mr. W. L. Holland, Miss Kate Mitchell, and Miss Hilda Austern, who have carried the major share of this responsibility.

In the general conduct of this inquiry into the problems arising from the conflict in the Far East, the institute has benefited by the counsel of the following advisers—

May I say that I take the word "institute" here to mean the Institute of Pacific Relations, and it seems to me that this foreword—"so far as we are publishing it, but we are not responsible for it"—is double talk. I mean, to a professional writer it is. It seems to me that way, anyway. [Continues reading:]

Prof. H. F. Angus, of the University of British Columbia; Dr. J. B. Condliffe, of the University of California; M. Etienne Dennery, of the Ecole des Sciences Politiques.

These advisers have cooperated with the chairman and the secretary-general—

I take that to be the chairman and the secretary-general of the institute.

The CHAIRMAN. What else would you take it?

Mrs. WIDENER (continues reading):

in an effort to insure that the publications issued in connection with the inquiry conform to a proper standard of sound and impartial scholarship.

Now, it seems to me before they said they were not responsible for the opinions expressed in this book. Here they are guaranteeing its impartiality.

Each manuscript has been submitted to at least two of the advisers; and, although they do not necessarily subscribe to the statements or views in this or any of the studies, they consider this study to be a useful contribution to the subject of the inquiry.

The inquiry is being conducted, I understand, by the Institute of Pacific Relations. The more I read this foreword, frankly—I did feel like Alice in Wonderland.

Mr. MORRIS. It is your testimony that that book was given to you as a guide in your writing?

Mrs. WIDENER. Oh, yes, sir. This was given to me as research material. It was the only material given to me.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom was it given to you?

Mrs. WIDENER. By the research library of the Voice of America.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you think of an individual in there?

Mrs. WIDENER. I don't know the name of the librarian who gave it to me, but I do know it was given to me. [Continues reading:]

Its purpose is to provide members of the institute in all countries and the members of IPR conferences with an impartial and constructive analysis of the situation in the Far East.

Its purpose is to provide members of the institute in all countries and the members of the IPR conferences, and then it goes on. Then it says it does not propose to document a specific plan for dealing with the Far East situation. Then it goes on to guarantee that these are the contingencies. Anybody can read it.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out again we have had testimony before this committee that Mr. William Mandel, the author of that volume, was a member of the Communist Party. This episode is brought forth at this time, Mr. Chairman, simply as one episode that this particular witness is able to testify to and is offered for that purpose.

Mrs. WIDENER. May I say something?

Mr. MORRIS. If it is pertinent; yes.

Mrs. WIDENER. If you will permit me, I would like to make a suggestion here. I think this kind of thing is typical of the plight of the serious researcher and student and would-be accurate writer and reporter. I feel that if a book such as this exists in a Government library, for research purposes, a book which is I do not believe impartial, that somehow or other that book should be labeled so that the researcher who is writing for the Voice of America, or any other agency of the United States Government, knows when they are picking a book up such as this that this is in truth not an impartial factual document, or at least it is not when compared with the Government's own information.

I have no way of judging any of this information, except by what was given to me, but I do know what was given to me by the State Department on this subject which was in direct refutation of what is in this book.

Senator FERGUSON. Do I understand then you feel, when the Government has in its library of research for the Voice of America a book and they present that book to a person to get out a script for the Voice, they in a way sponsor the accuracy of the information in the research book?

Mrs. WIDENER. I should think that the book in the research library would be classified as Communist propaganda or else Marxian-Socialist views, or Lenin-Stalin views. So, when you pick it up and read it, you know what you have. These are very complex, difficult matters covered in this book. If I had not been given special information by an expert, written by an expert in our own Embassy, how could I have any knowledge of the existing conditions in the central Asiatic part of the Soviet Union?

Senator FERGUSON. You could have accepted it as being the truth and the facts and given it on the air in your script.

Mrs. WIDENER. I could have accepted this book if I had not had any other information. If I had received an assignment and was given by my own Government this book to write about, which I was, it seems to me I would have accepted this as material suitable.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, at the Friday session we introduced documents showing Mr. Julian Friedman was connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations. I think Mr. Mandel has one more contribution to make to that list.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here an issue of the Spotlight on the Far East, published monthly by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, which has been cited as subversive by the Attorney General. This is the issue of April 1947. On page 5 we find an article under the heading "Guest Column," by Julian Friedman, entitled "China's Unions Refuse to be Puppets." Under his name it says [reading]:

For the past 2 years the author was United States labor attaché in China. He became personally acquainted with all ranks of trade-unionists and speaks with authority on the Chinese labor movement.

I would like to put the article, which is brief, into the record and just quote a portion of it by way of example.

The Chiang Kai-shek government is absolutely opposed to trade-unionism because it means democracy, a menace to Chiang's plutocracy. Genuine trade-unionists are certainly opposed to the present antilabor National Government—and so on in the same strain.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have this whole column introduced in the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

This is a column that Julian Friedman wrote for the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, which has been termed "a subversive organization" by the Attorney General.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is at least a column which appeared in that publication under his name.

Mr. MORRIS. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. I see there is a photograph. Is that a photograph of Friedman? Maybe the witness can identify it as being the person she spoke to on the night she has been talking about.

Mrs. WIDENER. It resembles; I wouldn't say positively.

Mr. MORRIS. Let the record show it is a very small photograph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SOURWINE. The photograph shows head and shoulders and the entire photograph is less than an inch square, and it is square.

Mrs. WIDENER. It resembles the person, but I wouldn't say positively it was the person.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like that exhibit made part of the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 246" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 246

[From the Spotlight on the Far East, vol. II, No. 4, published monthly by the Committee for Democratic Far Eastern Policy, New York, N. Y., April 1947]

GUEST COLUMN

CHINA'S UNIONS REFUSE TO BE PUPPETS

(By Julian Friedman)

[Photograph]

For the past 2 years the author was United States labor attaché in China. He became personally acquainted with all ranks of trade-unionists and speaks with authority on the Chinese labor movement.

Genuine trade-unionists are not easy to find in Kuomintang China. To reach them, you have to visit obscure, innocent-looking alleys or out-of-the-way fields in the suburbs of the cities.

But it is most dangerous for them to be known as trade-unionists or to work openly for real trade-unionism.

The Chiang Kai-shek government is absolutely opposed to trade-unionism because it means democracy, a menace to Chiang's plutocracy. Genuine trade-unionists are certainly opposed to the present anti-labor National Government.

Many were originally either company-union or Kuomintang headquarters appointees. There were also secret-society agents and gangsters in labor roles. The latter are quickly exposed today by the workers themselves.

As for the company-union and bureaucratic-union officials, the workers have given them every opportunity to work for the real trade-union movement. So, they now face this dilemma: serve as Kuomintang stooges and 'finks' and lose support among the workers or fight with the workers and be attacked by the Fascists.

That several have chosen the latter course has enraged the National Government and Kuomintang, which has retaliated with arrest, threats of violence, expulsion from official labor circles, purging of official unions, and reorganizing them.

Nothing illustrates the change in labor so aptly as the Shanghai anti-civil-war demonstration of June 23, 1946. On the day before, the Government had called official trade-union representatives to a meeting and dictated resolusions which said that no workers or unions would participate in the demonstration, and that any persons in the demonstration could not be considered workers. The resolutions were "unanimously adopted" because the Government chairman said so, with no one else given a chance to speak. But more than 100,000 workers turned out the next day. And the representatives who had "passed" the resolutions the previous day marched at their head.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else?

Mr. MORRIS. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you wish the committee to meet again?

Mr. MORRIS. Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, Mr. Chairman. We will have General Wedemeyer as a witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions, Senator?

Senator FERGUSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee stands in recess until tommorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

(Whereupon, at 11. 15 a. m. Tuesday, September 18, 1951, the hearing was recessed until 10 a. m. Wednesday, September 19, 1951.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS, OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10 a. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Senator Pat McCarran (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Eastland, Ferguson, and Jenner.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel, and Benjamin Mandel, research director.

The CHAIRMAN. The subcommittee will come to order.

General Wedemeyer, will you stand and be sworn, please?

You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

General WEDEMEYER. I do.

TESTIMONY OF LT. GEN. ALBERT C. WEDEMEYER, (RETIRED), AVCO, NEW YORK, N. Y.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. General, will you give your name and address to the reporter, please?

General WEDEMEYER. A. C. Wedemeyer, AVCO, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present occupation?

General WEDEMEYER. I am vice president and a member of the board of directors of AVCO.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell the committee what service commands you have held in the American Army with respect to the China theater.

General WEDEMEYER. I was designated theater commander and chief of staff to the Generalissimo in the fall of 1944 when General Stilwell was relieved from those two posts.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you hold that position?

General WEDEMEYER. Approximately 2 years.

Mr. MORRIS. That would be, then, until the fall of 1946?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your next command then, General?

General WEDEMEYER. I commanded the Second Army with headquarters in Baltimore.

Mr. MORRIS. That was the end of your China command?

General WEDEMEYER. That is correct. I went out to China again in 1947 for 2 months.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the purpose of that trip, General?

General WEDEMEYER. I was sent out there as an envoy of the President to make a survey of conditions in China and Korea.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you write a report as a result of that survey?

General WEDEMEYER. I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that the report which is now referred to as the Wedemeyer report on China?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. General Wedemeyer, when you assumed command of the China theater what civilian members were there on duty at that time? This is now in the fall of 1944.

General WEDEMEYER. What civilian members were on duty on my staff?

Mr. MORRIS. On your staff.

General WEDEMEYER. I had four political advisers who had been serving is that capacity on General Stilwell's staff. They included Mr. Jack Service, Mr. John Davies, Mr. Raymond Ludden, and Mr. John Emmerson.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did they remain as political advisers to your command after your arrival?

General WEDEMEYER. Only a few months.

Mr. MORRIS. General, during that period of time were you able to form an opinion of the various political reports that they submitted at that time?

General WEDEMEYER. My analysis of the reports submitted by those gentlemen could not properly be called an intelligent or thoroughgoing analysis, and this is the reason: In my judgment, if I had it to do over again, I would have more carefully analyzed those reports, but at that time, that is, at the time I assumed command of the theater, the Japanese were pushing us around and it looked for a while as if I were going to have difficulty remaining there and to retain China in the war. I had two areas of strategic importance—Kunming and Chungking. Kunming was the terminal of my principal base of supply. All of my supplies, as you gentlemen know, came over the "hump" by air. We were cut off from the outside world except by air, so if I lost that, China might be put out of the war.

The other area of importance was the seat of the wartime government in Chungking. If I lost that, psychologically and militarily China again might be out. So I was hard put to it to retain my situation there, to stabilize the military situation, with the result that I neglected the political, diplomatic, or psychological factors which I properly should have taken heed of and taken appropriate steps.

These four men who were political advisers, two or three of them I had known previously. I had met them socially over in India when I was serving there with Lord Louis Mountbatten.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were they?

General WEDEMEYER. I met John Davies, John Emmerson, and Jack Service. I had not met, prior to my assuming command in China, Raymond Ludden.

Mr. MORRIS. General, did the recommendations of these four political officers coincide with American policy at that time?

General WEDEMEYER. At that time the American policy, as I interpreted it, was to keep China in the war and to support the Chinese Nationalist Government. There were no clear-cut American policies enunciated, insofar as I can recall, pertaining to China or any other area of the world. Theater commanders in remote areas had oftentimes to interpret or try to conjecture what was desired in a broad sense, what was desired to accomplish what the Government wanted. However, I felt that my job in China was to continue China in the war, to contain as many Japanese in that area fighting so that they could not be removed from the area and sent over to oppose General MacArthur and Admiral Nimitz in the Pacific. As I stated, also to support the Chinese Nationalist Government which our own Government recognized as the sovereign government in that area.

So everything that I did militarily or otherwise was in consonance with that interpretation of American policy in China. If I had followed the advice of these four advisers, some of the advice that they embodied in these reports, in my judgment I would not have been carrying out my directive, nor would I have been following the policy of my country in that particular area.

Senator FERGUSON. When you say "the policy," are you speaking about the policy as laid down by the military or by the State Department, or was there a difference?

General WEDEMEYER. Senator Ferguson, I made a real effort back in 1940, 1941, 1942, and 1943 to determine American policy or policies insofar as our own country was concerned which were not clearly enunciated. Most of them were found in the Constitution, the bill of rights, and so forth, but our policies pertaining to other areas of the world were never, in my judgment, clearly enunciated. That goes right up to today. I don't think many people in our country know what we are striving to do in the Far East, in the Middle East, or in Western Europe today. The objectives established are too nebulous and, in my judgment, until we do have clearly enunciated policies by the appropriate authorities, not by the military but by civilian authorities, as is contemplated in our Constitution, we are going to have a difficult time in accomplishing what I think the American people believe to be our national objectives.

I said all of that because oftentimes as a theater commander I had to take action in the absence of clearly enunciated policy. I had to take action that inevitably created policy. Then if that action that I took had been wrong or had been subject to criticism on the part of our people, I would have been to blame. The military is assuming responsibility that they should not. But if the policy happened to be in consonance with the views of the American people, then the military would not be criticized. I just mention that because I think it is a vacuum that must be filled.

Senator EASTLAND. What was the policy that your political advisers put forth? What was their advice to you?

General WEDEMEYER. Sometimes it is quite implicit, Senator. Other times it is veiled, but the idea was to give more support to the Communist forces in lieu of the Nationalist forces. These reports would play up the shortcomings, the maladministration and the unscrupulousness of Nationalist leaders, play up the orderliness or the potentialities of the Communist forces in Yunan.

I could not support the Communists' political party and still carry out what I believed to be the American policy in the area.

Senator EASTLAND. Those policies were pro-Communist, were they not?

General WEDEMEYER. I would not state that categorically, sir. I remember a newspaperman out there whom I thought was an out-and-out Communist. The reason I thought so, after considering it more carefully, I was sure that he was so critical of the Nationalists. There was much to be criticized in the Nationalist set-up. There was maladministration and there were dishonesties.

Senator EASTLAND. That was true with regard to the Communists, too, was it not?

General WEDEMEYER. No, sir. It was a smaller set-up. The opportunities were not quite there.

Senator FERGUSON. The Communists were not in power and did not have the opportunity?

General WEDMEYER. That is right, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. If the Communists had the opportunity——

General WEDEMEYER. They would act just the same way; yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Knowing that these advisers favored the Communists over the Nationalists?

General WEDEMEYER. That is implicit in these reports, if you will read them over.

Mr. MORRIS. Were these reports critical of the Nationalist Government that you were there to defend and uphold?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you comment on that?

The CHAIRMAN. I would like, if it is possible, for the general to designate which, if any, of the four people he has named rendered the reports that he makes mention of, the four advisers who were on his staff.

General WEDEMEYER. Actually, Senator, I do not recall ever receiving a written report from Mr. John Emmerson. The other three did submit written and oral reports to me. I stated clearly, sir, that I did not give them the attention that I properly should have, but I was involved in a military situation.

Mr. MORRIS. General, to whom were these reports made? I mean these reports that we are discussing.

General WEDEMEYER. They were submitted to me as theater commander.

Mr. MORRIS. Were they submitted through the State Department representative in China? They were State Department employees, were they not?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. They were all Foreign Service officers, professionals.

Mr. MORRIS. Do they report to you through the ranking State Department representative in China?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes. When I assumed command of the theater, Mr. John Davies—I believe he was the senior one of the group—reported to me, indicated what they had been doing for General Stilwell, and expressed the desire to cooperate and to assist me in every way possible. All of them spoke Chinese. They were all Chinese language students. I think two of them were born out there, the sons of missionaries.

Mr. Morris. General Wedemeyer, may I refer you to the first report that is on that list of papers there in front of you on the table and that you will see is a report made by John S. Service. It is one of the reports that we are discussing.

Mr. Chairman, I am now referring to Report No. 40 from the United States Army Observer Section, APO 879. This is a report from John S. Service to General Stilwell, commanding general, USAF–CBI. It is dated October 10, 1944.

Are you acquainted with that memorandum, General?

General Wedemeyer. Yes, sir. It was not submitted to me, of course, but when I assumed the command of the theater in order to get background for my duties, I read every document I could possibly get hold of in my headquarters. This document I definitely read at that time.

Mr. Morris. Is there anything outstanding in that memorandum that made an impression on you in the past?

General Wedemeyer. When I read it over I just recalled being impressed with the writer's criticism of the Chinese Nationalist Government. There were criticisms emphasized throughout the paper. When I took command of the theater, I found the American military were criticizing the Chinese military and the relations were not good. It was not a happy situation. I recall vividly visiting the Chinese headquarters to obtain from the Chinese generals a résumé of the situation as it existed at that time. I went over there with my chief of staff, a general named Hern. I was astounded at the attitude of the Chinese. They were correctly polite, but I did not get any information from them. I decided either they did not have any information or there was an intolerable situation that just couldn't continue.

So I suggested to the generalissimo that we set up a combined staff. I would sit at the head of this table and next to me would be the head of the Chinese Army. On my right would be one of my staff officers, say my Intelligence officer; and sitting next to him would be the Chinese Intelligence officer. That worked beautifully. At first the Chinese were not very cooperative. They were very quiet. When the war was over they gave a party for my staff officers, indicating that marvelous relationship had developed. That just was a thing because it permeated the field where we got better cooperation between the military Chinese and American.

I mention that because when I got over there there was no cooperation and there was mistrust and suspicion prevailing in the theater. These reports on the civilian side just played up that same philosophy that pervaded in the theater.

Mr. Morris. General, may we get back to this report? Is there anything outstanding in that particular report that you would care to comment on at this time?

General Wedemeyer. In my judgment the military capabilities of the Communist forces in Yunan were not great, were invariably overemphasized in this and other reports submitted to me by these political advisers.

I think I am qualified to speak knowingly on that subject, because I am a trained military man and those men were not. On the political, economic, and diplomatic side I would feel inclined to yield to their views and opinions.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, in this particular report there is certain underscoring. I think it would be appropriate if Mr. Mandel were to read the underscored portions of this report and we can have particular questions addressed to General Wedemeyer concerning the views expressed therein.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

> With the glaring exposure of the Kuomintang's failure, dissatisfaction within China is growing rapidly. The prestige of the party was never lower, and Chiang is losing the respect he once enjoyed as a leader.

The CHAIRMAN. I think before that question is discussed by the general you had better lay a foundation. Whose report is this? From where does it emanate?

Mr. MORRIS. This is a report of John S. Service dated October 10, 1944, and it is submitted to General Stilwell, commanding general, USAF-CBI, on that date.

As testimony has brought forth, General Stilwell was the predecessor of General Wedemeyer. This letter came to the attention of General Wedemeyer when he assumed command in China.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, General, the underscored matter is drawn to your attention. Do you wish to discuss it?

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any comment on that particular aspect of the Service report?

General WEDEMEYER. From the American viewpoint as expressed to me by practically everyone with whom I came in contact, that statement might be said to epitomize the entire American viewpoint toward Chiang Kai-shek and his government when I arrived in the theater in October 1944.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say "the entire American viewpoint," just what do you encompass by that expression?

General WEDEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, practically everyone with whom I spoke felt that there was nothing that could be done constructively to keep China fighting in the war.

The CHAIRMAN. That is those with whom you spoke in that theater?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. And Mr. Wallace was out there, the then Vice President. He stated that nothing but a miracle could keep China fighting in the war. He was quoted in the papers saying that.

That was the pessimistic view uniformly expressed to me when I went over there to assume command by military and by civilians with whom I came in contact.

Senator FERGUSON. General Wedemeyer, I wonder whether this was in line with what you thought to be the policy [reading]:

> Our dealings with Chiang Kai-shek apparently continue on the basis of the unrealistic assumption that he is China and that he is necessary to our cause. It is time, for the sake of the war and also for our future interests in China, that we take a more realistic line.

He was the head, was he not, at that time of the Nationalist Government?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, he was.

Senator FERGUSON. How could that be in line with your idea of the policy of the United States in China, that sentence?

General WEDEMEYER. It was not, Senator. I state categorically these reports were not in consonance with my interpretation of my directive or of American policy. That contravenes American policy as I understand it, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you read the second underscored passage?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

In the present circumstances, the Kuomintang is dependent on American support for survival. But we are in no way dependent on the Kuomintang.

Then, skipping down—

We need not fear Kuomintang surrender or opposition. The party and Chiang will stick to us because our victory is certain and is their only hope for continued power.

General WEDEMEYER. My comment on that is this: The Communist Party in the U. S. S. R. was dependent upon America for support during the war. We gave plenty of it to the U. S. S. R., much more than we ever gave to China. A statement like that is just inane, in my judgment.

Mr. MORRIS. Did we need the Chinese Government in the war, General Wedemeyer?

General WEDEMEYER. We needed it just as much as we needed the U. S. S. R. Any diversion of the Japanese effort that could be accomplished, it was sound to do so. The Chinese were containing in their fighting with the Japanese a million and a half Japanese that might have been deployed against our boys coming up through the Philippine Archipelago and through the Ryukyus.

So the fact that the Chinese fighting, not as well as we would like them to have fought, but doing increasingly better as the war went on, they contained one million and a half Japanese which I think was creditable and under the circumstances, a very great contribution.

Mr. MORRIS. So it is your testimony we did need the Chinese Government at that time to that extent?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir; just as today we need Franco, anyone that will help us in this struggle against communism. We may not approve of everything they do. We may not go along with their governmental structure, but if they can help us in our struggle, I say use them. We needed them then.

Mr. MORRIS. On the basis of your entire experience in China would you say that the situation as described to you by the political officers was erroneous in this respect?

General WEDEMEYER. In my judgment they were erroneous.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you were able to make use of the Chinese Nationalist forces?

General WEDEMEYER. If I had followed the advice I would not have been carrying out my orders.

Senator FERGUSON. General Wedemeyer, isn't the way this would read and what you have said make it apparent that if you had followed the political advice you would have tried to take the Communist Government in China as lining up with the United States and have nothing to do with the Nationalists?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir; I think that is a fair statement.

Senator FERGUSON. Their advice was to recognize in effect the Communist Government in China; whereas, you felt as we were then recognizing the Nationalists that that was the Government that you were to support and to get the Nationalists' aid in your efforts in China; is that correct?

General WEDEMEYER. I think that is a fair statement. The Chinese Communists offered me command of their army and I notified the Joint Chiefs of Staff back in America. I, through the Ambassador, also notified the President that I did not want command of the army. At that time I recognized the implications of communism in the Far East as I did in Europe. I did not want to support people whom I knew were operating under the aegis of the Kremlin.

Senator FERGUSON. You felt that the best interests of America would be served if the Nationalists were recognized?

General WEDEMEYER. Not only for America but for the world, for the Far East.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you read further?

Mr. MANDEL (continues reading):

> We need not fear the collapse of the Kuomintang government. All the other groups in China want to defend themselves and fight Japan. Any new government under any other than the present reactionary control will be more cooperative and better able to mobilize the country.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you comment on that paragraph, please, General Wedemeyer?

General WEDEMEYER. Here I am commenting on China in regard to experts' political views. It makes me rather vulnerable. But in my experience, which is only 5 years in China, or over 4 years, I found that most of the Chinese cannot read or write. They do not understand a thing about political philosophies, political structures, and economic structures. They mean nothing to them. They want shelter, food, and peace.

When he talks, when this man writes about other parties, there are not other parties over there worthy of the name. There was no other leadership through which I could work, except Chiang Kai-shek on the one hand, and on the other Mao Tse-tung, the Chinese Communist leader. They were quite well organized, these Communists, and very articulate, much more so than Chiang Kai-shek, and very intolerant of criticism which Chiang was not. He did permit people to criticize him.

Mr. MORRIS. Did the Chinese Communists help you in your confining the Japanese on the mainland?

General WEDEMEYER. No, sir. I did make the effort to coordinate our military operations over there. They were operating in sporadic efforts to the north of wartime capital up in the Yunan area and Shansi Province. They never launched a concerted attack in coordination with those attacks that I was putting on down below.

Now I should say in fairness to those people when my fliers would be shot down behind the Japanese lines, frequently the Chinese Communists would facilitate the return of those fliers. I don't want to overemphasize that point because I don't want it to be given disproportionate emphasis. But that is true. At times they did do that.

But their military operations did not make the contribution so often one reads in the press or hears about on the radio. The military operations of the Chinese Communists, at least while I was in command of the theater, were not significant.

Mr. MORRIS. You say that on the basis of fact you were the theater commander?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. General, I call particularly your attention to the next sentence in the paragraph that Mr. Mandel has just read:

Any new government under any other than the present reactionary control will be more cooperative and better able to mobilize the country.

Would you comment on that?

General WEDEMEYER. As I stated, there were only two broad political parties, one the Communists and one the Kuomintang. The splinter parties were absolutely impotent. There were not enough people involved. If we threw over the Kuomintang, it meant we were going to assume support and cooperate with the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. Would that then have been true, namely, that under any other than the present reactionary control, to use Mr. Service's words, the Communists would have been more cooperative?

General WEDEMEYER. The Communists, in my judgment—and I have tried to be objective, I have tried to find good in Marxist theories—the Communists will cooperate when the advantage accrues to them. At no time will a Communist cooperate otherwise. That was applicable then and it is applicable now. We are naive if we think otherwise.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you continue reading, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL (continues reading):

We need not support Chiang in the belief that he represents pro-American or democratic China. All the people and all other political groups of importance in China are friendly to the United States and look to it for the salvation of the country, now and after the war.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you comment on that, General Wedemeyer?

General WEDEMEYER. Again I do not know what other groups he is talking about. You had the professors——

Mr. MORRIS. Certainly the Communists were one of those groups.

General WEDEMEYER. They were the major group. There were only two major groups there. There were splinter parties made up of a few of the intelligentsia and they were not significant. They had no power. They were not articulate, so I think you can disregard them.

Mr. MORRIS. As a matter of fact, General, the Chinese Communists have not proved to be friendly to the United States and they have not looked to us for the salvation of their country then or after the war; is that correct?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes. The Chinese Communists have no friendly attitude toward anyone, in my judgment, except the Kremlin. They certainly have no friendly attitudes or friendly intentions toward countries that they call capitalistic nations. Their objective is to destroy capitalism. Their avowed intention is to destroy capitalism, expressed to me personally.

Mr. MORRIS. General, their performances, particularly during the past year, would seem to be a complete refutation of that statement, would they not, sir?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you continue, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL (continues reading):

The parallel with Yugoslavia has been drawn before but is becoming more and more apt. It is as impractical to seek Chinese unity, the use of the Communist forces, and the mobilization of the population in the rapidly growing occupied areas by discussion in Chungking with the Kuomintang alone, as it was to seek the solution of these problems through Mikhailovitch and King Peter's government in London, ignoring Tito.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you comment on that, General?

General WEDEMEYER. I think events that have transpired since we supported Tito have proved us wrong. I think the real patriot over in Yugoslavia, Mikhailovitch, we let down. Personally I think we should have supported him. The same would be true in China. With all his faults, and he does have faults, I think Chiang Kai-shek was the proper leader to support at the time we did. I do not know of another leader today whom we might support and obtain best results in China from other than Chiang Kai-shek. To me today he epitomizes leadership there.

Mr. MORRIS. Is there anything more there, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL (continues reading):

Our policy toward China should be guided by two facts. First, we cannot hope to deal successfully with Chiang without being hard-boiled. Second, we cannot hope to solve China's problems (which are now our problems) without consideration of the opposition forces—Communist, provincial, and liberal.

We should not be swayed by pleas of the danger of China's collapse. This is an old trick of Chiang's.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you comment on that, General?

General WEDEMEYER. It sounds exactly like somebody was writing about the attitude of Stalin when we were worried. Stalin was pressurizing the Allies in World War II to establish a second front. It was always the implicit threat there "If you don't establish a second front, we will make a separate peace with Germany."

I think the same philosophy behind the situation in Russia applied out in China, and this chap points out we should not support Chiang Kai-shek because he is a reactionary. So was Stalin, the worst kind, yet we supported him.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you continue, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL (continues reading):

Public announcement that the President's representative had made a visit to the Communist capital at Yenan would have significance that no Chinese would miss—least of all the generalissimo. The effect would be great even if it were only a demonstration with no real consultation. But it should be more than a mere demonstration; we must, for instance, plan an eventual use of the Communist armies and this cannot be purely on Kuomintang terms.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you comment on that, General Wedemeyer?

General WEDEMEYER. I think that would be just like foreign representatives coming over here and visiting Bob Taft and ignoring President Truman. The only difference is Senator Bob Taft would not have an armed force to support his political Republican Party.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not think that would disturb Mr. Truman, do you?

General WEDEMEYER. I did not mean to imply any disparagement of any name I mention.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate this document preparatory to its being put in the record?

Mr. MANDEL. This document, listed as No. 40, was taken from the transcript of the proceedings of the Loyalty Security Board meeting in the case of John S. Service as a reprinting of a State Department employee loyalty investigation.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, as such may that be introduced in the record and marked with the next consecutive exhibit number?

The CHAIRMAN. It is to be understood and the record will show that this is the exhibit from which Mr. Mandel has been reading that the excerpts were commented on by the witness; it that correct?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 247" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 247

UNITED STATES ARMY OBSERVER SECTION,
APO 879, October 10, 1944.

Report No. 40

Secret

Subject: The need for greater realism in our relations with Chiang Kai-shek.
To: General Stilwell, Commanding General, USAF-CBI.

1. You have allowed me, as a political officer attached to your staff, to express myself freely in the past regarding the situation in China as I have seen it. Although in Yenan I am only a distant observer of recent developments in Chungking and Washington, I trust that you will permit the continued frankness which I have assumed in the attached memorandum regarding the stronger policy which I think it is now time for us to adopt toward Chiang Kai-shek and the Central Government.

2. It is obvious, of course, that you cannot act independently along the lines suggested. The situation in China and the measures necessary to meet it have both military importance and far-reaching political significance; the two aspects cannot be separated. Because of this interrelation, and because of the high level on which action in China must be taken, there must be agreement and mutual support between our political and military branches. But this will be ineffective without clear decision and forceful implementation by the President.

3. It is requested that copies of this report be transmitted, as usual, to the American Ambassador at Chungking and Headquarters USAF-CBI, for the information of Mr. Davies.

(Signed) J. S.
(Typed) JOHN S. SERVICE.

Enclosure: Memorandum, as stated.

[First endorsement]

UNITED STATES ARMY OBSERVER SECTION,
APO 879, October 16, 1944.

To: Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, Commanding United States Army Forces, China, Burma, and India, APO 879.

Approved:

DAVID D. BARRETT,
Colonel, GSC.

MEMORANDUM

Our dealings with Chiang Kai-shek apparently continue on the basis of the unrealistic assumption that he is China and that he is necessary to our cause. It is time, for the sake of the war and also for our future interests in China, that we take a more realistic line.

The Kuomintang government is in crisis. Recent defeats have exposed its military ineffectiveness and will hasten the approaching economic disaster. Passive inability to meet these crises in a constructive way, stubborn unwillingness to submerge selfish power seeking in democratic unity, and the statements of Chiang himself to the People's Political Council and on October 10, 1944, are sufficient evidence of the bankruptcy of Kuomintang leadership.

With the glaring exposure of the Kuomintang's failure, dissatisfaction within China is growing rapidly. The prestige of the party was never lower, and Chiang is losing the respect he once enjoyed as a leader.

In the present circumstances, the Kuomintang is dependent on American support for survival. But we are in no way dependent on the Kuomintang.

We do not need it for military reasons. It has lost the southern air bases and cannot hold any section of the sea coast. Without drastic reforms—which must have a political base—its armies cannot fight the Japanese effectively no matter how many arms we give them. But it will not permit those reforms because its war against Japan is secondary to its desire to maintain its own undemocratic power.

On the other hand, neither the Kuomintang nor any other Chinese regime, because of the sentiment of the people, can refuse American forces the use of Chinese territory against the Japanese. And the Kuomintang attitude prevents the utilization of other forces, such as the Communist or provincial troops, who should be more useful than the Kuomintang's demoralized armies.

We need not fear Kuomintang surrender or opposition. The party and Chiang will stick to us because our victory is certain and is their only hope for continued power. But our support of the Kuomintang will not stop its normally traitorous relations with the enemy and will only encourage it to continue sowing the seeds of future civil war by plotting with the present puppets for eventual consolidation of the occupied territories against the Communist-led forces of popular resistance.

We need not fear the collapse of the Kuomintang government. All the other groups in China want to defend themselves and fight Japan. Any new government under any other than the present reactionary control will be more cooperative and better able to mobilize the country.

Actually, by continued and exclusive support of the Kuomintang, we tend to prevent the reforms and democratic reorganization of the Government which are essential for the revitalization of China's war effort. Encouraged by our support, the Kuomintang will continue in its present course, progressively losing the confidence of the people and becoming more and more impotent. Ignored by us, and excluded from the Government and joint prosecution of the war, the Communists and other groups will be forced to guard their own interests by more direct opposition.

We need not support the Kuomintang for international political reasons. The day when it was expedient to inflate Chiang's status to one of the Big Four is past, because with the obvious certainty of defeat, Japan's Pan-Asia propaganda loses its effectiveness. We cannot hope that China under the present Kuomintang can be an effective balance to Soviet Russia, Japan, or the British Empire in the Far East.

On the contrary, artificial inflation of Chiang's status only adds to his unreasonableness. The example of a democratic, nonimperialistic China will be much better counterpropaganda in Asia than the present regime, which, even in books like China's Destiny, hypnotizes itself with ideas of consolidating minority nations (such as Tibet and Mongolia), recovering lost territories (such as the southern peninsula), and protecting the rights and at the same time nationalities of its numerous emigrants (to such areas as Thailand, Malaya, and the East Indies). Finally, the perpetuation in power of the present Kuomintang can only mean a weak and disunited China—a sure cause of international involvements in the Far East. The key to stability must be a strong, unified China. This can be accomplished only on a democratic foundation.

We need not support Chiang in the belief that he represents pro-American or democratic China. All the people and all other political groups of importance in China are friendly to the United States and look to it for the salvation of the country, now and after the war.

In fact, Chiang has lost the confidence and respect of most of the American-educated, democratically minded liberals and intellectuals. The Chen brothers, military, and secret police cliques which control the party and are Chiang's main supports are the most Chauvinist elements in the country. The present party ideology, as shown in Chiang's own books China's Destiny and Chinese Economic Theory, is fundamentally antiforeign and antidemocratic, both politically and economically.

Finally, we need feel no ties of gratitude to Chiang. The men he has kept around him have proved selfish and corrupt, incapable, and obstructive. Chiang's own dealings with us have been an opportunist combination of extravagant demands and unfilled promises, wheedling and bargaining, bluff, and blackmail. Chiang did not resist Japan until forced by his own people. He has fought only passively—not daring to mobilize his own people. He has sought to have us save him—so that he can continue his conquest of his own country. In the process, he has worked us for all we were worth.

We seem to forget that Chiang is an oriental; that his background and vision are limited; that his position is built on the skill as an extremely adroit political manipulator and a stubborn, shrewd bargainer; that he mistakes kindness and flattery for weakness; and that he listens to his own instrument of force rather than reason.

Our policy toward China should be guided by two facts. First, we cannot hope to deal successfully with Chiang without being hard-boiled. Second, we cannot hope to solve China's problems [which are now our problems] without consideration of the opposition forces—Communist, provincial, and liberal.

The parallel with Yugoslavia has been drawn before but is becoming more and more apt. It is as impractical to seek Chinese unity, the use of the Communist forces, and the mobilization of the population in the rapidly growing occupied areas by discussion in Chungking with the Kuomintang alone, as it was to seek the solution of these problems through Mikhailovitch and King Peter's government in Lonon, ignoring Tito.

We should not be swayed by pleas of the danger of China's collapse. This is an old trick of Chiang's.

There may be a collapse of the Kuomintang government, but it will not be the collapse of China's resistance. There may be a period of some confusion but the eventual gains of the Kuomintang's collapse will more than make up for this. The crisis itself makes reform more urgent—and at the same time increases the weight of our influence. The crisis is the time to push—not to relax.

We should not let Chiang divert us from the important questions by wasting time in futile discussions as to who is to be American commander. This is an obvious subterfuge.

There is only one man qualified by experience for the job. And the fact is that no one who knows anything about China and is concerned over American rather than Chiang's interests will satisfy Chiang.

We should end the hollow pretense that China is unified and that we can talk only to Chiang. This puts the trump card in Chiang's hands.

Public announcement that the President's representative had made a visit to the Communist capital at Yenan would have significance that no Chinese would miss—least of all the generalissimo. The effect would be great even if it were only a demonstration with no real consultation. But it should be more than a mere demonstration; we must, for instance, plan on eventual use of the Communist armies and this cannot be purely on Kuomintang terms.

Finally if these steps do not succeed, we should stop veiling our negotiations with China in complete secrecy. This shields Chiang and is the voluntary abandonment of our strongest weapon.

Chinese public opinion would swing violently against Chiang if he were shown obstructive and noncooperative with the United States. We should not be misled by the relatively very few Kuomintang die-hards; they are not the people. The Kuomintang government could not withstand public belief that the United States was considering withdrawal of military support or recognition of the Kuomintang as the leader of Chinese resistance.

More than ever, we hold all the aces in Chiang's poker game. It is time we start playing them.

(Signed) J. S.
(Typed) JOHN S. SERVICE.

OCTOBER 10, 1944.

Mr. MORRIS. I think it would be appropriate at this time if we showed a connection between Mr. Service and the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. Mandel, will you bring something forth on that score, please?

Mr. MANDEL. From the same loyalty board meeting transcript of proceedings, the date being May 27, 1950, I read the following testimony:

Question. Under what circumstances did you give that off-the-record talk at the IPR?

This was a question directed to Mr. Service.

Answer. During the period of consultation at my return in 1944 I was much sought after because I was the first man to get back to Washington after having visited in the Chinese Communist areas since 1939. In addition to all these interrogations by the different agencies, a number of newspapermen were sent to me by the press section of the Department. I was asked to go up to New York to talk to Mr. Luce. I got approval. I talked to Mr. Hopkins, Mr. White, and various other people. And the IPR asked——

The CHAIRMAN. Will you just explain IPR?

Answer. The Institute of Pacific Relations. May we refer to it as the IPR?

The CHAIRMAN. Afterward, yes.

Answer. The Washington branch of the IPR asked Mr. Vincent, who I believe was then Director of the Office of Chinese Affairs, if it would be possible for me to come over and give an informal off-the-record talk to some of their people in the Washington office. The first I knew of the matter was Mr. Vincent's telling me that he had received the invitation and had accepted and hoped it would be all right with me.

Question. In other words, your talk at the IPR was at the initiative of the IPR?

Answer. That is right.

Question. I notice that in your statement you subscribed at that time to a number of magazines dealing with China, one of which was the Far Eastern Survey. What is the character of that?

Answer. The Far Eastern Survey is a biweekly publication put out by the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations containing articles written by a very large number of people on subjects related to the Far East generally.

Question. And Pacific Affairs?

Answer. Pacific Affairs is a quarterly published by the International Council of the International Secretariat, I believe. Perhaps—I'm not sure of the exact wording of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Question. You were undoubtedly aware from the press of the charges that the Institute of Pacific Relations was seriously infiltrated by Communists. Do you have any knowledge as to how long that situation has existed, when the IPR first began to be influenced in its publications by Communist thinking?

Answer. No; I do not. Outside of being a subscriber to some of its magazines, I have had no interest in the Institute of Pacific Relations. I have never attended its periodic conferences or participated in its affairs in any way. Certainly it was always thought of in the days referred to here as a most respectable type of organization. I have heard from reading the press that there were some Communists who did occupy positions of some influence in it at one period, but I can't tell you with any definiteness or from personal knowledge when that was or how influential those people were.

* * * * * * *

Question. I also notice in your statement that at that time you subscribed to the magazine Amerasia. How could you describe that magazine?

Answer. I subscribed to it just after it was established, I think.

* * * * * * *

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS—LOYALTY SECURITY BOARD MEETING IN THE CASE OF JOHN S. SERVICE

Date: Tuesday, May 30, 1950, 10 a. m. to 12:30 p. m.
Place: Room 2254, New State.

* * * * * * *

Mr. RHETTS. I should like to offer as an exhibit at this time Document 327, which is a receipt signed by the assistant treasurer of the American Institute of Pacific Relations for membership dues for John S. Service in the IPR for the year ending February 1951 in the amount of $15.

Mr. MORRIS. That will be introduced into the record, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not get it clear. This document represents interrogation and answer by whom?

Mr. MANDEL. The Loyalty Security Board in the case of John S. Service, the Loyalty Security Board of the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. With John S. Service answering?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to and read in its entirety by Mr. Mandel was marked "Exhibit No. 248" and filed for the committee's information.)

Mr. MORRIS. That bears on the precise connection that John S. Service had with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. I now come to the report of January 23, 1943.

Senator FERGUSON. Could I inquire whether that was sworn testimony?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

This document is marked No. 103 and is taken from the same proceeding in the case of John S. Service before the State Department Loyalty Security Board.

Mr. MORRIS. This is the report of January 23, 1943?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Is this a report by Mr. John S. Service?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. General, may I call your attention to the report of January 23, 1943? I think that should be the second one in that group of papers before you.

General WEDEMEYER. I have it.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you acquainted with that particular report of John S. Service?

General WEDEMEYER. I have read it over, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. It was not made at a time you were theater commander?

General WEDEMEYER. No, sir; several months prior to my becoming commander.

Mr. MORRIS. It did come to your attention after you became theater commander?

General WEDEMEYER. There was a copy in the headquarters of the China theater.

Mr. MORRIS. You recognize it is a report made by John S. Service?

General WEDEMEYER. Frankly, I couldn't say under oath that I could say that.

Mr. MORRIS. You do remember reading it?

General WEDEMEYER. I remember reading all these memoranda in the headquarters submitted by the political advisers.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, I wonder if you would read the fourth paragraph on that page?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the instrument?

Mr. MORRIS. This has been identified by Mr. Mandel as a John Service report that was made part of the record of the loyalty proceedings of the State Department in the case of John S. Service.

Mr. Mandel, please read part of the second paragraph, not the fourth paragraph, beginning with the third sentence.

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

In Kuomintang-controlled China the countering of communism is a growing preoccupation of propaganda, of both military and civilian political indoctrination, and of secret police and gendarmerie activity. There is not only a rigorous suppression of anything coming under the ever-widening definition of "communism" but there appears to be a movement away from even the outward forms of democracy in government. It is now no longer wondered whether civil war can be avoided, but rather whether it can be delayed at least until after a victory over Japan.

Mr. Morris. Will you comment on that, General?

General Wedemeyer. Frankly, I do not know what to comment. I don't want to repeat over and over again and take the Senators' time. I have tried to make it clear that the Nationalist Government with which I dealt was improving steadily, cooperated with me to the best of its ability, and, on the other hand, I received no cooperation from the Communists. I didn't consider them a government, of course, but there wasn't much cooperation requested. The little I asked them to do was not done, namely, conducting these military operations coordinated with my over-all operations.

I really do not know what thoughts I could give.

Mr. Morris. Is there anything in that particular report, in the entire report, you would care to comment on?

General Wedemeyer. No, sir.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, may I introduce this in the record and have it marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

The Chairman. Very well. It will be inserted and properly identified.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 249" and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 249

January 23, 1943.

Subject: Kuomintang-Communist Situation.

An outstanding impression gained during the past 18 months spent in Chungking and in travel through southwest and northwest China is that the most careful study should be given to the internal political situation in China, particularly the growing rift between the Kuomintang and the Communists.

The united front is now definitely a thing of the past and it is impossible to find any optimism regarding the possibility of its resurrection as long as present tendencies continue and the present leadership of the Kuomintang, both civil and military, remains in power. Far from improving, the situation is deteriorating. In Kuomintang-controlled China the countering of communism is a growing preoccupation of propaganda, of both military and civilian political indoctrination, and of secret police and gendarmerie activity. There is not only a rigorous suppression of anything coming under the ever widening definition of "communism" but there appears to be a movement away from even the outward forms of democracy in government. It is now no longer wondered whether civil war can be avoided, but rather whether it can be delayed at least until after a victory over Japan.

The dangers and implications of this disunity are obvious and far reaching. Militarily, the present situation is a great hindrance to any effective war effort by China. Its deterioration into civil war would be disastrous. The situation therefore has direct relationship to our own efforts to defeat Japan. At the present time a large and comparatively well-trained and equipped portion of the Kuomintang army is diverted from active combat against the Japanese to blockade the Communists. In the north (Kansu and Shensi) the lines are well established by multiple lines of block houses and those large forces remain in a condition of armed readiness. Further south (Hupeh, Anhwei, North Kiangsu) the lines are less clearly demarcated and sporadic hostilities, which have gone on for over 2 years and in which the Kuomintang forces appear to take the initiative, continue.

On the other side, the Communist army is starved of all supplies and forced in turn to immobilize most of its strength to guard against what it considers the Kuomintang threat. It was admitted by both parties that there was extreme tension in Kuomintang-Communist relations in the spring of 1942. The Communists believe that it was only the Japanese invasion of Yunnan that saved them from attack at that time. The Communists and their friends claim, furthermore, that the Kuomintang is devoting its energies to the strengthening of its control over those parts of China accessible to it rather than to fighting Japan. This strengthening of the position of the Kuomintang will of course assist it in re-establishing its control over areas which will then be opened to it. A logical part of such a policy would be the taking over, as soon as an opportunity is found, of the Communist base area in Kansu-Shensi. Success in this move would weaken the Communists and make easier the eventual recapture by the Kuomintang of the Communist guerrilla zones. To support this thesis the Communists point to the campaign in the more extreme Kuomintang publications for the immediate abolition of the border area. Another factor sometimes suggested as tending to provoke an early Kuomintang attack on the Communists is the desirability, from the Kuomintang point of view, of disposing of them before China finds itself an active ally of Russia against Japan.

The possible positive military value of the Communist army to our war effort should not be ignored. These forces control the territory through which access may be had to Inner Mongolia, Manchuria, and Japanese North China bases. The strategic importance of their position would be enhanced by the entry of Russia into the war against Japan. This importance is largely potential but fairly recent reports of continued bitter fighting in Shansi indicate that the Communists are still enough of a force to provoke periodic Japanese mopping up campaigns. Reflection of this is found in the intensive Japanese anti-Communist propaganda campaign in North China in the summer of 1941, although the fact must not be overlooked that Japanese propaganda has emphasized the anti-Communist angle to appeal to whatever collaborationist elements there may be in occupied China and to the more conservative sections of the Kuomintang. This activity in Shansi and the difficulties of the Japanese there contrast with the inactivity on most of the other Kuomintang-Japanese fronts.

Aside from the immediate war aspects, the political implications of the situation are also serious. Assuming that open hostilities are for the time being averted, the eventual defeat and withdrawal of the Japanese will leave the Kuomintang still confronted with the Communists solidly entrenched in most of North China (East Kansu, North Shensi, Shansi, South Chahar, Hopei, Shantung, North Kiangsu, and North Anhwei). In addition the Communists will be in position to move into the vacuum created by the Japanese withdrawal from Suiyuan, Jehol, and Manchuria, in all of which areas there is already some Communist activity. In the rest of China they will have the sympathy of elements among the liberals, intellectuals, and students. These elements are of uncertain size but of considerable influence in China, and the Kuomintang's fear of their power, and the power of whatever underground organization the Communists have succeeded in maintaining in the Kuomintang area, is indicated by the size and activity of its various secret police organs.

But possibly the greatest potential strength of the Communists, and one reason why military action against them will not be entirely effective at the present time, is their control of the rural areas of North China in the rear of the Japanese. Here the Kuomintang cannot reach them and the Communists have apparently been able to carry out some degree of popular mobilization. I am in possession of a secret Koumintang publication describing the Communist control of Hopei. It discusses measures of combating the Communists (by such means, for instance, as the blockade now being enforced) and concludes that if the Communists fail to cooperate (i. e. submit to complete Kuomintang domination) they must be exterminated. I hope to make a translation of this pamphlet which would appear to have significance as an official Kuomintang indication of the policy it will pursue in these areas. It seems reasonable to question, as some thoughtful Chinese do, whether the people of these guerrilla zones, after several years of political education and what must be assumed to be at least partial sovietization, will accept peacefully the imposition of Kuomintang control activated by such a spirit and implemented by military force and the political repression, and secret police and gendarmerie power, which are already important adjuncts of party control and which are being steadily strengthened and expanded.

Non-Communist Chinese of my acquaintance (as, for instance, the nephew of the well-known late editor of the Ta Kung Pao) consider the likelihood of civil war the greatest problem facing China. They point out that the Communists are far stronger now than they were when they stood off Kuomintang armies for 10 years in central China and that they will be much stronger yet if it proves that they have succeeded in winning the support of the population in the guerrilla zone. They point to numerous recent instances of successful Communist infiltration into and indoctrination of opposing Chinese armies (such as those of Yen Hsi-shan) and wonder whether this will not cause a prolongation of the struggle and perhaps make a victory for the Kuomintang, or for either side, impossible. There is undoubtedly a strong revulsion in the mind of the average, nonparty Chinese to the idea of renewed civil war and the Kuomintang may indeed have difficulty with the loyalty and effectiveness of its conscript troops.

Belief in the certainty of eventual civil war leads these same Chinese to question whether the United States has given sufficient realistic consideration to the future in China of democracy. The question is raised whether it is to China's advantage, or to America's own interests, for the United States to give the Kuomintang Government large quantities of military supplies which, judging from past experience, are not likely to be used effectively against Japan but will be available for civil war to enforce unity in the country by military force. These Chinese also speculate on the position of the American troops which may be in China (in support of the Kuomintang army) if there should be a civil war; and wonder what will be the attitude of Russia, especially if it has become by that time a partner in the victory over Japan.

But ignoring these problematical implications, there can be no denial that civil war in China, or even the continuation after the defeat of Japan of the present deadlock, will greatly impede the return of peaceful conditions. This blocking of the orderly large-scale rehabilitation of China will in itself seriously and adversely affect American interests. Even if a conflict is averted, the continuance or, as is probable in such an event, the worsening of the already serious economic strains within the country may result in economic collapse. If there is a civil war the likelihood of such an economic collapse is of course greater.

There is also the possibility that economic difficulties may make the war-weary, overconscripted and overtaxed farmers fertile ground for Communist propaganda and thus bring about a revolution going beyond the moderate democracy which the Chinese Communists now claim to be seeking. Such a Communist government would probably not be democratic in the American sense. And it is probable, even if the United States did not incur the enmity of the Communists for alleged material or diplomatic support of the Kuomintang, that this Communist government would be more inclined toward friendship and cooperation with Russia than with Great Britain and America.

For these reasons it would therefore appear to be in the interest of the United States to make efforts to prevent a deterioration of the internal political situation in China and, if possible, to bring about an improvement.

The Communists themselves (Chou-En-lai and Lin Piao in a conversation with John Carter Vincent and the undersigned about November 20, 1942) consider that foreign influence (obviously American) with the Kuomintang is the only force that may be able to improve the situation. They admit the difficulty of successful foreign suggestions regarding China's internal affairs no matter how tactfully made. But they believe that the reflection of a better-informed foreign opinion, official and public, would have some effect on the more far-sighted elements of leadership in the Kuomintang, such as the Generalissimo.

The Communists suggest several approaches to the problem. One would be the emphasizing in our dealings with the Chanese Government, and in our propaganda to China, of the political nature of the world conflict; democracy against fascism. This would include constant reiteration of the American hope of seeing the development of genuine democracy in China. It should imply to the Kuomintang our knowledge of and concern over the situation in China.

Another suggestion is some sort of recognition of the Chinese Communist army as a participant in the war against facism. The United States might intervene to the end that the Kuomintang blockade be discontinued and support be given by the central government to the eighteenth group army. The Communists hope this might include a specification that the Communist armies receive a proportionate share of American supplies sent to China.

Another way of making our interest in the situation known to the Kuomintang would be to send American representatives to visit the Communist area. I have not heard this proposed by the Communists themselves. But there is no doubt that they would welcome such action.

This visit would have the great additional advantage of providing us with comprehensive and reliable information regarding the Communist side of the situation. For instance we might be able to have better answers to some of the following pertinent questions: How faithfully have the Communists carried out their united front promises? What is the form of their local government? How Communistic is it? Does it show any democratic character or possibilities? Has it won any support of the people? How does it compare with conditions of government in Kuomintang China? How does the Communist treatment of the people in such matters as taxation, grain requisition, military service and forced labor compare with that in the Kuomintang territory? What is the military and economic strength of the Communists and what is their probable value to the Allied cause? How have they dealt with problems such as inflation, price control, development of economic resources for carrying on the war, and trading with the enemy? Have the people in the guerrilla area been mobilized and aroused to the degree necessary to support real guerrilla warfare?

Without such knowledge, it is difficult to appraise conflicting reports and reach a considered judgment. Due to the Kuomintang blockade, information regarding conditions in the Communist area is at present not available. Such information as we do have is several years out of date, and has limitations as to scope and probable reliability. Carlson was primarily a military man and had a limited knowledge of the Chinese language. Most of the journalists who have been able to visit the Communist area appear to have a bias favorable to the Communists. They also suffered from language limitations and were unable to remain in the area for an extended period.

I suggest that the American representatives best suited to visit the Communist area are Foreign Service officers of the China language service. One or two men might be sent. They should combine moderately long-term residence at Yenan or its vicinity with fairly extensive travel in the guerrilla area. It is important that they not be required to base a report on a brief visit during which they would be under the influence of official guides, but that they should have a sufficient time to become familiar with conditions and make personal day-to-day observations.

There is mail and telegraphic communication between Yenan and Chungking, and similar communication between various parts of the Communist area. The officers would therefore not be out of touch with the Embassy and could, if it is thought desirable, make periodic reports.

Mr. MORRIS. General, may I call your attention to the report of April 7, 1944, that is before you?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you read pertinent excerpts from that?

The CHAIRMAN. Before we go into that, what is this instrument, where does it stem from and what is the foundation for it?

Mr. MANDEL. The date is April 7, 1944 [reading]:

Subject: Excerpt from memorandum, April 7, 1944, by John S. Service forwarded to Department as enclosure No. 1 of dispatch No. 2461, April 21, 1944, under title "Situation in Sinkiang; Its Relation to American Policy vis-à-vis China and the Soviet Union."

This was also introduced in the Loyalty Board proceedings before the State Department in the case of John S. Service.

Chiang's persisting in an active anti-Soviet policy, at a time when his policies (or lack of them) are accelerating economic collapse and increasing internal dissension, can only be characterized as reckless adventurism. The cynical desire to destroy unity among the United Nations is serious.

Mr. MORRIS. What paragraph is that?

Mr. MANDEL. The second paragraph. Further:

Finally, Russia will be led to believe (if she does not already) that American aims run counter to hers, and that she must therefore protect herself by any means available; in other words, the extension of her direct power or influence.

Mr. MORRIS. General, can you comment on that?

General WEDEMEYER. This statement was made at a time when there were a lot of people in our country who were making similar statements. Today they are on the band wagon of opposing communism. Quite a few Americans were making statements along that line. In fact, when I came back after the war, I found it rather dangerous, and I could only talk to a very few people, found it very dangerous to talk realistically about the implications of communism in this country and in the world in general. I am very glad that Chiang Kai-shek even at that time epitomized opposition to communism and thank God for General MacArthur out in Japan for the same reason when others were playing footsie with communism, many others. I think Chiang showed a shrewdness, a political shrewdness, in continuing his opposition.

As far as cooperation was concerned, the Soviet Communists did not persist in the China theater. The contribution they made in the war against Japan was negligible. The American people ought to understand that clearly.

Senator FERGUSON. Might I ask in relation to this: Is this not an indication that this was a warning at least to America that she had better see what Russia wanted in Asia and go along with Russia's desires rather than what was well for America or the world? That is, when he says "We should make every effort to learn what the Russian aims in Asia are," and the previous sentence that was read to you about Russia having her way. Is that right?

General WEDEMEYER. It could be interpreted that way. I think that is a sound interpretation of the statement.

Mr. MORRIS. General, may I refer you to a report now of Mr. John P. Davies, one of the four political advisers?

The CHAIRMAN. Has this last one been inserted in the record?

Mr. MORRIS. No, sir. That may be introduced in the record, having been identified.

The CHAIRMAN. It may.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 250" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 250

APRIL 7, 1944.

Subject: Excerpt from memorandum, April 7, 1944, by John S. Service, forwarded to Department as enclosure No. 1 of dispatch No. 2461, April 21, 1944, under title "Situation in Sinkiang; Its Relation to American Policy Vis-à-Vis China and the Soviet Union."

We must be concerned with Russian plans and policies in Asia because they are bound to affect our own plans in the same area. But our relations with Russia in Asia are at present only a subordinate part of our political and military relations with Russia in Europe in the over-all United Nations war effort and postwar settlement. We should make every effort to learn what the Russian aims in Asia are. A good way of gaining material relevant to this will be a careful first-hand study of the strength, attitudes, and popular support of the Chinese Communists. But in determining our policy toward Russia in Asia we should avoid being swayed by China. The initiative must be kept firmly in our hands. To do otherwise will be to let the tail wag the dog.

As for the present Chinese Government, it must be acknowledged that we are faced with a regrettable failure of statesmanship. Chiang's persisting in an active anti-Soviet policy, at a time when his policies (or lack of them) are accelerating economic collapse and increasing internal dissension, can only be characterized as reckless adventurism. The cynical desire to destroy unity among the United Nations is serious. But it would also appear that Chiang unwittingly may be contributing to Russian dominance in eastern Asia by internal and external policies which, if pursued in their present form, will render China too weak to serve as a possible counterweight to Russia. By so doing, Chiang may be digging his own grave; not only north China and Manchuria but also national groups such as Korea and Formosa may be driven into the arms of the Soviets.

Neither now nor in the immediately foreseeable future does the United States want to find itself in direct opposition to Russia in Asia; nor does it want to see Russia have undisputed dominance over a part or all of China.

The best way to cause both of these possibilities to become realities is to give, in either fact or appearance, support to the present reactionary Government of China beyond carefully regulated and controlled aid directed solely toward the military prosecution of the war against Japan. To give diplomatic or other support beyond this limit will encourage the Kuomintang in its present suicidal anti-Russian policy. It will convince the Chinese Communists—who probably hold the key to control, not only of north China but of Inner Mongolia and Manchuria as well—that we are on the other side and that their only hope for survival lies with Russia. Finally, Russia will be led to believe (if she does not already) that American aims run counter to hers, and that she must therefore protect herself by any means available: in other words, the extension of her direct power or influence.

It is important, therefore, that the United States have the following aims in its dealings with China:

1. Avoid becoming involved in any way in Sino-Soviet relations; avoid all appearance of unqualified diplomatic support of China, especially vis-à-vis Russia; and limit American aid to China to direct prosecution of the war against Japan.

This may involve soft-pedaling of grandiose promises of postwar aid and economic rehabilitation, unless they are predicated on satisfactory reforms within China.

2. Show a sympathetic interest in the Communists and liberal groups in China. Try to fit the Communists into the war against Japan.

In so doing, we may promote Chinese unity and galvanize the lagging Chinese war effort. The liberals, generally speaking, already consider that their hope lies in America. The Communists, from what little we know of them, also are friendly toward America, believe that democracy must be the next step in China, and take the view that economic collaboration with the United States is the only hope for speedy postwar rehabilitation and development. It is vital that we do not lose this good will and influence.

3. Use our tremendous and as yet unexploited influence with the Kuomintang promote internal Chinese unity on the only possible and lasting foundation of progressive reform.

There is no reason for us to fear using our influence. The Kuomintang knows that it is dependent on us; it cannot turn toward a Japan approaching annihilation; it is inconceivable that it will turn toward communistic Russia; and Great Britain is not in a position to be of help. American interest in the Chinese Communists will be a potent force in persuading Kuomintang China to set its house in order.

The Communists would undoubtedly play an important part in a genuinely unified China—one not unified by the Kuomintang's present policy in practice of military force and threat. But it is most probable that such a democratic and unified China would naturally gravitate toward the United States, and that the United States, by virtue of sympathy, position, and economic resources, would enjoy a greater influence in China than any other foreign power.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have the Davies report? That is dated June 24, 1943.

General WEDEMEYER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. May I refer to the second extract made on that page, General, November 7, 1944—Davies [reading]:

The Chinese Communists are so strong between the Great Wall and the Yangtze that they can now look forward to the postwar control of at least north China. They may also continue to hold not only those parts of the Yangtze Valley which they now dominate but also new areas in central and south China. The Communists have fallen heir to these new areas by a process which has been operating for 7 years, whereby Chiang Kai-shek loses his cities and principal lines of communication to the Japanese and the countryside to the Communists.

The Communists have survived 10 years of civil war and 7 years of Japanese offensives. They have survived not only more sustained enemy pressure than the Chinese Central Government forces have been subjected to, but also a severe blockade imposed by Chiang.

They have survived and they have grown. Communist growth since 1937 has been almost geometric in progression. From control of some 100,000 square kilometers with a population of one million and a half they have expanded to about 850,000 square kilometers with a population of approximately 90 million. And they will continue to grow.

The reason for this phenomenal vitality and strength is simple and fundamental. It is mass support, mass participation. The Communist governments and armies are the first governments and armies in modern Chinese history to have positive and widespread popular support. They have this support because the governments and armies are genuinely of the people.

I wonder if you would comment on that extract, General?

General WEDEMEYER. As of that date, of that period, I think the writer is incorrect in the military capabilities of the Communists, and the statement there, the correctness of which I question namely, they had withstood the heavy attacks of the Japanese is not correct for the period I commanded the theater. I do not believe it was correct prior to my assuming command, because I read the history of the operations that had taken place from the beginning of the war, 1937. At no time were large numbers of Communist forces involved with Japanese forces, and at no time did the Chinese Communist military forces make a real contribution to the over-all China war effort. Most of their operations were guerrilla in nature. They were designed to capture blockhouses established by the Japanese and to capture small quantities of arms and equipment.

He goes on to say the reason for the success that he alludes to of the Chinese Communists is simple and fundamental. He says it is mass support, mass participation. I would change that and then go along with the statement [reading]:

It is Soviet support and police participation, secret-police participation and propaganda participation.

Those are the things that took over China.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you say he was wrong when he said that "they have this support because the governments and armies are genuinely of the people?" Were the Chinese people Communists at heart, or were they dominated by the Soviet Union?

General WEDEMEYER. In my judgment—and this man is an expert and I am not on China; he has lived most of his life there and he speaks the language—but in my humble judgment the Chinese people per se are not communistically inclined. They are individualistic. The family is the integral unit. We often accuse them of nepotism because they have these strong family ties. If one enjoys economic success, he is duty-bound to take care of the other members of his family.

I would go back to this, Senator: The Chinese people don't understand political philosophies. I mean the bulk of them do not. There is just a thin veneer of educated people in China who understand what we are talking about. When anyone talks about any leader, any war lord, any political party having the support of the Chinese people, you can see how nebulous that is.

Mr. MORRIS. Generel, I draw your attention to the same document on the second page.

Mr. Mandel, will you read that extract, please?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

The generalissimo realizes that, if he accedes to the Communist terms for a coalition government, they will sooner or later disposses him and his kuomintang of power. He will therefore not, unless driven to an extremity, form a genuine coalition government. He will seek to retain his present government, passively wait out the war and conserve his strength, knowing that the Communist issue must eventually be joined.

It further says:

The Communists, on their part, have no interest in reaching an agreement with the generalissimo short of a genuine coalition government. They recognize that Chiang's positon is crumbling; that they may before long receive substantial Russian support, and that if they have patience they will succeed to authority in at least north China.

Mr. MORRIS. General, do you believe, if the generalissimo had acceded to the Communist terms for a coalition government, that they would sooner or later dispossess him and his Kuomintang of power?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir; I do. The Communists at that time had very little power. The generalissimo had most of the power. The Communists were determined to have all the power, and the generalissimo was just as determined to retain all the power. It just makes sense to me. That is the way the situation maintained out there. Any other solution I do not accept. I do not think it is sound.

Mr. MORRIS. With respect to the second paragraph there, you agree with Mr. Davies when he said that the Communists had no intention of reaching an agreement with the generalissimo short of a genuine coalition government?

General WEDEMEYER. I think the Communists had the idea of a coalition government just a step toward acquisition of all power. They would violate any agreement they made just as they have in other areas of the world. When the time came they would seize all the power and there would be no represenation on the part of the Kuomintang. The Kuomintang would be liquidated.

Senator FERGUSON. General, if this advice of Mr. Davies of December 9, 1944, was taken, how could we hope to sustain a democratic government in China by the use of philosophy of General Marshall's mission to form a coalition?

General WEDEMEYER. We couldn't, sir. I never did believe that a coalition with the Communists was possible. You can coalesce political parties at times over the years. The Republicans and Democrats have gotten together in a bipartisan approach to international problems. Personally I do not agree with that. It is the American way to make a man defend what he proposes to do. I think we should always question the other man's judgment; do it in a respectful but intelligent way, and continuously. I think that is the whole philosophy behind democracy.

Now, you will get no such philosophy or get no such modus operandi in operations with the Communists. All you have to do is read the Communist Manifesto and Karl Marx's Das Kapital and you will have it laid out for you just as Hitler so obligingly told us what he was going to do and we ignored his warnings.

Senator FERGUSON. How could you get a clearer statement than an indication of Davies as to what the Communists were. They were dominated by Russia and "if they have patience they will succeed to authority in at least north China." He limited it to the north of China, but he indicated that they would get the support to take over China. Is that not true?

General WEDEMEYER. That is true.

Senator FERGUSON. If you were to back the Communists, it was to back the idea that Russia would be the dominant power of China.

General WEDEMEYER. That is true.

I have told you earlier, sir, I neglected to give the attention that I should have when I was commanding that theater—give attention to these reports. As an alibi, I was involved in military operations and busy as the dickens. Later, in analyzing these reports and going back over many things that had happened in this, the psychological or diplomatic field, I realized I had been remiss in my duties as a theater commander in not analyzing them more carefully. I did not take the advice. I adhered to the path of trying to contain the Japanese and supporting the Nationalist Government in my personal relations with the Chinese military and civilians.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not follow this advice, in other words?

General WEDEMEYER. No. I was fortunate in having a very loyal American out there as a diplomatic representative, Patrick J. Hurley. I admired him a great deal and felt he represented American policies realistically, courageously and continuously. He was the American Ambassador.

Mr. MORRIS. General, may I draw your attention to the next extract we have on this page?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Under date of November 15, 1944, Mr. Mandel, and will you read that for us, please?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

We should not now abandon Chiang Kai-shek. To do so at this juncture would be to lose more than we could gain. We must for the time being continue recognition of Chiang's Government.

But we must be realistic. We must not indefinitely underwrite a politically bankrupt regime. And, if the Russians are going to enter the Pacific war, we must make a determined effort to capture politically the Chinese Communists rather than allow them to go by default wholly to the Russians. Furthermore, we must fully understand that by reason of our recognition of the Chiang Kai-shek Government as now constituted we are committed to a steadily decaying regime and severely restricted in working out military and political cooperation with the Chinese Communists.

A coalition Chinese Government in which the Communists find a satisfactory place is the solution of this impasse most desirable to us. It provides our great-assurance of a strong, united, democratic, independent and friendly China—our basic strategic aim in Asia and the Pacific. If Chiang and the Communists reach a mutually satisfactory agreement, there will have been achieved from our point of view the most desirable possible solution. If Chiang and the Communists are irreconcilable, then we shall have to decide which faction we are going to support.

In seeking to determine which faction we should support we must keep in mind these basic considerations: Power in China is on the verge of shifting from Chiang to the Communists.

If the Russians enter North China and Manchuria, we obviously cannot hope to win the Communists entirely over to us, but we can through control of supplies and postwar aid expect to exert considerable influence in the direction of Chinese nationalism and independence from Soviet control.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you comment on that excerpt, General Wedemeyer?

General WEDEMEYER. Well, I think prior comments on other excerpts cover that, sir, namely, that a coalition government meant a Communist government, insofar as I am concerned. It would not be such a thing as a coalition government, the Communists would have all control.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you think that the Chinese Communist organization was a complete auxiliary and part of the international Communist organization?

General WEDEMEYER. Definitely. I felt they were operating under the aegis of the Kremlin, and most of the leaders had been trained in the U. S. S. R., over the years, over a period of 20 years. And it is that hard core of fanatic loyal leadership that the Communists have generated in the various areas of the world that has enabled these well-organized minorities to take over unsuspecting intimidated masses. And particularly, where the masses are illiterate, unemployed, improvident, as they are in China and in India; those areas are particularly vulnerable to the Marxian philosophies and methods.

Mr. MORRIS. And is there not implicit in this statement, General Wedemeyer, an assertion that the Chinese Communists were independent of Moscow?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that not obvious, General?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In which you do not believe?

General WEDEMEYER. Definitely, Senator. I think that all of these satellites are oriented toward the Kremlin. Now, the Soviet leaders wisely adjust and change the application of their political and economic ideas to conform more or less to the customs, the organization, and to the traditions of the particular area where they are applying these ideas. They make adjustments. But the basic idea is the destruction of free enterprise, the enslavement of mind and body and destruction of any spiritual force in this world. Those are the basic objectives of communism, and they are making progress toward accomplishing those objectives.

Mr. MORRIS. May I call your attention to the first full paragraph on page 3 in that statement. It begins [reading]:

> In seeking to determine which faction we should support we must keep in mind these basic considerations: Power in China is on the verge of shifting from Chiang to the Communists.

Do you not interpret that, General Wedemeyer, as a recommendation that we should support the Chinese Communist faction?

General WEDEMEYER. That is one interpretation, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your interpretation, General Wedemeyer?

General WEDEMEYER. My interpretation is that this chap felt that the Communists in China were getting increasing power. I do not go quite so far as to suggest just from that statement that this Foreign Service officer wants us to feel that we should support the Communists. I think there is always danger in reading into a statement——

Mr. MORRIS. We do not intend to do that.

General WEDEMEYER. I know you don't, and I cannot do it.

The CHAIRMAN. You would say the language was an inducement toward that conclusion, though; would you not?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes; it inclines in that direction. In fairness to the writer, however, I think he is the best witness on that.

Senator FERGUSON. It could be taken as a recommendation that if you wanted to be on the power side you take his views; is that correct?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce all of these excerpts into the record, but Mr. Mandel has not yet told us from what sources he has put these together, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. This document that we have in hand here on which General Wedemeyer has been testifying has not been offered for the record?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right. Mr. Mandel, will you tell us what these are?

Mr. MANDEL. These are taken from a publication called United States Relations With China, a Department of State publication, Far Eastern Series, released August 1949.

The CHAIRMAN. Released by whom and by what authority?

Mr. MANDEL. By the State Department. That is popularly known as the white paper.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the paper I have in my mind.

Mr. MORRIS. Those are extracts from that publication, Senator. Before introducing that into the record, I think Mr. Sourwine would like to ask a few questions of General Wedemeyer on that.

Mr. SOURWINE. General, referring to the excerpt headed November 15, 1944, which has been previously discussed, the second paragraph starts out with the sentence, "But we must be realistic." Would it be fair, therefore, to judge the rest of this excerpt on the basis of whether it is realistic?

General WEDEMEYER. I think it would, yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, the third sentence is the one referred to by Mr. Morris obliquely when he asked you if you shared the apparent feeling of this writer that the Chinese Communists were free agents, were independent, and that is the sentence which reads:

> And if the Russians are going to enter the Pacific war, we must make a determined effort to capture politically the Chinese Communists rather than allow them to go by default wholly to the Russians.

That necessarily implies, does it not, that the Chinese Communists, at the time of this writing, were not tied up with the Russians?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes; that is implicit in that statement, but I do not agree with it.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is also implicit in that statement, is it not, that we could "capture" politically the Chinese Communists?

General WEDEMEYER. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you agree with that statement?

General WEDEMEYER. I don't agree with it, but that is implicit in the statement as you read it to me, yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. In your opinion, is either of those implications realistic?

General WEDEMEYER. Definitely not. In my judgment, in my humble judgment, definitely not.

I want to say one thing there to you, sir: In my relations with the Communists they were not emotional, they were not unobjective. They had illness up in that area and it was remote, and at great cost to my limited war effort I sent 15 tons of medical supplies to help Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai, with the permission of the Generalissimo. I want you to understand that my attitude toward them was just as humanitarian as the record of our great country over many years.

Now, therefore, when I make statements they are not emotional replies, sir, they are just in the interest of the country; not in my own personal interest or not in the interest of the Communists or the Kuomintang.

I want to make a statement to you, because I have emphasized that I do not agree with the implications there. I accept the statements, that the statements are implicit in the way you interpret them, I accept that, but I do not agree with them.

Mr. SOURWINE. General, I am attempting here to be quite coldly logical about this passage and not emotional at all, and I appreciate your answer.

General WEDEMEYER. I am not saying you were suggesting emotion. I do not want emotionalism to enter into it.

Mr. SOURWINE. The next sentence reads:

Furthermore, we must fully understand that by reason of our recognition of the Chiang Kai-shek government as now constituted we are committed to a steadily decaying regime and severely restricted in working out military and political cooperation with the Chinese Communists.

That phrase "are committed to a steadily decaying regime" can only be interpreted as a charge that the Chiang Kai-shek government was steadily decaying, is that not correct?

General WEDEMEYER. You mean that the government was decaying? Is that what you are asking me, if it is correct?

Mr. SOURWINE. That is implicit in this language?

General WEDEMEYER. It is implicit in that language, but again——

Mr. SOURWINE. It was not true, was it?

General WEDEMEYER. That would require quite a lot of development. I do not know whether the Senators want me to develop that, Mr. Sourwine, or not, but I would be happy to do it. In other words, I am not going to answer yes or no and establish a very important point that will militate against my entire testimony here.

Senator FERGUSON. You think that would take an explanation?

General WEDEMEYER. It would take an explanation, Senator Ferguson, in my judgment, of about 10 minutes, indicating the development that brought about the steadily deteriorating situation in China, economic, psychological, and military.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the committee care to hear it?

Senator FERGUSON. I think because of the question it would be of interest on this record.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, then, General.

General WEDEMEYER. Do you want to hear it, Mr. Sourwine?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

General WEDEMEYER. You all are familiar with the fact that Chiang Kai-shek took over the Chinese Nationalist Government upon the death of Dr. Sun Yat Sen. At that time there were Soviet Russian advisers in the area and they had agreed that there would be no political propagandizing, but they would assist the new Chinese Republic in evolving a stable economy and building up their military forces.

In typical Communist fashion they violated their agreement with reference to the dissemination of Communist political propaganda and just brought about the conflict that ended up with the Communists being pushed back clear up in Yunan, in a remote western province of China.

The period 1927 to 1937 was often alluded to by Americans, Britishers, and other foreigners in the area who had lived there many years as the golden decade. From 1927 to 1937, during that period, communications were being improved, the economy was being better stabilized, and schools were being built to extend advantages of education, and many improvements, in other words, were being instituted.

Now, you all know that there are many dialects in China, but basically there are three areas and people living in those three areas, respectively, cannot understand each other. They all read and write the same hieroglyphics, the same characters.

Chiang Kai-shek also was striving to bring about an alphabet that would be universally understood to simplify the education that he envisaged for his people.

Now, the military jingoists of Japan, recognizing the developments which would bring about a nationalization, a political consciousness in China, a unity, were concerned, and they had ideas of a coprosperity sphere in Asia under their domination. So many observers with whom I talked in the Far East who had lived there many years, they refer to this golden decade—mind you now, under Chiang Kai-shek's regime and approximately the same leaders whom we have today, and we read in the press considerable criticism about them, they had that period where they were improving conditions in China and many people feel that the thing that precipitated the war in 1937 on the part of the Japanese was the fact that a strongly unified China would make it more difficult, if not impossible, for Japan to take over in that area. So that precipitated the attack in 1937.

Now, for 8 years China fought the Japanese. The Japanese were a modern military nation. In the first year or so of the war we suffered many humiliating reverses at the hands of the Japanese in the battles that we fought with them on the sea and in the air and on the ground, as did the British. Gradually we evolved forces that enabled us to defeat the Japanese militarily.

But the Chinese did not have competent or well-organized military forces, and they did not fight well—they fought well with what they had—but by our standards it was not a great contribution. And I have never in any testimony stated that the contribution made by the Chinese in the war was overwhelming, but it was important to us in that it did contain large numbers of Japanese that might have been employed at crucial places and critical times aginst our forces as they advanced up north against the Japanese Archipelgo.

But during the war, and immediately subsequent to VJ-day, propaganda increased in that area, propaganda that denounced you and me, the Americans, and distorted our objectives in that area, called us imperialists, Yankee imperialists, and indicated our determination to take over the Far East, to dominate the Far East. These programs emanated from Yunnan, the Chinese Communist headquarters, and frequently were reaffirmed in articles appearing in Pravda and other Communist-inspired newspapers and radio releases.

It was perfectly obvious to those Americans who were out there with me in 1945 at the close of the war that this propaganda campaign was being intensified against us to cause the Chinese people to suspect our motives and to turn against us.

Now, in considering any problem in China, I think all of that period, the development in that period, must be thought about objectively. And I also think about those things in relation to the statements that I read here by experts on the area. This is just a soldier's view, a practical view that I personally experienced and concluded. These are conclusions that I drew as a result of serving out there just a few years.

That is the background I wanted to give you.

Mr. SOURWINE. Thank you, General. I have just two or three more questions about this particular section of the report, this November 15, 1944, item.

General WEDMEYER. All right, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. In the same sentence which elicited the answer you have just given us is a phrase, and I had better read the whole sentence and underline the phrase vocally [reading]:

Furthermore, we must fully understand that by reason of our recognition of the Chiang Kai-shek government as now constituted we are committed to a steadily decaying regime—and here is the phase I want to underline—and severely restricted in working out military and political cooperation with the Chinese Communists.

Does that not carry with it, implicit in it, the thought that the working out of military and political cooperation with the Chinese Communists was one of our objectives that it was important to us?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, it does.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that true?

General WEDEMEYER. Have you been here all morning?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir, and I heard your previous testimony, but I am attempting to get the answer to this.

General WEDEMEYER. I will be glad again to say it. The contribution made by the Communists was very limited militarily, and economic assistance would be nil.

Now, if the theater commander had been directed to assist the Chinese Communists by giving them equipment and advisers it would have been a very difficult logistical job for me to get it way up there by air. I had no other way of getting it up there. Just sending 15 tons of medical supplies, I indicated to you, impinged upon my little war effort in the southeastern part of China.

Mr. SOURWINE. But that difficulty was not caused by the fact that we were supporting the Chiang Kai-shek government, was it? That logistic difficulty you speak of was a logistic problem.

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, it was, because I could not put my planes in operation in logistical support in southeast China and concurrently up to the north. So, in a way, it did militate against supporting the Communists. If I had been directed to support the Communists in lieu of the Nationalists, I would have carried out my orders, and I would have gotten supplies up there, but at much greater difficulty, because of the distance.

Now, may I explain to you, it may not be apparent to you right away, but intratheater distribution, within the theater, was a real problem, because I had to bring the fuel to operate the planes over the hump. But when we captured Bhamo and Mytchinya I had a staging area so my planes could hop over the short hop and unload and go back without refueling in my theater, so I kept the gasoline they brought. Once I started to distribute in China it was a real problem because I was burning up gasoline at long distances.

Mr. SOURWINE. What I was attempting to get at is whether there was some outstanding advantage to us to be gained through military and political cooperation with the Chinese Communists, which we were losing at that time. In your opinion was there such an advantage?

General WEDEMEYER. No, I don't think there was an outstanding advantage to be gained.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is the point.

General WEDEMEYER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. There was another item in which your own opinion is at variance with the opinion implicit in this statement?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. The final comment I want to ask you for, sir, is on this, and this says [reading]:

A coalition Chinese Government in which the Communists find a satisfactory place is the solution of this impassé most desirable to us. It provides our greatest assurance of a strong united, democratic, independent, and friendly China.

And in view of the statements already made by Mr. Davies, in one of these reports and in other testimony here with regard to what would have happened in the event there had been a coalition government, I would like to ask you, sir, Would a coalition Chinese Government in which the Communists found a satisfactory place have provided us with assurance of either a democratic or an independent or a friendly China?

General WEDEMEYER. No. For many reasons, in my judgment, it would not have provided a cooperative, friendly China. I indicated earlier, sir, that in my judgment the Chinese Communists were determined to take over all the power.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

General WEDEMEYER. And that they were working under the aegis of the Kremlin power whose avowed purpose is to destroy your country and mine. And it is just inconsistent; we are being naive if we consider for a moment that we could generate a friendly spirit among the Chinese as long as the Communists are influencing them with their sinister propaganda. We just cannot do it. And they are most vulnerable to that propaganda because they are illiterate and they are capable of intimidations that the Communists so skillfully handle.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does it not then become apparent, General, that not only is that passage not realistic, but that in the space of a dozen lines it has advanced a half dozen propositions, all of which are unsound and untenable?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. For example, one other point that you could develop is the Chinese are not ready for a democratic government. Democracy, as I understand it, is predicated upon an informed electorate. So that as long as you have 80 percent of the population illiterate it is impractical to have a true democracy there There are a lot of things that are just inconsistent, in my judgment.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is as far as I wanted to develop that point, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. That document therefore may be introduced into the record, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 251" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 251

[From the Department of State publication, Far Eastern Series, released August 1949]

UNITED STATES RELATIONS WITH CHINA

MEMORANDA BY FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS IN CHINA, 1943–45

June 24, 1943 (Davies)

Chinese Communist policy appears to have followed the Comintern line. In its initial expression the policy adhered to the program of world revolution.

With the Comintern's abandonment of this program, the Chinese Communists embraced in 1935, in compliance with Moscow directives, the policy of the united front.

The new line, so far as it applied to Asia, was in all probability prompted by the Kremlin's realistic appraisal of the Soviet Union's position in the Far East. Russia was threatened by Japan. The Japanese Army had with its Manchurian adventure apparently decided upon a policy of continental expansion. Confronted by a strong Russian Army in eastern Siberia, the Japanese seemed to be intent upon outflanking the Russians through China. China could not be expected to offer strong resistance to Japanese expansion so long as it was torn by internal dissension. It was therefore evident that China should become unified and actively resist Japanese pressure westward.

As the Chinese Communists moved away from world revolution to nationalism they also moved in the direction of more moderate internal political and economic policy. Whether these other moves were in compliance with Comintern dictates is less material than that they were historically and evolutionarily sound.

The trend toward nationalism is believed to be strongest among the troops and guerrillas who have been fighting the national enemy. Although we have no accurate information on the subject, it is suspected that the political leaders of the party retain their pro-Russian orientation and that they are, notwithstanding the dissolution of the Comintern, likely to be susceptible to Moscow direction. This probable schism within the party may prove at some later date to be of major importance (p. 565).

November 7, 1944 (Davies)

The Chinese Communists are so strong between the Great Wall and the Yangtze that they can now look forward to the postwar control of at least north China. They may also continue to hold not only those parts of the Yangtze Valley which they now dominate but also new areas in central and south China. The Communists have fallen heir to these new areas by a process, which has been operating for 7 years, whereby Chiang Kai-shek loses his cities and principal lines of communication to the Japanese and the countryside to the Communists.

The Communists have survived 10 years of civil war and 7 years of Japanese offensives. They have survived not only more sustained enemy pressure than the Chinese Central Government forces have been subjected to, but also a severe blockade imposed by Chiang.

They have survived and they have grown. Communist growth since 1937 has been almost geometric in progression. From control of some 100,000 square kilometers with a population of one million and a half they have expanded to about 850,000 square kilometers with a population of approximately 90 million. And they will continue to grow.

The reason for this phenomenal vitality and strength is simple and fundamental. It is a mass support, mass participation. The Communist governments and armies are the first governments and armies in modern Chinese history to have positive and widespread popular support. They have this support because the governments and armies are genuinely of the people (pp. 566–567).

January 4, 1945 (Davies)

The current situation in China must afford the Kremlin a certain sardonic satisfaction.

The Russians see the anti-Soviet government of Chiang Kai-shek decaying militarily, politically, and economically. They observe the Chinese Communists consolidating in north China, expanding southward in the wake of Chiang's military debacles and now preparing for the formal establishment of a separatist administration.

It is equally evident to the Russians that the Chinese Communists will not in the meantime be idle. The Communists have amply demonstrated a capacity for independent, dynamic growth. However Marshal Stalin may describe the Chinese Communists to his American visitors, he can scarcely be unaware of the fact that the Communists are a considerably more stalwart and self-sufficient force than any European underground or partisan movement (p. 567).

June 24, 1943 (Davies)

Basis for conflict: The Kuomintang and Chiang Kai-shek recognize that the Communists, with the popular support which they enjoy and their reputation for administrative reform and honesty, represent a challenge to the Central Government and its spoils system. The Generalissimo cannot admit the seemingly innocent demands of the Communists that their party be legalized and democratic processes be put into practice. To do so would probably mean the abdication of the Kuomintang and the provincial satraps.

The Communists, on the other hand, dare not accept the Central Government's invitation that they disband their armies and be absorbed in the national body politic. To do so would be to invite extinction.

This impasse will probably be resolved, American and other foreign observers in Chungking agree, by an attempt by the Central Government to liquidate the Communists. This action may be expected to precipitate a civil war from which one of the two contending factions will emerge dominant. * * *

Chiang Kai-shek and his Kuomintang lieutenants fully realize the risks of an attack on the Communists. This may explain the reported statements of high officials in Chungking that they must prepare not only for the coming civil war but also for the coming war with Russia. Chiang and his Central Government recognize that they cannot defeat the Communists and the Soviet Union without foreign aid. Such aid would naturally be sought from the United States and possibly Great Britain.

* * * We may anticipate that Chiang Kai-shek will exert every effort and resort to every stratagem to involve us in active support of the Central Government. We will probably be told that if fresh American aid is not forthcoming, all of China and eventually all of Asia will be swept by communism. It will be difficult for us to resist such appeals, especially in view of our moral commitments to continued assistance to China during the postwar period.

It is therefore not inconceivable that, should Chiang attempt to liquidate the Communists, we would find ourselves entangled not only in a civil war in China but also drawn into conflict with the Soviet Union (p. 571).

December 9, 1944 (Davies)

* * * The Generalissimo realizes that if he accedes to the Communist terms for a coalition government, they will sooner or later dispossess him and his Kuomintang of power. He will therefore not, unless driven to an extremity, form a genuine coalition government. He will seek to retain his present government, passively wait out the war and conserve his strength, knowing that the Communist issue must eventually be joined.

The Communist, on their part, have no interest in reaching an agreement with the Generalissimo short of a genuine coalition government. They recognize that Chiang's position is crumbling, that they may before long receive a substantial Russian support and that if they have patience they will succeed to authority in at least north China * * * (p. 572).

November 15, 1944 (Davies)

We should not now abandon Chiang Kai-shek. To do so at this juncture would be to lose more than we could gain. We must for the time being continue recognition of Chiang's government.

But we must be realistic. We must not indefinitely underwrite a politically bankrupt regime. And, if the Russians are going to enter the Pacific war, we must make a determined effort to capture politically the Chinese Communists rather than allow them to go by default wholly to the Russians. Furthermore, we must fully understand that by reason of our recognition of the Chiang Kai-shek government as now constituted we are committed to a steadily decaying regime and severely restricted in working out military and political cooperation with the Chinese Communists.

A coalition Chinese Government in which the Communists find a satisfactory place is the solution of this impasse most desirable to us. It provides our greatest assurance of a strong, united, democratic, independent, and friendly China—our basic strategic aim in Asia and the Pacific. If Chiang and the Communists reach a mutually satisfactory agreement, there will have been achieved from our point of view the most desirable possible solution. If Chiang and the Communists are irreconcilable, then we shall have to decide which faction we are going to support.

In seeking to determine which faction we should support we must keep in mind these basic considerations: Power in China is on the verge of shifting from Chiang to the Communists.

If the Russians enter North China and Manchuria, we obviously cannot hope to win the Communists entirely over to us, but we can through control of supplies and postwar aid expect to exert considerable influence in the direction of Chinese nationalism and independence from Soviet control (p. 574).

December 12, 1944 (Davies)

The negotiations looking to an agreement between the Generalissimo and the Chinese Communists have failed. It is not impossible, however, that one or the other side may in the near future revive the negotiations with a new proposal.

So long as the deadlock exists, or new negotiations drag on, it is reasonable to assume that the Generalissimo will continue to refuse us permission to exploit militarily the Chinese Communist position extending into the geographical center of Japan's inner zone. With the war against Japan proving so costly to us, we can ill afford to continue denying ourselves positive assistance and strategically valuable positions.

It is time that we unequivecally told Chiang Kai-shek that we will work with and, within our discretion, supply whatever Chinese forces we believe can contribute most to the war again Japan. We should tell him that we will not work with or supply any Chinese unit, whether General Government, Provincial or Communist, which shows any inclination toward precipitating civil conflict. We should tell him that we propose to keep him as head of the recognized government, informed of what supplies we give to the various Chinese forces.

It is time that we make it clear to Chiang Kai-shek that we expect the Chinese to settle their own political differences; that we refuse to become further involved in and party to Chinese domestic political disputes. We greatly hope and desire that China will emerge from this war unified, democratic, independent and strong. We feel that this goal is to be achieved most expeditiously and with the least possible expenditure of Chinese and American blood and treasure if the United States bends its efforts in China primarily toward working with and assisting whatever elements can contribute most to the speedy defeat of Japan (p. 574).

Mr. MORRIS. We have some other reports here that I would like to get your advice on as to what we should do with them, Mr. Chairman. There are four reports here, and I believe they are all reports by Mr. Service, are they not, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you take those into the record, Senator? They are amplifications of the same theme that we have been developing. Do you think we should go into them in detail?

The CHAIRMAN. No. But I want to lay the foundation for them. The foundation is the same as those that we have already inserted in the record?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you tell us what they are?

Mr. MANDEL. They deal with the theme developed by Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us where they are from.

Mr. MANDEL. They are all from the transcript of the testimony before the State Department Loyalty Security Board in the case of John S. Service.

Senator FERGUSON. Have they all been published in the white paper?

Mr. MANDEL. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that they become at least part of this official record.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not see any reason, if they are taken from an official record made in the State Department, that they should not be admissible.

Senator FERGUSON. And they should become part of this record.

Senator JENNER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be admitted.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 252, 253, 254, and 255," and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 252

[From the Department of State publication, Far Eastern Series, released August 1949]

UNITED STATES RELATIONS WITH CHINA

MEMORANDA BY FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS IN CHINA, 1943–45

October 9, 1944 (Service)

Reports of two American officers, several correspondents and twenty-odd foreign travelers regarding conditions in the areas of North China under Communist control are in striking agreement. This unanimity, based on actual observation, is significant. It forces us to accept certain facts, and to draw from those facts an important conclusion.

The Japanese are being actively opposed—in spite of the constant warfare and cruel retaliation this imposes on the population. This opposition is gaining in strength. The Japanese can temporarily crush it in a limited area by the concentration of overwhelming force. But it is impossible for them to do this simultaneously over the huge territory the Communists now influence.

This opposition is possible and successful because it is total guerrilla warfare aggressively waged by a totally mobilized population. In this total mobilization the regular forces of the Communists, though leaders and organizers, have become subordinate to the vastly more numerous forces of the people themselves. They exist because the people permit, support, and wholeheartedly fight with them. There is complete solidarity of army and people.

This total mobilization is based upon and has been made possible by what amounts to an economic, political, and social revolution. This revolution has been moderate and democratic. It has improved the economic condition of the peasants by rent and interest reduction, tax reform and good government. It has given them democratic self-government, political consciousness and a sense of their rights. It has freed them from feudalistic bonds and given them self-respect, self-reliance and a strong feeling of cooperative group interest. The common people, for the first time, have been given something to fight for.

The Japanese are being fought now not merely because they are foreign invaders but because they deny this revolution. The people will continue to fight any government which limits or deprives them of these newly won gains (p. 566).

June 20, 1944 (Service)

B. The position of the Kuomintang and the Generalissimo is weaker than it has been for the past 10 years.

China faces economic collapse. This is causing disintegration of the army and the Government's administrative apparatus. It is one of the chief causes of growing political unrest. The Generalissimo is losing the support of a China which, by unity in the face of violent aggression, found a new and unexpected strength during the first 2 years of the war with Japan. Internal weaknesses are becoming accentuated and there is taking place a reversal of the process of unification.

1. Morale is low and discouragement widespread. There is a general feeling of hopelessness.

2. The authority of the Central Government is weakening in the areas away from the larger cities. Government mandates and measures of control cannot be enforced and remain ineffective. It is becoming difficult for the Government to collect enough food for its huge army and bureaucracy.

3. The governmental and military structure is being permeated and demoralized from top to bottom by corruption, unprecedented in scale and openness.

4. The intellectual and salaried classes, who have suffered the most heavily from inflation, are in danger of liquidation. The academic groups suffer not only the attrition and demoralization of economic stress; the weight of years of political control and repression is robbing them of the intellectual vigor and leadership they once had.

5. Peasant resentment of the abuses of conscription, tax collection, and other arbitrary impositions has been widespread and is growing. The danger is ever-increasing that past sporadic outbreaks of banditry and agrarian unrest may increase in scale and find political motivation.

6. The provincial groups are making common cause with one another and with other dissident groups, and are actively consolidating their position. Their continuing strength in the face of the growing weakness of the Central Government is forcing new measures of political appeasement in their favor.

7. Unrest within the Kuomintang armies is increasing, as shown in one important instance by the "young generals conspiracy" late in 1943. On a higher plane, the war zone commanders are building up their own spheres of influence and are thus creating a new warlordism.

8. The break between the Kuomintang and the Communists not only shows no signs of being closed, but grows more critical with the passage of time: the inevitability of civil war is now generally accepted.

9. The Kuomintang is losing the respect and support of the people by its selfish policies and its refusal to heed progressive criticism. It seems unable to revivify itself with fresh blood, and its unchanging leadership shows a growing ossification and loss of a sense of reality. To combat the dissensions and cliquism within the party, which grows more rather than less acute, the leadership is turning toward the reactionary and unpopular Chen brothers cliques.

10. The Generalissimo shows a similar loss of realistic flexibility and a hardening of narrowly conservative views. His growing megalomania and his unfortunate attempts to be sage as well as leader—shown, for instance, by China's Destiny and his book on economics—have forfeited the respect of many intellectuals, who enjoy in China a position of unique influence. Criticism of his dictatorship is becoming outspoken.

In the face of the grave crisis with which it is confronted, the Kuomintang is ceasing to be the unifying and progressive force in Chinese society, the role in which it made its greatest contribution to modern China.

C. The Kuomintang is not only proving itself incapable of averting a debacle by its own initiative: on the contrary, its policies are precipitating the crisis.

Some war-weariness in China must be expected. But the policies of the Kuomintang under the impact of hyperinflation and in the presence of obvious signs of internal and external weakness must be described as bankrupt. This truth is emphasized by the failure of the Kuomintang to come to grips with the situation during the recently concluded plenary session of the Central Executive Committee.

1. On the internal political front the desire of the Kuomintang leaders to perpetuate their own power overrides all other considerations. The result is the enthronement of reaction.

The Kuomintang continues to ignore the great political drive within the country for democratic reform. The writings of the Generalissimo and the party press show that they have no real understanding of that term. Constitutionalism remains an empty promise for which the only preparation is a half-hearted attempt to establish an unpopular and undemocratic system of local self-government based on collective responsibility and given odium by Japanese utilization in Manchuria and other areas under their control.

Questions basic to the future of democracy such as the form of the constitution and the composition and election of the National Congress remain the dictation of the Kuomintang. There is no progress toward the fundamental conditions of freedom of expression and recognition of non-Kuomintang groups. Even the educational and political advantages of giving power and democratic character to the existing but impotent Peoples Political Council are ignored.

The Kuomintang shows no intention of relaxing the authoritarian controls on which its present power depends. Far from discarding or reducing the paraphernalia of a police state—the multiple and omnipresent secret police organizations, the gendarmerie, and so forth—it continues to strengthen them as its last resort for internal security.

2. On the economic front the Kuomintang is unwilling to take any effective steps to check inflation which would injure the landlord-capitalist class.

It is directly responsible for the increase of official corruption which is one of the main obstacles to any rational attempt to ameliorate the financial situation. It does nothing to stop large-scale profiteering, hoarding, and speculation—all of which are carried on by people either powerful in the party or with intimate political connections.

It fails to carry out effective mobilization of resources. Such measures of wartime control as it has promulgated have remained a dead letter or have intensified the problems they were supposedly designed to remedy, as for instance, ill-advised and poorly executed attempts at price regulation.

It passively allows both industrial and the more important handicraft production to run down, as they of course must when it is more profitable for speculators to hold raw materials than to have them go through the normal productive process.

It fails to carry out rationing except in a very limited way, or to regulate the manufacture and trade of luxury goods, many of which come from areas under Japanese control. It shows little concern that these imports are largely paid for with strategic commodities of value to the enemy.

It fails to make an effective attempt to reduce the budgetary deficit and increase revenue by tapping such resources as excess profits and incomes of landlords and merchants. It allows its tax-collecting apparatus to hog down in corruption and inefficiency, to the point that possibly not more than one-third of revenues collected reach the Government. It continues to spend huge government funds on an idle and useless party bureaucracy.

At best, it passively watches inflation gather momentum without even attempting palliative measures available to it, such as the aggressive sale of gold and foreign currency.

It refuses to attack the fundamental economic problems of China such as the growing concentration of land holdings, extortionate rents and ruinous interest rates, and the impact of inflation.

D. These apparently suicidal policies of the Kuomintang have their roots in the composition and nature of the party.

In view of the above it becomes pertinent to ask why the Kuomintang has lost its power of leadership; why it neither wishes actively to wage war against Japan itself nor to cooperate whole-heartedly with the American Army in China; and why it has ceased to be capable of unifying the country.

The answer to all these question is to be found in the present composition and nature of the party. Politically, a classical and definitive American description becomes ever more true; the Kuomintang is a congerie of conservative political cliques interested primarily in the preservation of their own power against all outsiders and in jockeying for position among themselves. Economically, the Kuomintang rests on the narrow base of the rural-gentry-landlords and militarists, the higher ranks of the Government bureaucracy, and merchant bankers having intimate connections with the Government bureaucrats. This base has actually contracted during the war. The Kuomintang no longer commands, as it once did, the unequivocal support of China's industrialists, who as a group have been much weakened economically, and hence politically, by the Japanese seizure of the coastal cities.

The relations of this description of the Kuomintang to the questions propounded above is clear.

The Kuomintang has lost its leadership because it has lost touch with and is no longer representative of a nation which, through the practical experience of the war is becoming both more politically conscious and more aware of the party's selfish shortcomings.

It cannot fight an effective war because this is impossible without greater reliance upon and support by the people. There must be a release of the national energy such as occurred during the early period of the war. Under present conditions, this can be brought about only by reform of the party and greater political democracy. What form this democracy takes is not as important as the genuine adoption of a democratic philosophy and attitude; the threat of foreign invasion is no longer enough to stimulate the Chinese people and only real reform can regain their enthusiasm. But the growth of democracy, though basic to China's continuing war effort, would, to the mind of the Kuomintang's present leaders, imperil the foundations of the party's power because it would mean that the conservative cliques would have to give up their closely guarded monopoly. Rather than do this, they prefer to see the war remain in its present state of passive inertia. Thus are they sacrificing China's national interests to their own selfish ends.

For similar reasons, the Kuomintang is unwilling to give whole-hearted cooperation to the American Army's effort in China. Full cooperation necessarily requires the broad Chinese military effort which the Kuomintang is unable to carry out or make possible. In addition, the Kuomintang fears the large scale, widespread and direct contact by Americans with the Chinese war effort will expose its own inactivity and, by example and personal contacts, be a liberalizing influence (pp. 567–570).

October 9, 1944 (Service)

Just as the Japanese Army cannot crush these militant people now, so also will Kuomintang force fail in the future. With their new arms and organization, knowledge of their own strength, and determination to keep what they have been fighting for, these people—now some 90 million and certain to be many more before the Kuomintang can reach them—will resist oppression. They are not Communists. They do not want separation or independence. But at present they regard the Kuomintang, from their own experience, as oppressors; and the Communists as their leaders and benefactors.

With this great popular base, the Communists likewise cannot be eliminated. Kuomintang attempts to do so by force must mean a complete denial of democracy. This will strengthen the ties of the Communists with the people; a Communist victory will be inevitable. * * *

From the basic fact that the Communists have built up popular support of a magnitude and depth which makes their elimination impossible, we must draw the conclusion that the Communists will have a certain and important share in China's future * * * I suggest the future conclusion that unless the Kuomintang goes as far as the Communists in political and economic reform, and otherwise proves itself able to contest this leadership of the people (none of which it yet shows signs of being willing or able to do), the Communists will be the dominant force in China within a comparatively few years (p. 572–573).

February 14, 1945 (Ludden and Service)

American policy in the Far East can have but one immediate objective: the defeat of Japan in the shortest possible time with the least expenditure of American lives. To the attainment of this objective all other considerations should be subordinate.

The attainment of this objective demands the effective mobilization of China in the war against Japan. Operating as we are in a land theater at the end of a supply line many thousands of miles in length, the human and economic resources of China increase in importance as we draw closer to Japan's inner zone of defense. Denied the effective use of these resources the attainmnt of our primary objective will be unecessarily delayed.

There is ample evidence to show that to the present Kuomintang Government the war against Japan is secondary in importance to its own preservation in power. China's military failure is due in large part to internal political disunity and the Kuomintang's desire to conserve such military force as it has for utilization in the maintenance of its political power. The intention of the Generalissimo to eliminate all political opposition, by force of arms if necessary, has not been abandoned. In the present situation in China, where power or self-preservation depend upon the possession of military force, neither the Kuomintang nor opposition groups are willing to expend their military resources against the Japanese through fear that it will then vis-à-vis other groups.

The aim of American policy as indicated clearly by official statements in the United States is the establishment of political unity in China as the indispensable preliminary to China's effective military mobilization. The execution of our policy has not contributed to the achievement of this publicly stated aim. On the contrary, it has retarded its effect because our statements and actions in China have convinced the Kuomintang Government that we will continue to support it and it alone. The Kuomintang Government believes that it will receive an increasing flow of American military and related supplies which, if past experience is any guide, it will commit against the enemy only with great reluctance, if at all.

We cannot hope for any improvement in this situation unless we understand the objectives of the Kuomintang Government and throw our considerable influence upon it in the direction of internal unity. We should be convinced by this time that the effort to solve the Kuomintang-Communist differences by diplomatic means has failed; * * *.

At present there exists in China a situation closely paralleling that which existed in Yugoslavia prior to Prime Minister Churchill's declaration of support for Marshal Tito. That statement was as follows:

"The sanest and safest course for us to follow is to judge all parties and factions dispassionately by the test of their readiness to fight the Germans and thus lighten the burden of Allied troops. This is not a time for ideological preferences for one side or the other."

A similar public statement issued by the Commander in Chief with regard to China would not mean the withdrawal of recognition or the cessation of military aid to the Central Government; that would be both unnecessary and unwise. It would serve notice, however, of our preparation to make use of all available means to achieve our primary objective. It would supply for all Chinese a firm rallying point which has thus far been lacking. The internal effect in China would be so profound that the generalissimo would be forced to make concessions of power and permit united-front coalition. The present opposition groups, no longer under the prime necessity of safeguarding themselves, would be won wholeheartedly to our side and we would have in China, for the first time, a united ally (pp. 575–576).

EXHIBIT No. 253

YENAN, May 1, 1945.

CONGRESS OF COMMUNIST PARTY MEETS

YENAN, May 1.—The Seventh National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party was held in Yenan in the latter part of April. This is one of the most important events in the history of modern China.

"The task of this Congress is to rally people throughout China on the eve of the counteroffensive to save the nation from the crisis which is the consequence of the erroneous policy of the Kuomintang Government, and so thoroughly to defeat and annihilate the Japanese aggressors and set up an independent, free, democratic, unified, strong and prosperous new China.

"There are 752 delegates representing 1,210,000 members of the Chinese Communist Party. Of these 544 are delegates and 208 are probationary delegates.

"Mao Tse-tung, Chu Teh, Li Shao-Chi, Chou En-lai, Jen Pi-shih, Lin Po-hu, Pen Tah-huai, Kang Sheng, Chen Yun, Chen Yi, Ho Lung, Hsu Hsiang-chien, Kao Kang, Lo Fu, and Peng Chen were elected to the presidium of the congress. Jen Pi-shih was elected secretary and Li Fu-chen assistant secretary of the congress.

"AGENDA ITEMS

"There were four items on the agenda: The political report by Comrade Chu Teh, the report on redrafting of the party statutes by Comrade Li Shao-chi, and the election of members of the central committee of the Chinese Communist Party.

"Since its foundation in 1921 the Chinese Communist Party held six national congresses. These congresses were held in July 1921, May 1922, June 1923, January 1925, April 1927, and July 1928. Because of the long period of war and struggle, 17 years have elapsed before the present seventh congress could be convened.

"At the convention of the present congress, the power of the Chinese Communist Party, unity and solidarity within the party, and the party's prestige among the people of China are higher than at any period in the past.

"TOTAL STRENGTH

"At present the Chinese Communist Party not only has over 1,200,000 members but also has under its leadership the Eighth Route, New Fourth, and other anti-Japanese regular armies, numbering 110,000 strong, over 2,200,000 People's Volunteer Corps, and 19 liberated areas distributed over 19 provinces in Manchuria, north, central, and south China, with a total population of 95,500,000.

"Because the war of resistance in the liberated areas is rapidly developing, these figures are steadily increasing. Therefore, the Chinese Communist Party and liberated areas under its leadership have really become the center of gravity of the Chinese people in the anti-Japanese "national salvation movement" and struggle for liberation. The present congress will undoubtely have an extremely important influence on the future development of the war of resistance and internal politics of China." (Yenan, in English Morse to North America, May 1, 1945, 9:30 a. m. e. w. t.)

"Coalition Government Needed," Says Mao

"Yenan, May 1.—On the 'coalition government' was the title of the political report given by Chairman Mao Tze-tung, leader of the Chinese Communist Party, to the Seventh Congress of the Chinese Communist Party.

"Mao Tze-tung pointed out that the 'unification of all parties and groups and nonparty representatives, to form a provisional democratic coalition government so as to carry out democratic reform to overcome the present crisis, mobilize and unify the national forces of the war or resistance to effectively collaborate with the Allies in fighting and defeating the Japanese aggressor, and to secure the thorough liberation of the Chinese, are the basic demands of the Chinese people at present.'

"NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

"China needs a coalition government, said Mao Tze-tung, not only during the war but also after the war. 'After the victory of the war of resistance, the National Assembly, based on a broad, democratic foundation, should be called to form a regular democratic government of a similar coalition nature embracing more broadly all parties and groups and nonparty representatives. This government will lead the liberated people of the entire nation to build up an independent, free, unified, prosperous, and strong new country. After China has had a democratic elective system, the Government should be a coalition working on the basis of a commonly recognized new democratic program, no matter whether the Communist Party is the majority or minority party in the National Assembly.'

"IMMEDIATE FORMATION

"Mao Tze-tung repeatedly urged the necessity of immediate formation of a coalition government. One party, dictatorship, dictatorship of the antipopulation group within the Kuomintang, said Mao Tze-tung, is not only 'a fundamental obstacle to the mobilization and unification of the strength of the Chinese people in the war of resistance, it is also the (colossal) embryo of the civil war.' "

MAO REVEALS POSTWAR PLAN FOR CHINA

The following is Yenan's continuation in English Morse of the political report given by Chairman Mao Tze-tung to the Seventh Congress of the Chinese Communist Party held in Yenan, the first part of which was reported under the heading "Coalition Government Needed, Says Mao."

"In his report, Mao Tze-tung brought forward a program for the defeat of the Japanese aggressors and the establishment of a new China. This program is divided into two sections—namely, general and specific—and furnishes the answers to many important wartime and postwar problems. Concerning the thorough annihilation of the Japanese aggressors and forbidding a halfway compromise, Mao Tze-tung called the people's attention to the secret understandings and dealings between the pro-Japanese elements in the Kuomintang government and the Japanese secret emissaries.

"NO COMPROMISE

"He said: 'The Chinese people should demand that the Kuomintang government must thoroughly annihilate the Japanese aggressors and forbid any compromise. At the same time the Chinese people should expand the Eighth Route and New Fourth Armies and other People's Armies. Moreover, wherever the enemy has penetrated, the Chinese people should universally and voluntarily develop anti-Japanese armed forces ready to cooperate directly with our allies in the fighting.'

"To reactionary elements who want to steal the sacred right of armed resistance to the Japanese aggressors from them, "The Chinese people should in self-defense resolutely deal a counterblow after remonstrances have proved futile."

PEOPLE'S FREEDOM

"With regard to the people's freedom, Mao Tze-tung pointed out that in their struggle for freedom at the present the first and main effort of the Chinese people is directed against the Japanese aggressor. But the Kuomintang government has deprived the people of their freedom and bound them hand and foot, rendering them unable to oppose the Japanese aggressors.

"Mao said that 'The people in China's liberated areas have gained their freedom, and the people in other areas are able to and should gain such freedom. The more the Chinese people have gained, the greater is the organized democratic force, and then there is the possibility of a coalition government.'

"UNIFICATION OF PEOPLE

"With regard to the unification of the people, Mao pointed out that 'divided China must be changed into unified China.' But what Chinese people want is not 'absolutist unification by dictators' but the 'democratic unification by the people. The movement of the Chinese people striving for freedom, democracy, and a coalition government is actually a movement for unification.'

"With regard to the People's Armies, Mao pointed out that without any army which stands on the side of the people a coalition government cannot be formed. The Eighth Route and New Fourth Armies are wholeheartedly on the side of the people. Mao also pointed out that many Kuomintang troops which frequently suffered [words missing] oppress the people and discriminate against other troops should be reformed. Mao Tze-tung declared: 'As soon as the new democratic coalition government and the united high command is formed in China, troops in the Chinese liberated areas will at once be handed over to them. But all Kuomintang troops must also be handed over to them at the same time.

"PRIVATE CAPITALISM

"Mao Tze-tung declared that the Chinese Communist Party in the entire period [words missing]. The new democracy approves the development of private capitalism and ownership of private property, but this must follow the theory propounded by Dr. Sun Yat-sen; namely, to carry out the principle of 'tillers own their land' and to guarantee that private capitalism 'cannot control the life of the people in the country.'

"With regard to the land problem, Mao pointed out that in the liberated areas the reduction of rent and interest has been carried out so that the landlords and peasants jointly take part in the war of resistance.

"Mao also declared: 'If there is no particular hindrance, we shall continue to carry out this policy after the war. First of all, the reduction of rent and interest will be carried out throughout the country and then [words missing]. Then appropriate means will be found to arrive systematically at the [words missing] "tillers own their land."' [Next paragraph garbled in transmission—Ed.]

"On the one hand 'workers' interest will be 'protected', while on the other hand 'guaranties are given to [words missing] profits from proper commercial [enterprise—Ed.].' He declared that in this new democratic state 'facilities will certainly be [words missing] widespread [development—Ed.] of a private capitalistic economy' apart from the economy of state-owned business and cooperatives.

"Mao Tze-tung welcomes foreign investments in China. He said that the industrialization of China 'will [afford—Ed.] a very great amount of foreign investments.'

"CULTURE AND EDUCATION

"'With regard to culture and education, Mao Tze-tung pointed out [words missing] respecting the intelligentsia who serve the people and have made [words missing]. He also pointed out the various tasks such as the liquidation of illiteracy, and the popularization of public hygiene. He further pointed out that the ancient Chinese and foreign culture should be 'absorbed critically.'

"NATIONAL MINORITIES

"Concerning the national minorities problem, Mao Tze-tung pointed out that 'national minorities should be helped [asterisks supplied by Yenan—Ed.] to attain liberation and development, politically, economically, and culturally. Their language, literature, customs, habits, and religious faith should be respected.'

"With regard to the problem of religion, Mao Tze-tung pointed out that 'according to the principle of freedom of belief, China's liberated areas will allow evey school of religion to exist. Protestants, Catholics, Mohammedans, Buddhists, and other religious beliefs, provided they obey the Government laws and decrees, will be protected by the Government.'

"Mao Tze-tung in his report dwelt in detail on 'diplomatic problems' [words missing] principle of the Chinese Communist Party in diplomatic policy, declared Mao Tze-tung, 'is the establishment and consolidation of the diplomatic relations with other countries, the solution of mutually related wartime and postwar problems, such as the cooperation in fighting, peace conference, commercial intercourse, investments, [words missing] of thorough extermination of the Japanese aggressors, upholding of world peace [words missing] for equal and independent status of the nation [words missing] interests and friendship of nations and peoples.'

"INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES

"Also the Atlantic Charter and resolutions was [words missing] Moscow, Cairo, Tehran, and Crimea international conferences, Mao Tze-tung said, that the Chinese Communist Party [words missing] the Crimea Conference on this question. The Chinese Communist Party 'welcomes the San Francisco United Nations Conference and has sent its representative to join the Chinese delegation in order to express the will of the Chinese people.'

"Mao Tze-tung opined that the Crimea line accords [words missing] with the policy held by the Chinese Communist Party in the settlement of the Chinese and oriental question. He is of the opinion that a policy similar to that of [words missing] be adopted in the Orient and China."

4-POINT PROGRAM

"He said that '(1) The Japanese aggressors must be ultimately defeated and the Japanese Fascist military and the causes producing them thoroughly exterminated. There should be on halfway compromise: (2) [words missing] the vestige of fascism in China must be exterminated without allowing the least trace to remain; (3) domestic peace must be established in China and civil war not allowed to recur; (4) the Kuomintang dictatorship [words missing] must be abolished [words missing.] After its abolition it should at first be supplanted by a provisional democratic coalition government fully supported by the whole nation. [Words missing] territories having been recovered, the regular coalition government executing the popular will should be set up through free and unrestricted elections."

SOVIET UNION

"Speaking of the Sino-Soviet diplomatic relations, '[We are of the opinion—Ed.] that the Kuomintang Government must stop its attitude of enmity toward the Soviet Union and swiftly improve [Sino—Ed.] Soviet diplomatic relations.' 'On behalf of the Chinese people, Mao Tze-tung expressed [words missing] which has always been rendered to China by the Soviet Government and people in China's war [words missing] liberated and expressed welcome of Marshal Stalin's speech [words missing] and recent denouncement of the Soviet-Japanese neutrality pact by the Soviet Union.'

"Mao Tze-tung added: 'We believe that without the participation of the Soviet Union it is not possible to reach a final and thorough settlement of the Pacific question.' "

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

"Regarding Sino-Anglo and Sino-American diplomatic relations, Mao Tze-tung said: 'The great efforts made by the Great Powers, American and Great Britain, especially the former, in the common cause of fighting the Japanese aggressors and the sympathy and aid rendered by their governments and peoples to China, deserve our thanks. [Words missing] will or Chinese people and thereby injure and lose the friendship of the Chinese people. If any foreign government helps China's reactionary group to oppose the democratic cause of the Chinese people, a gross mistake will have been committed.'

"Speaking of the abrogation of the unequal treaties with China [words missing], Mao Tze-tung said that the Chinese people welcome [words missing] Chinese people on a footing of equality. But he pointed out, China 'definitely cannot rely on an [words missing] equality [words missing] being given by the good will of foreign governments and peoples. [Words missing] and actual footing of equality must in the main rely on the efforts of the Chinese people to build up politically, economically, and culturally a new democratic country, which is independent, free, democratic, unified, prosperous, and strong. China assuredly cannot gain real independence and equality according to the policy of the Kuomintang government at present in force?"

FAR EASTERN COUNTRIES

"Mao Tze-tung advocated the following policies to be adopted with regard to the countries in the Far East: After the [words missing] unconditional surrender of the Japanese aggressors, all democratic [words missing] of the Japanese people should be aided to establish a democratic regime of the Japanese people. Without such a democratic regime of the Japanese people, thorough extermination of the Japanese [words missing] would not be possible to guarantee peace in the Pacific [asterisks supplied by Yenan—Ed.] 'The decision of the Cairo Conference to grant independence to Korea is correct, and the Chinese people should so help the Korean people to attain liberation [words missing].' With regard to Thailand, she 'should be dealt with according to the measures of dealing with a Fascist turncoat'." (Yenan, in English Morse to North America, May 2, 1945.)

EXHIBIT No. 254

JUNE 1944.

THE SITUATION IN CHINA AND SUGGESTIONS REGARDING AMERICAN POLICY

I. The situation in China is rapidly becoming critical

A. The Japanese strategy in China, which has been as much political as military, has so far been eminently successful.

Japan has had the choice of two alternatives.

1. It could beat China to its knees. But this would have required large-scale military operations and a large and continuing army occupation. And there was the danger that it might have driven the Kuomintang to carry out a real mobilization of the people, thus making possible effective resistance and perhaps rendering the Japanese task as long and costly as it has been in north China.

2. Or Japan could maintain just enough pressure on China to cause slow strangulation. Based on the astute use of puppets, the understanding of the continuing struggle for power within China (including the Kuomintang-Communist conflict), and the knowledge that Chiang expects to have the war won for him outside of China by his allies, this policy had the advantage that as long as the Kuomintang leaders saw a chance for survival they would not take the steps necessary to energize an effective war. It would thus remove any active or immediate threat to Japan's flank, and permit consolidation and gradual extension of the important Japanese-held bases in China. Finally, it would permit the accomplishment of these aims at a relatively small cost.

Japan chose the second alternative, accepting the gamble that the Kuomintang would behave exactly as it has. Like many other Japanese gambles, it has so far proved to have been nicely calculated. China is dying a lingering death by slow strangulation. China does not now constitute any threat to Japan. And China cannot, if the present situation continues, successfully resist a determined Japanese drive to seize our offensive bases in east China.

B. The position of the Kuomintang and the Generalissimo is weaker than it has been for the past 10 years.

China faces economic collapse. This is causing disintegration of the army and the Government's administrative apparatus. It is one of the chief causes of growing political unrest. The Generalissimo is losing the support of a China which, by unity in the face of violent aggression, found a new and unexpected strength during the first 2 years of the war with Japan. Internal weaknesses are becoming accentuated, and there is taking place a reversal of the process of unification.

1. Morale is low and discouragement widespread. There is general feeling of hopelessness.

2. The authority of the Central Government is weakening in the areas away from the larger cities, and Government mandates and measures of control cannot be enforced and remain ineffective. It is becoming difficult for the Government to collect enough food for its huge army and bureaucracy.

3. The governmental and military structure is being permeated and demoralized from top to bottom by corruption, unprecedented in scale and openness.

4. The intellectual and salaried classes, who have suffered the most heavily from inflation, are in danger of liquidation. The academic groups suffer not only the attrition and demoralization of economic stress; the weight of years of political control and repression is robbing them of the intellectual vigor and leadership they once had.

5. Peasant resentment of the abuses of conscription, tax collection, and other arbitrary impositions has been widespread and is growing. The danger is ever increasing that past sporadic outbreaks of banditry and agrarian unrest may increase in scale and find political motivation.

6. The Provincial groups, are making common cause with one another and with other dissident groups ,and are actively consolidating their positions. Their continuing strength in the face of the growing weakness of the Central Government is forcing new measures of political appeasement in their favor.

7. Unrest within the Kuomintang Armies is increasing, as shown in one important instance by the "young generals' conspiracy" late in 1943. On a higher plane the war-zone commanders are building up their own spheres of influence and are thus creating a "new warlordism."

8. The break between the Kuomintang and the Communists not only shows no signs of being closed but grows more critical with the passage of time; the inevitability of civil war is now generally accepted.

9. The Kuomintang is losing the respect and support of the people by its selfish policies and its refusal to heed progressive criticism. It seems unable to revivify itself with fresh blood, and its unchanging leadership shows a growing ossification and loss of a sense of reality. To combat the dissension and cliquism within the party, which grow more rather than less acute, the leadership is turning toward the reactionary and unpopular Chen brothers' clique.

10. The Generalissimo shows a similar loss of realistic flexibility and a hardening of narrowly conservative views. His growing megalomania and his unfortunate attempts to be "sage" as well as leader—shown, for instance, by "China's Destiny" and his book on economics—have forfeited the respect of many intellectuals, who enjoy in China a position of unique influence. Criticism of his dictatorship is becoming more outspoken.

These symptoms of deterioration and internal stress have been increased by the defeat in Honan and will be further accelerated if, as seems likely, the Japanese succeed in partially or wholly depriving the Central Government of east China south of the Yangtze.

In the face of the grave crisis with which it is confronted, the Kuomintang is ceasing to be the unifying and progressive force in Chinese security, the role in which it made its greatest contribution to modern China.

C. The Kuomintang is not only proving itself incapable of averting a debacle by its own initiatives: on the contrary, its policies are precipitating the crisis.

Some war-weariness in China must be expected. But the policies of the Kuomintang under the impact of hyperinflation and to the presence of obvious signs of internal and external weakness must be described as bankrupt. This truth is emphasized by the failure of the Kuomintang to come to grips with the situation during the recently concluded plenary session of the central executive committee.

1. On the internal political front the desire of the Kuomintang leaders to perpetuate their own power overrides all other considerations.

The result is the enthronement of reaction.

The Kuomintang continues to ignore the great political drive within the country for democratic reform. The writings of the Generalissimo and the party press show that they have no real understanding of that term. Constitutionalism remains an empty promise for which the only "preparation" is a half-hearted attempt to establish an unpopular and undemocratic system of local self-government based on collective responsibility and given odium by Japanese utilization in Manchuria and other areas under their control.

Questions basic to the future of democracy such as the form of the Constitution and the composition and election of the National Congress remain the dictation of the Kuomintang. There is no progress toward the fundamental conditions of freedom of expression and recognition of non-Kuomintang groups. Even the educational and political advantages of giving power and democratic character to the existing but important People's Political Council are ignored.

On the contrary, the trend is still in the other direction. Through such means as compulsory political training for Government posts, emphasis on the political nature of the army, through control, and increasing identification of the party and Government, the Kuomintang intensifies its drive for "Ein Volk, ein Reich, ein Führer," even though such a policy in China is inevitably doomed to failure.

The Kuomintang shows no intention of relaxing the autoritarian controls on which its present power depends. Far from discarding or reducing the paraphernalia of a police state—the multiple and omnipresent secret-police organizations, the gendarmerie, and so forth—it continues to strengthen them as its last resort for internal security. (For the reenforcement of the most important of these German-inspired and Gestapo-like organizations we must, unfortunately, bear some responsibility.)

Obsessed by the growing and potential threat of the Communists, who it fears may attract the popular support its own nature makes impossible, the Kuomintang, despite the pretext—to meet foreign and Chinese criticism—of conducting negotiations with the Communists, continues to adhere to policies and plans which can only result in civil war. In so doing, it shows itself blind to the facts: that its internal political and military situation is so weak that success without outside assistance is most problematic, that such a civil war would hasten the process of distintegration and the spread of chaos; that it would prevent the prosecution of any effective war against Japan; and that the only parties to benefit would be Japan immediately and Russia eventually. Preparations for this civil war include an alliance with the present Chinese puppets which augur ill for future unity and democracy.

2. On the economic front the Kuomintang is unwilling to take any effective steps to check inflation which would injure the landlord-capitalist class.

It is directly responsible for the increase of official corruption, which is one of the main obstacles to any rational attempt to ameliorate the financial situation. It does nothing to stop large-scale profiteering, hoarding, and speculation, all of which are carried on by people either powerful in the party or with intimate political connections.

It fails to carry out effective mobilization of resources. Such measures of wartime control as it has promulgated have remained a dead letter or have intensified the problems they were supposedly designed to remedy, as, for instance, ill-advised and poorly executed attempts at price regulations.

It passively allows both industrial and the more important handicraft production to run down, as they, of course, must when it is more profitable for speculators to hold raw materials than to have them go through the normal productive process.

It fails to carry out rationing except in a very limited way, or to regulate the manufacture and trade in luxury goods, many of which come from areas under Japanese control. It shows little concern that these imports are largely paid for with strategic commodities of value to the enemy.

It fails to make an effective attempt to reduce the budgetary deficit and increases revenue by tapping such resources as excess profits and incomes of landlords and merchants. It allows its tax-collecting apparatus to bog down in corruption and inefficiency to the point that possibly not more than one-third of revenues collected reach the Government. It continues to spend huge Government funds on an idle and useless party bureaucracy.

At best, it passively watches inflation gather momentum without even attempting palliative measures available to it, such as the aggressive sale of gold and foreign currency.

It refuses to attack the fundamental economic problems of China, such as the growing concentration of landholdings, extortionate rents, and ruinous interest rates, and the impact of inflation.

3. On the external front the Kuomintang is showing itself inept and selfishly short-sighted by progresive estrangement of its allies.

By persistence in tactics of bargaining, bluff, and blackmail, most inappropriate to its circumstances, and its continuing failure to deal openly and frankly, and to extend whole-hearted cooperation, which its own interests demand, the Kuomintang is alienating China's most important ally, the United States. It has already alienated its other major potential ally, Soviet Russia, toward which its attitude is as irrational and short-sighted as it is toward the Communists. The latest example of this is the irresponsible circulation of the report that Soviet Russia and Japan have signed a secret military agreement permitting Japanese troop withdrawals from Manchuria.

It is allowing this situation to develop at a time when its survival is dependent as never before upon foreign support. But the Kuomintang is endangering not only itself by its rash foreign policy: There are indications that it is anxious to create friction between the United States and Great Britain and Russia. When speedy victory, and any victory at all, demands maximizing of agreements and the minimizing of frictions, such maneuvers amount to sabotage of the war effort of the United Nations.

4. On the military front the Kuomintang appears to have decided to let America win the war and to have withdrawn for all practical purposes from active participation.

Its most important present contribution is to allow us, at our own and fantastic cost, to build and use air bases in China.

It delayed, perhaps too long for success, to allow forces designated for the purpose and trained and equipped by us to take the offensive in west Yunnan, even though needed to support the American-Chinese campaign in north Burma, the purpose of which is to open a life line into China and facilitate the eventual landing on the China coast. It agreed to this action only after long months of obstruction.

It fails to make effective use of American equipment given to it, as it also failed with earlier Russian supplies. Equipment brought into China has often not been transported to the fighting fronts. In other cases it has been known to have been hoarded or diverted to nonmilitary purpose. China has displayed a dog in the manger attitude in regard to equipment consigned to China and deteriorating in India for lack of transportation. It has concealed and refused to make available to our forces hoards of supplies such as gasoline known to exist in China, even when the emergency was great and China's own interest directly served.

It has consistently refused to consolidate and efficiently administer transportation. In the past this resulted in great losses of supplies in the Japanese capture of Burma and west Yunnan; now it is crippling Chinese internal transportation on which military activity must depend.

It has allowed military cooperation to be tied up with irrelevant financial demands which can only be described as a form of blackmail. It has made these excessive demands in spite of the fact that American expenditures in China (against which there are almost no balancing Chinese payments) continually add to the large Chinese nest egg of foreign exchange, which cannot be used in China at present and thus constitutes in effect a "kitty" being hoarded for postwar use.

It has failed to implement military requisitioning laws to assist us in obtaining supplies in China and has left us at the mercy of conscienceless profiteers, some of whom have been known to have official connections. It has permitted the imposition on us of fantastic prices, made more so by a wholly unrealistic exchange rate, for articles in some cases originally supplied to China through American credits. It seemingly has ignored the fact that the more supplies that can be obtained in China, the greater the tonnage from India that can be devoted to other essential military items.

It remains uncooperative and at times obstructive in American efforts to collect vital intelligence regarding the enemy in China. This attitude is exemplified by the disappointing fruits of promised cooperation by Chinese espionage organizations (toward which we have expended great effort and large sums); by the continued obstruction, in the face of agreement, to visits by American observers to the actual fighting fronts, and by the steadfast refusal to permit any contact with the Communist areas. It apparently remains oblivious to the urgent military need, both in China and in other related theaters, for this intelligence regarding our common enemy, and it seemingly cares little for the fact that exclusion from Communist-controlled territory hampers our long-range bombing of Japan and may cost needless loss of American lives.

In its own war effort a pernicious and corrupt conscription system which works to insure the selection and retention of the unfit, since the ablest and the strongest can either evade conscription, buy their way out, or desert. It starves and maltreats most of its troops to the degree that their military effectiveness is greatly impaired and military service is regarded in the minds of the people as a sentence of death. At the same time it refuses to follow the suggestion that the army should be reduced to the size that could be adequately fed, medically cared for, trained and armed. It bases this refusal on mercenary political considerations—the concentration on the continuing struggle for power in China, and the ultimate measurement of power in terms of armies.

For the same reason it refuses to mobilize its soldiers and people for the only kind of war which China is in a position to wage effectively—a people's guerrilla war. Perhaps our entry into the war has simplified the problems of the Kuomintang. As afraid of the forces within the country, its own people, as it is of the Japanese, it now seeks to avoid conflict with the Japanese in order to concentrate on the perpetuation of its own power.

The condition to which it has permitted its armies to deteriorate is shown most recently by the defeat in Honan, which is due not only to lack of heavy armament but also to poor morale and miserable condition of the soldiers, absence of support by the people, who have been consistently mistreated, lack of leadership, and prevalent corruption among the officers through such practices as trade with the occupied areas.

If we accept the obvious indications that the present Kuomintang leadership does not want to fight the Japanese any more than it can help, we must go further and recognize that it may even seek to prevent China from becoming the battleground for large-scale campaigns against the Japanese land forces. This helps to explain the Kuomintang's continued dealings with the Japanese and puppets. Thus the Kuomintang may hope to avert determined Japanese attack, maintain its own position and power, save the east China homes of practically all of its officials, and preserve its old economic-industrial base in the coastal cities.

If this analysis is valid it reveals on the part of the Kuomintang leadership, which means the generalissimo, a cynical disregard of the added cost of the inevitable prolongation of the war in American lives and resources.

D. These apparently suicidal policies of the Kuomintang have their roots in the composition and nature of the party.

In view of the above it becomes pertinent to ask why the Kuomintang has lost its power of leadership; why it neither wishes actively to wage war against Japan itself nor to cooperate wholeheartedly with the American Army in China, and why it has ceased to be capable of unifying the country.

The answer to all these questions is to be found in the present composition and nature of the party. Politically, a classical and definitive American description becomes ever more true: the Kuomintang is a congerie of conservative political cliques interested primarily in the preservation of their own power against all outsiders and in jockeying for position among themselves. Economically, the Kuomintang rests on the narrow base of the rural gentry landlords, the militarists, the higher ranks of the Government bureaucracy and merchant bankers having intimate connections with the bureaucrats. This base has actually contracted during the war. The Kuomintang no longer commands, as it once did, the unequivocal support of China's industrialists, who as a group have been much weakened economically, and hence politically, by the Japanese seizure of the coastal cities.

The relation of this description of the Kuomintang to the questions propounded above is clear.

The Kuomintang has lost its leadership because it has lost touch with and is no longer representative of a nation which, through the practical experience of the war, is becoming both more politically conscious and more aware of the party's selfish shortcomings.

It cannot fight an effective war because this is impossible without greater reliance upon and support by the people. There must be a release of the national energy such as occurred during the early period of the war. Under present conditions, this can be brought about only by reform of the party and greater political democracy. What form this democracy takes is not as important as the genuine adoption of a democratic philosophy and attitude; the threat of foreign invasion is no longer enough to stimulate the Chinese people and only real reform can now regain their enthusiasm. But the growth of democracy, though basic to China's continuing war effort, would, to the mind of the Kuomintang's present leaders, imperil the foundations of the party's power because it would mean that the conservative cliques would have to give up their closely guarded monopoly. Rather than do this, they prefer to see the war remain in its present state of passive inertia. They are thus sacrificing China's national interests to their own selfish ends.

For similar reasons, the Kuomintang is unwilling to give wholehearted cooperation to the American Army's effort in China. Full cooperation necessarily requires the broad Chinese military effort which the Kuomintang is unable to carry out or to make possible. In addition, the Kuomintang fears that large-scale, widespread, and direct contact by Americans with the Chinese war effort will expose its own inactivity and, by example and personal contacts, be a liberalizing influence.

The Kuomintang cannot unify the country because it derives its support from the economically most conservative groups, who wish the retention of China's economically and socially backward agrarian society. These groups are incapable of bringing about China's industrialization, although they pay this objective elaborate lip service. They are also committed to the maintenance of an order which by its very nature fosters particularism and resists modern centralization. Countless examples can be given to show the line-up of the party with the groups that oppose modernization and industrialization—such as connections with Szechwan warlords and militarists. The Kuomintang sees no objection to maintaining the economic interests of some of its component groups in occupied China or in preserving trade with occupied China, the criterion of which is not the national interest but its profitability to the engaging groups. This explains why free China's imports from occupied China consist largely of luxuries, against exports of food and strategic raw materials. It is therefore not surprising that there are many links, both political and economic, between the Kuomintang and the puppet regime.

E. The present policies of the Kuomintang seem certain of failure; if that failure results in a collapse of China, it will have consequences disastrous both to our immediate military plans and our long-term interests in the Far East.

The foregoing analysis has shown that the Kuomintang, under its present leadership, has neither the ability nor desire to undertake a program which could energize the war and check the process of internal disintegration. Its preoccupation with the maintenance and consolidation of its power must result, to the contrary, in acceleration rather than retardation of the rate of this disintegration. Unless it widens its base and changes its character, it must be expected to continue its present policies. It will not of its own volition take steps to bring about this broadening and reform. The opposite will be the case: Precisely because it has lost popular support, it is redoubling its efforts to maintain and monopolize control.

The present policies of the Kuomintang seem certain to fail because they run counter to strong forces within the country and are forcing China into ruin. Since these policies are not favorable to us, nor of assistance in the prosecution of an effective war by China, their failure would not of itself be disastrous to American interests. For many reasons mentioned above, we might welcome the fall of the Kuomintang if it could immediately be followed by a progressive government able to unify the country and help us fight Japan.

But the danger is that the present drifting and deterioration under the Kuomintang may end in a collapse. The result would be the creation in China of a vacuum. This would eliminate any possibility in the near future of utilizing China's potential military strength. Because the Japanese and their puppets might be able to occupy this vacuum, at much less cost than by a major military campaign, it might also become impossible for us to exploit China's flank position and to continue operating from Chinese bases. The war would thus be prolonged and made more difficult.

Such a collapse would also initiate a period of internal chaos in China, which would deter the emergence of a strong and stable government, an indispensable precondition for stability and order in the Far East.

China, which might be a minor asset to us now, would become a major liability.

F. There are, however, active and constructive forces in China opposed to the present trends of the Kuomintang leadership which, if given a chance, might avert the threatened collapse.

These groups, all increasingly dissatisfied with the Government and the party responsible for it, include the patriotic younger army officers; the small merchants; large sections of the lower ranks of the Government bureaucracy; most of the foreign-returned students; the intelligentsia, including professors, students, and the professional classes; the liberal elements of the Kuomintang, who make up a sizable minority under the leadership of such men as Sun Fo; the minor parties and groups, some of which like the National Salvationists enjoy great prestige; the Chinese Communist Party; and the inarticulate but increasingly restless rural population.

The collective numbers and influence of these groups could be tremendous. A Kuomintang official recently admitted that resentment against the present Kuomintang Government is so widespread that if there were free, universal elections 80 percent of the votes might be cast against it. But most of these groups are nebulous and unorganized, feeling—like the farmers—perhaps only a blind dislike of conditions as they are. They represent different classes and varying political beliefs, where they have any at all. They are tending, however, to draw together in the consciousness of their common interest in the change of the status quo. This awakening and fusion is, of course, opposed by the Kuomintang with every means at its disposal.

The danger, as conditions grow worse, is that some of these groups may act independently and blindly. The effect may be to make confusion worse. Such might be the case in a military putsch, a possibility that cannot be disregarded.

The result might be something analogous to the Sian incident of 1936. But the greater delicacy and precariousness of the present situation would lend itself more easily to exploitation by the most reactionary elements of the Kuomintang, the Japanese, or the puppets. Another possibility is the outbreak, on a much larger scale than heretofore, of unorganized and disruptive farmers revolts. A disturbing phenomenon is the apparent attempt now being made by some of the minority parties to effect a marriage of convenience with the provincial warlords, among the most reactionary and unscrupulous figures in Chinese politics and hardly crusaders for a new democracy.

The hopeful sign is that all of these groups are agreed that the basic problem in China today is political reform toward democracy. This point requires emphasis. It is only through political reform that the restoration of the will to fight, the unification of the country, the elimination of provincial warlordism, the solution of the Communist problem, the institution of economic policies which can avoid collapse, and the emergence of a government actually supported by the people can be achieved. Democratic reform is the crux of all important Chinese problems, military, economic, and political.

It is clear beyond doubt that China's hope for internal peace and effective unity—certainly in the immediate future (which for the sake of the war must be our prior consideration) and probably in the long term as well—lies neither with the present Kuomintang nor with the Communists, but in a democratic combination of the liberal elements within the country, including these within the Kuomintang, and the probably large sections of the Communists who would be willing, by their own statements and past actions, to collaborate in the resurrection of a united front.

Given the known interest and attitudes of the Chinese people, we can be sure that measures to accomplish the solution of these problems will be undertaken in earnest by a broadly based government. Such a government—and only such a government—will galvanize China out of its military inertia by restoring national morale through such means as the reduction of the evils of conscription and stopping the maltreatment and starvation of the troops. Such a government—and only such a government—will automatically end the paralyzing internal dissention and political unrest. Such a government—and only such a government—will undertake the economic measures necessary to increase production, establish effective price controls, mobilize national resources, and end corruption, hoarding, speculation, and profiteering.

It is, of course, unrealistic to assume that such a broadly based democratic government can be established at one stroke, or that it can immediately achieve the accomplishment of these broad objectives. But progress will be made as, only as, the government moves toward democracy.

II. In the light of this developing crisis what should be the American attitude toward China?

It is impossible to predict exactly how far the present disintegration in China can continue without spectacular change in the internal situation and drastic effect on the war against Japan. But we must face the question whether we can afford passively to stand by and allow the process to continue to an almost certainly disastrous collapse, or whether we wish to do what we legitimately and practically can to arrest it. We need to formulate a realistic policy toward China.

A. The Kuomintang and Chiang are acutely conscious of their dependence on us and will be forced to appeal for our support.

We must realize that when the process of disintegration gets out of hand it will be to us that the Kuomintang will turn for financial, political, and military salvation. The awareness of this dependence is the obvious and correct explanation of the Kuomintang's hypersensitivity to American opinion and criticism. The Kuomintang—and particularly the Generalissimo—know that we are the only disinterested, yet powerful, ally to whom China can turn.

The appeal will be made to us on many grounds besides the obvious, well-worn but still effective one of pure sentiment. They have said in the past and will say in the future that they could long ago have made peace with Japan on what are falsely stated would have been favorable terms. They have claimed and will claim again that their resistance and refusal to compromise with Japan saved Russia, Great Britain, and ourselves, ignoring the truth that our own refusal to compromise with Japan to China's disadvantage brought on Pearl Harbor and our involvement before we were ready. They have complained and will continue to complain that they have received less support in the form of materials than any other major ally, forgetting that they have done less fighting, have not used the materials given, and would not have had the ability to use what they asked for. Finally, they have tried and will continue to try to lay the blame on us for their difficulties, distorting the effect of American Army expenditures in China and ignoring the fact that these expenditures are only a minor factor in the whole sorry picture of the mismanagement of the Chinese economy.

But however far-fetched these appeals, our flat refusal of them might have several embarrassing effects.

1. We would probably see China enter a period of internal chaos. Our war effort in this theater would be disrupted, instability in the Far East prolonged, and possible Russian intervention attracted.

2. We would be blamed by large sections of both Chinese and American public opinion for "abandoning" China after having been responsible for its collapse. (In a measure we would have brought such blame upon ourselves because we have tended to allow ourselves to become identified not merely with China but also with the Kuomintang and its policies. Henceforth, it may be the better part of valor to avoid too close identification with the Kuomintang.)

3. By an apparent abandonment of China in its hour of need, we would lose international prestige, especially in the Far East.

On the other hand, if we come to the rescue of the Kuomintang on its own terms we would be buttressing, but only temporarily, a decadent regime which by its existing composition and program is incapable of solving China's problems. Both China and ourselves would be gaining only a brief respite from the ultimate day of reckoning. It is clear, therefore, that it is to our advantage to avoid a situation arising in which we would be presented with a Hobson's choice between two such unpalatable alternatives.

B. The Kuomintang's dependence can give us great influence.

Circumstances are rapidly developing so that the Generalissimo will have to ask for the continuance and increase of our support. Weak as he is, he is in no position—and the weaker he becomes the less he will be able—to turn down or render nugatory any coordinated and positive policy we may adopt toward China. The cards are all in our favor. Our influence, intelligently used, can be tremendous.

C. There are three general alternatives open to us.

1. We may give up China as hopeless and wash our hands of it althogether.

2. We may continue to give support to the Generalissimo, when and as he asks for it.

3. We may formulate a coordinated and positive policy toward China and take the necessary steps for its implementation.

D. Our choice between these alternatives must be determined by our objectives in China.

The United States, if it so desired and if it had a coherent policy, could play an important and perhaps decisive role in—

1. Stimulating China to an active part in the war in the Far East, thus hastening the defeat of Japan.

2. Staving off economic collapse in China and bringing about basic political and economic reforms, thus enabling China to carry on the war and enhance the chances of its orderly postwar recovery.

3. Enabling China to emerge from the war as a major and stabilizing factor in postwar east Asia.

4. Winning a permanent and valuable ally in the progressive, independent, and democratic China.

E. We should adopt the third alternative—a coordinated and positive policy.

This is clear from an examination of the background of the present situation in China and the proper objectives of our policy there.

The first alternative must be rejected on immediate military grounds, but also for obvious long-range considerations. It would deprive us of valuable air bases and position on Japan's flank. Its adoption would prolong the war. We cannot afford to wash our hands of China.

The results of the second alternative—which, insofar as we have a China policy, has been the one we have been and are pursuing—speak for themselves. The substantial financial assistance we have given China has been frittered away with neglibible, if any effect in slowing inflation and retarding economic collapse. The military help we have given has certainly not been used to increase China's war effort against Japan. Our political support has been used for the Kuomintang's own selfish purposes and to bolster its short-sighted and ruinous policies.

The third, therefore, is the only real alternative left to us. Granted the rejection of the first alternative, there is no longer a question of helping and advising China. China itself must request this help and advice. The only question is whether we give this help within a framework which makes sense, or whether we continue to give it in our present disjointed and absent-minded manner. In the past it has sometimes seemed that our right hand did not know what the left was doing. To continue without a coherent and coordinated policy will be dissipating our effort without either China or ourselves deriving any appreciable benefit. It can only continue to create new problems, in addition to these already troubling us, without any compensating advantages beyond those of indolent short-termed expediency. But most important is the possibility that this haphazard giving, this serving of short-term expediency, may not be enough to save the situation; even with it, China may continue toward collapse.

F. This positive policy should be political.

The problem confronting us is whether we are to continue as in the past to ignore politcal considerations of direct military significance or whether we are to take a leaf out of the Japanese book and invoke even stronger existing political forces in China to achieve our military and long-term political objective.

We must seek to contribute toward the reversal of the present movement toward collapse and to the rousing of China from its military inactivity. This can be brought about only by an accelerated movement toward democratic political reform within China. Our part must be that of a catalytic agent in this process of China's democratization. It can be carried out by the careful exertion of our influence, which has so far not been consciously and systematically used.

III. The implementation of this political policy, though difficult in some respects, is practical and can be carried out by many means

A. Diplomatic finesse will be required in the execution of this policy in such a way as not to offend the strong current of genuine nationalism (as distinguished from the chauvinism of the Kuomintang) which characterizes almost all sections of the Chinese people. There must be a sensitivity to the situation in China and the political changes there so that there can be an appropriate and immediate stiffening or softening of the measures which we undertake. This tact and sensitivity will be required not only of the top policy-directing agency but of all other agencies actually implementing that policy and concerned in direct relations with China.

There must be effective coordination of the policies and actions of all American Government agencies concerned in these dealings with China.

The present lack of effective cooperation between the various Government agencies—State, War, and some of the newer autonomous organizations—detracts from the efficient functioning of each, and weakens American influence, when it is most needed.

It must be recognized—and it will be even more the case under the policy proposed—that all our dealings with all our activities in China have political implication. Coordination is absolutely essential for the achievement of unity of policy and synchronization of action. It's attainment will require intelligent and forceful direction both in Washington and in Chunking.

The logical person to coordinate activities in Chunking is obviously, because of the broad issues involved, the Ambassador. Similarly the corresponding person in Wahington might be the Chief of the China Section of the State Department who would watch the whole field for the President or a responsible Cabinet member. Positive action, of course, would depend on constant and close consultation, both in Washington and in the field, between the representatives of the State, War, Navy, and Treasury Departments and the other agencies operating in China.

C. Since all measures open to us should not be applied simultaneously, there should be careful selection and timing.

Some measures will be simple and immediately useful. Others should be deferred until primary steps have been taken. Still others will be more forceful or direct and their use will depend on the Kuomintang's recalcitrance to change its ways. We must avoid overplaying or underplaying our hand.

D. Specific measures which might be adopted in the carrying out of this positive policy include the following:

1. Negative: (a) Stop our present mollycoddling of China by: Restricting lend-lease, cutting down training of Chinese military cadets, discontinuing training of the Chinese Army, taking a firmer stand in the financial negotiations, or stopping the shipment of gold. Any or all of these restrictive measures can be reversed as the Generalissimo and the Kuomintang become more cooperative in carrying on military operations, using equipment and training supplied, being reasonable on financial questions, or allowing us freedom in such military requirements as establishing contact with the Communist areas.

(b) Stop building up the Generalissimo's and the Kuomintang's prestige internationally and in the United States. Such "face" serves only to bolster the regime internally and to harden it in its present policies. Our inclusion of China as one of the Big Four served a useful purpose in the early stage of the war and as a counter to Japanese racial propaganda but has now lost its justification.

We make fools of ourselves by such actions as the attention given to the meaningless utterances of Chu Hsueh-fen as a spokesman of Chinese labor and the prominence accorded to China in the International Labor Office Conference. Our tendency toward overlavish praise is regarded by the Chinese as a sign of either stupdity or weakness.

Abandonment of glib generalities for hard-headed realism in our attitude toward China will be quickly understood, without the resentment that would probably be felt against the British. We can make it clear that praise will be given when praise is due.

(c) Stop making unconditional and grandiose promises of help along such lines as UNNRA, postwar economic aid, and political support. We can make it clear without having to be very explicit that we stand ready to help China when China shows itself deserving. This ties into the more positive phase of publicity and propaganda to the effect, for instance, that American postwar economic aid will not be extended to build up monopolistic enterprise or support the landlord-gentry class but in the interests of a democratic people.

(d) Discontinue our present active collaboration with Chinese secret police organizations, which support the forces of reaction and stand for the opposite of our American democratic aims and ideals. This collaboration, which results in the effective strengthening of a Gestapo-like organization, is becoming increasingly known in China. It confuses and disillusions Chinese liberals, who look to us as their hope, and it weakens our position with the Kuomintang leaders in pressing for democratic reform.

2. Positive: (a) High Government officials in conversation with Chinese leaders in Washington and in China can make known our interest in democracy and unity in China and our dissatisfaction with present Kuomintang military, financial, and other policies. Such suggestions will bear great weight if they come from the President and advantage can be taken of opportunities such as the visits of the Vice President Wallace to China and H. H. Kung to the United States. A progressive stage can be questions or statements by Members of Congress regarding affairs in China.

(b) We should take up the repeated, but usually insincere requests of the Kuomintang for advice. If advisers are asked for, we should see that they are provided, that good men are selected, and that they get all possible aid and support from us. While the Kuomintang will be reluctant to accept the advice we may give, its mere reiteration will have some effect.

(c) We should seek to extend our influence on Chinese opinion by every practical means available.

The Office of War Information should go beyond its present function of reporting American war news to pointing up the values of democracy as a permanent political system and as an aid in the waging of war against totalitarianism. We should attempt to increase the dissemination in China, by radio or other more direct means, of constructive American criticism. This should include recognition and implied encouragement to liberal and progressive forces within China. Care should be taken to keep this criticism on a helpful, constructive, and objective plane and to avoid derogatory attacks which may injure Chinese nationalistic sensitivities. To do this work, there may have to be some expansion of the OWI in China and of our propaganda directed toward this country.

A second line is the active expansion of our cultural relations program. The present diversion, by Koumintang wishes, to technical subjects should be rectified and greater emphasis laid on social sciences, cultural, and practical political subjects such as American Government administration. We should increase our aid and support to intellectuals in China by the many means already explored, such as aid to research in China, translation of articles, and opportunity for study or lecturing in the United States.

Other, more indirect lines, are the expansion of our American Foreign Service representation in China to new localities (since each office is in some measure a center of American influence and contact with Chinese liberals and returned students from the United States) and the careful indoctrination of the American Army personnel in China to create, by example and their attitude toward Chinese, favorable impressions of America and the things that America stands for. Where contact between American and Chinese military personnel has been close, as in Burma, the result has apparently been a democratizing influence.

(d) We should assist the education of public opinion in the United States toward a realistic but constructively sympathetic attitude toward China. The most obvious means would be making background information available, in an unofficial way, to responsible political commentators, writers, and research workers. Without action on our part their writings will become known to Chinese Government circles and from them to other politically minded groups. We should, however, coordinate this with the activity described in the section above to promote dissemination in China.

(e) We should maintain friendly relations with the liberal elements in the Kuomintang, the minor parties, and the Communists. This can, and should for its maximum effect, be done in an open, aboveboard manner. The recognition which it implies will be quickly understood by the Chinese.

Further steps in this direction could be publicity to liberals, such as distinguished intellectuals. When possible they may be included in consideration for special honors or awards, given recognition by being asked to participate in international commissions or other bodies, and invited to travel or lecture in the United States. A very effective action of this type would be an invitation to Madam Sun Yat-sen from the White House.

We should select men of known liberal view to represent us in OWI, cultural relations, and other lines of work in China.

(f) We should continue to show an interest in the Chinese Communists. This includes contact with the Communist representatives in Chungking, publicity on the blockade and the situation between the two parties, and continued pressure for the dispatch of observers to north China. At the same time we should stress the importance of north China militarily for intelligence regarding Japanese battle order, Japanese air strength, weather reporting, bombing data, and damage assessment, and air crew evacuation and rescue work. We should consider the eventual advance of active operations against the Japanese to north China and the question of assistance to or cooperation with Communist and guerrilla forces. If our reasonable requests based on urgent military grounds do not receive a favorable response, we should send our military observers anyway.

(g) We should consider the training and equipping of provincial and other armies in China in cases where we can be satisfied that they will fight the Japanese.

(h) We should continue to press, and if necessary insist, on getting American observers to the actual fighting fronts. We should urge, and when possible assist, the improvement of the condition of the Chinese soldier, especially his treatment, clothing, feeding, and medical care.

(i) We should publicize statements by responsible Government officials indicating our interest in Chinese unity and our attitude toward such questions as the use of American lend-lease supplies by the Kuomintang in a civil war. It is interesting for instance, that Under Secretary Welles' letter to Browder regarding American interest in Chinese unity was considered so important by the Kuomintang that publication in China was prohibited.

This program is, of course, far from complete. Other measures will occur to the policy agency and will suggest themselves as the situation in China develops.

E. Most of these measures can be applied progressively.

This is true, for instance, of the various negative actions suggested, and of the conversations, statements, and other lines of endeavor to influence public opinion in China. A planned activity of encouragement and attention to liberals, minor party leaders, and the Communists can advance.

F. The program suggested contains little that is not already being done in an uncoordinated and only partially effective manner.

What is needed chiefly is an integration, systematic motivation and planned expension of activities in which we are already, perhaps in some cases unconsciously, engaged. We do, for instance, try to maintain contact with liberal groups; we have expressed the desire to send observers to the Communist area; we have a weak cultural relations program; and the OWI has made some attempts to propagandize American democratic ideals.

G. The program constitutes only very modified and indirect intervention in Chinese affairs.

It must be admitted that some of the measures proposed would involve taking more than normal interest in the affairs of another sovereign nation. But they do not go so far as to infringe on Chinese sovereignty. If we choose to make lend-lease conditional on a better war effort by China, it is also China's freedom to refuse to accept it on these conditions. We do not go nearly as far as imperialistic countries have often done in the past. We obviously do not, for instance, suggest active assistance or subsidizing of rival parties to the Kuomintang, as the Russians did in the case of the Communists.

Furthermore, the Chinese Government would find it difficult to object. The Chinese have abused their freedom to propagandize in the United States by the statements and writing of such men as Lin Yu-tang. They have also, and through Lin Yu-tang, who carries an official passport as a representative of the Chinese Government, engaged in "cultural relations" work. They have freely criticized American policies and American leaders. And they have attempted to dabble in American politics, through Madame Chiang, Luce, Willkie, and Republican Congressmen. They have had, and will continue to have, freedom to try to influence public opinion in the United States in the same way that we will try to do it in China.

EXHIBIT No. 255

MILITARY WEAKNESS OF OUR FAR EASTERN POLICY

FEBRUARY 14, 1945.

To the Commanding General, USAF:

American policy in the Far East can have but one immediate objective: the defeat of Japan in the shortest possible time with the least expenditure of American lives. To the attainment of this objective all other considerations should be subordinate.

The attainment of this objective demands the effective mobilization of China in the war against Japan. Operating as we are in a land theater at the end of a supply line many thousands of miles in length, the human and economic resources of China increase in importance as we draw closer to Japan's inner zone of defense. Denied the effective use of these resources, the attainment of our primary objective will be unnecessarily delayed.

There is ample evidence to show that to the present Kuomintang government the war against Japan is secondary in importance to its own preservation in power. China's military failure is due in large part to internal political disunity and the Kuomintang's desire to conserve such military force as it has for utilization in the maintenance of its political power. The intention of the generalissimo to eliminate all political opposition, by force of arms if necessary, has not been abandoned. In the present situation in China, where power or self-preservation depend upon the possession of military force, neither the Kuomintang nor opposition groups are willing to expend their military resourses against the Japanese through fear that it will weaken them vis-à-vis other groups. A recent instance is the lack of resistance to the Japanese capture of the southern section of the Hankow-Canton Railway. Equally, the Kuomintang is jealously intent on preventing the strengthening of other groups: Witness the blockade of the Communists.

The aim of American policy, as indicated clearly by official statements in the United States, is the establishment of political unity in China as the indispensable preliminary to China's effective military mobilization. The execution of our policy has not contributed to the achievement of this publicly stated aim. On the contrary, it has retarded its achievement. It has had this undesired and undesirable effect because our statements and actions in China have convinced the Kuomintang government that we will continue to support it, and it alone. The Kuomintang government believes that it will receive an increasing flow of American military and related supplies which, if past experience is any guide, it will commit against the enemy only with great reluctance, if at all.

We cannot hope for any improvement in this situation unless we understand the objectives of the Kuomintang Government and throw our considerable influence upon it in the direction of internal unity. We should be convinced by this time that the effort to solve the Kuomintang-Communist differences by diplomatic means has failed; we should not be deceived by any face-saving formula resulting from the discussions because neither side is willing to bear the onus of failure. We should also realize that no government can survive in China without American support.

There are in China important elements interested in governmental reform by which unity and active prosecution of the war may result. Aside from the Chinese Communists, however, all of these elements are cowed by a widespread secret police system and lack any firm rallying point. They will remain helpless to do anything constructive as long as statements of our policy indicate that we are champions of the status quo.

At present there exists in China a situation closely paralleling that which existed in Yugoslavia prior to Prime Minister Churchill's declaration of support for Marshal Tito. That statement was as follows:

"The sanest and safest course for us to follow is to judge all parties and factions dispassionately by the test of their readiness to fight the Germans and thus lighten the burden of Allied troops. This is not a time for ideological preferences for one side or the other."

A similar public statement issued by the Commander in Chief with regard to China would not mean the withdrawal of recognition or the cessation of military aid to the Central Government; that would be both unnecessary and unwise. It would serve notice, however, of our preparation to make use of all available means to achieve our primary objective. It would supply for all Chinese a firm rallying point which has thus far been lacking. The internal effect in China would be so profound that the generalissimo would be forced to make concessions of power and permit united front coalition. The present opposition groups, no longer under the prime necessity of safeguarding themselves, would be won wholeheartedly to our side and we would have in China, for the first time, a united ally.

Whether we like it or not, by our very presence here we have become a force in the internal politics of China and that force should be used to accomplish our primary mission. In spite of hero-worshipping publicity in the United States, Chiang Kai-shek is not China and by our present narrow policy of outspokenly supporting his dog-in-the-manger attitude we are needlessly cutting ourselves off from millions of useful allies; many of whom are already organized and in position to engage the enemy. These allies, let it be clear, are not confined to Communist-controlled areas of China, but are to be found everywhere in the country. The Communist movement is merely the most prominent manifestation of a condition which is potentially present throughout China. Other important groups favor the same program as that espoused by the so-called Communist-agrarian reform, civil rights, the establishment of democratic institutions—but the Communists are the only group at present having the organization and strength openly to foster such revolutionary ideas.

Our objective is clear, but in China we have been jockeyed into a position from which we have only one approach to the objective. Support of the generalissimo is desirable insofar as there is concrete evidence that he is willing and able to marshal the full strength of China against Japan. Support of the generalissimo is but one means to an end; it is not an end in itself, but by present statements of policy we show a tendency to confuse the means with the end. There should be an immediate adjustment of our position in order that flexibility of approach to our primary objective may be restored.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you testify that to the best of your recollection the reports of these four political officers were uniformly derogatory of the Chinese Nationalist Government?

General WEDEMEYER. I could state that the reports oral and written of three, Mr. Service, Mr. Davies, and Mr. Ludden, were very commendatory in references to the Communists, and frequently derogatory in references to the Nationalist Government.

Mr. MORRIS. General Wedemeyer, can you recall that any friction or disagreement was openly expressed between yourself and General Hurley on the one hand and these political advisers on the other? You have testified that generally you were in support of General Hurley's position.

General WEDEMEYER. Well, my position out there was I was just a military man and I looked up to the Ambassador as the senior representative of my country in that area. And when I first reported to take over the command I paid my respects to Ambassador Gaus. He was the Ambassador to China at that time. And shortly thereafter, a month or so later, he resigned, and Mr. Patrick J. Hurley became the Ambassador. And I evolved a system of working together, and, as I stated, I recognized him as a senior, a civilian, and I deferred to his ideas in the political, diplomatic, economic, and cultural fields. In the military field I felt that I was responsible and he did too.

Senator FERGUSON. General, when you were assigned to China on this mission, was it to carry out a new policy?

General WEDEMEYER. No, sir, I received no instructions about a new policy.

Senator FERGUSON. You were assigned to carry out a mission which in your opinion was the mission previous to your assignment?

General WEDEMEYER. To support the Nationalist Government of China and to actually, to put it bluntly, kill as many Japanese as possible.

Senator FERGUSON. To help them in the Japanese cause.

General WEDEMEYER. To assist them or to cooperate with them in their military operations against the Japanese, yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you understood that that was a carrying on of a policy that had been there?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. But you found in the files of the foreign officers a different philosophy?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. But you kept to the assignment that you felt that you had and carried that out as nearly as you could?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And that was the policy at least of Hurley who came there as the Ambassador of the United States?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That is all I have.

Mr. MORRIS. General Wedemeyer, there was a question, I think, on the record: Did you recall any expressions of disagreement between any of these Foreign Service officers and yourself and General Hurley?

General WEDEMEYER. Well, I did not have any disagreement with them.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you hear of any?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you tell us about it, General Wedemeyer?

General WEDEMEYER. Well, Ambassador Hurley moved over to my house during the winter of 1944–45 because the Japs used to bomb us there and a big boulder had rolled into the Ambassador's house, so he moved into my house for a few weeks while his house was being renovated. And he, in the evening discussions in my home, suggested that these four political advisers that I had be placed under him. That seemed logical to me. I looked to the Ambassador for my intructions in political matters, diplomatic matters, and I told him I would agree to that.

So we were ordered home in February of 1945 by President Roosevelt. And when we got back to this country, to the Capital, Mr. Hurley requested that those four men be returned to him and to operate in the Embassy, and said that General Wedemeyer had no objection; which was correct. That was done. Mr. Stimson, as Secretary of War, had requested those four political advisers for his friend General Stilwell when General Stilwell assumed command out there some years earlier.

So, Mr. Stimson was interested in my view, and I had lunch with him and expressed agreement that they should be put back over under the Embassy. I did not express disapproval or concern about these men. I had none. They had been loyal to me. I did not agree with their reports. I found them to be very bright, keen, and they certainly knew most of the Chinese leaders. But, as I indicated, I did not analyze their reports nearly as carefully as I should have, and talk to them about it, because I was so busily involved with military duties. They were put over under the Ambassador.

When we got back, we were only home about a week, and we flew back to China, and Mr. Hurley then had some difficulties with these men. He felt, as he expressed it, that they were undermining his efforts to bring about a stability in the China area. He finally had one of them transferred. And some had already left, I think. Mr. Service had come back, and Mr. Emmerson and Ludden and Davies still were there. And finally Davies was transferred to Moscow, and he came over to say good-by to me. At that time Hurley was still living with me, and they had quite a heated argument in my home.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you tell us what the argument was about?

General WEDEMEYER. Of course, one does not remember all of the details.

Senator FERGUSON. I realize that. Just give us the substance.

General WEDEMEYER. This has not occurred to me in the years intervening. But Hurley stated to Mr. Davies that he, Davies, had not supported Mr. Hurley and had made reports that contravened American policy as he, Hurley, understood it, and that he was going to ask the State Department to relieve Mr. Davies; that is, to discharge him.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you mean discharge him entirely from the service?

General WEDEMEYER. Discharge him entirely from the Foreign Service. Mr. Hurley made that statement.

And Mr. Davies protested very strongly and became highly emotional, as did the Ambassador, and there were exchanges. I do not recall, really, in fairness to either one of them, what was said.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, you can give the substance of it.

General WEDEMEYER. The substance was that Mr. Davies felt that he had been loyal, and Mr. Hurley that he had not been loyal to him, Hurley, and finally Mr. Hurley agreed not to request his discharge but definitely that he should be transferred and go to Moscow to see at first hand the operation of some of these ideas that Mr. Davies had been espousing.

Senator FERGUSON. So, it was Mr. Hurley's idea that he would not ask for his discharge from the service?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. But he recommended that Davies be sent to Moscow to experience things that he had been advocating in China?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. That is my recollection of the conversation that took place in my house in about February or March or April, right around in there.

Senator FERGUSON. Of course, you felt, when their advice was not in line with what you thought your mission was, that you, being a military man and assigned there to do a certain mission, did not have any personal feeling against them?

General WEDEMEYER. Oh, yes: I did, Senator, but I was too busy with the military job. But if I had known—those men were under me, and if I ever have anybody, civilian or military, under me, and he is doing anything that I interpret as disloyal, I will go after him.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you interpret these things as being disloyal?

General WEDEMEYER. I did not, sir, because I did not analyze them as I should have carefully.

Senator FERGUSON. I will put it to you now: What is your opinion now after you read these reports in the light of all the circumstances? Were they disloyal to the Government and the policy that we had there?

General WEDEMEYER. I cannot answer that question, sir; honestly I cannot answer it. But I can say this: If I had followed their advice, communism would have run rampant over China much more rapidly than it did. And I would not have carried out my directive or my instructions as I understood them.

Senator FERGUSON. I think that is an answer to my question.

General WEDEMEYER. I would hesitate to call any man categorically disloyal, sir, unless I had the proof.

Senator FERGUSON. I understand your answer.

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. General Wedemeyer, when General Marshall went to China, did you ever see his directive that he took with him?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know who prepared that directive?

General WEDEMEYER. No, sir; I don't. I think that General Hull and General Lincoln and General Marshall himself had something to to with it.

Subsequently I saw a carbon copy of that directive in the Pentagon, and it had the initials J. C. V. in the lower left-hand corner, as I recall it.

Senator FERGUSON. Whose initials could they be?

General WEDEMEYER. Well, the head of the Far Eastern Division was John Carter Vincent at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you saw the initials J. C. V. on the draft of the directive?

General WEDEMEYER. I have seen them on a carbon copy of that directive, sir. Whether it was the final directive, I don't know. I mean, I did not compare the phraseology exactly.

Senator FERGUSON. General, I wonder whether you have an opinion as to why it is so difficult for committees to actually ascertain who did prepare this directive. Why should there be any argument about who prepared this or any secrecy about who prepared it? Why should it not be an open book?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. Senator Ferguson, I can understand why we should protect sources of information in the FBI. I can understand that where the FBI at times does not want you to have access, or anyone to have access, to their files.

Senator FERGUSON. To their source.

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. You will destroy a source.

Senator FERGUSON. I understand that.

General WEDEMEYER. Or jeopardize a source. But I do not understand at all why the repersentatives of the American people do not have more information concerning national and international developments.

Senator FERGUSON. As to who prepared a document.

General WEDEMEYER. I think that who prepared a document certainly should be available to you representatives of the American peoples.

I could not understand, for example, why Wedemeyer's name was mentioned so frequently in the MacArthur hearings, associated with a telegram, and yet we could not find out who in the State Department had direct contact with the same matter. And I do not know to this day, and I tried to find out. Yet my name was bandied about freely.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, it was not a secret on your part?

General WEDEMEYER. And my permission was not requested either. If I had some compunction about it, I certainly was not given the opportunity to express it, but I did not care.

Senator FERGUSON. When it comes to a State Department official, then it becomes a deep, dark secret?

General WEDEMYER. I could not say that as a generality, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. It did in that case.

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. It is certainly true as to who prepared the document of the Marshall situation; is it not?

General WEDEMEYER. I don't know, sir. I did not know that you people had made the request to get this information, sir. I did not know that.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the record should show that at this time we have not made such a request for that document.

Senator FERGUSON. That is true, Mr. Chairman. I now suggest and ask that the Chair and the committee obtain this information as to who actually did, and let us have it on the record so that it will not be in dispute.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean we will try to obtain it.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, that is all the committee can do. It can do its best.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will proceed through its chairman at once to try to secure the information by every means that we know of. I wish to say, however, that the Chair has had some difficulty in times past.

Senator FERGUSON. I appreciate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness on the stand now, General Wedemeyer, rendered a very valuable report that would have been of great interest to the people of this country, and the chairman, then chairman of another committee of the Senate, attempted by subpoena to get that report, and the subpena was denied, or the document was denied to the subpena officer. So, we may have some trouble here again, but we will try.

Mr. MORRIS. General Wedemeyer, do you recall the recommendations made in the directive that General Marshall took with him to China?

General WEDEMEYER. Well, I could give you substantially what was in it. It required General Marshall, as a special envoy of the President, to go to China and to broaden the base of the Government, to bring about a coalition of the various political parties there and to create stability in that area.

Mr. MORRIS. And you say that was the substance of the directive?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, General Wedemeyer, were you in China when General Marshall first arrived on his mission?

General WEDEMEYER. You mean on this mission? Yes, sir; I met him at the airport.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you the ranking American military commander in the field at that time?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you consulted on military matters by General Marshall in the execution of his mission?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. I gave General Marshall a résumé of the situation that maintained in China at the end of the war and indicated my intention, which was hardly necessary to do, but that every resource in the China theater was at his disposal to help him out.

Mr. MORRIS. Did General Marshall make an effort to bring about a coalition between the Chinese Nationalist Government and the Communist government?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir; I think he made a very continued and studied effort to bring about a coalition of the political factions, and also to do away with the military forces of any particular political party, and to amalgamate them with the political forces, and they would be the army or the military force of the political entity that he ended up with. Obviously, it would be impossible to carry on a political entity if Republicans had an army and Democrats had an army in our own country.

Mr. MORRIS. General Wedemeyer, do you have any knowledge that General Marshall imposed an embargo on the Chines Nationalist Government at that time?

General WEDEMEYER. The term "embargo," in the connotation of that term, I do not know whether it had application to what I know about it.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us just what you know?

General WEDEMEYER. There was, as I recall it, $500,000,000 appropriated by the Congress to help China. I do not know whether the help was military or economic or both, but I know that General Marshall was authorized by the President to determine the assistance, economic and military, that would be given to China. This, of course, was to assist him in bringing about this coalition that he was ordered to accomplish.

Mr. MORRIS. And do you know that this money was withheld from the Chinese Government?

General WEDEMEYER. Well, sir, when I returned, I was put in command of the Second Army over here with headquarters in Baltimore. But I did receive calls from Chinese friends here telling me that they were desperate for ammunition and for maintenance parts for their vehicles, American vehicles that they had secured during the war, and they urged me to do what I could. I was in no official status and could do nothing about it, but it would indicate that there were retardations or stoppages of the flow of supplies to China. That was my only contact with that situation.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no further questions to ask General Wedemeyer on this score.

Senator FERGUSON. I have a question.

You did answer some questions to the United States News; is that correct?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And I am asking you in relation to the answers to questions on how our policy was influenced. Do you recall those answers?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. I think Mr. David Lawrence asked me if in my judgment there were influences——

The CHAIRMAN. I think the questions and answers might be submitted.

Senator FERGUSON. I just wanted to know whether or not there was any change that you wanted to make in those answers or whether that is your opinion.

General WEDEMEYER. No, sir; that is my considered opinion.

Senator FERGUSON. That is your considered opinion?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we insert this.

General WEDEMEYER. I would like to emphasize there, Senator Ferguson, that in referring to that I know of my own personal experience that there are thousands of loyal Americans in Government service.

Senator FERGUSON. You say that in here.

General WEDEMEYER. And I want it emphasized here, sir, because I do not want in any way to reflect against the many of my own comrades in military service, or against many fine people in the Government service in general.

Senator FERGUSON. But that does not detract from these answers in here?

General WEDEMEYER. Not one iota, sir. I believe those statements to be correct.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest that this excerpt of an interview of General Wedemeyer appearing in the September 14, 1951, issue of United States News and World Report be inserted in the record. That is, only that portion of it beginning with How Policy Was Influenced and down to Basic Mistakes of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that is proper. It may be inserted in the record.

(The information referred to is as follows:)

HOW POLICY WAS INFLUENCED

Question. What do you mean by "sinister influences"?

Answer. Communist influences which had their genesis in the Kremlin, but which were implemented by representatives in this country, both by Soviet representatives and, unfortunately, by some of our own misguided citizens.

Question. Inside the Government?

Answer. Undoubtedly to a limited extent. I do not want to reflect against the thousands of loyal Americans in Government service who have been stead fast in their devotion to duty and to the principles of democracy. They are in the vast majority.

Question. I suppose you include the State Department?

Answer. Yes. I mean in many departments.

Question. Do you think there are communistic influences in the military departments?

Answer. I never came into direct contact with a man in uniform in any of the services of whom I could say categorically that he was a Communist or had Communist connections.

Question. But were there suspicions as to that voiced from time to time in the Far East?

Answer. Yes. Take the newspaper that we published and disseminated widely in the China theater during and subsequent to the war. It was called The China Lantern. There were editorials that appeared in that paper from time to time that were inimical to the best interests of our country. The men on the staff of that paper were in the military service.

Question. Going back to this matter of the influences on our policy, isn't it possible that some of these influences were those that swallowed the communistic line and believed it to be the better line of the two?

Answer. Yes, sir; I accept that explanation. But as far back as 1933, when we recognized Soviet Russia, I perceived in my small way the real implications of communism. I had read Das Kapital and had studied and followed as much as I could the developments in Soviet Russia. During the 2 years, 1936 to 1938, that I was in Germany as a student at the German War College, the Nazis contributed considerably—not intentionally—to my education pertaining to Soviet objectives. It was not all propaganda that the Nazis put out about the Soviets. I warned both civil and military leaders with whom I was associated in America about the implications of what I called "indiscriminate assistance to the Soviet Russians."

From 1940 through most of 1943, I was connected with strategic planning in the then War Department and had an opportunity to express views. There were a number of American officers who realized the real implications of what I term "indiscriminate assistance" to a nation whose objectives or aims were just as dangerous to America, if not more so, than were those of Hitler and his henchmen.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever express disagreement with General Marshall on the advisability of forming a coalition government in China?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. When General Marshall first came out and showed me his directive I told him I did not believe it was possible of accomplishment. I testified to that effect before in the MacArthur hearings, and that is in coincidence with the view I expressed earlier today several times, namely, you cannot coalesce Communists with people who desire individual freedom. It just is not going to work. People who have a spiritual belief, people who respect the dignity of the individual, they are just antithetical to the views or philosophies of Marxism.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further questions at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Jenner?

Senator JENNER. I have no questions.

Senator FERGUSON. You would say then that the old proverb of saying you cannot mix oil and water would apply to trying to mix these two philosophies, and that you would have domination by the Communists?

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir. I am always afraid of cliches, you know, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. But at least you think the Communist philosophy would dominate?

General WEDEMEYER. Definitely, yes, sir. They will dominate if they are permitted to.

Senator FERGUSON. That is, if you try to compromise with them.

General WEDEMEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no further questions at this particular time of General Wedemeyer.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any questions, Senator Jenner?

Senator JENNER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. General, we wish to express our sincere gratitude for your presence here and for your splendid testimony and cooperation generally.

General WEDEMEYER. I would like to make just one statement, sir. I have been following the work of this committee, and I commend both the Democratic and Republican members for what I believe to be an objective investigation in the interest of the country. Don't pay any attention, please, to the smear campaigns that are being instituted by those very same forces that you are investigating. I wish you success.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen of the committee, the chairman of this committee has received a letter dated September 15, 1951, on the letterhead 450 Riverside Drive, New York 27, N. Y., purporting to be signed by Corliss Lamont and bearing his signature. The letter starts out by saying (reading):

> I wish to protest again to you and the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Internal Security, of which you are chairman—and so forth. I will not detain the committee to read the letter.

Senator JENNER. I received a copy, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The members of the committee, I think, have received copies.

The letter from Mr. Lamont will be inserted in the record with the permission of the committee.

(The letter referred to is as follows:)

NEW YORK 27, N. Y., September 15, 1951.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Internal Security, Senate Judiciary Committee, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I wish to protest again to you and the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Internal Security, of which you are chairman, against the repeated actions of that subcommittee in attempting to smear me as a Communist and to associate me with the alleged betrayal of American foreign policy in the Far East. Your subcommitee has dragged me into this picture as part of a shabby endeavor to discredit the American Institute of Pacific Relations and to establish it as a subversive organization.

The Subcommittee on Internal Security has tried to give the totally false impression that I am a far-eastern expert and have been a prime mover in the affairs of the Institute of Pacific Relations. But in fact I have never been particularly interested in the Far East and have only a few years been a member of the institute, and a very inactive one at that.

However, my late father, Thomas W. Lamont, of J. P. Morgan & Co., did have considerable knowledge of the Far East and visited both Japan and China. For more than 20 years he participated actively in the work of the Institute of Pacific Relations and contributed generously to it. From 1925 until the time of his death in 1948 he made to that organization 14 donations amounting to $14,700.

On the other hand, I did not start contributing to the institute until 1946. From that year until the present I made six donations totaling $800, or about one-eighteenth of the total of my father's gifts. Yet your subcommittee and its investigators have never once mentioned my Republican father's long and deep interest in the institute. Instead, this subcommittee has stressed my own slight and brief association with the institute, obviously as part of its effort to paint that excellent organization as red by concealing the fact that leading bankers and conservatives have been among its chief backers.

At its hearing on August 22, 1951, your subcommittee read into its records the crudest sort of dishonesty about me. Your counsel submitted on that occasion a memorandum headed, "C. L. from E. C. C.," and then suggested that it had been written to Corliss Lamont from E. C. Carter, former secretary general of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Testimony continued for some time on this assumption; and nobody was given an opportunity to refute it and to show that the memo was from Mr. Carter to Clayton Lane, at one time an officer of the institute.

The memorandum itself was perfectly innocent. And this episode well illustrates the method of your subcommittee in striving to mislead public opinion. Evidently some members of this subcommittee would be glad to see me hung for the nonexistent crimes of someone else whose initials happen to be the same as mine.

On August 2, 1951, a self-confessed ex-spy, Mrs. Hede Massing, testified before your subcommittee that I was a Communist. I wrote your subcommittee August 12 disproving this charge and saying in part: "For the one-thousandth time I completely and categorically deny that I am or ever have been a Communist. My numerous disagreements on fundamental points with Communist and Soviet doctrines, such as those regarding philosophy, civil liberties, the Tito controversy, and the aggression of the North Koreans in 1950, show clearly that I rely on my own independent thinking and follow nobody's line. I am a radical American dissenter carrying on as best I can the dissenting tradition of my ancestors who came over on the Mayflower."

I requested your subcommittee to enter the above statement into its official records. But I did not even receive an acknowledgement of my letter.

From its record, Mr. Senator, it seems to me that your subcommittee is constantly encouraging the violation of the Ninth Commandment, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." It is turning representative government into government by misrepresentation. It is causing the American people to lose faith in their democratic institutions and is thereby doing more to undermine the political system of the United States than all the Communists who have ever existed in this country.

Other congressional investigating committees, of both House and Senate, have behaved just as scandalously. The procedures of such committees ought to be revised by law in order to guarantee defendant witnesses, organizations, and other victims their legitimate rights and a fair hearing. The new rules should apply whether bankers or teachers, labor leaders or Communists, liberals or independents, Republicans or Democrats are being investigated.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me earnestly request that in the interests of the truth you enter this letter in the official records of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Internal Security as my refutation of the untrue accusations made against me at its hearings.

Very truly yours,

CORLISS LAMONT.

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with Mr. Lamont's letter the chairman desires to insert in the record at this time the reply of the chairman of this committee dated September 19, 1951, addressed to Mr. Corliss Lamont and signed by the chairman of this committee. Those letters will be inserted in the record so as to become a part of the record of this hearing.

(The letter referred to is as follows:)

SEPTEMBER 19, 1951.

Mr. CORLISS LAMONT,
New York 27, N. Y.

DEAR MR. LAMONT: I have your letter of September 15, 1951, which I notice you have released to the press.

I take note of the fact which you impart in your letter that your father, Thomas W. Lamont, contributed $14,700 to the Institute of Pacific Relations during the period 1925–48 and that he took an active interest in the institute and in the Far East. I also note that you point out that your own six donations to the institute totaled only $800 by contrast.

I would like to point out, however, that you are wrong in your statement that this committee has never once mentioned your father's name in its hearings. In fact, the only substantial testimony involving either you or your father concerned an episode which took place in 1945. As you must know, if you read the record, this episode involved an effort made by Mr. Owen Lattimore and Mr. E. C. Carter of the Institute of Pacific Relations to induce your father, Thomas W. Lamont, through you, to sign a draft prepared by Mr. Lattimore in answer to an article that appeared in the Reader's Digest by J. B. Powell and Max Eastman. Testimony showed that Mr. Lattimore prepared a draft of an answer after consultation with Mr. T. A. Bisson and made arrangements to have it published in the name of some prominent American. According to testimony, they selected your father, Thomas W. Lamont, as a person who might sign the article. Arrangements for the carrying out of this plan, according to testimony and documents introduced into the record, were made through you. When your father declined to have his name signed to the article, this committee took especial care to bring out his refusal to do so.

It is also to be noted that the committee and the staff questioned Mr. Carter at length on the unusual language used in the letter from Mr. Carter to Mr. Lattimore who were admittedly good friends. The letter of June 19, 1945, reads in part:

"DEAR OWEN: Here is a typed copy of the draft you handed me yesterday. Late last evening I went up to the One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Street and saw the son. I discovered that, alas, his father left yesterday for Maine and probably will be gone all summer. I explained the general situation to the son and said that I would like his advice as to who would be the best single person or group of three or four to sign such a letter. He made some academic suggestions and then finally suggested the possibility of his father. He thought it would better for me to approach him than for him to do so, though he said the chances weren't very good because his father is fatigued and doesn't usually like to take on extra burdens during his holiday. He also confirmed what I suspected, that the father likes to do his own writing. I am, however, prepared in 2 or 3 days to send the draft to him with as strong and tactful a letter as I can write on the off-chance that he might be will to do something. * * *

"EDWARD C. CARTER."

I believe if you will read or, if you have already done so, reread that testimony you will find that the committee was simply trying to bring out the facts, and the incidence of your name and your father's name was dictated by the underlying circumstances and by nothing else.

With respect to the second point you make in your letter, therein you accuse the committee of dishonesty to you. The record you refer to is as follows:

"Mr. MANDEL: I have here a footnote dated November 5, 1948, taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. 'CL from ECC'. 'CL' may be Corliss Lamont, and 'ECC' may be E. C. Carter."

Two letters "CL from ECC" were introduced into the record at this point and there was no significance whatever attached to the identity of the "CL."

As you must know, it was the habit of the Institute of Pacific Relations to refer to individuals in the various memoranda by their initials only. The assumption that it may have been Corliss Lamont was without significance and represented a mere guess on the part of the research director as to the addressee therein. Certainly there was no invidious connotation drawn from this conclusion. However, inasmuch as you point out that the "CL" is Clayton Lane and not Corliss Lamont, your statement of this fact will be cross-indexed to that testimony.

As for the fact that you have been identified before this committee as a Communist, I call attention to the fact that this committee has made no findings nor drawn any conclusions from the sworn testimony before it.

As you request, your letter is being put into the official record.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, the Senator from Michigan has received a letter from Henry A. Wallace, and I do not know whether other members of the committee have also received it, but I would ask that that be inserted in the record also. I will turn it over to the committee.

---

[1] See p. 574, pt. 2.

The CHAIRMAN. As regards the letter to which Senator Ferguson refers, that letter and the reply will be inserted also.

(The letters referred to are as follows:)

SEPTEMBER 13, 1951.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
South Salem, N. Y.

MY DEAR HENRY: Upon my return from Turkey, I found your letter of August 25 which had been previously acknowledged by my secretary.

If you would permit me to do so, I shall be very glad to place your letter in the official record of the committee.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

SOUTH SALEM, N. Y., August 25, 1951.

Hon. HOMER FERGUSON,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FERGUSON: In a UP report of August 22 you are quoted as saying that much of the Budenz testimony was hearsay. Therefore I am moved to call your attention to the Budenz testimony on August 23 before the Senate Internal Security Committee to the effect that I was under the influence of Communists (Lattimore and Vincent, according to Budenz) on my trip to China in 1944.

For your information I may say that Lattimore was sent along on the trip not as a member of my personal staff but as a representative of OWI at the instance of Elmer Davis and Roosevelt. He was an expert on the nomadic tribes and occasionally was helpful as an interpreter but he had nothing whatever to do with my report to President Roosevelt or with my communication to President Roosevelt on June 28, 1944.

The person who had by far the greatest influence on me was a Republican, Ambassador to China, Hon. Clarence E. Gauss. You may remember that in the fall of 1945 Senator Hart, of Connecticut, was urging him for the Republican place on the Export-Import Bank. It was at instance of Gauss that I reported to Roosevelt that in spite of Chiang's weaknesses as a leader that at the moment we had no alternative to the support of Chiang.

It was at Chiang's instance that I sent a message from Kunming to Roosevelt on June 28, 1944, suggesting the name of General Wedemeyer as liaison between Roosevelt and Chiang. While Vincent did not inspire this suggestion he was cognizant of what was in my cable and did not in any way object.

On December 15, 1945, the Honorable Patrick Hurley, recently resigned as Ambassador to China, told me in the presence of Herbert Brownell that he never had any quarrel with me with regard to the Chinese situation.

I thought you ought to have these facts in view of the Budenz testimony.

With cordial regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

HENRY A. WALLACE.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have a letter from Mr. Carter addressed to me which I think should go in the record. It is very short. Mr. Mandel, will you read that very briefly?

Mr. MANDEL. It is a letter from Edward C. Carter dated September 6, 1951 [reading]:

DEAR MR. MORRIS: In my testimony some weeks ago I believe that I stated that Miss Elsie Fairfax Cholmeley was a cousin of Christopher Chancellor, the present head of Reuters. My wife tells me that this is inaccurate. It seems that when the Chancellor children were young they went to stay for long periods in Yorkshire at the Cholomeley's home. It was because of this intimate relationship under the same roof that I made the mistake of thinking they were cousins.

I believe that the mistake is quite unimportant, but I want to correct it.

Mr. MORRIS. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we allow that letter to go into the record as a correction of Mr. Carter's own testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be inserted.

(The letter referred to is as follows:)

NEW YORK CITY, September 6, 1951.

Mr. ROBERT MORRIS,
Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRIS: In my testimony some weeks ago I believe that I stated that Miss Elsie Fairfax Cholmeley was a cousin of Christopher Chancellor, the present head of Reuters. My wife tells me that this is inaccurate. It seems that when the Chancellor children were young they went to stay for long periods in Yorkshire at the Cholmeley's home. It was because of this intimate relationship under the same roof that I made the mistake of thinking they were cousins.

I believe that the mistake is quite unimportant but I want to correct it.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.[1]

Senator FERGUSON. When it is printed in the record, if it is possible, could this not be put in at that place so that it will correct the record without too much trouble? Has it already been printed?

Mr. SOURWINE. Would it be satisfactory if that were cross-indexed back to it?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; so that at least it would be clear that the correction was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. There is one other letter that the War Department has asked us to put into our record. It concerns the testimony of General Willoughby. It is not very important, but I think inasmuch as the Army has requested that it should go in, we could put it into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be inserted in the record.

Mr. MORRIS. That letter is dated August 15, 1951, from Miles Reber, major general, GSC.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

(The letter referred to is as follows:)

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF LEGISLATIVE LIAISON,
Washington, D. C., August 15, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Internal Security,
Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: In connection with the recent testimony of General Willoughby before your committee pertaining to his official report on the Sorge case, it is respectfully requested that the following facts in connection with his report be included in the record of the hearings of your committee.

Copies of all consecutive reports and exhibits pertaining to the Sorge case received by the Assistant Chief of Staff, G–2, Department of the Army, from the Assistant Chief of Staff, G–2, FECOM, were distributed to the FBI, CIA, and State Department between the dates of March 9, 1949, and November 22, 1950. No reports or exhibits to the Sorge case have been received since November 22, 1950.

On behalf of the Secretary of the Army, may I suggest that this letter be made a part of the record of hearings in this case. Your cooperation in such action will be very much appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

MILES REBER,
Major General, GSC,
Chief of Legislative Liaison.

---

[1] See p. 51, pt. 1.

Mr. MORRIS. Tomorrow, Senator McCarran, we have General Fortier who is theater intelligence commander in the Far East Command. He will be our witness tomorrow. That will be at 10 o'clock or 9 o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. I think it can be 10 o'clock. It is very difficult to convene at 9 o'clock. I think we will be able to meet at 10 o'clock. I have discussed it with the leader and I think it will be all right to proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. General Fortier is under subpena to appear here at 9 o'clock. May I inform him that he may come in at 10?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The committee is recessed until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Whereupon, at 12:10 p. m., the committee recessed to be reconvened at 10 a. m. Thursday, September 20, 1951.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10 a. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Senator Pat McCarran (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Eastland, Ferguson, Jenner, and Watkins.

Also present: Senator McCarthy.

J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Are you ready to proceed, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Please stand and be sworn, General.

You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

General FORTIER. I do.

TESTIMONY OF BRIG. GEN. L. JOSEPH FORTIER, UNITED STATES ARMY (RETIRED), McLEAN, VA.

Mr. MORRIS. General Fortier, will you give your full name and address to the reporter, please?

General FORTIER. Louis Joseph Fortier, brigadier general, United States Army, retired, Spring Hill Road, McLean, Va.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present military status?

General FORTIER. United States Army, retired.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your last military assignment, General?

General FORTIER. Director of Theater Intelligence Division of the Far East Command.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you relinquish that command?

General FORTIER. I sailed from Japan in October, the middle of October 1950. I was the Director of Theater Intelligence Division until some time in September 1950.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe briefly the nature of your assignment, General Fortier, at that time?

General FORTIER. From around the 1st day of February 1949 until September 1950 I was in charge of the Theater Intelligence Division under G–2, Far East Command, GHQ, Tokyo.

Mr. Morris. Will you describe for us generally the functions that you had to perform in that post?

General Fortier. As Director of this Division, my job was that of observing, studying the capabilities of any external threat to the Far East Command. In other words, I was concerned with any potential outside enemy that might threaten the security of the Far East Command.

Mr. Morris. As such, General, did you take recognition of the development of Red China?

General Fortier. Besides observing the capabilities of the Soviets in that area, probably my greatest interest was that of watching the development in China.

Mr. Morris. Had you been interested in communism in China as a professional matter, General Fortier?

General Fortier. I had been in and out of Intelligence for the last 14 years and, as a matter of fact, ever since 1921–23 when I took a master of science degree in political science, in which I specalized on the problems arising from the Versailles Treaty, I have been closely observing the development of Soviet Russia and communism in general.

Mr. Morris. So it is your testimony that while you held this position you were concerned with the development and the consolidation of communism on the mainland of China?

General Fortier. Yes, sir; I was.

Senator Ferguson. Would that not be right in line with your duties if you were to look into the questions that might be a threat to your command? Communism in China could be a threat to the command in Tokyo, could it not?

General Fortier. Yes, sir.

May I explain this? That whereas I had the division that was charged with the external security, in other words, a threat from outside, there was another division of G–2 which was charged with the internal security. My primary interest was watching the development in China and seeing the advance of communism and Mao Tse-tung's forces in China.

Mr. Morris. General, did you ever have occasion to brief important leaders of the United States Government as an adviser to Japan?

General Fortier. It was what we call in the service a standard operating procedure that whenever any distinguished representative of the United States Government came to Tokyo, he was given a briefing as to the situation as we saw it and in turn we endeavored to obtain from him his views, or the Washington view if he came from Washington.

Mr. Morris. That was standard operating procedure?

General Fortier. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Do you recall a visit that Ambassador at Large Philip C. Jessup made to Japan in late 1949 or early 1950?

General Fortier. Yes, I do.

Mr. Morris. Will you relate the circumstances to this committee, please?

General Fortier. As I recall it, Mr. Jessup came to Japan, to Tokyo, in the early days of January 1950. It was just about the time that we had gotten word that Britain had recognized Communist China. We gave Mr. Jessup the normal briefing that was given to visiting people from Washington. And it so happened, the instance that Mr. Morris is referring to, that during one of the intermissions, I found myself alone with Mr. Jessup——

The CHAIRMAN. Found yourself where?

General FORTIER. Standing next to him in the conference room, and I put the following question to him. I said: "When will we recognize Communist China?"

Senator FERGUSON. You knew at that time he was connected with the State Department of the United States Government?

General FORTIER. Yes, sir. He was there as an ambassador with that rank.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why did you put the question that way, in the affirmative, General?

General FORTIER. I had been very much concerned about Britain recognizing Communist China.

Senator FERGUSON. Had he been briefed on that question? Was that mentioned in the briefing?

General FORTIER. I don't recall that it was. We had a set briefing that involved our views on Asia as a whole; that is, on the periphery of the Far East Command. That briefing was usually given by General Willoughby who was G–2.

Senator FERGUSON. You usually had around the table more than General Willoughby and yourself, did you not?

General FORTIER. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That is, as I recall, your briefing form.

General FORTIER. All the key staff officers of GHQ Far East Command were present at this time.

Senator FERGUSON. You do not know whether that question was raised in the briefing?

General FORTIER. I don't think it was, as a matter of fact.

Senator EASTLAND. What did Mr. Jessup tell you?

General FORTIER. Mr. Jessup said, "Well, in about 2 or 3 weeks."

Mr. MORRIS. Was it as a categorical statement?

General FORTIER. It is a little bit difficult for me to remember his exact words as to whether it was a categorical statement or not, but I do remember that I picked up the statement and I argued with Mr. Jessup and told him that I thought it would be a grave error if we recognized Communist China.

Senator EASTLAND. Why did you think it would be a grave error?

General FORTIER. I thought it would be a grave error for the following reason: that as far as I knew never in its history had China been consolidated under one particular regime or one head. China had always had these regional groups and throughout the history of China there had been an attempt made to consolidate it, but never with success.

Having followed the development in China, in Communist China, and seeing Mao Tse-tung's army overrun the key areas, and feeling that Mao Tse-tung was being aided and abetted by the Russians, I felt that Mao Tse-tung had a very fine chance of consolidating that country for once under a regime that would be inimical to us and against the best interests of the United States.

Senator EASTLAND. If we recognized them?

General FORTIER. Yes; if we recognized the country and gave them that moral and political support that would be received by them should we grant recognition.

Senator FERGUSON. What did Jessup say about that?

General FORTIER. Mr. Jessup said, "Well, we must face facts." I am not putting in quotes and end quotes now. I am giving you my recollection on this. He said, "We must face facts. After all, Mao Tse-tung's armies have overrun the vast portion, in fact the key areas of China. They are in the process of reestablishing law and order and the mere fact that we should recognize them does not mean we approve either of the character of their government or of the nature of it. In arriving at a decision as to recognition or nonrecognition, the criteria should be whether the government that has come in has established sovereignty, has control of the majority of the country, and is in the process of reestablishing law and order."

Senator EASTLAND. Had they consolidated China at that time?

General FORTIER. In my opinion, no.

Senator EASTLAND. Had they consolidated their position in China when you left Japan?

General FORTIER. In my opinion, no.

Senator EASTLAND. Have they consolidated China today?

General FORTIER. In my opinion, no.

Senator EASTLAND. You think recognition by this country would do much to consolidate communism in China?

General FORTIER. I certainly do.

Senator FERGUSON. You told Jessup that?

General FORTIER. I told him substantially that.

About that time, someone else came in. Here was this conference room and the conversation was interrupted and never came to a final conclusion.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you we had an agreement with Great Britain that after recognition by Britain that we would recognize China?

General FORTIER. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he mention anything about the fact of Britain's recognition?

General FORTIER. He did not, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Right there, as a general in intelligence and from your sources of information and your feel of the atmosphere and general knowledge, did you not think that there had been an understanding between this country and Great Britain that Great Britain's recognition of Communist China would be followed by our recognition?

General FORTIER. That is a rather difficult question to answer. I prefer to give you the atmosphere.

Senator EASTLAND. Was that not your judgment, General, and is not that the reason you asked Mr. Jessup the question you did?

General FORTIER. Well, some time in October or November 1949, I had become so much concerned with the fact that Britain might recognize Communist China that I had made a study for my own satisfaction of the situation as faced by the British in Hong Kong in 1941, in December, when the Japanese invaded Hong Kong, and the situation as existed in 1949, late 1949.

I studied it from a political, economic, military, and psychological point of view, I drafted mainly for my own information and that of my immediate entourage, a study in which I concluded that while it would be a great error should Britain recognize Communist China, I feared very much they would and that possibly the economic factor would be the determining one because there was no question but that there had been a terrific increase in trade through Hong Kong between 1948 and 1949.

To answer Senator Eastland's question, I have no information, direct evidence, on which to base any deal between the United States and Britain. On the other hand, I feared, you might say, that the United States would follow a recognition by Britain, and if I remember correctly, either Britain had just recognized Communist China, at the time I spoke to Mr. Jessup, or I had obtained some information that they would do so shortly. I believe that is what prompted my questioning of Mr. Jessup, the fact that a day or two before there had been some sort of an official announcement that Britain had recognized Communist China.

Senator EASTLAND. You were worried about Formosa, too?

General FORTIER. I was worried we might follow suit.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you get his personal opinion, or was he speaking, that the Government was going to do this?

General FORTIER. No, sir. This was a man to man conversation between Jessup and me.

Senator FERGUSON. But it was his personal idea that it should be recognized?

General FORTIER. Senator, the entire conversation——

Senator FERGUSON. Because you were giving him your personal argument and he was giving his.

General FORTIER. I feel he was.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the way it impressed you at the time?

General FORTIER. Yes. The whole conversation did not last more than 2 or 3 minutes, as you can well understand. We were having this conference and about every 50 minutes there would be a 10-minute intermission. It was in one of them I tackled him on that subject.

Senator EASTLAND. Were you afraid of the loss of Formosa, too?

General FORTIER. I was very much concerned with that.

Senator EASTLAND. Why were you concerned with that?

General FORTIER. Because I shared the view that Formosa is a key area—I do not like to use the word "vital" because the word has been overworked, but that Formosa lies between the Philippines and Japan and if it fell in enemy hands it would be a very serious threat to either country.

Senator EASTLAND. Would it not put Japan in a nutcracker between the islands we have given Russia on the north and those islands south of Japan?

General FORTIER. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Were there many airfields on Formosa?

General FORTIER. Yes, sir; there are.

Senator EASTLAND. Did the Far East Command have trouble with the State Department in getting in Formosa, or did the United States State Department attempt to keep generals in the Far East Command away from Formosa?

General FORTIER. Well, the correct answer to that is I know of no important official of GHQ who was ever barred admittance to Formosa.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you not have to resort to subterfuges to get in?

General FORTIER. I think the Senator is referring to the fact that there was at times a tendency to scrutinize the group from GHQ that had requested admission to Formosa, and I will say, Senator, that it was based largely, at least from the information we obtained, on the lack of hotel reservations and facilities there.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you not think that was a subterfuge, General?

General FORTIER. In my particular case, when I went to Formosa, every one in GHQ knew, of course, of my particular job, that of Director of Theater Intelligence Division, and the United States Government had its set-up in Formosa, including military, air, and naval attachés. At least, theoretically, any information that we desired concerning Formosa could have been obtained through those sources.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you not have to resort to subterfuge to get in Formosa? I want you to answer that question.

General FORTIER. I don't know whether I had to or not, but I did.

Senator EASTLAND. What was that subterfuge?

Senator FERGUSON. Why do you hesitate on this?

General FORTIER. Because, if I seem to hesitate it may have been in this particular instance being referred to that it was overplayed. I have no reason to believe that had I applied formally for admission to Formosa that that would not have been granted me. I think it would, but on a particular occasion, I had heard certain reports about the defense capabilities of Formosa that bothered me. I wanted to get over there and get there in a hurry, because it was a time when actually it was a critical period. It was late May, early June, of 1950.

Senator FERGUSON. Why did you have to ask the State Department?

Senator EASTLAND. Please go ahead and answer the question.

General FORTIER. So, in order to get there and get there in a hurry, an arrangement was made whereby I was invited as a guest of a very high-ranking official in Formosa.

Senator EASTLAND. Who was that official?

General FORTIER. Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

Senator EASTLAND. Is it true that you sent word you were coming to the State Department representative and got in a plane and left before he had time to answer?

General FORTIER. That is correct, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Was it not general knowledge that the Far East command was not welcomed down at Formosa by the American State Department?

General FORTIER. Well, it was my impression that we were none too welcome, at least those of us in the intelligence field.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you ever hear of a General Merritt who was being sent subrosa by the State Department to organize an anti-Chiang faction in Formosa?

General FORTIER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You made a statement a little while ago, General, that when you attempted to go to Formosa you seemed to be "scrutinized." Why do you use the word "scrutinize"? Your going to Formosa was scrutinized. By whom and how?

General FORTIER. Did I use that word?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

General FORTIER. I believe I don't recall in a particular thing, but I said those officers who were involved in the intelligence field, their request for admission into Formosa would have been more closely scrutinized by the American representation in Formosa than would others. After all, let's be fair about this thing. The United States Government had a consul general, had United States Military, Air and Naval attachés in Formosa. Certainly, theoretically, we had appropriate United States representation in the place. If I was not satisfied with their views and reports and I desired my own estimate, why, you might attribute that to my own idiosyncrasy, that I preferred my own evaluation to that which I was receiving.

Senator FERGUSON. But, General, you don't claim that the military and attachés at an embassy are Intelligence officers, do you, in the sense of the word you were?

General FORTIER. No, sir; they are not.

Senator FERGUSON. Therefore, you had to obtain information out of Formosa. Why did you have to ask the State Department for permission to go to Formosa?

General FORTIER. Sir, one has to obtain a visa from the State Department or through the State Department channels to visit any foreign country. Formosa was not under the aegis of the Far East Command.

Senator FERGUSON. Is it true that civilians who went to Japan, for instance, connected with the United States Government and not connected with the State Department, had difficulty going to Formosa?

General FORTIER. Sir, that I would not know. I don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever hear that?

General FORTIER. That is the first I ever heard of that.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you get a visa from the State Department?

General FORTIER. I got one from the State Department representative. General MacArthur's chief political adviser, Mr. Seabald, was my channel of getting into any country. Through him, we could contact these various missions that were in Tokyo. For example, when I went to Hong Kong or Indochina, or to Korea, that was processed through the State Department representative in Tokyo.

Senator EASTLAND. That State Department representative in Tokyo told you how to get into Formosa, did he not?

General FORTIER. He aided and abetted me.

Senator EASTLAND. That was through subterfuge, to send a message to Formosa you were coming and get in your plane and go before they had time to answer. Is that true?

General FORTIER. That is the way I got in there; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. I might tell you, General, that I had a similar experience to get into Formosa after I was in the air in the plane. We had to obtain permission to go in instead of getting clearance from the State Department.

Is that not what you did? You got in the plane and got permission to land?

General FORTIER. I had anticipated that I would have trouble getting in.

The CHAIRMAN. Trouble from what source? From our authorities or from whom?

General FORTIER. Through Mr. Robert Strong, who was our consul general there.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out the relevancy of this testimony to our Institute of Pacific Relations inquiry.

Our records are replete with the association of Mr. Jessup to the Institute of Pacific Relations. So Mr. Mandel has compiled a list of the important positions that Mr. Jessup held in the Institute of Pacific Relations. I would like those introduced in the record at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. He has compiled them from what source?

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe your compilation?

Mr. MANDEL. According to Problems of the Pacific, 1933, Proceedings of the Fifth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations, held August 14 to 26, 1933, one of the conference members was Philip Jessup.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. The Institute of Pacific Relations.

Then, according to Problems of the Pacific, dated 1939, Proceedings of the Study Meeting of the Institute of Pacific Relations held at Virginia Beach, November 18 to December 2, 1939, page 273, one of the international officers of the Institute of Pacific Relations was Philip C. Jessup, who was also chairman of the Pacific Council.

Then, according to the Annual Report of the American Council of the IPR, 1938, page 58, Philip C. Jessup was vice chairman and a member of the board of trustees.

Then in the volume called War and Peace in the Pacific, A Preliminary Report of the Eighth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations held at Mont Tremblant, December 4 to December 14, 1942, page 159, Philip C. Jessup is listed as a conference member and as chairman of the Pacific Council.

Again in a volume called Security in the Pacific, A Preliminary Report of the Ninth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations held at Hot Springs, Va., January 6 to January 17, 1945, page 157, Philip C. Jessup is listed as a conference member; and, finally, we have a telegram addressed to Edward C. Carter from "Fred"——

Senator EASTLAND. Do you know who that Fred is?

Mr. MANDEL. It may be Field.

Senator EASTLAND. What is the date of that?

Mr. MANDEL. November 23, and the year is not given.

It says: "Approve nominations suggest Jessup for research chairman."

Mr. MORRIS. There is no other Fred on the staff of the Institute of Pacific Relations other than Fred Field?

Mr. MANDEL. None that I know of.

Senator EASTLAND. Have you any idea what year that is?

Mr. MANDEL. We can check it and establish the year from other correspondence.

Mr. MORRIS. When you do verify that, which we are not prepared to do now, verify the position that Mr. Jessup did hold as research chairman, you will be able to relate it to that telegram.

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I had another question of the witness. I wanted to ask whether or not it was a fact, to your knowledge, that in the Far East in the various embasssies there were rumors about the insecurity of the defense and the fact that Formosa was just ready for an overthrow of the Nationalist Government? That was back around the time you were talking about.

General FORTIER. There was considerable rumor and misgiving about the state of defense of Formosa in general.

To be very honest with you, that is the reason I was anxious to go down there.

Senator FERGUSON. To go down and see and get the facts?

General FORTIER. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know on October 26, I think that is the date, the United States Government sent a message to the Nationalist Government at Formosa that we would not give them any more military aid, and that was 1949?

General FORTIER. No, sir; I do not know that. I had heard they were not receiving any military aid, but I did not know of any message such as you spoke of.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not know that such a message was sent?

General FORTIER. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. To the Nationalist Government?

General FORTIER. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. How long did you stay in Formosa?

General FORTIER. As I recall, I stayed there 3 days.

Senator FERGUSON.. I assume you talked to General Sun?

General FORTIER. I did, at long length.

Senator FERGUSON. You had no trouble getting hotel space?

General FORTIER. I did not live in a hotel.

Senator FERGUSON. You lived in the palace?

General FORTIER. No; but I lived in a cottage, a very comfortable cottage in the mountains.

Senator FERGUSON. Near Chiang Kai-shek's place?

General FORTIER. Yes; where the generalissimo lived.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you not know they had plenty of space for visitors in Taipei?

General FORTIER. The facts are not quite that way, Senator. In late August 1950, I was the deputy chief of the Far East Command's survey group that made a complete, exhaustive study of Formosa. This was after the Korean war had broken out. This was in August 1950.

We sent a rather sizable group of officers and enlisted men to Formosa, to Taipei, to conduct the survey. We had, as I recall, something between 40 and 50 officers. We had considerable difficulty in finding——

Senator FERGUSON. But I am talking about the number of people you had in mind going down just to get information.

General FORTIER. Hotel accommodations——

Senator FERGUSON. I am not talking about the hotels; I am talking about the place that the former resident commissioner of Japan used as a guest house for visiting people.

General FORTIER. Sir, I am inclined to agree that hotel accommodations in Formosa were extremely limited, that one or two individuals might not have been taken care of would not stand too close scrutiny. But if there were a group of 10 or 12 people——

Senator FERGUSON. If you tried to send a large mission over there; but that was not your purpose, was it? It was to get some man in there to get accurate information for you?

General FORTIER. The problem was to get just a few to obtain information.

Senator EASTLAND. The problem was for you to get in?

General FORTIER. I got in, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. General, it is just to get your full background in the record, but were you ever stationed in Yugoslavia?

General FORTIER. Yes, sir. I was military attaché to Yugoslavia from the latter part of May 1939 until I wrote my own orders to get out of there after the Germans had overrun the country.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you have anything to do with setting up the coup that overthrew the regency?

General FORTIER. Not that I had anything to do with it, but I was a very intimate friend of Gen. Bor Mirkovic, who was the deputy chief of aviation. He was the one who planned and implemented and executed the coup d'état on the 26th of March 1941. One of his lieutenants was Mikhailovich. I knew him quite intimately.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you know Tito?

General FORTIER. I did not know Tito.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think now it would be a grave mistake to recognize Red China?

General FORTIER. I do.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think now as you did in the past that it would consolidate them and give prestige and aid to them in their communism and their efforts as Communists?

General FORTIER. I do.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you feel very strongly about that?

General FORTIER. I have felt right along there were two things that might happen that would consolidate Communist China. One would be for Chiang Kai-shek to make a deal with Mao Tsetung and lend his support to Mao Tse-tung.

The other would be for us to recognize them. In so doing, then they would have the moral and the economic force that would be needed to consolidate the country.

Senator EASTLAND. Would an armistice in Korea help consolidate the Communist regime in China?

General FORTIER. I doubt that seriously.

Senator WATKINS. May I inquire when it was that you had this conversation with Ambassador Jessup?

General FORTIER. Sir, it was in the early winter of 1949–50. If I recall correctly, it was in early January of 1950. The date can be fixed by studying Mr. Jessup's itinerary when he made that Far East survey in the winter of 1949–50. I have not any access to any records to determine the exact date on which I spoke to him.

Senator WATKINS. It was at least before the outbreak of the Korean police action?

General FORTIER. Yes, sir. It was several months before the outbreak of the Korean war.

Senator WATKINS. I notice you refer to that as a "war." I said a police action.

General FORTIER. Well, a police action. I am sure it is a war to the man in there fighting.

Senator WATKINS. I quite agree with you.

This might be a bit far afield, but somewhere along the line, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to make some inquiry into what caused the United States to get out of Korea when we had our forces there, to get out when they moved back into Japan.

Do you know the situation with respect to what prompted us to get out of Korea at that time? I mean when we withdrew our forces.

General FORTIER. I would not have been too well informed on that. I may have seen the papers, in fact I probably did see the papers, in connection with it; but as I recall it, it was some United Nations agreement that by a certain date the United States would remove its forces from Korea. I went to Korea in April of 1949 and at that time we had a reinforced regiment there plus a number of instructors. By the 30th of June 1949, we had removed all troops from the area and had nothing but military advisers in a group.

Senator WATKINS. Do you know whether or not it was the recommendation of the Army that caused us to get out of Korea?

General FORTIER. I wouldn't know, sir. You can probably obtain that from National Defense.

Senator WATKINS. Would you inform the committee now without violating any classified information just what the situation was in Korea at the time we got out?

General FORTIER. From what point of view, sir?

Senator WATKINS. From the point of view of whether it was a wise or unwise move.

General FORTIER. In my opinion, it was a wise move for us to move out at that particular stage in the game. After all, a reinforced regiment is purely a token force. We would have been neither fish nor fowl with a reinforced regiment.

Senator WATKINS. Do you believe that the North Koreans or the Chinese would have attacked the United States forces even if they were only a token force?

General FORTIER. That, I do not. I do not believe they would have attacked us.

The CHAIRMAN. They were not making sporadic drives across the line before we moved out, or were they?

General FORTIER. Throughout the entire period there were border incidents.

Senator WATKINS. There were no actual attacks on American troops, however? All of the attacks occurred later on after the American troops had been withdrawn?

General FORTIER. There had been border incidents with the South Koreans even when we were there.

Senator FERGUSON. Almost weekly?

General FORTIER. Not against our forces.

Senator WATKINS. That was part of your investigation, to investigate any possible threat to the United States from North Korea, from China, and that particular section?

General FORTIER. When I went over there, it was to get the feel of the country, to study the capabilities, get information direct from the people on the ground as to what might be the North Korean capabilities. I did the same thing by traveling, for example, to the Kowloon-Hong Kong front. I went to Saigon and Hanoi and spent a week in Tonkin. I was a house guest there of the French deputy commanding general.

I studied the location of his advance posts and talked with his staff about the situation internally and externally in Indochina. We did not feel too secure about the whole situation there in the spring of 1950.

Senator WATKINS. What are you referring to now, just Korea?

General FORTIER. No, sir. This map that we had was showing more and more red. We were getting this encroachment on our command. Here were these four Japanese islands and Okinawa. The Reds were driving south. At first our attention had been drawn to the north around Hokkaido, but as it swept down, don't you see, here was our southern flank becoming more and more exposed. We had the responsibility for the Philippines, too.

So, naturally, anyone who is in the intelligence profession, and particularly one who had that special responsibility that I had, would concern himself with what was going on and where were the build-ups, what were the capabilities, where might they strike if they did strike.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you expect war to break out on one of those four fronts in 1950?

General FORTIER. To answer your question directly, sir, I was very, very much concerned. I was afraid. I had enough of an intuition that something was going to break out in the Far East that the record will show that I was constantly on the move traveling, trying to find out where it might break out.

Senator EASTLAND. Did Intelligence know where the Chinese divisions were concentrated?

General FORTIER. Yes, sir. We had very good information on where all these threats were, exactly how they were distributed. But I would like to say right here that to know what a potential enemy is capable of doing and to determine what he intended to do on the spur of the moment or at the last minute, those are two entirely different things.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was our potential enemy at that time that you were apprehensive?

General FORTIER. I was mostly apprehensive—well, of course, the Soviets never left my mind, and Mao Tse-tung and his forces.

The CHAIRMAN. It was in this atmosphere that you have described here that you discussed with Mr. Jessup as to when we might recognize Red China?

General FORTIER. Yes; it was. From around September 1949 until June 1950, to use the vernacular, I was "sweating it out" in the Far East Command.

Senator JENNER. When you talked to Jessup, he made his tour and inspection of Korea at that time?

General FORTIER. I think he was on his way out.

Senator JENNER. What did he say in regard to Korea?

General FORTIER. I did not discuss Korea with him.

Senator JENNER. Have you seen any statements he made to the American public upon his return to America about the situation in Korea being awfully peaceful over there and everything lovely?

General FORTIER. No, sir; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions, Senators?

Senator WATKINS. I would like to know if he can give us that information as to what the real situation in Korea was as far as the Army knew it just prior to the outbreak of this police action in Korea.

General FORTIER. We were quite well informed about the disposition of the North Korean forces, their strength, their armament. We knew their capabilities. We did not know on the morning of the 26th day of June 1950 at 4:30 a. m., or whatever time it was, they were going to jump off.

Senator WATKINS. Did you know in a general way an attack from that section was impending?

General FORTIER. Not any more so than any of these others; not any more so than it would have been against Formosa or Indochina.

Senator WATKINS. As a matter of fact, the indications were pretty strong there was likely to be an attack on Formosa, were they not?

General FORTIER. Yes, sir.

Senator WATKINS. And also Indochina?

General FORTIER. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. If it were put in the same category, it would be in the realm of a probable attack coming from that point?

General FORTIER. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. That was your business to find out?

General FORTIER. It was my business to find out.

Senator WATKINS. Did you evaluate the North Koreans as a danger to your security?

General FORTIER. Yes, we did; not as much so as the Chinese Communists.

Senator WATKINS. What I would like to know: Were you really caught flat-footed by the North Korean attack on South Korea?

General FORTIER. We were not surprised, but we were amazed. Let's put it that way.

To answer your question, I think the greatest surprise was what happened 2 days later when we got word we would intervene in that action.

Senator WATKINS. You were surprised at that?

General FORTIER. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. Why were you surprised at that?

General FORTIER. I don't know why. I am just telling you.

Senator WATKINS You say you were surprised. There must have been some reason for it.

General FORTIER. In the first place, we had no responsibility in the Far East Command for Korea at all, as you probably well know.

Mr. MORRIS. You had no authority whatever to send troops in there at the time?

General FORTIER. No.

Senator JENNER. Was it not a determined fact among the high command that Korea was miiitarily untenable?

General FORTIER. I didn't share that view.

Senator JENNER. Was that not the view?

General FORTIER. I don't know of any official expression that ever came from the Far East Command to that effect, but I think that it has been shown that South Korea is tenable and those of us who were there in the days of the latter part of June, July, and August learned what America can do with very few resources with every one playing as one team and as one coordinated unit.

Senator EASTLAND. How many American divisions would you think it would take to bring the Korean war to a speedy conclusion?

General FORTIER. We have had in the military service a rule of thumb in determining the number of divisions to hold its own against a potential enemy, and that has been usually a division for every ten miles of front. Korea happens to be a peninsula. If I recall correctly, it is about 150 miles wide. With the superiority of naval forces we have guarding either flank, with the Air Force that we have, if we had a total of 12 to 15 divisions in there, I do not think there would be any question about the liquidation of the Korean conflict successfully.

Senator EASTLAND. We could go to the Yalu River?

General FORTIER. You are asking me to pit my knowledge of military strategy—in other words, you are shifting my role, sir. I have been playing in the role of an intelligence officer. Now I am to become the commander in chief.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Morris, you may proceed with your questions.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we had commenced to show the association between Mr. Jessup about whom we have had testimony today, and the Institute of Pacific Relations. We had set forth, to a partial extent, Mr. Jessup's association with the IPR.

I would like to put in in detail, Mr. Chairman, some of the roles that he did have in some of the more important conferences of the Institute of Pacific Relations. For instance, the IPR holds a triennial conference which is one of the features of that organization, one of the principal means of expression.

I would like to show he had an important role certainly during the two conferences that were held during the war, the one at Mont Tremblant in 1942 and then again in the Hot Springs convention in 1945.

Mr. Mandel, will you put in the record Mr. Jessup's association with those two conferences?

The CHAIRMAN. From what are you reading, please?

Mr. MANDEL. This was formerly entered into the record as exhibit No. 110 on August 14, 1951. It is a letter dated June 15, 1942, from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, headed: "E. C. C. from W. W. L:". The memorandum reads as follows:

> In response to your request I have hastily jotted down a number of suggestions for the American group at the conference. It's a long list, of course, but I believe we should add to it considerably, and then get competent advice—say that of Currie, Barnes, and Jessup—on elimination. This list runs too much in the regular groove as regards nongovernment people. So far as Washington is concerned, we need more intimate knowledge as to who really are in the key positions.

Then a list of names follows.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like that reintroduced in the record and one of the points is to show that the leaders of the Institute of Pacific Relations, E. C. C. and W. W. L., were consulting at this time Currie, Barnes, and Jessup for the makeup of the representation to that particular conference. As such, I would like it in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. For that purpose it will be inserted again.

(The document referred to previously marked "Exhibit No. 110," was reintroduced and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 110

JUNE 15, 1942.

E. C. C. from W. W. L.

In response to your request I have hastily jotted down a number of suggestions for the American group at the conference. It's a long list, of course, but I believe we should add to it considerably, and then get competent advice—say that of Currie, Barnes, and Jessup—on elimination. This list runs too much in the regular groove as regards non-Government people. So far as Washington is concerned, we need more intimate knowledge as to who really are in the key positions.

GOVERNMENT

Gruening, Ernest H., Governor, Alaska.
Bean, Louis, Board of Economic Warfare.
Perkins, Milo, Board of Economic Warfare.
Riefler, Winfield, Board of Economic Warfare.
Shoemaker, James H., Board of Economic Warfare.
Stone, W. T., Board of Economic Warfare.
Wallace, H. A., Vice President, Board of Economic Warfare.
Staley, Eugene, Bureau of the Budget.
Barnes, Joseph, Coordinator of Information.
Bunche, Ralph, Coordinator of Information.
Fahs, C. B., Coordinator of Information.
Hayden, J. R., Coordinator of Information.
Wheeler, Leslie, Department of Agriculture.
Ropes, E. C., Department of Commerce, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Trade.
Berle, A. A., Department of State.
Davies, Joseph, Department of State.
Grady, Henry, Department of State.
Hiss, Alger, Department of State.
Hornbeck, S. K., Department of State.
Sayre, Francis B., Department of State.
Stinebower, L. D., Department of State.
Vince, Jacob, Department of the Treasury.
White, H. D., Department of the Treasury.
Gulick, Luther H., National Resources Planning Board.
Emerson, Rupert, Office of Price Administration.
Nathan, Robert, War Production Board.
Currie, Lauchlin, White House
Lubin, I., White House

OTHERS

Bassett, Arthur, American Red Cross
Bates, Searle, International Missionary Council
Beukema, Col. Herman, West Point
Binder, Carroll, Chicago Daily News
Clapper, Raymond, Washington columnist
Cowles, Gardner, Des Moines Register & Tribune
Dennett, Tyler, historian
Dollard, Charles, Carnegie Corp.
Emeny, Brooks, Foreign Affairs Council, Cleveland
Field, Frederick V., New York
Herod, W. R., International General Electric
Jessup, Prof. Philip C., Columbia University
Kizer, Benjamin H., Pacific Northwest Regional Planning Commission
Lochhead, Archie, Universal Trading Corp.
Luce, Henry, Time, Inc.
Molyneaux, Peter, Texas Weekly
Moore, Harriet L., American Russian Institute
Schwellenbach, Judge Lewis B., United States District Court, Spokane, Wash. (ex-Senator)

Sproul, Allan, Federal Reserve Bank, New York
Sweetland, Monroe, National CIO Committee for American and Allied War Relief
Voorhis, Jerry, House of Representatives
Wilkie, Wendell, attorney
Willits, Joseph H., Rockefeller Foundation
Wilson, C. E., General Electric
Yarnell, Admiral H. E., United States Navy, retired

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have something else?

Mr. MANDEL. Then we have former exhibit No. 104 from the open hearings of August 14, 1951.

It is a letter from the IPR files dated November 30, 1942. Memorandum to Mr. Carter, copy for Mr. Jessup, Mont Tremblant. It reads as follows:

In response to your request for designations of American Council members of Mont Tremblant committees, I am putting down the following suggestions.

These should be reconsidered at Mont Tremblant after checking with Jessup so that they are merely tentative for the present.

The Pacific Council—Jessup, the regular American Council member, will be in the chair so presumably another American should represent the Council. I believe Kizer is the best choice.

Program committee—Currie would be an excellent member, with Field as alternate. Currie may not wish to be burdened with this, however, and I understand you have Field in mind as program committee secretary, which would be excellent. The final decision here I would like to leave until later. * * *"

That is a partial excerpt from the exhibit.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I notice that this exhibit and the previous one have already been introduced in the record at previous hearings.

I believe Mr. Mandel gave the previous hearing dates.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MANDEL. This is former exhibit No. 132, used in open hearings on August 16, 1951. It comes from the files of the IPR and is on the letterhead of the Columbia University, addressed to Mr. Raymond Dennett, secretary, American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, from Philip C. Jessup, and I read portions of this exhibit:

In regard to the delegation at the conference, I am not sure what you have in mind about a secretariat for the delegation. I do not recall that we have ever made the kind of distinction which you seem to have in mind for the American delegation. The Pacific Council provides a secretariat for the conference and some of our people have been taken by the Pacific Council for that purpose. Maybe I miss the point and if so I wish you would let me know.

Mr. MORRIS. This is Mr. Jessup writing?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

The following are people whom I would include: Benjamin Kizer, Brayton Wilbur, Eric Johnston, Will Clayton, George A. Morison, Mansfield Freeman or J. A. MacKay, Lauchlin Currie, Dean Acheson, John Carter Vincent, Harry White, Rupert Emerson, Owen Lattimore, W. A. M. Burden, Abbot Low Moffat, Robert J. Watt, Len DeCaux, Col. Carl Faymonville, Colonel Shoemaker, Virginius Dabney or R. E. Freeman, Walter Lippmann, Sumner Welles, Joseph Barnes, Frederick V. Field, Harold Sprout, Grayson Kirk, Adam Comstock Notestein.

Further:

In reply to yours of the 31st, I do not know Coons, but have no objection to him. I doubt if Wilson would add much but Alger Hiss would be fine.

There is a pencil note at the bottom which says: "Frank Coe of FEA also good."

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to point out in that list of names are names of 10 people identified before the committee as being members of the Communist organization. I think it would be proper to make that comment as that exhibit number 132 was introduced in the open hearings of August 16, 1951.

The CHAIRMAN. I think this should go in the record at this point, notwithstanding the fact that the excerpts are already in.

Mr. MORRIS. May it be incorporated in its entirety?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

(Exhibit No. 132 is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 132

Mr. RAYMOND DENNETT,
Secretary, American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations,
New York 22, N. Y.

DEAR RAY: In regard to the delegation at the conference, I am not sure what you have in mind about a secretariat for the delegation. I do not recall that we have ever made the kind of distinction which you seem to have in mind for the American delegation. The Pacific council provides a secretariat for the conference and some of our people have been taken by the Pacific council for that purpose. Maybe I miss the point and if so I wish you would let me know.

The following are people whom I would include: Benjamin Kizer, Brayton Wilbur, Eric Johnston, Will Clayton, George A. Morison, Mansfield Freeman or J. A. MacKay, Lauchlin Currie, Dean Acheson, John Carter Vincent, Harry White, Rupert Emerson, Owen Lattimore, W. A. M. Burden, Abbot Low Moffat, Robert J. Watt, Len DeCaux, Col. Carl Faymonville, Colonel Shoemaker, Virginius Dabney or R. E. Freeman, Walter Lippmann, Sumner Welles, Joseph Barnes, Frederick V. Field, Harold Sprout, Grayson Kirk, Ada Comstock Notestein.

In reply to your of the 31st, I do not know Coons, but have no objection to him. I doubt if Wilson would add much but Alger Hiss would be fine.

I definitely would exclude Hunter on the ground that we have too much of the Kizer group; I would exclude Captain Pence because he is now out of the Occupied Areas Section. If either of them were available I would suggest Commodore Vanderbilt or Commodore Stassen.

I suppose we may need to invite General McCoy for organizational purposes. I do not know anything about General Bissell. Yarnell should certainly come as a vice chairman and not as a member of the American delegation. Apropos your statement below "Military," on page II, I would get away from the idea of California naming a delegate.

Personally I would exclude Swing and would add to your press people Waymack, of Des Moines.

I would be careful that we do not get too stodgy a delegation but keep a balance. I think the above list is fairly good. Another Government man who would be new to us but very helpful because of his interest in native peoples and Pacific island government is John Collier, head of the Indian service and a fine person. Let me know what you hear from the others and we will see how things add up.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP C. JESSUP.

Frank Coe, of FEA, also good. [Penciled note.]

General FORTIER. I would like to have it quite clear that the Far East Command was not caught short on an external enemy. In other words, our function in General MacArthur's headquarters was to take care of the security, both external and internal, of the Far East Command. No attack came on Japan, no attack came on Okinawa that we had not foreseen or anticipated. In other words, we had no responsibility in the Far East Command or for the intelligence between South and North Korea. There was a State Department representation there in South Korea and likewise there was a mission functioning under the Joint Chiefs of Staff in South Korea. It was not the MacArthur mission by any means.

Senator WATKINS. The reason I asked the question about that was because it had been reported that the Far East Command had been caught napping.

The CHAIRMAN. May I say, and I think Senator Ferguson will confirm what I am about to say, that before the Appropriations Committee many months ago there was presented to us evidence that the Intelligence Department had full knowledge of what was going on and that they knew that munitions were being delivered from Russian boats into North Korea and that was also brought to the attention of the State Department and to the attention of the White House. That is testified before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate.

Senator FERGUSON. And the withdrawal of civilians away from the line.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. I merely wanted to give you an opportunity to explain that situation if you were caught napping or if you had any responsibility so that we would know about it.

Mr. MORRIS. Let the record show that Korea was not General Fortier's command. I hope that is understood.

General FORTIER. It was never my command. Korea was not under General MacArthur's command.

Senator FERGUSON. You did need some intelligence in order to do your own work out of both Formosa and Korea?

General FORTIER. And we got considerable intelligence from these other sources, occasionally to confirm on the ground that which was confirmed in cables and dispatches, which I think is a very reasonable reaction.

Mr. MORRIS. In reply to your question about the 10 people who have been identified as part of the Communist organization on that last list recommended by Mr. Jessup, I will point out that we have had testimony that Benjamin Kizer was a member of the Communist Party, testimony that Lauchlin Currie was associated with an espionage ring and gave vital military secrets to the Russian espionage system, the military secret being, in one case, the fact that the United States had broken the Soviet code.

Senator FERGUSON. May I inquire whether Currie is in the United States?

Mr. MORRIS. My information is he is in Colombia.

John Carter Vincent has been identified as a member; Harry Dexter White as a member of an espionage ring; Owen Lattimore as a member of the Communist organization; Len DeCaux as a member of the Communist Party; Alger Hiss as a member of the Communinst Party; Joseph Barnes as a member of the Communist Party; Frederick V. Field as a member of the Communist Party, and Frank Coe as a member of the Communist Party.

We have had other evidence on some of the other people there, but none of it that would warrant any such conclusion as we can make about those 10.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Morris, have you any evidence that any salary or money is being paid to Mr. Lauchlin Currie furnished by the taxpayers of the United States Government?

Mr. MORRIS. I cannot answer that question, but that is one of the things we are inquiring about.

Senator FERGUSON. I ask now that we get that information as to whether or not taxpayers' money is being paid to Mr. Currie.

The CHAIRMAN. Whether he is on any payroll of the United States Government.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; or getting money that the taxpayers are furnishing.

Senator WATKINS. Directly or indirectly.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. I read a newspaper clipping last night. It would take me just 3 minutes to find it. It described his resignation from the World Bank and accepting the position with Colombia, and there was a related story about that.

Mr. Chairman, if you think it is appropriate, we could put in more associations of Mr. Jessup with the institute in the record at this time. Mr. Mandel is prepared to do so. For instance, his activity in the IPR bearing on the American Peace Mobilization. I wonder if you want that in the record now?

Senator FERGUSON. Why do you not insert that?

The CHAIRMAN. Please go on with your laying a foundation for each insertion.

Mr. MANDEL. I read exhibit 14 from the open hearing of July 26, 1951, being a telegram from Frederick V. Field, from Chicago, dated September 1, 1940, to Philip C. Jessup, as follows:

> I have been attending a peace congress of some 6,000 representatives from all parts of the country, labor, farm, and middle-class organization. This is a genuine peace movement through the interpretation of democracy. These people and our program represent what I have for long profoundly believed in. They are asking me to become the executive of a continuing organization, and I feel a deep conviction that I must accept. As the people I should be working for will meet to elect officers tomorrow. I must, despite obvious personal preference to postpone decision pending consultation with you and others, and as the executive must be presented to them, make an immediate affirmative decision. This show has been and will be smeared by the newspapers. I anticipate losing the respect of many present friends. These developments I regard as inevitable if we do the job in this country that was not done in France, etc. In view the inevitable criticism and misunderstanding, and because of my continued deep interest in the IPR welfare, I feel that I must, by this telegram, affirm my immediate resignation from all the IPR responsibilities that its officers wish to accept. Finally I must urgently hope for both personal and professional associations that you will reserve your own judgment until I can talk with you.

The CHAIRMAN. From whom was that and to whom, again, please?

Mr. MANDEL. This is from Frederick V. Field to Philip C. Jessup, dated September 1, 1940. He is referring to his acceptance of a position with the American Peace Mobilization which was organized at that time.

May I read at this point the statement of Attorney General Francis Biddle in reference to the gathering that Mr. Field was to be made an official of? He declares in regard to the American Peace Mobilization:

> It was formed in December of 1940 under the auspices of the Communist Party and the Young Communist League as a front organization designed to mold American opinion against participation in the war against Germany.

The second communication is a part of exhibit 14, introduced in open hearings on July 26, 1951. It purports to be minutes of a meeting of the executive committee of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations and it was taken from the files of the institute. Present, among others, was Philip C. Jessup, chairman, and Edward C. Carter. I read an excerpt:

The chairman read a long telegram which he had received from Mr. Frederick V. Field in Chicago on September 1, in which Mr. Field indicated that he had been called to the secretaryship of a new society which was being created to strengthen the forces of democracy during the coming critical years. He had a deep conviction that he was obligated to accept this new responsibility because the election of officers was taking place at that time. He felt it was necessary to accept despite his obvious personal preference to postpone decision pending consultation with Dr. Jessup and others. As he anticipated criticism and misunderstanding, his continued deep interest in the welfare of the Institute of Pacific Relations demanded, he felt, the affirmation of his immediate resignation from all IPR responsibilities. Dr. Jessup explained that he had subsequently talked at length with Mr. Field who explained in detail the reasons that had led him to accept the new position. Mr. Parker voiced the feelings of all present when he inquired whether Dr. Jessup felt that Mr. Field could not be persuaded to resume the secretaryship of the American Council. Dr. Jessup replied that he thought Mr. Field's decision was final. Under the circumstances it was moved that a minute be drafted indicating the committee's acceptance of the resignation with great regret. The minute should include an appropriate appreciation of the distinguished service which Mr. Field had rendered during 11 years of service with the American Council. The hope was to be expressed that when his new task was completed, it would be possible for him to resume active leadership in the work of the American Council.

That is an excerpt from the exhibit.

Mr. MORRIS. That has already been introduced in evidence.

Mr. MANDEL. Next is a letter memorandum from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated September 20, 1940, headed "WLH from ECC." I read this memorandum for the record:

For your private information I enclose a copy of a telegram which Field sent to Jessup on August 31 or September 1. Field telephoned me late on the afternoon of August 30 from Chicago saying that great pressure was being put on him to become secretary of the American Peace Mobilization. I told him that institutionally I hoped he could postpone a decision, but that if personally he decided it was his national duty to take the Chicago job, I would do everything I could to back him up. From Ellsworth early the next morning I sent him a wire urging him to postpone a decision for another week. I thought it was of the utmost importance that he should first consult Edith, Jessup, and his colleagues of the New York office.

The immediacy of the program, the pressure of the 20,000 attending the Chicago convention, and the very short time that was left before the Conscription Act would be voted in Congress made him feel, however, that he must make an immediate and affirmative decision. He took a thousand people from Chicago to Washington where they bombarded Congressmen for several days and I think Fred believes that the conscription bill got 100 less votes in Congress than it otherwise would. He is now working night and day with a large staff and thousands of backers throughout the country, to get the conscription bill repealed or nullified.

He expects at any moment he may go to prison but desires to work full steam ahead until the moment of arrest in a gigantic Nation-wide effort to launch a movement which will preserve our democratic institutions so that if we do have to go to war we will have something worth fighting for. He does not wish to have the United States imitate France.

For a considerable time he lived on benzedrine instead of sleep and feels, I think, that he is in exactly the same position as a man who is suddenly drafted to throw everything else over and join in the work of the national defense council or join the ranks. He was here for 2 days this week and has agreed next week to go into the whole question of the handbook. It is on his conscience, though I cannot make out whether it is on his conscience as much as it is on yours and mine.

I shall use your letter in my talk with him, so I don't know that there is any point in your writing him yet. I have asked Miss Greene to prepare for Fred, you, and me a very careful analysis of just how much progress has been made in quantity and quality and a detailed sketch of what still remains to be done. When we have this we will have to make a cost accounting of what would be required to finish the job. I am wondering whether I would be justified in telling Fred that he ought to consider giving whatever money is necessary to enable us to employ a staff to finish the book. Though I think he imagines he can give a little time to it each week, I personally do not think there is a ghost of a chance of his being able to give enough time to bring the book to a speedy conclusion.

Can you give me an estimate of what the project has cost us thus far, or should I get this from Miss Austern?

I heard Fred speak to an audience of 2,000 in the Manhattan Center a couple of nights ago. There must have been 5 minutes sustained cheering when he stood up before he could begin his speech. He has long wanted to be a part of a great mass movement. Now he is at the head of one. I think the Pacific will be a marginal interest from 1 to 5 years. Some day it may come back as the focus of his life, but there is no point in putting on any pressure at the present time.

If you have anything to add to your letter of September 18 on this matter, please send it to me by air mail.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom is that?

Mr. MANDEL. That is headed "WLH from ECC." There is no signature.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know who WLH is?

Mr. MORRIS. It is the practice, Mr. Chairman, of the institute to refer to their staff members by initials only. "WLH" is generally W. L. Holland, and "ECC" is generally E. C. Carter. That is almost without exception true.

Mr. MANDEL. I might quote from Attorney General Francis Biddle, who describes the organization.

The CHAIRMAN. What organization?

Mr. MANDEL. The American Peace Mobilization.

The most conspicuous activity of the American Peace Mobilization was the picketing of the White House which began in April 1941 in protest against lend-lease and the entire national defense program. On the afternoon of June 21, 1941, Frederick V. Field, national secretary, suddenly called off the picket line around the White House.

Here is a letter taken from the files of the Institute of Public Relations headed "Pacific Council, Institute of Pacific Relations" and coming from the Columbia University, signed Phil. The signature corresponds to the signature of Philip C. Jessup on other letterheads in the file.

I read this letter, to Mr. Edward C. Carter:

OCTOBER 29, 1940.

DEAR NED: I don't really think we can use Fred's statement as is, much as I would be glad to help him with his cause. How about a combination of the two, something like this:

"Frederick V. Field, who has been on the staff of the American Council since 1928, has resigned in order to become executive secretary of the American Peace Mobilization. The American Peace Mobilization is a mass organization of progressive trade-unions, farm, church, youth, Negro and fraternal groups dedicated to preserving the interests of the United States through the strengthening of American democracy and through nonparticipation in the war between England and the fascist powers. Mr. Field had a deep conviction that he was obligated to accept this new responsibility and felt that in view of the acceptance of his new position, it was not possible for him to continue his official connection with the IPR. The executive committee, being forced to the conclusion that Mr. Field's decision was final, felt compelled to accept Mr. Field's resignation with great regret. It expressed its appreciation of the distinguished service that Mr. Field had rendered during his 11 years of service to the American Council and expressed the hope that when his new task was completed, it would be possible for him to resume active leadership in the work of the IPR."

Perhaps we could add to that the expression of appreciation which came from the staff.

How does that strike you?

The paragraphs in regard to Lasker seem to me excellent.

Sincerely yours,

PHIL.

Mr. MORRIS. While we are reading these exhibits, Mr. Chairman, I might point out it is no longer necessary for General Fortier to be here.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Thank you, General, for your presence.

Mr. MORRIS. Thank you, General.

May that letter of October 29, 1940, be introduced?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be.

(The document referred to and read in its entirety by Mr. Mandel was marked "Exhibit No. 256," and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. We have Mr. Joseph Kornfeder available, Mr. Chairman, and he is prepared to testify today. The general nature of his testimony is to show that the Chinese Communist Party has been in the past a full-fledged member of the Communist Internationale, he having been in Moscow to make personal observations on this fact.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to hear that testimony, but I would like to have other members of the committee present also. I am inclined to believe we will have to defer on account of the vote being taken.

Mr. MORRIS. Until some time later today?

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest we convene at 2:30.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder is from Detroit and he is not easily summonable.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Kornfeder, please be here at 2:30.

(Whereupon, at 11:30 a. m., the hearing recessed until 2:30 p. m., this same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. Has the witness been sworn?

Mr. MORRIS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee of the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I do.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH ZACK KORNFEDER, DETROIT, MICH.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this hearing, one of the purposes of this hearing, is that we would like the record to show something of the nature of the Chinese Communist organization.

It has been said on many occasions that Chinese Communists are not real Communists. An example of this can be found in a pamphlet which represents a cooperative project of the Institute of Pacific Relations and the Webster Publishing Co. It is called China Yesterday and Today, by Eleanor Lattimore.

On page 108 of that pamphlet, we read the expression:

> When we speak of the Chinese Communists, we should remember that they stand for something rather different from what is ordinarily meant by the word "Communist." They are not advocating the Russian system for China, and, unlike the Russians, they maintain the rights of private property and enterprise in the areas under their control.
>
> Because their chief interest at the moment is in improving the economic conditions of the Chinese farmer and in increasing the number of people capable of taking part in political life, they are often described as a peasant party.

Then it goes on on that page, that is page 108 and page 109. Taking this, Mr. Chairman, as typical of such an attitude of the Chinese Communists, I think it is necessary that we have a witness here who can testify, first-hand, about the nature of the Chinese Communist organization.

For that reason, we have asked Mr. Kornfeder to be here.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, you may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder, would you give your name and address to the reporter, please?

Mr. KORNFEDER. My name is Joseph Zack Kornfeder, 3210 Book Tower, Detroit, Mich.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you spell your name?

Mr. KORNFEDER. K-o-r-n-f-e-d-e-r.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder, when did you join the Communist Party?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I joined the Communist Party at the time of its formation in 1919.

Mr. MORRIS. And how long did you remain a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I remained a member until October 1934.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you tell us what the highest position you achieved in the Communist Party was, Mr. Kornfeder?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I was a member of the district committee of the Communist Party, New York district, a member of the central executive committee of the Communist Party, now known as the national committee, for several terms.

While in Moscow, I was a member of the Anglo-American secretariat of the Communist International at the Communist International headquarters, and later a representative of the Communist International in South America.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you a Comintern delegate to North and South America?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I was a Comintern delegate to South America.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder, did you have any training in Moscow?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes; I took a 3-year course in the Lenin School.

The Lenin School is a college to train leaders for the various Communist Parties in the various methods of political warfare.

Mr. MORRIS. What years were you so trained, Mr. Kornfeder?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I was in Moscow from the latter part of 1927 until April or May 1930.

Mr. MORRIS. And what was your next assignment after your training period?

Mr. KORNFEDER. After that, I went as a representative of the Communist International to South America.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you describe your relationship under those circumstances to the Communist Party of South America?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, as representative of the Communist International in the Communist Parties of Columbia and Venezuela, I was in charge of these parties, that is, I was their political director about the same way Gerhardt Eisler was of the Communist Party of the United States, while he was here.

Mr. MORRIS. That is, in other words, Mr. Kornfeder, you were not a member of the Communist Party of South America, but you were their superior and their boss?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that really what your position was?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. And when you say that you were then the counterpart of Gerhardt Eisler in the United States, do you mean that Gerhardt Eisler was the Comintern man that was sent here to run the Communist Party of the United States?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, Mr. Kornfeder, while you were in Moscow did you have any opportunity to observe the workings of the Chinese Communist Party?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes, definitely so.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you tell us whatever you can in connection with that question, Mr. Kornfeder?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, in 1927, there developed a big crisis inside of the Chinese Communist Party

The reason for the crisis was that the Chinese Communist Party who, until then, had been a part of the Kuomintang, had been expelled from the Kuomintang by Chiang Kai-shek and his associates, and that created a crisis inside of the Chinese Communist Party.

The subject of that crisis and the question as to what was wrong in the policy, Communist policies, in China then became an item of discussion in all of the higher committees of the Communist International.

I attended the discussions. The result of these discussions was that the leading committees of the Chinese Communist Party were purged, reorganized, and those that Moscow disapproved of were expelled from the Communist Party as Trotskyites.

I also had an opportunity to become familiar with the Chinese Communist politics by attending the various meetings of the Communist International leading committees.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, before you get on to that, Mr. Kornfeder, in what capacity did you attend these other discussions that you have testified about?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I was a member of the Anglo-American secretariat of the Communist International. That was a subcommittee in charge of the Communist Party's English-speaking countries.

The Communist Party of the United States always played a large role in the affairs of the Communist Party of China. So, because of that, I was interested to stay informed on affairs in China.

Mr. MORRIS. You say, Mr. Kornfeder, that the American Communist Party was very active in the affairs of the Chinese Communist Party in China?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Kornfeder, why were the American Communists employed in connection with the Chinese Communist activities? What is the reason for that?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, the reason, as I get it from attending these discussion, is that America wielded a large influence in China all the time.

Mr. MORRIS. Wielded a large influence?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes. And the Comintern wanted to avail itself of that influence even if it was just in the form of representation from the United States, whether they had been Communist or Communist-controlled unions that claimed to represent a big following in the United States, or any other form.

It seemed to have an effect of building up the morale of the Chinese Communists to have Communist representation on the leading committees in the Chinese labor movement.

The CHAIRMAN. You say Communist representation, or do you mean American representation?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right, American Communist representation.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Kornfeder, while you were in Moscow at these various Comintern meetings, did you encounter Chinese Communists there?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes, definitely so.

The Chinese Communist Party was represented on all the leading committees in the Communist International. They were on the executive committee of the Communist International, they were on the agitation and propaganda commission of the Communist International, on the organization commission of the Communist International, and there was a special secretariat of the Communist International which preoccupied itself entirely with the problems of China, Japan, Malaya, Indochina, and so on, the so-called far eastern secretariat of the Communist International.

Mr. MORRIS. Now could you tell us, Mr. Kornfeder, the evidence as you experienced it which indicated to you that the Chinese Communists were an integral part of the Comintern organization?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, in the first place, there was a tremendous college, the largest college to train leaders in the arts of political warfare, the so-called Far Eastern University, formerly also known as the Sun Yat-sen University.

The CHAIRMAN. And that is located where?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Located in Moscow.

That university had a capacity to train 2,000 organizers and agitators a year.

At the time I was there, the number of Chinese Communists being trained there was 1,200.

Mr. MORRIS. Would that be 1,200 a year, Mr. Kornfeder?

Mr. KORNFEDER. 1,200 a year; yes.

This training system started in 1926 and, as far as I know—well, it certainly was there while I was in Moscow, and as far as I know from others that were there subsequently, it continued throughout the years.

The CHAIRMAN. How long were you there?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I was there until 1930.

The CHAIRMAN. From when?

Mr. KORNFEDER. From 1927.

The CHAIRMAN. Attending that university?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I attended another one, the Lenin School, which was a college to train leaders for the more advanced countries, like the United States, Germany, England, France, and so on.

But the Eastern University trained Communist leaders for China, Japan, Korea, Indochina, Burma, Malaya, India, and so on, the so-called colonial countries.

Mr. MORRIS. And it is your testimony, then, that the Chinese Communist leaders were being trained in Moscow?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Definitely so.

Mr. MORRIS. Was the discipline exerted by the Comintern organization on the Chinese Communist Party as strong as the discipline exercised in other Communist parties throughout the world?

Mr. KORNFEDER. It certainly was, even stronger because they had a civil-war situation.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you explain that, Mr. Kornfeder?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, in a strange situation like existed inside of China, the Communist Party under such conditions maintained a discipline that is even more severe than in countries where conditions are relatively stable.

This manifested itself in the control that Moscow headquarters had on the personnel of the Chinese Communist Party. There was not a single official of any consequence that could be elected by the Chinese Communist Party without previous consent of the Communist International, whether it be a secretary of the party, whether he be a head of, let us say, trade-union activities commission, or organization commission, or of the guerrilla army that they were already then forming. All of these leading personnel were all decided first in Moscow before they could be put into position.

The same procedure was true, by and large, with all of the other Communist parties.

The Chinese Communist Party was an integral part of the world Communist Party, which is monolithic, and there is no difference between the control of Moscow over that party as compared with other parties, except that discipline was even more severe because of the more severe internal situation in China.

The CHAIRMAN. How did these students, as you termed them as such, maintain themselves in this University of Moscow?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, the university, its teaching staff, and operating personnel, and all the trainees, all the expenses of that were paid by the Soviet Government and, coming there, that is the transportation costs, were also furnished from the same source.

If they had relatives back home, which they had to maintain, then a subsidy was allowed for that purpose.

There were all together about four colleges like that in Moscow. They were all at the expense of the Soviet Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The students then, so-called, were maintained with their tuition, their living, their housing, their clothing, everything was furnished to them by the Soviet Government?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder, have you ever met Stalin, personally?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you tell us whether or not he took an active interest in the affairs of the Chinese Communist organization?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Stalin was in charge of the affairs of the Chinese Communist Party by decision of the political bureau of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union since 1926.

All matters of policy, whether relating to the line to be adopted or to organization strategy, were decided in the final sense by Stalin himself.

I am not the only one that says that. At the celebration for Stalin's seventieth birthday which took place, I believe, 2 years ago, Beria, the head of the political police, known as the MVD, in a laudatory speech on Stalin, which appeared in some of the papers, also said that the successes in China are due to the brilliant leadership of our great leader, Joseph Stalin, who has been guiding the affairs of the Communist Party of China ever since 1926.

Mr. MORRIS. And you know that to be a fact, that statement of Beria, you know that to be a statement of fact from your own personal experience?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right. I knew it long before he made the speech.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, Mr. Kornfeder, did you attend the Sixth World Congress of the Communist International?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes; I attended the Sixth World Congress of the Communist International in Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. When was that held?

Mr. KORNFEDER. The summer of 1928.

Mr. MORRIS. Did anything take place at that congress bearing on the importance of the Chinese Communist Party in its future role in world affairs?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes. The situation in China, from a Communist point of view, was one of the very principal topics of discussion and decision at the congress. I have here, and if I may I could quote it.

Mr. MORRIS. What is it that you have there?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I have here the Theses on the Revolutionary Movement in the Colonies and Semi-Colonies, which was adopted at that congress, and all the principal parts of which were written by Joseph Stalin himself.

Mr. MORRIS. From what are you reading, Mr. Kornfeder? From what publication?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I would like to read from a copy of this, decisions, that appeared in the International Press Correspondence, which was a weekly news service of the Communist International, a thesis on the colonial question.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the date of the publication you are reading from, Mr. Kornfeder?

Mr. KORNFEDER. December 12, 1928.

Mr. MORRIS. And you attended this congress?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I attended the congress, and I know this is the resolution, the thesis that was adopted there.

Now, the decision at that congress revolved largely on the subject, that is, in reference to China, whether to orientate the activities of the Communists in China on the peasantry.

There is the accepted Marxian theory and the theory of Lenin, the founder of the Soviet state, that the Communists should orientate themselves on the factory workers and by forming labor unions there and so on and so forth, entrench themselves.

That was the accepted theory up until about the time of this congress, also for colonial countries.

Now, at the sixth congress, by the initiative of Stalin, the base of Communist politics in this type of country was fundamentally changed. From there on, the Communists were to base themselves on the peasants.

Now, the peasant, to make an illustration, would be something like a very poor sharecropper down in the South, not a farmer as we understand it. A farmer would be a relatively rich man. The peasant is something like the poorest type of sharecropper down in the South, except that in China their conditions are even worse.

Now, the Communists were to base themselves upon this strata, and conquer the countryside first, and then, after forming guerrilla armies in the countryside, conquer the cities.

Those of you gentlemen who may have followed the course of events must have noticed that that is the thing that took place in China, first the countryside was conquered and then the cities, instead of the traditional Marxian method of first conquering the cities and then conquering the rest of the country.

Now, the change in that direction, which required the Communists to change their organization methods, their agitation methods, to concentrate on what we call agrarian reform, and out of which some intellectuals here in this country got the impression that the Communists in China are agrarians—of course, that was entirely false. It was just the change of operational tactics on the part of Moscow.

Now, to show you here, I will quote this change. I will quote a part of this resolution on page 1665.

> Along with the national-emancipatory struggle, the agrarian revolution constitutes the axes of the bourgeois democratic revolution in the chief colonial countries.

The chief colonial country was, of course, in Asia, China. It is the peasantry that, from here, becomes the center of operation.

Another part which was already then introduced in the strategy of the Communists in this type of country is to exploit nationalism.

You see, prior to this, the Communists operated, well, under their own flag. All the propaganda was outright Communist and so on and so forth.

After this Congress, more and more, they shifted to the use of nationalism, to operate behind nationalist movements, to infiltrate nationalist movements, to use their flag and operate under it, and so on.

There is a part here which introduces that change of tactics. It is on the same page.

> It is very important, in accordance with the concrete circumstances, to investigate very carefully the special influence of the national factor, which to a considerable degree determines the special character of the colonial revolution, and to take it into account in the tactics of the Communist Party concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. How would that apply in the United States? Have you an illustration of it? Can you give us an illustration of it?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, in the United States they apply this thesis only to the Negroes. They consider the Negroes as colonials who are being exploited and oppressed by American imperialism, and who should have an independent Republic based on the Negro Belt in the South.

That is the only part of this thesis that would apply to the United States, because the United States is an industrially advanced country where conditions are different.

You see, their strategy adjusts itself in its method of operation to the type of country in which the Communists operate.

In this country this would also be translated to the Communists hiding behind the skirts of the liberals.

The CHAIRMAN. Hiding behind what?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Operating behind the skirts of the liberals. That is, using the liberals as a front or pretending to be liberals.

They could not use nationalism in the sense that it is in China because, well, we are an independent Nation and the leading Nation.

But in their internal operations, they would make an assimilation of this tactic by not operating under their own flag, operating as liberals or so-called progressives, and so on.

Mr. MORRIS. That concludes your comments on that world congress, Mr. Kornfeder, does it?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes.

I would suggest that it may be of use to introduce this part into the record, which is entitled "Communist Strategy and Tactics in China, India, and Similar Colonial Countries."

Of course, the Communist methods since that was adopted have gone through considerable changes, have become smoother. But the basic principles are still in here and are being used even today.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we have that introduced into the record for the purposes described by Mr. Kornfeder.

That is an official publication of the Communist International, and therein is a thesis on the revolutionary movement in the colonies and semicolonies. We have had testimony from Mr. Kornfeder on that score.

The CHAIRMAN. And this is under date of December 12, 1928, volume 8, No. 88.

Mr. MORRIS. That is an official publication of the Communist International?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That part referred to by the witness may be inserted in the record, commencing on page 1665, under the caption "On Communist strategy and tactics in China, India, and similar colonial countries," extending down to the middle of page 1670, just before "The immediate tasks of the Communists."

It will be inserted in the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 257" and is as follows:)

[From International Press Correspondence, December 12, 1928]

III. ON COMMUNIST STRATEGY AND TACTICS IN CHINA, INDIA, AND SIMILAR COLONIAL COUNTRIES

16. As in all colonies and semicolonies, so also in China and India the development of productive forces and the socialization of labor stands at a comparatively low level. This circumstance, together with the fact of foreign domination and also the presence of powerful relics of feudalism and precapitalist relations, determines the character of the immediate stage of the revolution in these countries. In the revolutionary movement of these countries we have to deal with the bourgeois democratic revolution, i. e. of the stage signifying the preparation of the prerequisites for proletarian dictatorship and socialist revolution. Corresponding to this, the following kinds of tasks can be pointed out, which may be considered as general basic tasks of the bourgeois democratic revolution in the colonies and semicolonies:

(a) A shifting in the relationship of forces in favor of the proletariat; emancipation of the country from the yoke of imperialism (nationalization of foreign concessions, railways, banks, etc.) and the establishment of the national unity of the country where this has not yet been attained; overthrow of the power of the exploiting classes at the back of which imperialism stands; organization of Soviets of workers and peasants and organization of the Red Army; establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry; consolidation of the hegemony of the proletariat.

(b) The carrying through of the agrarian revolution; emancipation of the peasants from all precapitalist and colonial conditions of exploitation and bondage; nationalization of the land; radical measures for alleviating the position of the peasantry with the object of establishing the closest possible economic and political union between the town and village.

(c) In correspondence with the further development of industry, transport, etc., and with the accompanying growth of the proletariat, the widespread development of trade union organizations of the working class, strengthening of the Communist Party and its conquest of a firm leading position among the toiling masses; the achievement of the 8-hour working day.

(d) Establishment of equal rights for nationalities and of sex equality (equal rights for women); separation of the church from the state and the abolition of caste distinctions; political education and raising of the general cultural level of the masses in town and country, etc.

How far the bourgeois-democratic revolution will be able in practice to realize all its basic tasks, and how far it will be the case that part of these tasks will be carried into effect only by the Socialist revolution, will depend on the course of the revolutionary movement of the workers and peasants and its successes or defeats in the struggle against the imperialists, feudal lords and the bourgeoisie. In particular, the emancipation of the colony from the imperialist yoke is facilitated by the development of the Socialist revolution in the capitalist world and can only be completely guaranteed by the victory of the proletariat in the leading capitalist countries.

The transition of the revolution to the Socialist phase demands the presence of certain minimum prerequisites, as, for example, a certain definite level of development in the country of industry, of trade union organizations of the proletariat and a strong Communist Party. The most important is precisely the development of a strong Communist Party with a big mass influence, which would be in the highest degree a slow and difficult process were it not accelerated by the bourgeois-democratic revolution which already grows and develops as a result of the objective conditions in these countries.

17. The bourgeois-democratic revolution in the colonies is distinguished from the bourgeois-democratic revolution in an independent country chiefly in that it is organically bound up with the national emancipatory struggle against imperialist domination. The national factor exerts considerable influence on the revolutionary process in all colonies, as well as in those semicolonies where imperialist enslavement already appears in its naked form, leading to the revolt of the mass of the people. On the one hand, national oppression hastens the ripening of the revolutionary crises, intensifies the dissatisfaction of the masses of workers and peasants, facilitates their mobilization and endows the revolutionary mass revolts with the elemental force and character of a genuine popular revolution. On the other hand, the national factor is able to influence not only the movement of the working class and peasantry but also the attitude of all the remaining classes, modifying its form during the process of revolution. Above all, the poor urban petty bourgeoisie together with the petty bourgeoise intelligentsia is during the first period, to a very considerable extent, brought under the influence of the active revolutionary forces; secondly, the position of the colonial bourgeoisie in the bourgeois-democratic revolution is still for the most part an ambiguous one and its vacillations in accordance with the course of the revolution are even more considerable than in the bourgeoisie of an independent country (e. g., the Russian bourgoisie in 1905–17).

It is very important, in accordance with the concrete circumstances, to investigate very carefully the special influence of the national factor, which to a considerable degree determines the special character of the colonial revolution, and to take it into account in the tactics of the Communist Party concerned.

Along with the national emancipatory struggle, the agrarian revolution constitutes the axis of the bourgeois-democratic revolution in the chief colonial countries. Consequently, Communists must follow with the greatest attention the development of the agrarian crisis and the intensification of class contradictions in the village; they must from the very beginning give a consciously revolutionary direction to the dissatisfaction of the workers and to the incipient peasant movement, directing it against imperialist exploitation and bondage as also against the yoke of the various precapitalist (feudal and semifeudal) relationships as a result of which peasant economy is suffering, declining, and perishing. The incredible backwardness of agriculture, the prevalence of oppressive rent relations, and the oppression of trading-usury capital represent the greatest hindrance to the development of productive forces in village economy in the colonies and stand in monstrous contradiction with the highly organized forms of exchange between the village agricultural production of the colonies and the world market created by monopoly imperialism.

18. The national bourgeoisie in these colonial countries does not adopt a uniform attitude in relation to imperialism. A part of this bourgeoisie, more especially the trading bourgeoisie, directly serves the interests of imperialist capital (the so-called compradore bourgeoisie). In general, it more or less consistently defends the antinational imperialist point of view directed against the whole nationalist movement, in common with the feudal allies of imperialism and the more highly paid native officials. The remaining portions of the native bourgeoisie, especially the portion reflecting the interests of native industry, support the national movement and represent a special vacillating compromising tendency which may be designated as national reformism (or, in the terminology of the theses of the Second Congress of the Communist International, a bourgeois-democratic tendency).

This intermediate position of the national bourgeoisie between the revolutionary and imperialist camps is no longer to be observed, it is true, in China after 1925; there the greater part of the national bourgeoisie from the beginning, owing to the special situation, took the leadership in the national-emancipatory war; later on it passed over finally into the camp of counterrevolution. In India and Egypt, we still observe, for the time being, the typical bourgeois-nationalist movement—an opportunistic movement, subject to great vacillations, balacing between imperialism and revolution.

The independence of the country in relation to imperialism, being to the advantage of the whole colonial people, corresponds also to the interests of the national bourgeoisie, but is in irreconcilable contradiction to the whole nature of the imperialist system. Various native capitalists, it is true, are by their immediate interests to a great extent bound by numerous threads to imperialist capital. Imperialism is able directly to bridge a considerable portion of them (it may be even a greater portion than heretofore) and to create a definite Compradore position, a position of intermediary trader, subexploiter or overseer over the enslaved population. But the position of slave owner, of monopolist supreme exploiter, imperialism reserves for itself alone. Independent rule, a future of "free" independent capitalist development, hegemony over an "independent" people—this imperialism will never voluntarily yield to the national bourgeoisie. In this respect, the contradiction of interests between the national bourgeoisie of the colonial country and imperialism is objectively of a radical character. In this respect, imperialism demands capitulation on the part of the national bourgeoisie.

The native bourgeoisie, as the weaker side, again and again capitulates to imperialism. Its capitulation, however, is not final as long as the danger of class revolution on the part of the masses has not become immediate, acute and menacing. In order, on the other hand, to avoid this danger, and, on the other hand, to strength its position in relation to imperialism, bourgeois nationalism in these colonies strives to obtain the support of the petty bourgeoisie, of the peasantry and in part also of the working class. Since, in relation to the working class it has little prospect of success (as soon as the working class in these countries has at all begun to awake politically), it becomes the more important for it to obtain support from the peasantry.

But just here is the weakest point of the colonial bourgeoisie. The unbearable exploitation of the colonial peasantry can only be put an end to by the way of the agrarian revolution. The bourgeoisie of China, India, and Egypt is by its immediate interests so closely bound up with landlordism, with usury capital and with the exploitation of the peasant masses in general, that it takes its stand not only against the agrarian revolution but also against every decisive agrarian reform. It is afraid, and not without foundation, that even the more open formulation of the agrarian question will stimulate and accelerate the growth of the process of revolutionary fermentation in the peasant masses. Thus, the reformist bourgeoisie hardly dare to decide to approach practically this basic urgent question.

Instead, it attempts by means of empty nationalist phrases and gestures to keep the petty bourgeois masses under its influence and to compel imperialism to grant certain concessions. But the imperialists draw the reins ever tighter, for the national bourgeoisie is incapable of offering any serious resistance. Accordingly, the national bourgeoisie in every conflict with imperialism attempt, on the one hand, to make a great show of their nationalist "firmness" of principle, and on the other hand, they sow illusions as to the possibility of a peaceful compromise with imperialism. Through both the one and the other, the masses inevitably become disillusioned and in this way they gradually outlive their reformist illusions.

19. An incorrect estimation of the basic national-reformist tendency of the national bourgeoisie in these colonial countries gives rise to the possibility of serious errors in the strategy and tactics of the Communist Parties concerned. In particular, two kinds of mistakes are possible:

(a) A nonunderstanding of the difference between the national reformist and national-revolutionary tendency can lead to a "khvostist" policy in relation to the bourgeoisie, to an insufficiently accurate political and organizational delimitation of the proletariat from the bourgeoisie, and to the blurring of the chief revolutionary slogans (especially the slogans of the agrarian revolution), etc. This was the fundamental mistake into which the Communist Party of China fell in 1925–27.

(b) An underestimation of the special significance which the bourgeois national-reformist, as distinct from the feudal-imperialist camp, possess owing to its mass influence on the ranks of the petty bourgeoisie, peasantry and even a portion of the working class, may lead, at least in the first stages of the movement, to a sectarian policy and to the isolation of the Communists from the toiling masses.

In both these cases, insufficient attention is given to the realization of precisely those tasks which the Second Congress of the Communist International had already characterized as the basic tasks of the Communist Parties in the colonial countries, i. e. the tasks of struggle against the bourgeois-democratic movement inside the nation itself. Without this struggle, without the liberation of the toiling masses from the influence of the bourgeoisie and of national-reformism, the basic strategical aim of the Communist movement in the bourgeois-democratic revolution—the hegemony of the proletariat—cannot be achieved. Without the hegemony of the proletariat, an organic part of which is the leading role of the Communist Party, the bourgeois-democratic revolution cannot be carried through to an end, not to speak of the socialist revolution.

20. The petty bourgeoisie in the colonial and semicolonial countries plays a very important role. It consists of various strata, which in different periods of the national-revolutionary movement play very diverse roles.

The artisan, who is hit by the competition of foreign imported goods, is hostilely disposed toward imperialism. At the same time, he is interested in the unlimited exploitation of his journeymen and apprentices, and accordingly, he is hostilely disposed toward the class-conscious labor movement. At the same time, also, he usually suffers himself from the exploitation of trading and usury capital. The exceedingly ambiguous and hopeless position of this stratum of the petty bourgeoisie determines its vacillations, and it frequently falls under the influence of utopian reactionaries.

The small trader—both in town and village—is connected with village exploitation through usury and trade, and he clings to the old forms of exploitation in preference to the prospects of an expansion of the internal market. These strata, however, are not homogeneous. These sections of the trading bourgeoisie which in one form or another are connected with the Compradores occupy a different position from those sections the activity of which is limited mainly to the internal market.

The petty bourgeois intelligentsia, the students, and such like, are very frequently the most determined representatives, not only of the specific interests of the petty bourgeoisie, but also of the general objective interests of the entire national bourgeoisie, and, in the first period of the national movement, they often come out as the spokesmen of the nationalist struggle. Their role at the head of the movement is comparatively important. In general, they cannot act as representatives of peasant interests, for the very social strata from which they come are connected with landlordism. The upsurge of the revolutionary wave may drive them into the labor movement, bringing with them their petty bourgeois ideology of vacillation and indecision. Only a few of them in the course of the struggle are able to break with their own class and rise to an understanding of the tasks of the class struggle of the proletariat, and to become active defenders of the interests of the latter. It frequently happens that the petty bourgeois intellectuals give to their ideology a socialist or even Communist color. In the struggle against imperialism they have played, and in such countries as India and Egypt they even now, still partially play a revolutionary role. The mass movement may draw them after it, but it may also push them into the camp of extreme reaction or at least, cause the spread of utopian reactionary tendencies in their ranks.

Alongside of these strata, there are to be found in the colonial towns considerable sections of urban poor, the position of which objectively drives them to the support of revolution—artisans who do not exploit the labor of others, street traders, unemployed intellectuals, ruined peasants seeking work, etc. Further, the colonial town, as also the village, has a populous section of "coolies", semi-proletarians who have not passed through the school of factory production and who live by casual labor.

The peasantry, along with the proletariat and in the character of its ally, represents a driving force of the revolution. The immense many-millioned peasant mass constitutes the overwhelming majority of the population even in the most developed colonies (in some colonies it is 90 percent of the population). The many millions of starving tenant-cultivators, petty peasants oppressed by want and groaning under all kinds of precapitalist and capitalist forms of exploitation, a considerable portion of them deprived of the possibility of cultivation even on the lands that they rent, thrown out from the process of production and slowly dying from famine and disease, village agricultural laborers, all these are the allies of the proletariat in the village. The peasantry can only achieve its emancipation under the leadership of the proletariat, but the proletariat can only lead the bourgeois-democratic revolution to victory in union with the peasantry.

The process of class differentiation of the peasantry in the colonies and semi-colonies which possess important relics of feudalism and of precapitalist relationships, proceeds at a comparatively slow rate. Nevertheless, market relationships in these countries have developed to such a degree that the peasantry already no longer represent a homogeneous mass, as far as their class relations are concerned. In the villages of China and India, in particular in certain parts of these countries, it is already possible to find exploiting elements derived from the peasantry, who exploit the peasants and village laborers through usury, trade, employment of hired labor, the sale or letting out of land on rent, the loaning of cattle or agricultural implements, etc., etc.

In general, it is possible that, in the first period of the struggle of the peasantry against the landlords, the proletariat may be able to carry with it the entire peasantry. But in the further development of the struggle some of the upper strata of the peasantry may pass into the camp of counter-revolution. The proletariat can achieve its leading role in relation to the peasantry only under the conditions of unflinching struggle for its partial demands, for complete carrying through of the agrarian revolution, and only if it will lead the struggle of the wide masses of the peasantry for a revolutionary solution of the agrarian question.

21. The working class in the colonies and semicolonies has characteristic features which play an important role in the building up of an independent working class movement and proletarian class ideology in these countries. The predominant part of the colonial proletariat is derived from the pauperized village, with which the worker remains in connection even when engaged in production. In the majority of colonies (with the exception of some large factory towns such as Shanghai, Bombay, Calcutta, etc.), we find, as a general rule, only a first generation of proletariat engaged in large-scale production. Another portion is made up of the ruined artisans who are being driven out of the decaying handicrafts, which are widely spread even in the most advanced colonies. The ruined artisan, a petty owner, carries with him into the working class a guild tendency and ideology which serves as a basis for the penetration of national-reformist influence into the labor movement of the colonies.

The great fluctuation in the composition of the proletariat (frequent renewal of the labor force in the factories owing to workers returning to the villages and the inflow of new masses of poverty-stricken peasants into production); the considerable percentage of women and children; the numerous different languages; illiteracy; the wide distribution of religious and caste prejudices—all make difficult the work of systematic agitation and propaganda and retard the growth of class consciousness among the workers. Nevertheless, the merciless exploitation, practiced in the most oppressive forms by native and foreign capital, and the entire absence of political rights for the workers, create the objective pre-conditions on the basis of which the labor movement in the colonies is rapidly overcoming all obstacles and every year draws greater and greater masses of the working class into the struggle against the native exploiters and the imperialists.

The first period of the growth of the labor movement in the colonial and semi-colonial countries (approximately 1919–1923) is organically bound up with the general growth of the national-revolutionary movement which followed the world war, and which was characterized by the subordination of the class interests of the working class to the interests of the anti-imperialist struggle headed by the native bourgeoisie. Insofar as the labor strikes and other demonstrations bore an organizational character, they were usually organized by petty bourgeois intellectuals who restricted the demands of the workers to questions of the national struggle. The most important characteristic of the second period of rapid growth of the labor movement in the colonies, on the other hand, the period which began after the Fifth Congress of the Communist International, was the emergence of the working class of the colonies into the political arena as an independent class force directly opposing itself to the national bourgeoisie, and entering upon a struggle with the latter in defense of its own immediate class interests and for hegemony in the national revolution as a whole. The history of the last few years has clearly confirmed this characteristic of the new stage of the colonial revolution, first of all in the example of the great Chinese revolution, and subsequently in the insurrection in Indonesia. There is every ground to believe that in India the working class is liberating itself from the influence of the nationalist and social-reformist leaders and is being converted into an independent political factor in the struggle against the British imperialists and the native bourgeoisie.

22. In order correctly to determine the immediate tasks of the revolutionary movement, it is important as a starting point to take into consideration the degree of maturity attained by the movement in the separate colonial countries. The revolutionary movement in China is distinguished from the present movement in India by a series of essential features, characterizing the different degrees of maturity of the movement in the two countries. The previous experience of the Chinese revolution must, undoubtedly, be utilized in the revolutionary movement in India and other analogous colonial countries. But it would be a completely mistaken application of the Chinese experience if, at the present time in India, Egypt, etc., we were to formulate the immediate tasks, slogans and tactical methods in exactly the same form as took place in China, for example in the Wuhan period, or in the form in which it is necessary to formulate them there at the present time.

The tendency to skip over the inevitable difficulties and special tasks of the present stage of the revolutionary movement in India, Egypt, etc., can only be harmful. It is necessary to carry through much work in the building up and consolidation of the Communist Party and trade-union organizations of the proletariat, in the revolutionization of the trade-unions, in the development of economic and political mass demonstrations and in the winning over of the masses and their liberation from the influence of the national-reformist bourgeoisie, before it is possible to advance in these countries with definite prospects of success to the realization of such tasks as those which were fully carried out in China during the Wuhan period as the immediate tasks of the struggle of the working class and peasantry.

The interests of the struggle for the class rule of the national bourgeoisie compel the most important bourgeois parties in India and Egypt (Swarajists, Wafdists) still to demonstrate their opposition to the ruling imperialist-feudal bloc. Although this opposition has not a revolutionary but a reformist and class collaborationist character, this by no means signifies that it has not a special significance. The national bourgeoisie has not the significance of a force in the struggle against imperialism. Nevertheless, this bourgeois-reformist opposition has its real special significance for the development of the revolutionary movement—and this both in a negative as well as in a positive sense—insofar as it possesses any mass influence at all.

Its chief feature is that it exerts a braking retarding influence on the development of the revolutionary movement, insofar as it is successful in drawing the toiling masses in its wake and holding them back from the revolutionary struggle. On the other hand, however, the demonstrations of the bourgeois opposition against the ruling imperialist-feudal bloc, even if they do not have any deep foundation, can exert a certain accelerating influence on the process of the political awakening of the wide masses of toilers; the concrete open conflicts of the national-reformist bourgeoisie with imperialism. although of little significance in themselves, may, under certain conditions; indirectly serve as the cause of the unleashing of even greater revolutionary mass actions.

It is true the reformist bourgeoisie itself endeavours not to allow of any such effect of its oppositional activities, and in one way or another seeks to prevent it in advance. But, wherever the objective conditions exist for a far-reaching political crisis, there the activities of the national-reformist opposition, even their insignificant conflicts with imperialism which are least of all connected with the real hearth of the revolution, can become of serious importance.

The Communists must learn how to utilize each and every conflict, to develop such conflicts and to broaden their significance, to connect them with the agitation for revolutionary slogans, to spread the news of these conflicts among the wide masses, to arouse these masses to independent, open manifestations in support of their own demands, etc.

23. The correct tactics in the struggle against such parties as the Swarajists and Wafdists during this stage consist in the successful exposure of their real national-reformist character. These parties have already more than once betrayed the national-emancipatory struggle, but they have not yet finally passed over to the counter-revolutionary camp in the manner of the Kuomintang. There is no doubt that they will do this later on, but at the present time they are so particularly dangerous precisely because their real physiognomy has not yet been exposed in the eyes of the wide masses of toilers. For this exposure there is still needed a very large amount of Communist educational work and a very great deal of new political experience on the part of the masses themselves. If the Communists do not already succeed in this stage in shaking the faith of the toiling masses in the bourgeois national-reformist leadership of the national movement, then this leadership in the coming upsurge of the revolutionary wave will represent an enormous danger for the revolution.

Consequently, it is necessary, by means of correct Communist tactics, adapted to the conditions of the present stage, to help the toiling masses in India. Egypt, Indonesia and such colonies to emancipate themselves from the influence of the bourgeois parties. This is not to be achieved by any noisy phrases, however, radical they may sound superficially, about the absence of any distinction between the oppositional national-reformists (Swarajists, Wafdists, etc.) and the British imperialists or their feudal counter-revolutionary allies. The national reformist leaders would easily be able to make use of such an exaggeration in order to incite the masses against the Communists. The masses see the chief immediate enemy of national emancipation in the form of the imperialist feudal bloc, which in itself is correct at this stage of the movement in India, Egypt, and Indonesia (as far as one side of the matter is concerned).

In the struggle against this ruling counter-revolutionary force; the Indian, Egyptian, and Indonesian Communists must proceed in advance of all, they must fight more determinedly, more consistently and more resolutely than any petty bourgeois section or national-revoluntary group. Of course, this fight must not be waged for the organizing of any kind of putsch or premature attempt at a rising on the part of the small revolutionary minority, but for the purpose of organizing the widest possible strata of the masses of toilers in demonstrations and other manifestations so that in this way the active participation of these masses can be guaranteed for a victorious uprising at a further stage of the revolutionary struggle.

At the same time, it is no less important mercilessly to expose before the toiling masses the national-reformist character of the Swarajist, Wafdist and other nationalist parties, and in particular of their leaders. It is necessary to expose their half-heartedness and vacillation in the national struggle, their bargainings and attempts to reach a compromise with British imperialism, their previous capitulations and counter-revolutionary advances, their reactionary resistance to the class demands of the proletariat and peasantry, their empty nationalist-phraseology, their dissemination of harmful illusions about the peaceful decolonization of the country and their sabotage in relation to the application of revolutionary methods in the national-emancipatory struggle.

It is necessary to reject the formation of any kind of bloc between the Communist Party and the national-reformist opposition; this does not exclude the formation of temporary agreements and the coordinating of separate activities in connection with definite antiimperialist demonstrations, provided that the demonstrations of the bourgeois opposition can be utilized for the development of the mass movement, and provided that these agreements do not in any way limit the freedom of the Communist Parties in the matter of agitation among the masses and among the organizations of the latter. Of course, in this work the Communists must know how at the same time to carry on the most relentless ideological and political struggle against bourgeois nationalism and against the slightest signs of its influence inside the labor movement. In such cases, the Communist Party must take particular care not only to maintain its complete political independence and to make quite clear its own character, but also, on the basis of facts, to open the eyes of the masses of toilers who are under the influence of the bourgeois opposition, so that they will perceive all the hopelessness of this opposition and the danger of the bourgeois democratic illusions that it disseminates.

24. An incorrect estimation of the chief tendency of the parties of the big national bourgeoisie gives rise to the danger of an incorrect estimation of the character and role of the petty bourgeois parties. The development of these parties, as a general rule, follows a course from the national-revoluntionary to the national-reformist position. Even such movements as Sun Yat-senism in China, Gandhism in India, Sarekat Islam in Indonesia, were originally radical petty bourgeois ideological movements which, however, as a result of their service to the big bourgeoisie became converted into a bourgeois nationalist-reformist movement. After this, in India, Egypt, and Indonesia, there was again founded a radical wing from among the different petty bourgeois groups (e. g. the Republican Party, Watanists, Sarekat Rayat), which stand for a more or less consistent national-revolutionary point of view. In such a country as India, the rise is possible of some new analogous radical petty bourgeois parties and groups.

But the fact must not be lost sight of that these parties, essentially considered, are connected with the national bourgeoisie. The petty bourgeois intelligentsia at the head of the parties puts forward national-revolutionary demands but at the same time appears more or less conscious as the representative of the capitalist development of their country. Some of these elements can become the followers of various kinds of reactionary utopias, but when confronted with feudalism and imperialism, they, in distinction from the parties of the big national bourgeoisie, appear at the outset not as reformists but as more or less revoluntionary representatives of the anti-imperialist interests of the colonial bourgeoisie. This is the case, at least, so long as the development of the revolutionary process in the country does not put on the order of the day in a definite and sharp form the fundamental internal questions of the bourgeois-democratic revolution, particularly the question of the realization of the agrarian revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry. When this happens, then it usually denotes the end of the revolutionary character of the petty bourgeois parties. As soon as the revolution has placed the class interests of the proletariat and the peasantry in critical contradiction not only to the rule of the feudal-imperialist bloc, but also to the class rule of the bourgeoisie, the petty bourgeois groups usually go back to the position of the national-reformist parties.

It is absolutely essential that the Communist Parties in these countries should from the very beginning demarcate themselves in the most clear-cut fashion, both politically and organizationally, from all the petty bourgeois groups and parties. In so far as the needs of the revolutionary struggle demand it, a temporary cooperation is permissible, and in certain circumstances even a temporary union between the Communist Party and the national revolutionary movement, provided that the latter is a genuine revolutionary movement, that it genuinely struggles against the ruling power and that its representatives do not put obstacles in the way of the Communists educating and organizing in a revolutionary sense the peasants and broad masses of the exploited. In every such cooperation, however, it is essential to take the most careful precautions in order that this cooperation does not degenerate into a fusion of the Communist movement with the bourgeois-revolutionary movement.

The Communist movement in all circumstances, most unconditionally preserve the independence of the proletarian movement and its own independence in agitation, in organization and in demonstrations. To criticize the half-hearted ness and vacillation of the petty bourgeois groups, to anticipate their vacillations, to be prepared for them and at the same time to utilize to the full all the revolutionary possibilities of these strata, to carry on a consistent struggle against petty bourgeois influence over the proletariat, employ all means to liberate the wide masses of the peasantry from the influence of the petty bourgeois parties and to win from them the hegemony over the peasantry—these are the tasks of the Communist Parties.

25. How rapidly the revolutionary movement in India, Egypt, etc., will reach such a high degree of maturity as it has already reached in China, depends to an essential extent on how quickly there arises there a big revolutionary wave. In the event of its postponement for a considerable time, the political and organizational ripening of the driving forces of the revolution can only proceed by way of a gradual and relatively slow process of development. If, however, the coming powerful revolutionary wave rises earlier, then the movement may quickly be able to attain a much higher stage of maturity.

Under exceptionally favorable circumstances, it is not even excluded that the revolution there may be able in one single mightly wave to achieve the conquest of power by the proletariat and peasantry. It is also possible that the process of the development of the revolution from one stage to another more mature stage will be interrupted for a more or less prolonged period of time, in particular if the coming wave of revolutionary upheaval reaches a relatively small height and is not of great duration. Consequently, it is necessary in every case to subject the concrete situation to the most detailed analysis.

The following factors are of decisive significance for the immediate growing over of the revolution from one stage to another higher stage: (1) The degree of development of the revolutionary proletarian leadership of the movement, i. e. of the Communist Party of the given country (the numerical strength of the Party, its independent character, consciousness and fighting readiness, as well as its authority and connection with the masses and its influence on the trade union and peasant movement); (2) the degree of organization and the revolutionary experience of the working class, as well as, to a certain extent, of the peasantry. The revolutionary experience of the masses signifies experience of struggle; in the first place, liberation from the influence over them of the bourgeois and petty bourgeois parties.

Since these prerequisites for the first big mass outburst of the revolution, even in the best circumstances, are present only to an insufficient degree, an unusually deep revolutionary crisis and an unusually high and persistent revolutionary wave are required for it to be possible for the bourgeois-democratic revolution with the aid of this one wave of upheaval to lead to the complete victory of the proletariat and peasantry. Such a possibility is most easily presented, for example, when the ruling imperialism is temporarily distracted by a long-continued war outside the frontiers of the colonial country concerned.

26. Living, concrete, historical dialetics, such as were demonstrated by the now completed first period of the bourgeois-democratic revolution in China, will give to the Communists, especially those working in the colonial countries, a valuable experience which it is necessary to study carefully in order to draw the correct conclusions, especially from the mistakes committed in the course of Communist work in the colonies.

The rise of the revolutionary wave in China was unusually prolonged (over 2 years), since it was connected with a protracted internal war. Inasmuch as the Northern Expedition was not conducted directly against the great imperialist powers and inasmuch as the latter, owing to competition between them, were partially passive during the first period, while the bourgeois leadership of the national movement had already for some years held Canton in its hands—a definite, though limited, territory—as well as a centralized power backed up by the army, and so forth, it is understandable that in this exceptional case a great part of the bourgeoisie in the beginning looked upon the national emancipatory war as its own particular affair. The Kuomintang, in which it practically played a leading role, in the course of a short time came to be at the head of the national revolutionary movement, a circumstance which in the course of further events represented an extremely great danger for the revolution.

On the other hand, among the peculiarities of the situation in China must be numbered the fact that the proletariat there was stronger in relation to its bourgeoisie than the proletariat of other countries. It is true that it was weakly organized, but during the upsurge of the revolutionary wave the growth of labor organization proceeded at a very rapid rate.

The Communist Party also rose in a short time from a small group to a party with 60,000 members (and presently even more) and possessing a wide influence among the workers. Naturally, in these conditions many petty bourgeois elements also entered the party. The party was lacking in revolutionary experience and, even more, in traditions of Bolshevism. In the beginning, the upper hand in its leadership was taken by wavering elements, which were still only to a very small degree liberated from petty bourgeois opportunist tendencies which inadequately understood the independent tasks and role of the Communist Party and which came out against any decisive development of the agrarian revolution.

The entry of the Communists for a certain period into the leading party of the national revolution, the Kuomintang, in itself corresponded to the requirements of the struggle and of the situation, and was also in the interests of the indispensable Communist work among the fairly wide masses of toilers who followed this party. In addition, at the beginning, the Communist Party of China received in the territory under the rule of the Kuomintang Government the possibility of independent agitation among the masses of workers and peasants and among the soldiers of the national army and their organizations. At that time the party possessed greater possibilities than it actually made use of.

At that time the party did not sufficiently clearly explain to the masses its proletarian class position in distinction from Sun Yat-senism and other petty bourgeois tendencies. In the ranks of the Kuomintang, the Communists did not conduct any independent policy, leaving out of account that in any such inevitable bloc the Communists must adopt an unconditionally critical attitude toward the bourgeois elements and always come out as independent force. The Communists failed to expose the vacillations of the national-bourgeoisie and of bourgeois-democratic nationalism, just at the time when this exposure ought to have constituted one of the most important tasks of the Communist Party. The inevitable disruption of the Kuomintang drew nearer and nearer as the national army advanced, but the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party undertook nothing or almost nothing in order to prepare the party in case of a breach, and in order to guarantee its independent position and to unite the revolutionary workers and peasants in an independent fighting bloc which would oppose itself to the leadership of the Kuomintang.

Thus, the bourgeois-counter-revolutionary coup of Chiang Kai-shek found the revolutionary proletariat completely unprepared and threw its ranks into confusion. Further, the leadership of the Communist Party even at that time badly understood the process of the development of the revolution from one stage to another and did not carry through the correct changes in the line of the party made necessary by this coup. Inasmuch as the left wing of the petty bourgeois leaders of the Kuomintang during the course of a certain time still went together with the Communist Party, there took place a territorial separation; there arose the separate governments of Nanking and Wuhan. But the Communist Party did not occupy a leading position even in Wuhan.

Very quickly, in the Wuhan territory there commenced a second period, characterized, among other things, on the one hand, by the presence of elements of an incipient, still indefinite dual power (the seizure by peasant unions of a number of ruling functions in the villages, and the extension of the functions of the trade unions, determined by the endeavour of the masses to reach a "plebeian" independent solution of the questions of power), and, on the other hand, by the absence of sufficiently mature conditions for the organization of Soviets as organs of revolt against the Wuhan government, insofar as the latter still carried on a revolutionary struggle against the Nanking government which represented the treachery of the bourgeosie to the revolution.

The Communist Party at that time directly hindered the independent actions of the revolutionary masses, it did not facilitate their task of gathering and organizing forces, it did not assist in breaking down the influence of the leaders of the Left Kuomintang and their position in the country and in the army, instead of utilizing its participation in the Government for these purposes, it, on the contrary, screened the whole activity of this Government (individual petty bourgeois leading members of the party went so far that they even participated in the disarming of the workers' pickets in Wuhan and in sanctioning the punitive expedition to Changsha!).

At the bottom of this opportunist policy lay the hope of avoiding a rupture with the petty bourgeois leaders of the Wuhan governments. But, as a matter of fact, this rupture could only be put off for a short space of time. When the mass risings acquired a threatening character, the leaders of the Wuhan Kuomintang also began to reach out toward unity with their allies on the other side of the barricades. The revolutionary movement of the workers and peasants still continued to exert all its forces in order to achieve victory.

The Communist Party of China now also corrected its line, elected a new leadership and took its place at the head of the revolution. But the revolutionary wave had already ebbed. The heroic mass struggles under the slogan of Soviets could only achieve a few temporary successes. Only in individual localities did the uprising of the agrarian revolution begin sufficiently early, in the remainder the many millions of the peasants' rearguard were delayed in their advance. Instead of the former gross errors of opportunist leadership, there were now revealed on the contrary, in various places extremely harmful putschist mistakes. The preparations for risings also did not take place without great defects on the part of the Communists. The heavy defeats once more threw back the revolution, which in the south had already entered into the second stage of development, to the starting point of this stage.

27. Thanks to the fact that the Chinese national bourgeoisie obtained power, the composition of the former bloc of the imperialists and militarists was partly altered and the new ruling bloc now represents the immediate chief enemy of the revolution. In order to overthrow it, it is necessary to win over the decisive masses of the proletariat and peasantry to the side of the revolution. This constitutes the most important task of the Chinese Communist Party for the immediate future. The Chinese workers have already acquired an enormous experience. The further strengthening and revolutionization of the trade union movement and the further strengthening of the Communist Party is essential. A certain portion of the Chinese peasantry has already outlived bourgeois democratic illusions and shown considerable activity in the revolutionary struggle, but this is only an insignificant minority of the huge peasant population of China.

It is very probable that some petty bourgeois groups will take up the position of national reformism (inside or outside the Kuomintang), in order by a certain display of bourgeois-democratic opposition to conquer influence over the toiling masses (to these petty bourgeois reformists belong also Tang Ting-san and the Social Democratic trade-union leaders). Under no circumstances must the significance of these attempts be underestimated. The isolation of these groups and their exposure before the masses by means of correct Communist tactics constitutes an absolutely essential precondition for the Communist Party to be able to take a really leading position in the moment of the coming new rise of the revolutionary wave in China.

Already at the present time, the party must everywhere propagate among the masses the idea of Soviets, the idea of the dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry, and the inevitability of the coming revolutionary mass armed uprising. It must already now emphasize in its agitation the necessity of overthrow of the ruling bloc and the mobilization of the masses for revolutionary demonstrations. Carefully studying the objective conditions of the revolution as they continue to mature, utilizing every possibility for the mobilization of the masses, it must consistently and undeviatingly follow the line of seizure of state power, organization of Soviets as organs of the insurrection, expropriation of the landlords and big property-owners, expulsion of the foreign imperialists and the confiscation of their property.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder, after you finished your assignment in South America, that is, you were Comintern delegate to South America, what was your next assignment?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, my next assignment was I was put in charge of the Communist Party's labor union activities in the New York area.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you were assigned from South America back to New York?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. What year was that?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That was about the end of 1931.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you tell us what you did when you reported for your duties, you new duties?

The CHAIRMAN. I think before you get into that, I have a question I would like to ask you. When you left South America, did you return to Russia?

Mr. KORNFEDER. No, I returned to the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell me, what was the date of your departure from Moscow to go to South America?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I departed from Moscow, I believe, in April 1930. It may have been the early part of May.

Mr. MORRIS. So you were in South America a little more than a year?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I was in South America about 17 months.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were you in South America?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I was first in Colombia, stationed in the capital of Colombia, Bogota, and then I was in Venezuela, in the capital, Caracas.

The CHAIRMAN. Specifically, what was your mission down there? Was it to organize?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, the strategic objective was to get at the oil fields of Venezuela and Colombia. But since there were no competent Communist Parties in existence, the job was, first, to organize Communist Parties with which to do it, and after organizing native Communist Parties, and organizing a labor federation, then to concentrate on the organization of the oil fields.

The CHAIRMAN. Through the labor population, is that right?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. How far along did you get with it while you were there?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, I succeeded to reorganize a very loose, inefficient, socialistic political party in Colombia, and make out of it a Communist Party, and organized also a committee for the formation of a labor federation, which had the affiliation of the existing local unions that then were operating in Colombia.

I also succeeded to organize organizing committees amongst the Colombian peasants and plantation hands—that is, the plantation workers, the coffee plantations, and some groups, two small organizing groups, in the oil areas and in the banana region.

Mr. MORRIS. Was the purpose of this work of the Communist organization to cut off raw materials from the United States in the event of an emergency with that country?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, the whole strategic purpose of activities in this type of country is to isolate the hinterland from the advanced countries, and does deprive the advanced countries from raw materials and markets for their goods. That is the broad strategic purpose.

In the specific case of Venezuela and Colombia, the general purpose was similar, but the specific purpose was that, in the event of a war, a war between the United States and Russia, which was, of course, anticipated in Moscow all the time—because the United States was considered the ultimate fortress of capitalism—they wanted to be in a position during a strategic moment to tie up the oil fields. That was the immediate strategic objective of organizing Venezuela and Colombia.

Mr. MORRIS. A few years ago, Mr. Kornfeder, there was a Communist demonstration in Bogota. Do you know whether or not any of the people engaged in that uprising were people you organized when you were in South America?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes. All the leaders whose names appeared in the news dispatches from there were, at the time I was there, members of the central committee of the Communist Party that I had organized.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder, we are just getting a little bit from our principal subject here.

Will you describe the activities, or rather describe your visit back to the United States in 1941? What was the first thing you did when you got to the United States?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, the first thing I had to do was to find a place where to live, and since I didn't have one, I camped in Earl Browder's apartment for 6 weeks.

Mr. MORRIS. Who else was there during that period of 6 weeks?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, almost all the then leaders of the party off and on used to come to that apartment for discussions, tactical and organizational and strategic problems.

The CHAIRMAN. That was in the city of New York?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That was in the city of New York.

And among them was one that I imagine you would be interested in, Harrison George.

Harrison George was then taking the place of Earl Browder in the Pan-Pacific Union secretariat.

The subsidiary body of the Red international labor unions, which was seeking to infiltrate the labor movement in China and Japan, and other countries in the Far East, had received a new project. The project was that this secretariat that he was then heading was to move from China to San Francisco because, in China at that time, the situation had become difficult for the Communists, and they were moving the headquarters of the Communist International that was operating secretly in Shanghai or Hankow, moving them to the United States.

There is one special episode I think I should mention before this committee.

From then on, the Communist Party of the United States began to concentrate on the district in California, which had been neglected until then. A great many of the agitators, writers, organizers, were from there on assigned to develop the party organization in California, especially in 'Frisco, Los Angeles, and so on.

The CHAIRMAN. Now you say from there on. From about what date would that be?

Mr. KORNFEDER. From 1932 on.

Now, among the problems that Harrison George raised was the problem under what auspices to do a great deal of this work, not only in the United States but in the countries at which these activities were especially aimed, that is, China, Indochina, Indonesia, India, and so on.

It is in this connection that I first took notice of the organization known as the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The subject came up because there was needed an organization that could function as a front for the operations in that area, a respectable enough front that is not suspect.

Earl Browder, as I recall it, said that the Institute of Pacific Relations could be made an instrument for that purpose, that the party had already important contacts in there at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. And was that in your line of activity in the Communist movement, to work on such a project, Mr. Kornfeder?

Mr. KORNFEDER. No, that was not in my line of actviity.

Mr. MORRIS. And you learned that just because of the fact that you happened to be staying at Earl Browder's house at that time?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. And then you continued on and worked in the Communist Party until how long?

Mr. KORNFEDER. I continued in charge of their labor union and unemployment activities in the New York area and later on in Ohio, until 1934.

Mr. MORRIS. And then did you break with the Communist Party in 1934?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder, as a matter of interest, how long did it take you to completely dissassociate yourself from the Communist Party?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, to disassociate myself completely, not only from their organization but from their theories and ideology, I would say it took me until 1937, about 3 years.

I first rejected, of course, Stalin's methods and then I questioned Lenin's theories, but still held on to the principal concepts of Marxism, and then I sweated through that subject as to whether Marx was right or not.

Politically, I thought he was wrong 2 years after, but as to whether, on his economics, he was wrong, it took me another year.

So it took me about 3 years to completely disassociate myself from the philosophy, theory, et cetera, of that movement.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you initiate the break?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, the break occurred on a difference on current policy, which, at that time, involved the question as to whether the Communist Party should work through the craft unions of the American Federation of Labor and dissolve the independent nonaffiliated unions that it controlled, or whether it should form a new organization of the type, as later on, as the CIO became.

I was in favor of the type of organization like the CIO which, at that time, was contrary to the line dictated from Moscow.

Senator FERGUSON. Were you a Marxist before you were a Communist?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. That is why it took some time to break your ties with Marxism?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you see now really any difference between Marxism and communism?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Not in the objectives, but there is a big difference in methods.

Senator FERGUSON. In the methods?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. But do you not think that in the end they have to be one and the same if they are going to be successful?

Mr. KORNFEDER. In the end, if they get control, in order to stay in control they will have to use more and more Communist methods themselves.

Senator FERGUSON. They will have to use force to keep their control, will they not?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. And is that not really their policy, was that not the Marxist policy?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That was Marxist policy; yes.

You see, the disputation between the Socialists and the Communists is, to a considerable extent, on the interpretation of what Marx meant. But they both consider Marx as their ideological prophet.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Kornfeder, after you broke with the Communist organization, and you say that break took you about 3 years, still you were not orientated to the point of view that you would have testified before a Senate committee at that time, would you, Mr. Kornfeder?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Definitely not. I would not have appeared before any official body of the Government, whether judicial, legislative, or any other. It requires the complete break and the realization that this thing is a menace.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you not mean that it requires more than a complete break, Mr. Kornfeder, that in addition to the complete break there must also come this realization you speak of, the menace of communism?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes, definitely so. Yes.

I came to look upon communism as a modern form of reaction in the sense that it seeks to reimpose the domination of the state in an absolutist form, a thing that humanity has struggled against for centuries.

So once that picture dawns upon your mind, well, then you are finished with the whole thing.

Senator FERGUSON. But it is sold to you in the package that it is something new?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes; that it is something new, that through its methods you are going to achieve great innovations that are good for the humanity as a whole, and especially for the underdog; and especially, if you are one of the underdogs, it is very appealing.

Senator FERGUSON. It does not show you the side that you become the slave of the state?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Definitely not.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, it criticizes the economic royalists and it advocates the political royalists, does it not?

Mr. KORNFEDER. It criticizes the monopolies of capitalism and imposes a supermonopoly of the state.

Senator FERGUSON. Of statism?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. So it would be well for us to see how we can get rid of the monopolies of the economic royalists and not impose upon ourselves a political monoply?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Something even worse.

Senator FERGUSON. Something even worse?

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I get back to this pamphlet again?

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to have the following passage, two or three passages, read into the record, and then I will ask Mr. Kornfeder a few questions on it.

This is from page 107, from a pamphlet called China Yesterday and Today, by Eleanor Lattimore, edited by Marguerite Ann Stewart, a cooperative project between the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, and Webster Publishing Co.

Until early 1946, however, the Kuomintang refused to recognize other parties as legal political bodies. Friction has been especially bitter between the Government and the Communists. Soon after the war with Japan ended, armed conflicts occurred between them which, if allowed to become an all-out civil war, could easily have destroyed all that China had gained during her war against Japan.

For the Communists are by no means the small minority party they were when they were driven from the south by Chiang's troops. They are now second to the Kuomintang in size and influence, and control an area inhabited by about 100,000,000 people.

When we speak of the Chinese Communists, we should remember that they stand for something rather different from what is ordinarily meant by the word Communist.

And the word "Communist" is italicized.

They are not advocating the Russian system for China, and, unlike the Russians, they maintain the rights of private property and enterprise in the areas under their control.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you read that again?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

They are not advocating the Russian system for China, and, unlike the Russians, they maintain the rights of private property and enterprise in the areas under their control.

Because their chief interest at the moment is in improving the economic conditions of the Chinese farmer and in increasing the number of people capable of taking part in political life, they are often described as a peasant party.

They have established a system of popular elections in the regions under their control; they favor extending the vote to the people of the rest of the country; and they have long declared that they would support a democratic republic in which not only they themselves but all other Chinese political parties would be represented.

At the time this is being written—and the date is 1946—

negotiations are being carried on between the Chinese Government and the Communists which, it is hoped, will result in a more democratic government. For not until China achieves a government in which the Chinese people are adequately represented and which brings about agricultural reforms designed to give her farmers enough to live on will the underlying causes of communism be removed.

Mr. Kornfeder, I ask you if you will comment upon those passages that I have just read. I offer this book for your scrutiny.

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, I think I already covered one angle of this, namely, that the Chinese Communists are just a peasant party.

The change of strategy from basing upon the factory workers to the Chinese peasants was important, decisive, tactical change.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it decided, Mr. Kornfeder, at that Sixth World Congress that you attended, that the Chinese Communists would be represented as a peasant party?

Mr. KORNFEDER. No; it wasn't decided. They don't accept the peasant party, they only accept affiliations of Communist parties. The change was to orientate the strategy on the peasants. The peasant can be made ideologically a Communist just like a factory worker.

A Communist is not necessarily made in the economic category, he is made through ideology. So the calculation of Stalin worked out, that you can work, which was one of his major contributions to Communist strategy, by the way, the change of orientation in the colonial countries from the workers which, in the colonial countries, are only a few. There is not much industry. But the peasants which are the big, downtrodden mass, and the Chinese Communist Party became a Communist Party, recruited mainly from peasants who had become Communists. But it was a Communist Party in every sense.

Senator FERGUSON. When you say Communist Party, you mean international, under the domination of the Kremlin?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Under the complete domination of the Kremlin; yes.

Now, as to private property. Well, you see, this is a very skillful piece of sugar-coating the Communist position, very cleverly written. You could imply this, and you could imply another thing.

But it is a part of Communist strategy when they seize a country not to expropriate the peasants and the small shopkeepers right away. They cannot do it. But they nationalize the land.

Here it says that nationalization is taking place. Well, nationalization means that the Government takes title to all the land, whether it enforces that title right away or not in a matter of tactics, of operation.

In Russia, the land was nationalized immediately after seizure of the power by the Bolsheviks, but the nationalization wasn't really enforced until years later when they had consolidated themselves and collectivized the farms, had supercollectivized them, and so on and so forth.

So you can say, half-truths, that they are going to maintain private property. But for how long?

Senator FERGUSON. Is it not true that the facts today, that China today, and I am talking about the mainland, has disproved that statement?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Well, they nationalized the land. They have not yet taken the land off the peasants. They have taken the land from the larger landowners and distributed it among the peasants in order to get the support of the peasants and their cooperation until they entrench themselves.

Then, after they have entrenched themselves, they will do in China, carry out, the same Bolshevik program as in Russia. They will make state farms, and they will make supercollectives which are dominated, controlled, and managed by the state.

But in the first stage, in a colonial country, that would be a suicidal method, if the Communists would attempt to force collectivization immediately. They first have to have complete control of the Government apparatus, a well-organized political police, a well functioning Communist Party, and all the committees, before they can attempt to create a war with the peasants because when they begin to take the land away from the peasants, and the so-called collectives, the peasants will resist.

They resisted in Russia and they certainly will resist in China. So this is a very misleading, skillful piece of selling the Communist program with the pretense that it isn't Communist. But it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Now you are referring to the article in the book handed to you by Mr. Morris?

Mr. KORNFEDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And that is "China Today',' is that it?

Mr. MORRIS. No; this is a publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations and the Webster Publishing Co., by Eleanor Lattimore, published in 1946, and it is entitled "China Yesterday and Today."

In other words, Mr. Kornfeder, you do not agree with Mrs. Lattimore when she says here:

> When we speak of the Chinese Communists, we should remember that they stand for something rather different from what is ordinarily meant by the word "Communist."

Mr. KORNFEDER. That is right. I disagree with it in every sense.

Mr. MORRIS. And you know that the Chinese Communists, from your own experience, is a member of the Comintern organization?

Mr. KORNFEDER. They are not only Communists, they are among the most intransigent, they are among the best Communists.

They really believe and they are thoroughly indoctrinated, like semi-illiterate persons. When they absorb a doctrine, they really are all-out for it. The Chinese Communists are that type.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, before putting this into the record, I would like to make the observation that the photograph appearing on page 108, from which we have made these extracts, has been supplied by courtesy of the China Aid Council, and I would like the record to show that two witnesses have identified the China Aid Council as a Communist-controlled organization.

Senator FERGUSON. Could you say what the photograph is?

Mr. MORRIS. It is the photograph that appears on page 108. It says "Courtesy China Aid Council," and the caption is "Communist students of China's northwest studying in front of the loess cave which is their classroom."

May that go into the record, Senator? The text does not have to go in because I have read it.

The CHAIRMAN. I cannot put the picture into the record. The rest will go into the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 258" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. I think that is all we have of Mr. Kornfeder.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions, Senator?

Senator FERGUSON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have some more exhibits. I think we will take a few minutes to put them into the record, if you have the time.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, this last exhibit that went in, this pamphlet, is there any description in the record as to who Eleanor Lattimore is?

Mr. MORRIS. Eleanor Lattimore is the wife of Owen Lattimore, and is the Eleanor Lattimore who has held office in, and who has worked for, the Institute of Pacific Relations.

There would seem to be absolutely no doubt that she is the wife of Owen Lattimore.

The CHAIRMAN. What is in the record from before?

Mr. MORRIS. She has testified in executive session before this committee.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated March 31, 1938, addressed to Philip C. Jessup from Edward C. Carter. It reads as follows:

DEAR JESSUP: Would you be interested in dining with me and a few others at the Century Club at 7:15 on the evening of Wednesday, April 20, to listen to a hundred-percent Bolshevik view of the Moscow trials? I have invited Constantine Oumansky, the able, two-fisted counselor of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, to come to New York that evening to speak to a little dinner of a dozen of my friends and then submit himself to the frankest questions that any of my guests care to put.

If it is possible to accept, I can promise you a provocative and interesting evening.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom is that addressed?

Mr. MANDEL. To Prof. Philip C. Jessup from Edward C. Carter.

We have a letter, also from the files, from Birchfield, Norfolk, Conn., dated April 2, 1938, addressed to Mr. Carter, from Philip C. Jessup, reading as follows:

DEAR MR. CARTER: I accept eagerly and gratefully for Wednesday the 20th. Many thanks.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP C. JESSUP.

Senator FERGUSON. May I have the letter?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer that, and ask that that be introduced into the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

Mr. Mandel, will you kindly identify that as having been taken from the institute's files?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes; I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Taken from where?

Mr. MANDEL. The files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record, and properly identified.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 259" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 259

129 EAST FIFTY-SECOND STREET,
New York City, March 31, 1938.

Prof. PHILIP C. JESSUP,
Norfolk, Conn.

DEAR JESSUP: Would you be interested in dining with me and a few others at the Century Club at 7:15 on the evening of Wednesday, April 20, to listen to a 100-percent Bolshevik view of the Moscow trials? I have invited Constantine Oumansky, the able, two-fisted counselor of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, to come to New York that evening to speak to a little dinner of a dozen of my friends and then submit himself to the frankest questions that any of my guests care to put?

If it is possible to accept, I can promise you a provocative and interesting evening.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

BIRCHFIELD,
Norfolk, Conn., April 2, 1938.

DEAR MR. CARTER: I accept eagerly and gratefully for Wednesday, the 20th. Many thanks.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP C. JESSUP.

Senator FERGUSON. Could you identify the Moscow trials?

Mr. MANDEL. The Moscow trials were in 1937, and were popularly known as the purge trials, and created a tremendous furor throughout the world because noted Soviet leaders were brought to trial, and they confessed to having tried to overthrow the Soviet Government. Many of them were liquidated or disappeared. They aroused indignation throughout the world and especially in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, you may proceed.

Mr. MANDEL. I refer now to a document which is from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated April 12, 1943, addressed to Hon. John H. Kerr, chairman, Special Subcommittee on Committee on Appropriations, and it is signed by Edward C. Carter.

Now, the reference in this letter that I want to read is this:

I have known Mr. Bisson personally for more than 10 years. He was a member of the American delegation to the IPR conference at Yosemite National Park in 1936. The late Hon. Newton D. Baker was chairman of that delegation.

As a member of the research staff of the Foreign Policy Association, I have followed Mr. Bisson's scholarly writing on the Far East very closely. He has consistently maintained a high standard of objectivity. Indeed, his work is of such a high order that in 1938 the institute asked him to write a book on American policy in the Far East. Dr. Philip C. Jessup of Columbia University was chairman of the institute at that time and this assignment was given to Mr. Bisson with Dr. Jessup's full approval.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that Mr. Bisson has been identified before this committee as a member of the Communist organization.

May I offer this into evidence, Mr. Chairman, for whatever probative value there may be in that one reference?

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, this is a document taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. And, Mr. Chairman, the Hon. John H. Kerr was the chairman of a special subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, of the House of Representatives, and apparently the question of Mr. Bisson's loyalty had come up and letters of recommendation were sent in from various people, according to our scrutiny of the files,

The CHAIRMAN. It may be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 260" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 260

129 EAST FIFTY-SECOND STREET,
New York City, April 12, 1943.

Regarding T. A. Bisson.

Hon. JOHN H. KERR,
Chairman, Special Subcommittee on Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have known Mr. Bisson personally for more than 10 years. He was a member of the American delegation to the IPR conference at Yosemite National Park in 1936. The late Hon. Newton D. Baker was chairman of that delegation.

As a member of the research staff of the Foreign Policy Association, I have followed Mr. Bisson's scholarly writing on the Far East very closely. He has consistently maintained a high standard of objectivity. Indeed, his work is of such a high order that in 1938 the institute asked him to write a book on American policy in the Far East. Dr. Philip C. Jessup, of Columbia University, was chairman of the institute at that time and this assignment was given to Mr. Bisson with Dr. Jessup's full approval. Under separate cover I am sending you a copy of that book in order that you may familiarize yourself with the quality of his writing. This book has received high praise from a great many outstanding American experts on the Far East. It has consequently had a wide sale and is a standard reference book in a great many public and university libraries.

Mr. Bisson is 100 percent American. He was alert to the Japanese menace long before the general public became aware of the implications to the peace of America of Japanese aggression and in many of his writings he faithfully stated the issues that the United States must face vis-à-vis Japanese military expansion.

If you wish further information, please let me know.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated February 16, 1940, addressed to Mr. Motylev, Pacific Institute, 20 Razin Street, Moscow, U. S. S. R.

DEAR MOTYLEV: You will, I think, be interested in the enclosed clipping from the New York Herald Tribune of February 15, 1940, giving the views of Dr. Philip C. Jessup with reference to the City of Flint at Murmansk.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

And I have here the clipping, a copy of the clipping, from the New York Herald Tribune of February 15, 1940, and I read the last paragraph of the article referred to as follows:

Dr. Jessup paid tribute to naval officers, who were, he said, the firmest supporters of international law at present. He declared that the Soviet Union had committed no violation of international law in holding the freighter City of Flint at Murmansk. The action of the British naval patrol, however, in forcing the Mormacsun to enter a belligerent port he described as contrary to the neutrality laws of the United States and to accepted principles of international law.

May I point out that this occurred during the period of the Stalin-Hitler pact?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that go into the record and be marked as the next consecutive exhibit? That is the letter from the institute's files, Mr. Carter to Mr. Motylev, as well as the clipping from the New York Herald Tribune that Mr. Mandel read.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 261" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 261

129 EAST 52D STREET,
NEW YORK CITY,
February 16, 1940.

Dr. V. E. MOTYLEV,
Pacific Institute, 20 Razin Street,
Moscow, U. S. S. R.

DEAR MOTYLEV: You will, I think, be interested in the enclosed clipping from the New York Herald Tribune of February 15, 1940, giving the views of Dr. Philip C. Jessup with reference to the City of Flint at Murmansk.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

[From the New York Herald Tribune, February 15, 1940]

UNITED STATES NEUTRALITY DOGMA CALLED MILD-MANNERED—JESSUP, OF COLUMBIA, FINDS CHANGE IN INTERNATIONAL LAW

The assertion of neutrality rights by the United States was called mild-mannered yesterday by Prof. Philip C. Jessup, of the Columbia University Law School, at a luncheon of the school's alumni association at the Lawyer's Club, 115 Broadway. He said the British blockade was not a blockade in any technical sense but a measure of reprisal against Germany for its submarine warfare.

Under earlier concepts of international law, Dr. Jessup explained, the burden of proof was on the captor of a merchant vessel in wartime. Under the present procedure of British prize courts, he said, this burden of proof had been shifted to the complainant, making it almost impossible for the neutral owner of a vessel to prove what would be the eventual destination of his cargo.

Dr. Jessup paid tribute to naval officers, who were, he said, the firmest supporters of international law at present. He declared that the Soviet Union had committed no violation of international law in holding the freighter City of Flint at Murmansk. The action of the British naval patrol, however, in forcing the Mormacsun to enter a belligerent port, he described as contrary to the neutrality laws of the United States and to accepted principles of international law.

Mr. MANDEL. In connection with the last item, may I refer to the New York Times of October 29, 1939, which carries a statement as follows, under the headline "United States accuses Soviet in Flint confusion. Formal charge is made that Russia treats American envoy with contempt."

The first paragraph:

With the freighter City of Flint evidently having left Murmansk carrying her American crew on board under a German prize detail, and with Laurence A. Steinhardt, the United States Ambassador to Russia, having been unable to communicate with Capt. Joseph A. Gainard of the ship, the State Department tonight charged the Soviet Government with "withholding adequate cooperation."

The article goes into greater detail.

Senator FERGUSON. May I inquire, then, is it a fact that Mr. Jessup was taking a stand contrary to the stand taken by the United States of America through its State Department?

Mr. MANDEL. Correct.

Senator FERGUSON. That is, in that article?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And then this stand, which was opposing the stand of the United States of America, was being sent by Mr. Carter to a Russian Communist in Russia?

Mr. MANDEL. To a Russian official.

Senator FERGUSON. And a Communist in Russia?

Mr. MORRIS. Whether he is a member of the Communist Party, we cannot say, Senator. But Dr. Motylev, who is the representative of the Soviet Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, whether he is a member of the Russian Communist Party, we cannot say.

Senator FERGUSON. And this letter says "I think it will be interesting." You will be interested in this stand, in other words, of Dr. Jessup against the stand of the United States Government; is that correct?

Mr. MANDEL. Correct, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. I had a little difficulty at first getting the significance when you put it in at first. Until you read the last, I wondered whether I was right in my conclusions.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that Mr. Mandel make a photostat of this article from which he read, and have that introduced into the record.

Senator FERGUSON. I think it should be, to make this perfectly clear as to what this is.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be done. See that it gets into the record at the proper sequence.

(The information referred to is as follows:)

[From the New York Times, October 29, 1939]

UNITED STATES ACCUSES SOVIET IN "FLINT" CONFUSION—FORMAL CHARGE IS MADE THAT RUSSIA TREATS AMERICAN ENVOY WITH CONTEMPT

(By Bertram D. Hulen)

WASHINGTON, October 28.—With the freighter City of Flint evidently having left Murmansk carrying her American crew on board under a German prize detail and with Laurence A. Steinhardt, the United States Ambassador to Russia, having been unable to communicate with Capt. Joseph A. Gainard of the ship, the State Department tonight charged the Soviet Government with "withholding adequate cooperation."

The charge, made in a formal statement, reflected the intense irritation felt in Washington over the cavalier fashion in which the diplomatic representative of this Government in Moscow has been treated by the Soviet authorities. Officials expressed unconcealed anger over the failure to ascertain any definite facts officially regarding the vessel.

State Department officials discussed the situation from every angle during the day. It was learned that staff conferences, headed by Secretary Cordell Hull, were held behind closed doors twice during the day. Officials, however, preserved an unusual reticence and nothing more than the formal statement was made public.

HIGH OFFICIALS CONFER

Conferring with Mr. Hull were top-flight officials of his Department, including R. Walton Moore, counselor; Adolf A. Berle, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State; and Green H. Hackworth, legal adviser of the Department.

It is generally believed that the City of Flint sailed, possibly 2 or 3 days ago, to run the British blockade and reach a German port in the Baltic before institution of prize court proceedings by the Nazi authorities.

According to press reports, the United States Embassy in Moscow was convinced tonight that she had sailed. This word had not been communicated to the State Department by the Embassy, but it was regarded as a reasonable assumption.

Previous reports from Moscow and from Berlin, first that the City of Flint had sailed, then that she had not, were considered an obvious effort to confuse the situation in order to minimize, if possible, the risks the ship must take in eluding British blockaders.

But it was apparent from the State Department's statement tonight that if she does run the blockade German claims to her permanent possession will be resisted in the expected legal proceedings.

The statement, factual in its contents and reciting the circumstances that have surrounded the City of Flint since her seizure, clearly implied that the Russian Government had disregarded the requirements of international law.

It implied also that neither Russia in her dealings with Ambassador Steinhardt nor Germany in her conversations with Alexander C. Kirk, the United States Chargé d'Affaires in Berlin, had been frank, if indeed honest.

It emphasized that Mr. Steinhardt throughout had been denied access to the primary source of information, the vessel herself.

So far, Mr. Steinhardt has been unsuccessful in persuading the Soviet regime to conform to the customary diplomatic procedure, even although this be of the most formal character. In short, official Washington considers that he has been treated with nothing less than contempt.

The State Department statement was considered as forming a basis for resistance to any claim for permanent possession of the vessel that Germany might advance in prize court proceedings.

VIEWS NOT VOICED IN NOTE

The statement could be considered a protest, although outside formal diplomatic channels. While some thought may have been given to voicing these views in a note, that course has not yet been adopted, at least so far as was revealed tonight.

An emphatic form of protest could be registered by ordering Mr. Steinhardt home for consultation, but no consideration is said to have been given to that course as yet.

Today's statement pointed out that, judging from press reports from German sources, the German authorities were not without information, although Mr. Steinhardt was having extraordinary difficulty in obtaining the facts and was given no facility for personally verifying them.

A short time before the statement was issued, the Ambassador reported to the State Department that again he had been unable to make telephone contact with Captain Gainard.

Officials here were satisfied that the vessel had left Murmansk and was seeking to reach a German harbor. Obviously, it was pointed out, Russia would not give this information if she were deliberately siding with Germany. If really neutral, she might feel that to announce departure of the ship would be to inform Great Britain and for that reason be an unneutral act.

That Germany would bend every effort to conceal the departure of the vessel was considered only natural, so reports on this score from Berlin today were discounted.

Mr. Kirk reported from Berlin to the State Department that in reply to an inquiry at the Ministry of Marine this afternoon he was told that the American crew was on board the City of Flint at Murmansk. After a further inquiry late this afternoon at the Foreign Office, Mr. Kirk was informed that, according to the latest reports, the vessel and crew were still in the Arctic port. It was also said that if, after the completion of repairs, the ship were taken to another port, the American crew would presumably be kept on board to operate the vessel.

Mr. Kirk also reported that, according to information he had received from the American consul general in Hamburg, the prize commissioner has received no news of the vessel.

The rebuffs received at the hands of Russia were resented here no less because the Foreign Office was following its customary course of putting off and humiliating an Ambassador and his Government. It is a well-understood technique of the Soviet regime.

An Ambassador will seek official information, only to be refused an appointment at the Foreign Office or be told that there is no information available. Later the substance of what he has sought will appear in press reports, and when he again calls at the Foreign Office this will be given him. In this and other ways the Moscow Government follows a calculated policy of insolence toward the envoy.

Diplomats of long experience in revolutionary Russia know the pattern well and are not surprised, though their resentment reaches the boiling point. To them it reflects Bolshevist philosophy of treating governments with contempt in making announcements first through Soviet press channels on the theory that in this way they are dealing directly with the people of a country, not with their representatives.

But the White House and the State Department are not concerned with the philosophy that might explain the treatment accorded the United States Government in this case. They are deeply resentful over the whole episode.

UNITED STATES STATEMENT ON "FLINT"

WASHINGTON, October 28.—Following is the text of the statement issued by the State Department tonight on the case of the steamer City of Flint:

"The City of Flint was captured by a German cruiser at an estimated distance of some 1,250 miles from New York, with a mixed cargo destined for British ports. The date of capture is understood to have been October 9.

"The City of Flint was taken into the harbor of Tromsoe on October 21, with a German crew and flying the German flag. After remaining 2 hours to take water, it was ordered by the Norwegian Government to depart, which it did.

The City of Flint was taken into the harbor of Murmansk on the evening of October 23.

"On October 25 the American chargé d'affaires cabled from Berlin that the Foreign Office, at its press conference, said that the City of Flint was captured by a German vessel and contraband was found on board, destined for England. The Foreign Office then added that it was found, however, that the ship was unseaworthy in that it did not have navigation charts adequate for bringing the ship into a German port.

"When the vessel entered the harbor of Murmansk, according to an announcement presmuably from the Soviet Government through the Tass news agency, 'the naval forces at the port of Murmansk have temporarily held the vessel and interned the German crew.'

"On October 25 the American chargé d'affaires at Berlin cabled that the German Foreign Office, referring to the seizure of the City of Flint, said that 'the German authorities were communicating with the Soviet authorities in the matter.'

"On the same day [October 25] the Tass Agency reported that 'the German crew of the cargo steamer City of Flint has been released from internment by the maritime authorities of Murmansk in view of the fact, as has been established, that the vessel was brought into port for repair of her machinery. The vessel is meanwhile remaining in Murmansk for verification of the exact composition of her cargo.'

"On October 26 the American chargé d'affaires cabled from Berlin quoting a memorandum received that morning from the Foreign Office relative to the City of Flint and its crew, which, among other things, stated that a 'prize crew placed on board [the City of Flint] has brought the steamer to the harbor of Murmansk because of sea damage.'

"When transmitting the memorandum an official of the Foreign Office stated informally to the chargé d'affaires that the Foreign Office had no details as to the damage which necessitated taking the ship to Murmansk, but he maintained, in response to an inquiry, that the term 'damage' would cover the case of a ship lacking charts with which to navigate the waters through which she had to proceed.

"For some reason as yet unexplained the German crew was interned in spite of the fact that according to German authorities they were without charts and had put into Murmansk because they could not proceed to a German port without charts. Later, they were released, seemingly under a plea that their entry into Murmansk was required for necessary repairs to defective machinery.

"A prize crew may take a captured ship into a neutral port without internment only in case of stress of weather, want of fuel and provisions, or necessity of repairs. In all other cases, the neutral is obligated to intern the prize crew and restore the vessel to her former crew.

"The conclusion from the foregoing facts and circumstances indicates that when the City of Flint entered the harbor at Murmansk, any plea relating to the chart requirements if advanced must have been ignored since the German crew was interned. A second and entirely different reason for entering Murmansk, namely, defective machinery which called for immediate repairs, was not advanced until later.

"A subsequent cable from the American chargé d'affaires at Berlin, also dated October 26, quoted a statement of the Foreign Office at its noon press conference to the effect that the fact that the Russians have freed the German crew indicates that the Soviet authorities have confirmed the view of the prize crew that the City of Flint was unseaworthy and it was therefore permissible to take the ship into a neutral harbor.

"Testimony of the American crew as to the full facts pertaining to the taking of the City of Flint into Murmansk is not yet available.

"It seems manifest that even if it is assumed that the German crew was proceeding legally prior to the entry of the City of Flint into the harbor of Murmansk, the known facts and circumstances support the contention of the American Government that the crew did not at the time of entry offer any reasonable or justifiable grounds such as are prescribed by international law for taking the vessel into this port, and that, therefore, it was the clear duty of the Soviet Government to turn the City of Flint over to the American crew. This has been the major contention of the American Government.

"In view of the foregoing facts and circumstances, each person can judge for himself the question as to how much light is shed on this entire transaction by the action of the Soviet Government in withholding adequate cooperation with the American Government with respect to assembling and disclosing to the American Embassy in Moscow the essential facts pertaining to the landing, the whereabouts, and welfare of the American crew; by the facts that it was first alleged by the German authorities that the need for charts was the ground for bringing the vessel into port; and by the fact that later this ground seems to have been abandoned and a new ground or theory relating to defective machinery was set up."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we are preparing more exhibits along the lines that we are presenting today, and I ask that they be presented at some other time.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Is there anything further today?

Senator FERGUSON. I hope, Mr. Chairman, if they are along this same line, that they may all be put into the record as soon as possible because I understand there will be another hearing of another committee where Mr. Jessup's name will be up for confirmation by the Senate.

I think it is only fair to Mr. Jessup and to the Senators that anything that this committee has in relation to these exhibits should go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I may say, Senator Ferguson, that today I have, as chairman of this committee, addressed a letter to the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate advising him that I am having a transcript of the proceedings of this committee bearing on Mr. Jessup prepared for that committee's perusal and use.

Senator FERGUSON. I think that is proper because we should not have a hearing where one matter is brought up and then not refer that to another committee that is going to pass upon Mr. Jessup.

The CHAIRMAN. The entire files of this committee will be made available to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator Ferguson, may I point out some of the difficulties?

There is one point that arose this morning on whether or not Fred Field is the one who recommended Mr. Jessup for a particular office.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Carter is here. Why do we not clear this up and ask Mr. Carter if the Fred who signed that telegram is Fred Field?

Mr. Carter, can you give us information on this?

The CHAIRMAN. Come forward, Mr. Carter, if you care to.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD C. CARTER, INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

Senator FERGUSON. Do you have the telegram?

The CHAIRMAN. You were here this morning when that wire was read?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I was in the back row.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you look at this wire?

Mr. CARTER. I would be delighted.

Mr. MORRIS. One of the difficulties here, Senator, is that we have an estimated 300,000 letters here, and then we have all the files of the institute. It takes a long time to track anything down, as Mr. Carter can appreciate.

Senator FERGUSON. I appreciate that, and that is why I knew Mr. Carter was here, and he might clear this up.

Mr. CARTER. Well, the internal evidence, which is very slender, would seem to indicate that this was Frederick V. Field.

In what year was this, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. The year is not given.

Mr. CARTER. That is rather important.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you remember such a recommendation that Field made?

Senator FERGUSON. It is a recommendation at a certain convention or committee meeting that might bring it back to your mind. I think the place of the meeting is shown on the next page.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the record will show that Mr. Carter has been sworn.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Carter, when did Jessup serve as research chairman? Do you recall that?

Mr. CARTER. I think it is here in the document you just gave to me.

Senator FERGUSON. The meeting is given, Mr. Carter, on the sheet attached to the telegram.

Mr. CARTER. I wouldn't want to be too sure, but, frankly, I am mixed up as to whether Mr. Field was speaking of Mr. Jessup. I am confused on two points: One, whether it refers to the Mount Tremblant conference in 1942, or the Hot Springs conference in 1945.

It says, "approve him as research chairman." For the life of me, on the spur of the moment, I can't remember whether it was Mount Tremblant, 1942, or Hot Springs, 1945, where Jessup was proposed as research chairman and so served.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes. But was he proposed by Fred Field at either one of those? Did you have another Fred in either 1942 or 1945?

The CHAIRMAN. That is, on your staff.

Mr. CARTER. I think we only had one Fred.

Senator FERGUSON. That was Fred Field?

Mr. CARTER. From the text of this short telegram, Fred doesn't nominate him; someone else has nominated him.

Senator FERGUSON. But he approves him?

Mr. CARTER. But he approves him.

Senator FERGUSON. And that would be Fred Field?

Mr. CARTER. That would be Fred Field.

Mr. MORRIS. That is not quite right, is it, Mr. Carter? It says here, "approve the nominations and suggest Jessup for research chairman."

In other words, the suggestion is coming from Field, if it is Field, that Jessup be research chairman?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. But just on the one telegram, without refreshing myself on all of the operations—this was a complicated international organization, with a dozen countries and committees within each country, trying to get agreement between the British and the French and the Australians, and so on.

Mr. MORRIS. This Winsted, Conn., November 23 would not give you a clue, would it? The Hot Springs convention was in the summer, was it not?

Mr. CARTER. No; it was along, I think, in January.

Mr. MORRIS. Hot Springs?

Mr. CARTER. Winsted is far away from Hot Springs.

Mr. MORRIS. But someone may have lived there in 1942 and not in 1945. That does not mean anything to you?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Senator FERGUSON. I think he identified it earlier. Fred Field is the only one they have. Therefore it is apparent that it is Fred Field.

Mr. CARTER. I could call up Mr. Holland, who has the remains of the files there, and his memory might be better than mine.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all for today?

Mr. MORRIS. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be called any time you want it called.

Mr. MORRIS. We have a witness for next Tuesday.

The CHAIRMAN. In the meantime, if you have any additional files or records bearing upon matters that should go before the Committee on Foreign Relations, would you so advise the committee?

We will stand in recess until the call of the Chair.

(Whereupon, at 4:10 p. m., Thursday, September 20, 1951, the hearing was recessed subject to the call of the Chair.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINSTRATION
OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10 a. m., pursuant to recess, Senator Pat McCarran (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Eastland, Ferguson, and Jenner.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order, please.

Mr. Morris, have you anything to proceed with?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of requests made by this committee of the various branches of the Executive Department that are in a state of either we have been turned down on our requests, or else we have gotten a generally unsatisfactory answer. I would like that the record show some of the difficulties we have encountered in this respect.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Today, Mr. Chairman, we are going to take testimony on a 3-day conference that was held by the State Department in October 1949. At that time Secretary of State Acheson had appointed Philip C. Jessup to be the head of a panel of three people to advise him on the formulation and the review of far eastern policy. Thinking this to be completely in line with the line of our investigation because most of the people invited were Institute of Pacific Relations people, we requested on August 24, 1951, of Hon. Dean Acheson, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C., over your signature, a request which reads as follows:

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee has had testimony in executive session concerning the 3-day round-table discussion arranged by the Office of Public Affairs of the State Department for the purpose of exchanging views with informed private citizens on United States foreign policy toward China, and which took place on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949.

It is requested that the minutes, which our testimony indicates were taken at the time, be made available to this committee.

Mr. Chairman, I would like that request on your part to Secretary of State Acheson on August 24, 1951, introduced in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be introduced in the record.

(The document referred to and read into the record by Mr. Mandel was marked "Exhibit No. 262" and filed for the record.)

The CHAIRMAN. What is the answer?

Mr. MORRIS. The answer is dated September 12, 1951, and reads:

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I have received your letter of August 24, 1951 (received August 27), requesting the minutes of the meeting held in the Department on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949, concerning American policy toward China. I regret that this reply has been delayed during the absence of many departmental officers in San Francisco.

As I think you know, the record kept of this decision was classified confidential. This was done to insure frankness on the part of the non-Government people invited to the conference and they were specifically advised that their remarks would not be made available outside the Department of State. To honor the commitment made to these participants, therefore, the Department believes that the record of this meeting should not be released, even on a confidential basis. I am, however, enclosing a list of the people invited to this meeting.

Sincerely yours,

JACK K. MCFALL,
Assistant Secretary
(For the Secretary of State).

I would like that introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 263" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 263

SEPTEMBER 12, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Internal Security Subcommittee,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I have received your letter of August 24, 1951 (received August 27), requesting the minutes of the meeting held in the Department on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949, concerning American policy toward China. I regret that this reply has been delayed during the absence of many departmental officers in San Francisco.

As I think you know, the record kept of this discussion was classified confidential. This was done to insure frankness on the part of the non-Government people invited to the conference and they were specifically advised that their remarks would not be made available outside the Department of State. To honor the commitment made to these participants, therefore, the Department believes that the record of this meeting should not be released, even on a confidential basis. I am, however, enclosing a list of the people invited to this meeting.

Sincerely yours,

JACK K. MCFALL,
Assistant Secretary
(For the Secretary of State).

LIST OF CONSULTANTS, CONFERENCE ON PROBLEMS OF UNITED STATES POLICY IN CHINA

Joseph W. Ballantine, the Brookings Institute, Washington, D. C.
Bernard Brodie, department of international relations, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.
Claude A. Buss, director of studies, Army War College, Washington, D. C.
Kenneth Colegrove, department of political science, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.
Arthur G. Coons, president, Occidental College, Los Angeles, Calif.
John W. Decker, International Missionary Council, New York, N. Y.
John K. Fairbanks, committee on international and regional studies, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.
William R. Herod, president, International General Electric Co., New York, N. Y.
Arthur N. Holcombe, department of government, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.
Benjamin H. Kizer, Graves, Kizer & Graves, Spokane, Wash.
Owen Lattimore, director, Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

Ernest B. MacNaughton, chairman of the board, First National Bank, Portland, Oreg.
George C. Marshall, president, American Red Cross, Washington, D. C.
J. Morden Murphy, assistant vice president, Bankers Trust Co., New York, N. Y.
Nathaniel Peffer, department of public law and government, Columbia University, New York, N. Y.
Harold S. Quigley, department of political science, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
Edwin O. Reischauer, department of far-eastern languages, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.
William S. Roberston, president, American & Foreign Power Co., New York, N. Y.
John D. Rockefeller III, president, Rockefeller Brothers' Fund, New York, N. Y.
Lawrence K. Rosinger, American Institute of Pacific Relations, New York, N. Y.
Eugene Staley, executive director, World Affairs Council of Northern California, San Francisco, Calif.
Harold Stassen, president, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.
Phillips Talbot, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
George E. Taylor, University of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
Harold M. Vinacke, department of political science, University of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, during the testimony of General Willoughby testimony turned up which indicated that there are records in the War Department which could be available to this committee and which would aid us in our investigation. Accordingly, on August 20, 1951, a letter was sent to the President at the White House in Washington, D. C. It reads:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: During the open public hearing of the Internal Security Subcommittee held on August 9, 1951, Maj. Gen. C. A. Willoughby was questioned concerning the loyalty of three individuals who were attached to SCAP headquarters in the postwar period. General Willoughby replied that he was forbidden by official directive to testify on the contents of the files of the three employees involved. Each of these three persons, namely, Miriam S. Farley, Andrew Grajdanzev, and T. A. Bisson, was an active leader of the Institute of Pacific Relations prior to, during, and subsequent to their assignments to Tokyo.

It is respectfully rquested that the contents of these files be made available to the members of the Internal Security Subcommittee in order that they may translate the information in such files into evidence for the subcommittee, if the facts warrant such action. Naturally, if any confidential sources of information must be protected, the subcommittee will scrupulously protect identities.

Very sincerely yours,

PAT MCCARRAN.

I would like that introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted.

(The document referred to and read in full by Mr. Morris was marked "Exhibit No. 264" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. On September 19, 1951, over the signature of Harry Truman, President, we received a letter reading:

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I have your letter asking that the files of Miriam S. Farley, Andrew Grajdanzev, and T. A. Bisson be made available to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

I am informed that none of these persons is now employed by the Federal Government. However, all three were formerly employed at the headquarters of the Supreme Commander, Allied Powers, Tokyo, Japan. According to the records of the Department of the Army, Miriam S. Farley was employed there from January to May 1946; Andrew Grajdanzev was employed from January 1946 to August 1947; and T. A. Bisson was employed from October 1945 to May 1947.

I have asked the Secretary of the Army to make available to the subcommittee the employment records of these three persons. However, for reasons which I have set forth at length on a number of occasions, I do not feel that the information so made available to the subcommittee should include investigative data of a confidential nature.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY TRUMAN.

I would like to have that introduced, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be inserted.

(The document referred to and read in full by Mr. Morris was marked "Exhibit No. 265" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. On August 27, 1951, over the signature of Pat McCarran, chairman, a letter was sent to the Hon. Dean Acheson.

Senator FERGUSON. Might I go back to this and ask what the employment records of the three persons mean to us? It only means the dates, does it not?

Mr. MORRIS. We have received nothing, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. But it is all confidential data and the personnel file is kept from us?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. The reason for discharge if they were discharged, recommended for their employment, and so forth?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Will you read this, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter dated August 27, 1951, addressed to Hon. Dean Acheson from Pat McCarran:

MY DEAR Mr. SECRETARY: The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee introduced into the record on August 23, 1951, two items from the Daily Worker, copies of which are enclosed herewith. One is dated October 4, 1942, pages 1 and 5, and is an article by Mr. Earl Browder, general secretary of the Communist Party U. S. A., on the State Department; and the second is an article entitled "Welles States United States Policy on China," published October 16, 1942, pages 1 and 2.

The second article is preceded by a statement that the memorandum was the result of an interview between Mr. Earl Browder and Mr. Robert Minor, both representing the Communist Party, U. S. A., Under Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, and Mr. Lauchlin Currie, Administrative Assistant to the President, held on October 12, 1942.

It was pointed out in the course of the hearing that in fairness to the State Department it might be well to request a brief statement on this matter from the Department. In this connection, we would appreciate the following information:

1. Was there an interview held at the State Department in which Mr. Earl Browder, Mr. Robert Minor, Mr. Sumner Welles, and Mr. Lauchlin Currie participated on October 12, 1942?

2. Who arranged this interview and how was it arranged?

3. Is the enclosed memorandum, as taken from the Daily Worker of October 16, 1942, a true copy of the memorandum submitted by Mr. Sumner Welles and Mr. Lauchlin Currie on that date?

Your kind cooperation in this matter will be appreciated.

The reply dated September 1, 1951, is signed by Jack K. McFall, Assistant Secretary, and reads as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of August 27, 1951, addressed to Secretary Acheson requesting information concerning an alleged meeting held at the State Department October 12, 1942, in which Earl Browder, Robert Minor, Sumner Welles, and Lauchlin Currie participated.

The Department received a similar request from a Member of Congress some time ago and at that time made a thorough but unsuccessful search of departmental files for evidence of such a meeting. These efforts to obtain information respecting the meeting were complicated by the fact that the Department officers who reportedly participated were no longer with the Department.

The Department will again examine its files with a view to obtaining information bearing on the specific questions in your letter of August 27 and will write you further upon completion of this reexamination.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the date of that letter again?

Mr. MANDEL. The date is September 1, 1951.

Then on September 21, 1951, a telephone message came to the office from Mr. Holland, Chinese Affairs Division of the State Department, who said that they are working on the answer to the letter of August 27 in regard to Browder. This requires considerable research, but they want us to know that they are working on it. That is not a verbatim transcript of the message.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like those two letters to go in the record, along with the telephone conversation as read by Mr. Mandel, and given the next exhibit numbers.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be inserted.

(The documents referred to and read in full by Mr. Mandel were marked as "Exhibit Nos. 266, 267, and 268" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter from Senator Pat McCarran dated July 10, 1951, to the Honorable Dean Acheson:

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Perhaps it might save some time for all of us if, in addition to my previous requests for information on loyalty cases, you sent us a complete list of individuals dropped or permitted to resign from the State Department since the end of 1944 because of loyalty considerations.

Thank you for your courtesy in this matter.

The reply is dated August 2, 1951, from the Department of State, signed Carlisle H. Humelsine, Deputy Under Secretary:

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I refer to your letter of July 10, 1951, in which you request to be supplied with a complete list of the individuals who were dropped or permitted to resign from the State Department since the end of 1944 because of loyalty considerations.

I regret that I am precluded from furnishing you with the information which you requested, by reason of the President's directive of March 13, 1948 (Federal Register, March 16, 1948), with regard to the confidential status of employee loyalty records.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like those two letters introduced and marked with the next consecutive exhibit numbers.

The CHAIRMAN. They may be inserted.

(The documents referred to and read by Mr. Mandel were marked as "Exhibits Nos. 269 and 270" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter dated August 31, 1951, addressed to Hon. Dean Acheson and signed by Eva B. Adams, administrative assistant to Senator McCarran:

In connection with some matters now under consideration by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, we will have occasion to refer to certain memo randa from Foreign Service officers quoted in part on pages 564 to 567 of the State Department's publication "The United States Relations with China." In all fairness to the Department and the individuals involved, we would like the full documents for our use rather than the excerpts quoted. We would appreciate your sending us the full memoranda from which the quotations were taken.

Thank you for your cooperation,

Sincerely yours,

EVA B. ADAMS.

That refers to the reports of Davies, Ludden, and Service, along with Emmerson, in the white paper. The reply is dated September 12, 1951, Department of State, signed by W. K. Scott, Acting Deputy Under Secretary:

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: The receipt is acknowledged of Miss Adams' letter of August 31, 1951, requesting the full text of certain memoranda quoted in part in pages 564 to 576 of the Department publication "United States Relations With China."

The Department will examine its files for the documents in question and will communicate with you further respecting this matter.

Sincerely yours,

_____

(For the Secretary of State).

The CHAIRMAN. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. MANDEL. September 12, 1951.

Mr. MORRIS. I recommend that these two letters be introduced into the record and be marked with the next consecutive exhibit numbers.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be inserted.

(The documents referred to and read in full by Mr. Mandell were marked as "Exhibits Nos. 271 and 272" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. I have just one more exchange, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Has any further reply come from the State Department on that last letter?

Mr. MANDEL. I am searching to find if there is any further reply.

This is a letter dated September 12, 1951, to the Hon. Dean Acheson from Senator Pat McCarran:

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: For purposes of use by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, we would like to have a copy of a report sent to the State Department by John Kenneth Emmerson, dated February 25, 1946, entitled "Political Factors in the Present Japanese Situation," and another dated January 5, 1945, entitled "The Japanese Communist Party."

We would like to use this material in connection with a hearing on Friday, September 14. We shall be glad to send a messenger to the Department if you will telephone us that this material is available.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

On Thursday, September 13, we received a telephone message from a Mr. Anderson of the State Department, extension 2206, in reference to the documents mentioned in our letter of September 12, 1951, telling us we would hear further.

On September 14 Mr. Walter K. Scott of the State Department called and stated that a letter "is being written us that they will not be able to release the documents requested."

We did not receive the letter for unexplained reasons, but we got this letter over the telephone from the State Department that they had sent us dated September 19, 1951:

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: This is in reply to your request for copies of two reports sent to the State Department by Mr. John Kenneth Emmerson, one dated February 25, 1946, entitled "Political Factors in the Present Japanese Situation," and another dated January 5, 1945, entitled "The Japanese Communist Party."

It is the view of the Department that preserving the integrity of the reporting by departmental officers is a matter of principle of the highest importance. In the present context, the release of these reports by individual officers would undoubtedly have the effect of inhibiting the free and frank expression of views by officers in the field in their reports to the Department. For that reason, the request must be respectfully declined.

As this matter is of great importance to the Department, I should very much appreciate an opportunity to discuss it with you at your convenience.

Sincerely,

Signed by Mr. Webb, Acting Secretary.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like those letters to go in the record, together with the memoranda and marked with the next consecutive exhibit numbers.

The CHAIRMAN. It is so ordered.

(The documents referred to and read by Mr. Mandel were marked as "Exhibits Nos. 273, 374, and 275," and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. I would like the record to show that Professor Colegrove is here today under subpena, and we are going to ask him to testify about a meeting that took place 2 years ago. Mr. Chairman, there is a transcript of this meeting, and we have requested it and it has been denied us.

Senator FERGUSON. I do not want to take time now, but I do want to comment on some of this information that is now put in the record about the cooperation of the executive branch, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Will you be sworn? You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I do.

TESTIMONY OF KENNETH COLEGROVE, NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, EVANSTON, ILL.

Senator FERGUSON. We asked the professor to come here and he has been waiting quite a while. I did want the record to show that I did not want the record to stand as it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give your name and address to the reporter, Professor?

Mr. COLEGROVE. My name is Kenneth Colegrove. My address is Harris Hall 305, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.

Mr. MORRIS. What are your present duties?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I am professor of political science, Northwestern University.

Mr. MORRIS. How long have you held that position?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I have held that position since 1919. I have been absent from Northwestern University on sabbaticals, traveling in Europe and Asia, but the position has been held since 1919.

Mr. MORRIS. What has been your major assignment in Northwestern?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Teaching political science, particularly the field of international law and international relations and also Asiatic politics in government.

Mr. MORRIS. What degrees do you hold, Professor?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I have an A. B. degree from the State University of Iowa, a Ph. D. from Harvard University. Columbia University gave me an honorary Doctor of Letters some years ago.

Mr. MORRIS. When was that?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That was in 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, what books have you written?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I have written one book on Militarism in Japan, in 1936; a book on International Control of Aviation. That was back in 1930. I have written a book on United States Senate and World Peace, in 1944.

Mr. Morris. Professor, what has been your specialty in international affairs?

Mr. Colegrove. My specialty has been international control of aviation and treaty-making in the United States, and then government and politics and diplomacy of Japan. I might say that my studies on Japan amount to about 20 articles which are published in the American Political Science Review, the American Journal of International Law and other learned journals.

Mr. Morris. Professor, when did you first join the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. Colegrove. I joined at an early date. I am sorry to say I didn't refresh my memory on that, but somewhere in the middle of the thirties, I think.

Mr. Morris. How long have you remained a member of the institute?

Mr. Colegrove. I have been off and on, a member of the institute. You joined the institute simply by paying your dues. That is all it amounts to.

May I say I joined the institute back in the early thirties because at that time the institute had the reputation of unbiased scientific system of investigation and many of the books that it published and the survey which it published were very excellent helps in teaching and in research.

It also purported at that time to be wholly unbiased, wholly scientific, and a very large number of professors and libraries subscribed to it. I think most of the members like myself became members in order to get the publications rather than to participate in the studies.

Senator Ferguson. The studies were done by a group that could spend the time and the effort?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes.

Senator Ferguson. The books that were sent out to the student of international affairs and teachers, you did want to be in a position to get these as they came out?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes. We referred our students to these studies. They were excellent studies on the whole. Sometimes you could detect a bias but you attached that to the writer rather than to the institute itself.

Senator Ferguson. Did you know people were writing under fictitious names or aliases?

Mr. Colegrove. I didn't realize that with reference to the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator Ferguson. That was not what the teacher really wanted. He wanted to know who the writer was, his experience, et cetera?

Mr. Colegrove. Exactly.

Mr. Morris. Professor, were you associated with the publication Amerasia?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes; I was, from the first issue down to the time when I resigned.

Mr. Morris. Was the first issue in 1937?

Mr. Colegrove. 1937. I resigned from the advisory board. I was a member of what was called the advisory board of editors from 1937 until 1942 when I resigned first and was persuaded to come back. Then I resigned for good in 1943.

Mr. Morris. Will you tell us the circumstances surrounding your first becoming associated with the publication and the two resignations you have just mentioned?

Mr. Colegrove. I was invited to join the editorial board by Frederick Field who was and still is a very personable young man.

Senator Eastland. What year was that?

Mr. Colegrove. That was in 1936, the year before the first publication.

At that time the American people were not widely awake to Asia and Asiatic problems. I was among those who felt we ought to know more about Asia, that we ought to study Asia more in the schools and we ought to have more information with reference to Asia and we ought to awaken a large public opinion with reference to Asia.

America knew a great deal about Europe but Asia had been very greatly neglected. What Frederick Field and what Mr. Jaffe and others connected with Amerasia, proposed to do was to publish a monthly journal called Amerasia, America-Asia, running the two together, which would translate into popular language the learning regarding current affairs in Asia. To me that was a very attractive proposition. I think most of the editors, most of the scholars who agreed to become editors, felt that they were really doing a service to the American people and doing a service to the schools, doing a service to public opinion, by serving on this Amerasia.

The first numbers of Amerasia were excellent. Some of the very best things we have on Asia were published in Amerasia.

The Chairman. Would you raise your voice just a bit, Professor?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes.

Some very good articles were published in Amerasia. I did not detect any special line in 1937, 1938, and 1939. I knew that some of the editorial board were attached preeminently to the American interests, looked at the national interest of the American people as first and foremost. I knew that others were not so careful of the American interests and sympathized with revolutionary processes, some of which are rather dangerous.

I thought at the time it was a well-balanced board. All views were expressed there.

Mr. Morris. Professor, looking back do you think there was a line there or do you think you just did not detect a line?

Mr. Colegrove. In the first few years as I look over the old numbers I would say there was no line to be easily detected. Later on the line appeared, especially in articles by a Chinese scholar by the name of Chi.

Senator Ferguson. What was the line, Professor?

Mr. Colegrove. It is very hard to say exactly what the line was. When I use "the line," I mean a person is following the policy of Soviet Russia.

Senator Ferguson. In other words, if you had followed the line you would have gone to the Kremlin?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes; the line would go back to the Kremlin.

Mr. Morris. You say that is right?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes. That is what I meant by party line.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor. I would like to offer you an exchange of correspondence involving you, which Mr. Mandel will certify came from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want the witness to see them first?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COLEGROVE. This is a letter from Mr. Lockwood.

Mr. MORRIS. There were three letters, a copy of a letter from Mr. Lockwood to you and the second letter is one which purports to be an original of yours.

Mr. COLEGROVE. I recall the correspondence.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate that?

Mr. MANDEL. These letters dated November 30, 1942, November 20, 1942, November 18, 1942, and November 17, 1942, were taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, will you tell us your recollection of this exchange of correspondence?

Mr. COLEGROVE. As I just said, I served on this advisory editorial board from 1937 on. I was one of the few members from the West, and I must say I never attended a meeting of the editorial board, although I understand meetings were held about every month in New York City. I never happened to be in New York City when such a meeting was held.

In the beginning it was my understanding with the board that I would be given the right to approve all the articles on Japan that were published in Amerasia. These articles were sent out to me in bunches. I read them and sent back my comments. Later on I noticed that Amerasia did publish some articles on Japan which I had not O. K.'d. I was very busy at the time and didn't protest at this seeming neglect.

Then around 1940 a number of articles began to be published in Amerasia by Kate Mitchell and by Mr. Mattuch and Mr. Gohol very antagonistic to the British rule in India and also to the Dutch rule in Indonesia.

During the war Great Britain became our ally, or we became an ally of Great Britain and I thought this was very bad policy to publish these articles without having articles on the other side. I protested at this lack of impartiality and scholarship. Mr. Jaffe promised me that I would have the right before any article attacking British rule in India or Dutch rule in Indonesia——

Mr. MORRIS. Will you please speak up?

Mr. COLEGROVE. American articles were published in Amerasia attacking the British rule in India and the Dutch rule in Indonesia. That of course was following the Communist line. I didn't know that at the time. I thought it was very unscholarly to publish articles attacking British rule in India and Dutch rule in Indonesia without publishing articles on the other side. Mr. Jaffe agreed with me on this matter because I suppose he wanted to keep the old members of the board together, and said that before any article attacking the British in India or the Dutch in Indonesia was published, he would allow me to secure some other writer to publish an article on the other side.

Mr. Jaffe, I am sorry to say, in my view broke that agreement, and in the fall of 1942 I resigned from the editorial board, saying this was not following the scholarly procedure. This correspondence relates to my resignation.

Mr. Jaffe later on persuaded me to come back, with the very firm promise that it would never happen again. I regret to say that it did happen again and I resigned for good in April 1943.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, does Mr. Lockwood concede there was a line to Amerasia in his letter to you there?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I am afraid he does. Mr. Lockwood seems to be on both sides.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read the second paragraph?

This is his letter?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. What is the date?

Mr. COLEGROVE. November 30, 1942.

It seems to me that as matters now stand the editors are put in an embarrassing position by the fact that the material in the monthly issue is unsigned and therefore all the editorial board seems to take responsibility for everything that is said whether they agree with it or not and even when they haven't seen it in advance. Jaffe recognized the validity of this objection and promised to think it over. We haven't had a chance to discuss it again.

In later correspondence Jaffe promised that would not be done in the future.

Mr. MORRIS. I ask that these four letters identified by Professor Colegrove and by Mr. Mandel as letters from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations be introduced into the record and be marked with the next consecutive exhibit numbers.

The CHAIRMAN. There seems to be something more than letters here.

Mr. MORRIS. This is just our summary of the exchange. The four letters should go in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The letters will be inserted into the record.

(The documents referred to were marked as exhibits Nos. 276, 277, 278, and 279, and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 279

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY,
November 17, 1942.

Mr. PHILIP J. JAFFE,
Amerasia, 125 East Fifty-second Street, New York City.

DEAR MR. JAFFE: I am writing you regarding the lack of objectivity and scholarship displayed in recent articles in Amerasia dealing with India.

In the October 25 issue of Amerasia occurs an article by Mr. Kurt R. Mattusch under the title "The American Public and India," which is not only bitterly anti-British but also unscholarly.

For instance, on page 403 he says that the debate on the Cripps Mission in the House of Lords envisaged safe reservations for British interests within India. As a matter of fact, the debate of July 30 was on Europeans in India and was not on the Cripps mission. The Marquess of Crewe, whose speech is quoted, was not an official spokesman. Mr. Mattusch completely ignores the statement of the Duke of Devonshire, who, speaking for the Government, said: "It is really impossible to make an offer both of complete self-government and to exact guaranties for specified British interests."

Again, his statement about taxes and the upkeep of Gibraltar, Malta, and Eden is simply fantastic. Numerous other errors in this article could be pointed out.

I wish also to refer to the number of Amerasia published in May and devoted to India and the war. This number contained numerous misrepresentations that no scholar would tolerate. For instance, on pages 4 to 8, the onus of defeat of the Cripps mission seems to be laid on Mr. Jinnah, who is pictured as a scheming politician. Now, everyone with even a slight acquaintance with Indian affairs knows that the working committee of the Indian National Congress contains politicians just as scheming and selfish as Mr. Jinnah. Nevertheless the commentator ignores this fact.

The commentary also fails to give a proper consideration to Pakistan, to explain the Moslem case, to give proper consideration to the plight of the untouchables under the Hindu domination. It fails to call proper attention to the very small percentage of Indian people, barely 10,000,000 out of 389,000,000, who are political-minded. A scholarly treatment of the question should point out all these facts.

There is another consideration other than lack of scholarship in the publication of these one-sided articles and comment. We are engaged cooperatively in a war for the self-preservation of our institutions. Great Britain is our ally in this war. The publication of articles which misrepresent the facts while attacking Great Britain can do little else than impair our war effort. Loyalty to our own country requires intellectual honesty and moderation in any criticism of our ally.

I find myself under necessity of resigning from the editorial board unless Amerasia is willing to publish in the very near future two articles to offset the above-mentioned anti-British articles. I would like to see this principle also applied to the editorials.

It is a matter of deep regret to me to be compelled to write to you in this fashion. There is nothing personal in my feeling in this matter. But as a teacher I cannot permit my name to be used on an editorial board of a magazine which prints such unscholarly and unfair articles without also publishing articles on the other side.

It is probable that in any case I ought not be on the editorial board, inasmuch as I live so far from New York City and cannot attend the periodical meetings of the editorial board.

Please do not consider this letter as any ultimatum in this matter. I have nothing but the most friendly feeling toward you personally and all my colleagues on the board.

Faithfully yours,

KENNETH COLEGROVE,
Professor of Political Science.

EXHIBIT No. 278

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY,
COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS,
Evanston, Ill., November 18, 1942.

Mr. WILLIAM LOCKWOOD,
Secretary, American Committee for International Studies,
Princeton, N. J.

DEAR MR. LOCKWOOD: I am enclosing a copy of the letter which I have just sent to Mr. Philip Jaffe, editor of Amerasia. I regret very much the necessity of sending this letter, but I feel that I cannot remain a member of the editorial board of a magazine which publishes articles severely criticizing our ally Great Britain unless those articles are scholarly in character and also unless the British side, or again the Moslem side, is also expressed on the pages of the magazine.

I suppose, anyway, it is time for me to withdraw from the editorial board, inasmuch as, living in Chicago, I cannot attend the board meeetings. I hope, of course, if the editorial board cannot arrange to publish some articles on the other side of the Indian question, and if I find it necessary to withdraw from the board, Amerasia will publish my letter of resignation, indicating exactly my reason for retiring.

Hastily yours,

KENNETH COLEGROVE,
Professor of Political Science.

EXHIBIT No. 277

THE INSTITUTE FOR ADVANCED STUDY,
Princeton, N. J., November 20, 1942.

Mr. WILLIAM W. LOCKWOOD,
Institute of Pacific Relations, 129 East Fifty-second Street,
New York City.

DEAR BILL: I am sorry we opened the enclosed letter from Kenneth Colegrove, which is not on American committee business even though it is addressed to you as secretary of the committee.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) Ed.
(Typed) EDWARD MEADE EARLE.

P. S.—Incidentally, I was pretty peeved about the review of Mackinder, which I thought flippant.

EXHIBIT No. 276

NOVEMBER 30, 1942.

Prof. KENNETH COLEGROVE,
105 Harris Hall, Northwestern University,
Evanston, Ill.

DEAR PROFESSOR COLEGROVE: I have read with interest and some sympathy your letter to Phil Jaffe on Amerasia. I felt the same way about the treatment of India and have said so to him and to Kate Mitchell.

It seems to be that as matters now stand the editors are put in an embarrassing position by the fact that the material in the monthly issue is unsigned; and, therefore, all the editorial board seems to take responsibility for everything that is said, whether they agree with it or not and even when they haven't seen it in advance. Jaffe recognized the validity of this objection and promised to think it over. We haven't had a chance to discuss it again.

For some time I've been frankly rather puzzled as to whether to remain on the board, being torn between reluctance to sponsor the "line" being taken and, on the other hand, the feeling that Amerasia had a lot of useful stuff in it. Also, I dislike making any sort of break with Jaffe and Miss Mitchell, both of whom are close personal friends of mine.

It may be that the whole board of outsiders ought to disappear and the magazine be made frankly the personal vehicle of the two people doing all the work. They are reluctant to have that happen. The real reason I haven't withdrawn, confidentially, is the hope that sooner or later some kind of combination could be made between Amerasia and the two IPR periodicals which would strengthen their total usefulness to the public and eliminate the present duplication and competition. From the IPR standpoint, this of course would preclude a consistent and personalized editorial line, though it wouldn't by any means preclude a forum of opinion presenting a variety of views. Personnel is getting so scarce that there ought to be some combination in this general field of Far East periodicals. The new form of Amerasia serves really to increase the duplication and competition with Pacific Affairs and the Far Eastern Survey, particularly the former.

My own ideas aren't very clear on this, and I'm writing you my puzzlement in the hope that you may have some suggestions. As a nonstaff person who has been interested both in Amerasia and in the IPR, I would very much appreciate having your views as to what we ought to do.

Sincerely yours,

WM. W. LOCKWOOD.

NOTE.—I understand this is what happened: IPR people would not go along with Jaffe's personal views as reflected in Amerasia, which had started as an objective and substantiated paper.—CLAYTON LANE, January, 1950.

(Above is handwritten.)

Mr. Morris. Were you invited to participate in Government service during the war?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes. I was invited to be a consultant by the Office of Strategic Services.

Mr. Morris. By whom?

Mr. Colegrove. I was invited by Charles Burton Foss. I might say as a matter of amusement here, that during the war a great many of us old professors were invited to serve in Government agencies by our bright young students who had gone into the Government service and gotten into positions of some importance. Charles Burton Foss was a former student of mine. He was inviting his old professor to come down and help him during the war, which I did.

Mr. Morris. What other invitation did you have to join the Government service, Professor?

Mr. Colegrove. During the war my consultation with the Office of Strategic Services was my only service. Immediately after the war, I was invited to become a consultant for General MacArthur, the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Tokyo. That was in 1946.

Mr. Morris. Did you as a matter of fact work for OSS, Professor?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes. I served as a consultant on four or five different occasions in Washington for the OSS. I might say that Charles Burton Foss was first the Chief of the Japan Section of the OSS under the Far Eastern Division. Then he succeeded Carl Remer and was Chief of the Far Eastern Division of OSS.

Mr. Morris. Were you ever asked to join the Office of War Information?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes. I was offered the post of head of the Japanese desk in the OWI in Japan. I was asked to take that position by Prof. Owen Lattimore, who was serving the Office of War Information from the San Francisco position.

Mr. Morris. Did you accept that offer, Professor?

Mr. Colegrove. No; I declined that position.

Mr. Morris. Did you have a conversation with Mr. Lattimore at the time of your declination, Professor?

Mr. Colegrove. Yes. Professor Lattimore wrote me several letters and then asked me to meet him as he came through from Washington to San Francisco; asked me to meet him in Chicago. I met him.

Mr. Morris. Will you relate to us what happened during the course of that conversation, Professor?

Mr. Colegrove. That was in December 1943, and Lattimore again offered me the post of the Japan desk in San Francisco. He seemed a little annoyed that I didn't accept it. We had dinner together. I was courteously awaiting until his plane took off for San Francisco; so we continued the conversation. We discussed first the position that Amerasia had taken with reference to the British in India, and I objected to Amerasia's attitude and articles and said that was one of the points why I resigned. Lattimore seemed to take great offense at that.

Senator Ferguson. At your position?

Mr. Colgrove. Yes, at my position; very great offense at my arguments, and I was entirely wrong regarding it. For some reason or other, we got on the subject of the Dutch in Indonesia. Lattimore was still more furious at my contradicting him with reference to the benefits of Dutch rule in Indonesia. I was opposed to liquidating Dutch imperialism in Indonesia immediately after the war. Then I mentioned something about the Chinese Communists, and this surprised me a great deal to have Lattimore, whom I thought by this time had lost some of his control, claim that he had more information on China than I had, which was, of course, true. He went so far as to say that Chinese Communists under Mao Tse-tung were real democrats and that they were really agrarian reformers and had no connection with Soviet Russia.

Senator FERGUSON. You say Professor Lattimore said the Chinese Communists were democrats, agrarian reformers, and had no connection with Soviet Russia?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Had you taken the opposite view?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Oh, yes. I think most scholars felt the same way at the time.

Senator FERGUSON. That you were right?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I felt I was right.

Senator FERGUSON. Did most scholars feel——

Mr. COLEGROVE. At that time I think most impartial scholars were very hesitant to believe that the Chinese Communists did not have some connection with Soviet Russia, that Mao Tse-tung was a Marxian doctrinnaire and not a mere agrarian reformer, and certainly not a democrat in any respect.

I told Lattimore on this occasion that I felt that he was saying something he didn't believe himself, and I was surprised to see Lattimore back down.

Mr. MORRIS. You say he was conversing with you in a state of temper?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I think he got very annoyed with me and didn't exercise caution which he generally does exercise.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he mention whether or not he felt that the Chinese Communists were receiving aid from Soviet Russia?

Mr. COLEGROVE. He claimed they were not. In fact, he went so far as to say there was no means of communication.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it not quite well known at that time that young Chinese had been taken to Moscow and indoctrinated and trained? That was a matter of pretty common knowledge; was it not?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Certainly, among persons who followed the situation in Asia, that was very well known.

The CHAIRMAN. Mao Tse-tung was one of them?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Well, Mao Tse-tung had not gone to Moscow. He was one of the few who did not. Every one of his lieutenants were Moscow-trained. That applied especially to Chou En Lai.

Senator FERGUSON. Were you not somewhat surprised at Lattimore's stand being in the OWI, Lattimore taking the stand he did in relation to these Communists in China?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I was amazed, frankly. I got the impression that perhaps Professor Lattimore was not following instructions from the State Department that he should be following with reference to his duties in San Francisco.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I meant.

Mr. COLEGROVE. About this time the official view of the United States was that nothing disparaging should be said of the Japanese Emperor, the Tano system; nothing should be done to arouse hatred or antagonism of the imperial household, because my understanding is that Mr. Grew, who was the Under Secretary of State, had the opinion that the Emperor would be of very great assistance in bringing about the surrender of Japan when finally Japan should wisely surrender. The militarists would never give in. So, if you could only get the Emperor, you would save a situation.

Owen Lattimore's view from conversations was, as I recall, that the Emperor's system was the greatest deterrent to democracy in Japan and that the Emperor and his whole family should be exterminated.

Senator EASTLAND. You mean killed?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Killed, destroyed. Publicly he did not go that far. He went that far privately.

Senator FERGUSON. With you?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. Publicly his proposal was that the Japanese Emperor and his whole family should be sent over to China to be dealt with by the Chinese. Everybody who knew Asia at that time would realize the Chinese would annihilate the Emperor and his family or put them beyond all power of living.

Senator FERGUSON. Professor, this line that Lattimore was taking, both on the Emperor and the situation of the Chinese, was that, in your opinion, the Soviet line?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. That has always been the Soviet line. The Communist Party in Japan ever since 1921 has opposed the Emperor. That has been the line of the Communist Party in Japan while they were underground. They were underground from 1923 on. Of course, the Communist Party line in Japan was dictated by the Kremlin.

Senator FERGUSON. But here was a man, Owen Lattimore, that was well informed as to America's stand, or should have been, and as to the world situation. When he was advocating to you privately these matters, in your opinion, as you said to him once, I believe, that he was advocating something that he could hardly believe himself but he was still advocating it, that was the Communist line?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. I do not charge him——

Senator FERGUSON. With being a Communist?

Mr. COLEGROVE. No. I did not charge him with following the Communist line. I simply told him I was sure he knew better, that Mao Tse-tung was not a democrat and a mere agrarian reformer. I probably did not make my statement clear here when I said I talked these things over with Lattimore on the occasion of our visit in December 1943.

Also I discussed with Lattimore the policy of the United States toward the Emperor that was being followed by the State Department, the War Department and the OWI at that time.

Senator EASTLAND. Why did you decline a job in San Francisco?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Largely personal. I did not trust Owen Lattimore. I did not care to be associated with him.

Senator EASTLAND. You thought they were following the Communist line out there?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I can't say that I was that alert, Senator. Some of us professors are not as alert as we should be. I could not say that Owen Lattimore was following the Communist line. I didn't like his attitude on Asiatic problems.

Senator EASTLAND. You say it was a Communist line?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. I say it was the Communist line.

Senator EASTLAND. You say you did not trust him. Therefore, you did not take the job. Is that right?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. Why did you not trust him?

Mr. COLEGROVE. For those reasons.

Senator EASTLAND. Because he was following the Communist line?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. I would say in the back of my mind that would stand out, but at that time I would not have said that Owen Lattimore is following the Communist line.

Senator FERGUSON. You have no doubt about it now?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That was the Communist line. As you look back over the situation and compare it with the editorials in the Daily Worker, you can see definitely that was the Communist line.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, on the 10th of July of this year while you were examined in executive session you were shown a letter dated July 10, 1938, by Owen Lattimore to Mr. Carter. I would like to show this to you once again and ask you if you will make any general comment on the last full paragraph on the first page and the first paragraph on the second page.

The CHAIRMAN. What is this?

Mr. MORRIS. This, Senator, is a letter which has been introduced in evidence previously, a letter from Owen Lattimore to Edward C. Carter, dated July 10, 1938, and officially made a part of our record.

The CHAIRMAN. You are drawing his attention to certain paragraphs?

Mr. MORRIS. Two paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your question?

Mr. MORRIS. I have just called attention to the fact that he was shown that letter in executive session and asked to comment on it. I am going to ask him if he will make any comments now.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it would be well for you to read the paragraphs.

Mr. COLEGROVE. One paragraph that you refer to here Professor Lattimore says:

> I think that you are pretty cagey in turning over so much of the China section of the inquiry to Asiaticus, Han-seng, and Chi. They will bring out the absolutely essential radical aspects, but can be depended on to do it with the right touch.

Chi was a member of the editorial board of Amerasia and I did not know at that time he was a Communist, but it was very evident that he was following the Communist line.

Mr. MORRIS. It was evident to you, Professor, that Chi, while you were on the board of Amerasia with him, was following the Communist Party line?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That came gradually into our minds, that he was following the Communist line. At first we thought he was a bright young Chinese scholar who had a mass of information, which he did. He had a mass of information. We finally realized it was along the Communist line entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. When you use the term "we" are you using the editorial "we" applying to yourself?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I would say it included members of the committee like Cyrus Peake and myself. I assume other members who were very sympathetic toward the Kremlin knew it all the time.

The last paragraph reads:

> For the general purposes of this inquiry it seems to me that the good scoring position for the IPR differs with different countries. For China, my hunch is that it will pay to keep behind the official Chinese Communist position—far enough not to be covered by the same label—but enough ahead of the active Chinese liberals to be noticeable.

That sentence, together with his whole letter, seems to me to be one of the most intellectually dishonest academic documents that I have ever seen. This is a complete negation of what the IPR said to professors and teachers all over the country that it was. In its solicitation for membership it had always emphasized the scholarly, scientific viewpoint that it was presenting, amplified by the fact that it was not trying to advocate the interest of any particular country but only giving us the benefit of their researches and their scholarship.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, you thought it was an honest organization and this sentence indicates to you that it was really a fraud?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. This is fraudulent. This is one of the most contemptible things I know from the whole academic world. Thousands of university professors and hundreds of thousands of students all over the country who were beginning to study Asia looked upon this institute as an unbiased, wholly scientific institution engaged in research, engaged in discovery of the truth and in not following any line.

I and other scholars would have been shocked if we knew that one official of the Institute of Pacific Relations was writing to the secretary-general telling him to follow a certain line with reference to China, Japan, with reference to Indonesia.

Senator FERGUSON. Professor, to do it in such a way as to deceive the people, not to come out and announce it was a Communist propaganda agency but to deceive the people, isn't that true with that sentence?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. It was shocking. It is almost revolting to think that you yourself were misled by such an organization. This will have done a very great injury to organized scholarship in the United States. It is no wonder people are suspicious of the Rockefeller Foundation or of the Carnegie Corp. which gives so much money to organizations of this sort.

Senator FERGUSON. Then to realize those that had charge of it would use it as a means of deceiving the people and use it really as a propaganda agency or front?

Mr. COLEGROVE. This shows behind the front the Institute of Pacific Relations was nothing else than a propaganda organization supporting a line.

Senator EASTLAND. A Communist line?

Mr. COLEGROVE. In this case a Communist line.

Mr. MORRIS. Thank you, Professor.

This, Mr. Chairman, has already been introduced into the record as exhibit No. 4 on the first day of the open hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record show exhibit No. 4 is the exhibit in the hands of the witness at this time from which he testified.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor Colegrove, did you attend a conference held under the auspices of the State Department on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. I was invited to attend that conference. The invitation came in a telegram signed by Dean Acheson, Secretary of State.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your understanding of this conference, Professor?

Mr. COLEGROVE. My understanding had been that Professor Jessup had been charged by the State Department with the formulation of a new policy for China and that a committee had been set up with Professor Jessup as chairman, President Case and Dr. Fosdick as the two other members, and that Ambassador Jessup and the State Department wished to receive advice from experts regarding what the policy of the United States in China should be.

I might say the collapse of the Kuomintang or Nationalist Government had occurred that summer.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, were Messrs. Jessup, Fosdick, and Case all three IPR men?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I believe they were, but Mr. Jessup of course was the member of the board of trustees. I believe Dr. Fosdick was also. I have always assumed that President Case was a member.

Mr. MORRIS. You testified, Professor, that this conference, to your understanding, was called by Mr. Jessup in order to assist the Secretary of State in formulating far-eastern policy?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I wouldn't like to be positive about that. I would say that impression was that the list was prepared by Ambassador Jessup. The invitation was over the signature of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the record to show that the conference we are now having testimony about is the conference, the transcript of which was asked for by you of the State Department and which was denied.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record so show.

Mr. MORRIS. At the time of receiving a letter from the State Department a list of consultants who did attend this conference was made available. I would like now to show this list to Professor Colegrove to refresh his recollection on the make-up of that particular conference.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the list attached to the letter addressed to me under date of September 12, 1951, over the signature of Jack K. McFall, Assistant Secretary; is that correct?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

Mr. COLEGROVE. May I use this?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Would you just state that most of the participants of that conference were associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. COLEGROVE. It seems to me, Mr. Morris, that most of these are members of the IPR, and many of them are high-ranking officers.

The CHAIRMAN. High-ranking officers of what?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Of the IPR, that is, members of the board of trustees. I must say I was never a high-ranking officer in the Institute of Pacific Relations. I was merely a member. Thousands of people in the United States were members simply to subscribe to the Survey and other publications.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you a member of the editorial staff?

Mr. COLEGROVE. No; but I was a member of the advisory editorial board of Amerasia but not of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I propose that the best way of identifying or establishing whether or not these people were connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations is during the course of the testimony of the next witness on this conference to ask Mr. Holland, presently secretary-general, to confirm those who were associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations. Mr. Mandel has made a compilation from our records, but I suggest it is inadequate and that the best way of establishing it would be to have Mr. Holland assert for our record who the members of the Institute of Pacific Relations are.

The CHAIRMAN. He is coming on?

Mr. MORRIS. No; but during the testimony of our next witness in regard to this conference have Mr. Holland establish that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. As I understand the witness' testimony now, he is saying that a considerable number of the names on that list were high-ranking officers of the Institute of Pacific Relations; is that right?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes; many were, not a majority, but many were.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe for us the developments of the conference as they unfolded, Professor?

The CHAIRMAN. You did attend the conference, first of all?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, I was present during the 3 days that the conference was held.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did it assemble?

Mr. COLEGROVE. In the State Department, in the large conference room right off of the offices of the Secretary of State.

The CHAIRMAN. Who if anyone was the presiding officer?

Mr. COLEGROVE. The presiding officer was Ambassador Jessup, but Dr. Jessup was detained in Lake Success with the United Nations affairs and was not present in the opening session.

Mr. MORRIS. He was present during the second and third sessions?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. Dr. Fosdick presided over the first day's session.

Mr. MORRIS. What were some of the subjects discussed at that conference?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Mr. Morris, may I say with reference to giving testimony on the subject of this conference in the State Department that the State Department did say that the proceedings would be confidential and would not be given to the press. The implication was that members of the conference should not discuss this matter with the press.

On the other hand, I take it that it is proper for any member of the conference who is testifying before a Senate committee to speak very frankly with reference to what was said and done in the conference.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is not only proper, sir; you are under oath.

Mr. COLEGROVE. And must answer the questions.

Senator FERGUSON. You were called in by the United States Government?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. The telegram was signed Dean Acheson. Secretary of State.

Senator FERGUSON. You were acting as a Government official?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Were you paid or not?

Mr. COLEGROVE, Travel expenses were given and a per diem.

Senator FERGUSON. You were to advise with the various members there?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Advise with Ambassador Jessup's committee.

Senator FERGUSON. It was public business; that is, the Government was paying for it, setting it up and taxpayers' money was being used for it?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. The obvious purpose was to formulate far eastern policy?

Mr. COLEGROVE. So we understood.

Senator JENNER. Were there any press releases issued from this conference?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. Some time later, as I recollect, and I am sorry I cannot give you the exact date, the State Department published a list of consultants.

Senator JENNER. Did they publish any news or anything said in the conference?

Mr. COLEGROVE. No. My understanding is they did not.

Mr. MORRIS. Was the question of Communist China discussed?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. The recognition of Communist China was one of the very important questions discussed. When Ambassador Jessup arrived he frankly said that the Department wanted the advice of these consultants on the question of recognition of Communist China, on the question of the Japan Peace Treaty, on the question of a Pacific pact, and on the question of giving economic aid to Communist and non-Communist countries in Asia. Those four subjects were broadly discussed and a great many other subjects, too.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there a tendency of the various people during the course of these 3 days to break down into groups and take positions on the subjects as they arose?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, there was that tendency. As you will notice, it always occurs in a group of individuals. You can classify them more or less closely into groups. If you are going to limit the groups to three. I would say that one group was very obviously pro-American in its thinking, put America first, that is, foreign policy must serve the national interest of the American people.

Mr. MORRIS. Did that group generally take a strong anti-Communist position?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That group took a very strong anti-Communist position. Now on the other side of this group they were not thinking so much of America as they were thinking of other things and that group tended to be sympathetic to Communistic China and very, very considerate of the Kremlin.

Senator EASTLAND. Who was that group?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I would say the leader of that group, if you consider he was a leader, was Professor Lattimore.

Senator FERGUSON. Owen Lattimore?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Owen Lattimore. I would put in that group Mr. Rosinger.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Lawrence K. Rosinger?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, of IPR.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like the record to show at this time that Lawrence K. Rosinger has been identified by two witnesses as having been a member of the Communist Party.

The CHAIRMAN. By two witnesses before this committee?

Mr. MORRIS. Before this committee.

Mr. COLEGROVE. More or less, Professor Fairbank.

Mr. MORRIS. Prof. John K. Fairbank?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

To some extent Reischauer of Harvard and Professor Peffer of Columbia University.

Senator EASTLAND. As I understand, Ambassador Jessup invited Owen Lattimore to a conference in Washington to advise and assist in formulating United States Government's China policy and advise with him on the Japanese Peace Treaty; is that right?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Well, if Owen Lattimore received the very same telegram that I received, it was signed by Dean Acheson, Secretary of State.

Senator EASTLAND. You say the list was made up by Professor Jessup?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I assume that. I don't know; that was the talk.

Mr. MORRIS. You do know that Professor Jessup was in charge of this particular conference you attended?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. I think the Secretary of State would not act very wisely if he didn't allow Ambassador Jessup to select his own expert.

Senator EASTLAND. Was that in 1949?

Mr. COLEGROVE. October 6, 7, and 8, 1949.

Senator FERGUSON. You mentioned the interest for America in the first group and then you said there were others you thought were thinking of something else than the primary interest of America and her relations to the world. What was that other thing?

Mr. COLEGROVE. With reference to this extreme group?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. COLEGROVE. I felt that they were very sympathetic toward Chinese Communists and also were extremely careful with reference to the Kremlin.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, they were favoring, in your opinion, the Communist line rather than the good interests of the United States of America?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That was my impression.

Senator FERGUSON. From what was said?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. Did they advocate economic aid to Communist China?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, very, very strongly.

Senator FERGUSON. And recognition of Communist China?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Immediate recognition of Communist China, and were very much opposed to a Pacific pact.

The CHAIRMAN. You have named certain people who were present at that meeting as belonging to that particular group that favored Communist China and the Kremlin. Have you named all of them that you can recall who belonged to that group?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I see one other name I should have thought of, Mr. Benjamin H. Kizer, who is very decidedly of that group; sometimes Eugene Staley, Professor Staley.

Senator FERGUSON. Did the chairman take any side as to what group he was with?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Ambassador Jessup gave no sign he was in favor of one or the other. He was a good presiding officer. He was a good parliamentarian. Ambassador Jessup is suave, courteous, almost deferential. He knows how to cut off debate without offending anyone's sensibilities. He is an excellent presiding officer.

At the same time Professor Jessup is a great scholar. I have very great respect for his scholarship, his learning, and his books on international law particularly are very notable contributions.

In this conference Mr. Jessup did not indicate his own personal attitude on any question whatsoever.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor Colegrove, as a matter of fact which group dominated the conference?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I felt that the group that was sympathetic to Red China dominated the conference. Governor Stassen was among those who were very much opposed to Soviet Russia. Ballantine, Joseph W. Ballantine, was opposed. Professor Brodie was very much opposed. I was decidedly opposed myself. I think we could add the name of Professor Buss as among those who took a strong anti-Communist attitude. I felt that we were in the minority, I am sorry to say.

Mr. MORRIS. And the people who did favor Communist China were in the majority and they dominated the conference?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Then the third group I mentioned was a group between, that was on one side once and on the other side again, persons who were a little unstable—well, a little undecided as to the position they wished to follow.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may the record show at this time that a subpena has been sent to Governor Stassen to appear before this committee next Monday afternoon in connection with the testimony given today by Professor Colegrove?

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The subpena has been issued?

Mr. MORRIS. It is going out today, Senator.

Mr. COLEGROVE. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I have not had an opportunity to read the transcript that the State Department kept.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there a transcript?

Mr. COLEGROVE. A transcript was made of everything by the State Department. Governor Stassen was very shrewd; I believe he had his own secretary there making a transcript. But I have had no opportunity to review this, the proceedings, and I am speaking wholly from my memory 2 years ago.

Senator FERGUSON. You have spoken generally of opinion, so you have not attempted to give specific statements.

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes; except I would be specific on the question of recognizing Red China. Mr. Lattimore was wholly for it. Mr. Kizer was for it. Mr. Rosinger was for it and Mr. Staley was for it, also Mr. Fairbank. I was opposed to it, Governor Stassen opposed to it, Ballantine opposed to it, and Brodie opposed to it.

Senator JENNER. Was there anything discussed in this conference with regard to our attitude toward Korea and Formosa?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. Owen Lattimore, who had furnished the State Department with a memoranda, proposed in that memoranda that the United States immediately liquidate its responsibilities for Korea, and in the conference he expressed the same view. I remember that very distinctly.

Senator EASTLAND. As a loyal American, were you satisfied with the men who were invited to that conference at the State Department to advise Mr. Jessup on the formulation of China policy?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Frankly, Senator, I was very much surprised.

Senator EASTLAND. You were disappointed, were you not?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I was very much disappointed.

Senator EASTLAND. In fact, the group that had been invited was the group largely that had betrayed the Chinese Government to the Communists?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That is exactly the situation.

Senator EASTLAND. In fact, there were no new experts but it was the same crowd that had betrayed this country and sold China down the river?

Mr. COLEGROVE. And the State Department knew their views.

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. COLEGROVE. I might add this, and I have nothing to back it up except my impression—I thought the State Department in its briefing was doing a little propaganda work on a professor such as myself.

Mr. MORRIS. Who did the briefing?

Mr. COLEGROVE. There were several officers who briefed us. Nelson Johnson of the Far Eastern Commission did a very good job of briefing. I was very much disappointed in the briefing done by Cora Du Bois, who briefed the conference upon southeast Asia. I suspect, but I haven't much to go on, that the State Department thought it was good for some of the experts, so-called experts, to indoctrinate us and when it was over to approve the new policy which would be recognition of New China.

Mr. MORRIS. You thought that had been the policy and they just wanted to get somebody to back them up?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I got that impression, I am sorry to say.

Senator EASTLAND. Now did you read the American white paper on China?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, all students of Asia studied that with a great deal of care.

Senator EASTLAND. Was that an honest or dishonest and false document?

Mr. COLEGROVE. In my opinion it was one of the most false documents ever published by any country.

Senator EASTLAND. It was a dishonest document?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Thoroughly dishonest.

Senator EASTLAND. Who supervised the preparation of that white paper?

Mr. COLEGROVE. The New York Times said that Ambassador Jessup had been appointed by the State Department to edit that but I can hardly believe that Phil Jessup really supervised that document. He is a scholar, he is a learned man, and as a scholar the man must have realized that that document is not the real story.

Senator JENNER. Owen Lattimore is a scholar and learned man?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, a fine scholar, he has a fine command of certain Asiatic languages, that is true.

Senator EASTLAND. What about the letter of transmittal?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That letter of transmittal was thoroughly dishonest, especially the paragraph of the letter which says that there is nothing that the United States could have done to save Chiang Kai-shek and again, except to reemphasize it, the United States had left nothing undone that might have saved him and kept the Communists from winning the victory.

Senator EASTLAND. You thought that was a lie?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That obviously was a lie, and I must say that those sort of statements are one thing we try to teach freshmen at Northwestern University never to make, such general sweeping statements like that, and I think by the time they have become seniors we have taught them those are not the kind of statements to make.

Senator EASTLAND. Who signed that letter of transmittal?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That letter was under the signature, I understand, of the Secretary of State, but obviously someone in the Department drafted it for him.

Senator EASTLAND. In reality was it drafted by Professor Jessup?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I don't know. I hope it was not. I sincerely hope that Phil Jessup did not draft that letter.

Senator EASTLAND. But the newspaper said he prepared that white paper, did it not?

Mr. COLEGROVE. My understanding was that he supervised the editing of the paper.

Senator EASTLAND. Yes, supervised the editing.

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you remember when Mr. Alfred Kohlberg made charges that the Institute of Pacific Relations was Communist-controlled?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. I was one of the members at that time that voted in favor of Mr. Kohlberg when an attempt was made to change the direction——

Senator EASTLAND. All he wanted was an investigation?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Merely an investigation, an outside investigation.

Senator EASTLAND. Did he get that investigation?

Mr. COLEGROVE. No; he did not.

Senator EASTLAND. It was whitewashed, was it not?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Very distinctly.

Senator FERGUSON. He did not even get an inside investigation, did he?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Presumably he got an inside investigation because a letter was sent saying that his charges had been found utterly false.

Senator EASTLAND. You know it was a whitewash, do you not?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I felt that very strongly even at the time.

Senator EASTLAND. Did Professor Jessup have a hand in that whitewash?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I regret to say that Jessup's name is among the eight who signed the letter to the members informing them that the charges were false.

Senator EASTLAND. And he had a hand in whitewashing and concealing Communist control of the Institute of Pacific Relations, an organization which was offering alleged experts in foreign policy to the American Government?

Mr. COLEGROVE. To my great regret, his name was in the list of eight informing the members.

Senator EASTLAND. Now what about Indonesia? Were you satisfied with Professor Jessup's stand in the United Nations on the Dutch Government in Indonesia?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I might say, in answer to that, that my whole attitude in this matter goes back some years and I was utterly surprised that Phil Jessup would accept the chairmanship of the board of trustees of the IPR. He is a great international jurist; that is his field. He had not made a reputation, had not at that time, in the Far East. He had written no articles I know of and no books. He had made no special study. So the appointment of Professor Jessup as chairman of the IPR seemed to me at the time to be very peculiar, something extraordinary.

Senator EASTLAND. Yes; but then it was extraordinary and in his attacks on the Dutch Government and Dutch imperialism in Indonesia he followed the Communist line?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes; the Communist line for many years has been the destruction of the Dutch rule in Indonesia.

Senator EASTLAND. Is it your judgment that he went beyond his instructions from the State Department to follow the Communist line in this instance?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Well, it seemed to me that the speeches that Ambassador Jessup made to the Security Council in December 1948 and again in January 1949 against the Dutch Government were very unfair and were not the speeches that a scholar should make. There was a rumor around the State Department that Ambassador Jessup had exceeded his instructions in pressing the Security Council to take drastic action against the Dutch.

I recall a dinner I had with Ambassador Jessup in February of 1949 at which I said to him that rumors had been to the effect that he had exceeded his instructions in the Indonesia affair. Phil Jessup, however, denied that had been the case and told me that he had not exceeded his instructions. Nevertheless the rumors persisted.

Senator EASTLAND. He was following the Communist line?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Well, that is the Communist line.

Senator EASTLAND. Now, do you know Edward C. Carter?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes; he is a fine, old gentleman. I have always been annoyed by Mr. Carter. He is really, let me say, not the type of man who should have headed a research institute.

Senator EASTLAND. I certainly agree with you. He ought to have been on Union Square.

Now in April of 1945 there were charges that Carter was attempting to influence the State Department to force the Generalissimo to take the Chinese Communists into his government; that is true, is it not?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes; those rumors were present and began even before that time.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you think the board of trustees of the institute should have called Carter to rein then?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I was very much disturbed by those rumors. I wrote to Raymond Dennett, who was acting as secretary at that time, and also I chose him because I knew him very well. I wrote to him informing him that the rumors were that Edward Carter and other IPR officers had been lobbying for the State Department to force Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek to take the Communists into his government and even to share the Chinese government on a 50–50 basis. I said I objected very strongly to any officer of the IPR lobbying this way with the State Department and particularly on work that was said to have been done by Edward Carter.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you not think that Professor Jessup and the trustees of the institute should have stopped Carter?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Certainly. I got a letter back saying that Carter wasn't doing anything like that but I can hardly believe that letter because I think the letter informing me was——

The CHAIRMAN. From whom was the letter?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Raymond Dennett, son of Tyler Dennett. Dennett at that time was acting as secretary of the IPR.

Senator EASTLAND. In that instance were you not disappointed in Professor Jessup, that he did not attempt to prevent Carter from lobbying with the State Department to force Communists in the generalissimo's government?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I was disappointed with the whole board of trustees.

Senator EASTLAND. Jessup was one of them?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Jessup was one of the board of trustees at that time. I was disappointed with all of them for not taking these rumors and examining them and for not taking action against Carter, who I believe unquestionably was lobbying with the State Department.

Senator EASTLAND. You believe unquestionably he was lobbying with the State Department?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. To force Chiang Kai-shek to put Communists in the government?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. You said on a 50–50 basis?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, that was the rumor.

Senator EASTLAND. That would have meant a bloodless revolution in China?

Mr. COLESGROVE. Yes. Whenever the Communists move in, even on less than a 50–50 basis, they take over the government in a very short time. We have seen that too frequently in Europe.

Senator FERGUSON. We have had great trouble discovering who in the State Department prepared the memorandum for General Marshall when he went out to accomplish that mission.

Senator EASTLAND. In fact, Professor Jessup had been close to this left-wing group all along, had he not, Lattimore, Field?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Unfortunately that seems to be the case.

Senator FERGUSON. I want to go back to this question of the experts being briefed at the meeting in the State Department. Was that briefing before you were asked to give your opinion?

Mr. COLEGROVE. It began with a briefing by George Kennan on the very first day and the rest of it was interspersed. I was very much disappointed in the briefing by George Kennan. This was a conference upon the Far East and George Kennan didn't tell us anything that we hadn't known or thought about for years and years and years. I thought George Kennan just wasted the time of the conference.

Senator FERGUSON. You got a kind of feeling that the briefing was to give you some propaganda to take back to the people?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I felt distinctly that the briefing by Cora Du Bois was of that kind. The briefing done on the military situation by Colonel McCann didn't give us anything we had not already read in the New York Times.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you get an impression from this conference on the Far East, which you said was in your estimation propaganda, that it was the desire of the State Department to have a policy of great leniency at least toward the Communists in China?

Mr. COLEGROVE. The State Department didn't tip its hand in this respect. I indicated that Ambassador Jessup——

Senator FERGUSON. I am not talking about his action but the lady who briefed you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, I would like to have him conclude his sentence there. It would be interesting. You said didn't tip its hand?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Didn't tip its hand, and Ambassador Jessup is a very clever and able presiding officer. He didn't disclose his own views, but the briefing by Cora Du Bois was a briefing very sympathetic toward the Communists.

Senator FERGUSON. Those were the kind of questions that were being brought up in the meeting?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know when her briefing took place?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I think her briefing took place in the second session.

Senator FERGUSON. When was the question discussed on the recognition of China by the United States?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Curiously enough that was discussed in every session but particularly emphasized in what would be the second session.

Senator FERGUSON. How did this lady who briefed you stand on that question? Did she express herself?

Mr. COLEGROVE. She was talking only about southeast Asia and did not cover other subjects.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce in the record at this time the only document that we have on the reports made at this particular conference. That is a text of Lattimore's memorandum which he himself released during the time of the Foreign Policy Committee's investigation of the same subject a year ago. I think it is appropriate if we put that in the record, Mr. Chairman.

I think we might ask Mr. Colegrove whether or not the views set forth there coincide generally with the views that Mr. Lattimore expressed at the conference, according to his testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you read this memorandum?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I have read this memorandum.

The CHAIRMAN. This that has been handed to the chairman purports to be the New York Times of Tuesday, April 4, 1950. It is a photostatic copy of certain parts of the New York Times. What is it that you want? How do you identify it?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Mandel will authenticate that photostat.

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat of the New York Times of April 4, 1950, pages 1 and 21, being a news release accompanying the text of Lattimore's memorandum on the United States far-eastern policy. It says:

Following is the text of Owen Latimore's memorandum on United States in the Far East, drafted for a State Department advisory committee last August and made public today by Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the photostat of the New York Times of the morning of——

Mr. MANDEL. April 4, 1950.

Mr. MORRIS. As such may it be introduced in the record?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be introduced.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 280–A" and "Exhibit No. 280–B" and are filed as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 280–A

[From the New York Times, April 4, 1950]

LATTIMORE BARES HIS MEMORANDUM ON FAR EAST POLICY—PROFESSOR ACTS AFTER SENATOR CHALLENGES STATE DEPARTMENT TO RELEASE THE DOCUMENT—HE OPPOSED AID TO CHIANG BUT URGED EFFORTS TO CONVINCE ORIENTALS THEY SHOULD TURN TO UNITED STATES AND NOT RUSSIA

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Prof. Owen Lattimore made public today a secret memorandum on proposed far-eastern policy that he had submitted to the State Department last August.

He did so after Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, Republican, of Wisconsin, who has accused the Johns Hopkins University professor of being a "top Soviet espionage agent," demanded that the State Department release the document, or "it will be my duty as a United States Senator to do so."

The State Department said, however, that Mr. Lattimore's views, together with those of about 30 other persons, were solicited on a confidential basis, and that it had no right to make them public.

Then a few hours later, Mr. Lattimore, who has called the spy charge "an unmitigated lie," released the contents of his memorandum, saying:

"Senator McCarthy in typical fashion is seeking by insinuation and concealment to spread some of the poison of which he has an inexhaustible supply."

AID FOR CHIANG OPPOSED

In the memorandum, Professor Lattimore warned against United States support for the Chinese Nationalist leader, Chiang Kai-shek, but recommended efforts to convince the far-eastern peoples that it was this country and not the Soviet Union to which they should turn.

Mr. Lattimore bade the State Department "avoid premature or excessive" commitment of American resources in the Far East, and said that if there was to be war, "it can be won only by defeating Russia—not Northern Korea, or Viet Nam, or even China."

He said that Russia had won gains in the Far East without lessening the strength she could "deploy toward Europe" and cautioned against any United States assumption that Russia would become so involved in China that she would no longer be able to "maneuver in Europe."

WOULD BAR USE OF JAPAN

"It is not possible to make Japan a satisfactory instrument of American policy," he said, and "South Korea is more of a liability than an asset to the interests of the United States."

"The kind of policy that failed in support of so great a figure as Chiang Kai-shek cannot possibly succeed if it is applied to a scattering of "little Chiang Kai-sheks' in China or elsewhere in Asia," he wrote.

In his statement, Senator McCarthy said that the State Department considered the Lattimore report "so important and of such a confidential nature that the American people were not entitled to know its contents." He has been arguing that Mr. Lattimore laid down a policy line as a State Department consultant that aided the Chinese Communists and "betrayed" the Chinese Nationalists.

The Senator had called a press conference for this morning at the Naval Medical Center in nearby Bethesda, Md., where he is undergoing treatment for a sinus condition. But after about 20 reporters arrived, they were told by the commanding officer of the institution, Capt. R. M. Gillett, U. S. N., that Mr. McCarthy was "under minor surgical procedure" and could not appear before them for interviews and questions.

Some reporters had intended to ask the Senator whether he wished to repeat off the Senate floor, and thus outside his congressional immunity from suit for libel, the charges he had made against Professor Lattimore.

Mr. Lattimore, head of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations at Johns Hopkins, has threatened, through his lawyers, to sue Senator McCarthy if given an opportunity outside the area of immunity.

The Senator's statement asserted in substance that Secretary of State Dean Acheson had not been truthful in saying last week that he believed he had never even met Professor Lattimore.

Mr. McCarthy declared that Drew Pearson, a newspaper columnist and one of the Secretary's "very loyal friends," had written in August 1945 that Mr. Acheson had arranged for a meeting between the professor and President Truman.

This meeting, Mr. McCarthy said, was "for the purpose of weaning Truman away from the Byrnes-Grew far-eastern policy." (He was referring to former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes and former Under Secretary Joseph C. Grew).

"While Lattimore was not unsuccessful in convincing Truman at that particular time," the Senator went on, "it is significant that very shortly afterward both Grew and Byrnes left the State Department and the Acheson-Lattimore crowd took complete control."

The Senator coupled with this charge that Secretary Acheson had not conceded having received the Lattimore memorandum "until after learning that I knew the contents."

JESSUP REPLIES TO CHARGE

Tonight, Ambassador at Large Philip C. Jessup, who had been accused by Senator McCarthy of "accepting" contributions for the American Council of Institute of Pacific Relations from Frederick Vanderbilt Field, denounced this as a false "insinuation" that the council was "being paid to peddle the Communist Party line."

Mr. Jessup declared in the first place that he was not, as alleged by Mr. McCarthy, largely in control of the organization. At the time in question, 1942 and 1943, the Ambassador added, its head was Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, president of the University of California, and sponsors for a drive for funds included Henry Luce, the magazine publisher, and Juan Trippe of Pan-American Airways.

Mr. Field's contributions of $3,500, Mr. Jessup said, were part of $200,000 taken up, much of it from the Rockefeller Foundation, the Carnegie Corp., and large industrial concerns.

Of Messrs. Luce and Trippe, Ambassador Jessup observed:

"Surely these gentlemen would never have accepted payments from Mr. Field or anyone else for 'selling the Communist Party line.' Neither would I if I had been in control."

Senator McCarthy had called Mr. Field a known Communist.

EXHIBIT No. 280–B

[From the New York Times, April 4, 1950]

TEXT OF LATTIMORE'S MEMORANDUM ON UNITED STATES FAR EASTERN POLICY

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP).—Following is the text of Owen Lattimore's memorandum on United States policy in the Far East, drafted for a State Department advisory committee last August and made public today by Mr. Lattimore:

"In clearing the way for a fresh approach to the problems of United States policy in the Far East, several negative statements can usefully be made.

"1. The type of policy represented by support for Chiang Kai-shek does more harm than good to the interests of the United States, and no modification of this policy seems promising. Chiang Kai-shek was a unique figure in Asia. He is now fading into a kind of eclipse that is regrettably damaging to the prestige of the United States, because the United States supported him. His eclipse does not even leave behind the moral prestige of a good but losing fight in defense of a weak cause.

"On the contrary, he put up the worst possible fight in defense of a cause that was originally strong and should have won. The kind of policy that failed in support of so great a figure as Chiang Kai-shek cannot possibly succeed if it is applied to a scattering of 'little Chiang Kai-sheks' in China or elsewhere in Asia.

"2. China cannot be economically coerced by such measures as cutting off trade. Nothing could be more dangerous for the American interest than to underestimate the ability of the Chinese Communists to achieve the minimum level of economic stability that will make their regime politically secure. Sound policy should allow for a cautious overestimate of the ability of the Chinese Communists in this respect, and avoid a rash underestimate.

"3. It is not possible to make Japan a satisfactory instrument of American policy. There are two alternatives in Japan. The first alternative is to keep Japan alive by means of American 'blood transfusions' of raw materials and credits. Under this alternative Japan can be made to put on the surface appearance of a strong ally; but the reality will be an overcommitment of American resources to a distant and vulnerable region.

"Under the second alternative Japan can keep herself alive by coming to terms, economically and politically, with its neighbors in Asia, principally China. Under this alternative Japan cannot serve as a trusted American ally. Its own interests will compel it to balance and bargain between what it can get out of Asia and what it can get out of America.

"4. South Korea is more of a liability than an asset to the interests and policy of the United States. It is doubtful how long the present regime in South Korea can be kept alive, and mere effort to keep it alive is a bad advertisement, which continually draws attention to a band of little and inferior Chiang Kai-shecks who are the scorn of the Communists and have lost the respect of democratic and would-be democratic groups and movements throughout Asia.

"5. The colonial and quasi-colonial countries of southeast Asia cannot be forced to grant priorities to the economic and military recovery of Europe at the expense of their own economic and political interests. In this region as a whole there is a rapid development of combined political and military resistance to coercion which can be indefinitely sustained by local resources. On the other hand, attempts at reconquest by European countries are so expensive that they defeat their own ultimate purpose, which is the strengthening of the country attempting the reconquest.

"The situation can now be handled only by convincing the Nationalist leaders in those countries that any sacrifices they are asked to make are matched by sacrifices made by their former or titular rulers, and are not designed to give priority to the interests of these rulers, but to bring joint benefits both to the ruling countries and to the colonial country, on terms that satisfy the colonial aspiration to equality.

"6. The United States cannot assume that Russia will move in to take over direct control in China, and will thus be subjected to heavy strategic and economic strains. It is dangerous to assume that there will be a diversion and commitment of Russian resources in Asia which will limit Russian ability to maneuver in Europe. Recent developments in the Far East have been favorable to Russia, but not in a way that lessens the resources that Russia can deploy toward Europe.

"Policy toward Russia and policy toward the Far East meet at the point where such a move as the imposition of an economic cordon sanitaire around China is considered. Such a move would increase Chinese dependence on Russia; but it would probably not make it necessary for Russia to undertake a large-scale program in China. The Russians would get credit in Asia, multiplied by propaganda, for any grants they might make to China, but would probably not have to make grants large enough to distort or strain their own resources.

"It would be possible, therefore, if the mistake is made of waiting for the Chinese Communists to come hat in hand to ask for American terms, for United States policy to encounter another set-back in Asia, without even the compensating advantage of hampering Russia's ability to apply pressure in Europe.

"The foregoing statement defines negative aspects of the situation in Asia, limiting the freedom of maneuver of United States policy. Within these limitations, it seems advisable that a number of positive objectives should be defined.

"1. Policy in the Far East and policy toward Russia have a bearing on each other. It certainly cannot yet be said, however, that armed warfare against communism in the Far East, on a scale involving a major commitment of American resources, has become either unavoidable or positively desirable. Nor can it be said with any assurance that, in the event of an armed conflict undertaken for the purpose of forcing Russia back from Europe, the Far East would be an optimum field of operation.

"There are still two alternatives before us—a relatively long peace, or a rapid approach toward war. If there is to be war, it can only be won by defeating Russia—not Northern Korea, or Viet Nam, or even China. Sound policy should therefore avoid premature or excessive strategic deployment in the Far East.

"If there is to be a long peace, the primary factor in making peace possible will be a stabilization of relations between the United States and Russia. Sound policy should therefore maintain a maximum flexibility. If and when negotiated and mutually acceptable agreements with Russia become possible, American policy in the Far East should be in a position to contribute to Russo-American negotiations. It should not be so mired down in local situations that direct American-Russian negotiations are actually hampered.

"2. Any new departures in United States policy in the Far East must be able to fend off any accusation of 'appeasement' of local or Russian communism. In view of the effectiveness of the Russian issue as a weapon in in-fighting in American party politics, it would seem that the advice of experts on domestic politics should be coordinated with the opinions of those who are consulted on foreign policy.

"The dilemma is simple, but not easy to solve; but unless it can be solved, no successful United States policy in the Far East is possible. Any United States policy that is interpreted in various countries in the Far East as pressure applied for the purpose of creating a league against Russia will merely increase the ability of those countries to bargain with both the United States and Russia.

"It will also increase the identification, in those countries, between local nationalism and local communism. On the other hand, any proposed United States policy in the Far East that is attacked in America itself as a bid for better relations with Russia runs the danger of being defeated.

"3. The success of United States policy in the Far East will be measured largely by the contribution that it makes to the recovery of economic relations between the Far East and Europe. This recovery will be possible only if the assent and good will of the far eastern countries are won.

"Assent and real cooperation, in turn, can only be won if the representatives of the far-eastern countries, including those that are still technically the subjects of European countries, are convinced that they have as direct access to the highest American authorities as do the European representatives, and if they are convinced that their economic needs and political standards are not being given a second priority, lower than that of the European countries involved in the same negotiations.

"The two test cases in southeast Asia on which the leaders of various nationalist movements will rate the difference between what can be attained through friendly association with representatives of the United States and what can be attained through outright defiance of a European country which has strong economic support from the United States are Indonesia and the Viet Nam regime under Ho Chi Minh.

"If the negotiations between Dutch and Indonesians, brought about largely through benevolent United States pressure, eventuate in a settlement which seems, in Indonesia, to contain too much of hope deferred, while the resistance in Indochina under Ho Chi Minh achieves more and more of hope fulfilled, the results throughout southeast Asia will be adverse to the United States interest.

"Heavy and primary United States commitments in Western Europe makes it difficult to bear constantly in mind that when the Dutch-Indonesian negotiations are consummated, the satisfaction or dissatisfaction of popular opinion in Indonesia, will have wider repercussions than the satisfaction or dissatisfaction of Dutch public opinion.

"It is a fact, nevertheless, that Indonesian opinion is more difficult to satisfy than Dutch opinion, and it is also a fact that the repercussions will be more serious if Indonesian opinion is not satisfied than if Dutch opinion is not satisfied. These facts mark an important difference between prewar and postwar colonial Asia. They are facts that Americans fully accepted; but they are also facts that are critical for the formulation of an over-all United States policy in Asia.

"4. The foregoing considerations indicate that the major aim of United States policy in the Far East should be to convince the countries of the Far East that they can get along well with the United States and with the countries of Western Europe. They must be persuaded that they can get along well because of the mutual benefits to themselves, to the United States, and to Western Europe.

"They must not be made to suspect that the real aim of the United States is an ulterior aim of using them against Russia.

To put it in another way, the aim of the United States policy should be to enable the countries of the Far East to do without Russia to the maximum extent.

This is a much more modest aim than an insistence on and organization of hostility to Russia; but it is an attainable aim, and the other is not.

"A few suggestions for implementation are appended.

"1. Conferences with the independent governments of the Far East, on the basis of helping them to build their own economies, to revive their trade with Europe, and to expand their trade with us. Emphasis on positive steps that can be taken. No negative conditions, such as prohibitions of trade with Russia or Communist China; no conditions that could be interpreted as American regulation of their political parties.

"2. Working relations, and a refusal to be bound by a protocol, with legitimate nationalist leaders in countries whose full political aspirations have not been met by their European rulers.

"3. The United States should not allow any European country, in its relations with any country in the Far East, to state openly or to imply by propaganda that its policy is 'backed by the United States.' European representatives, in negotiating with the representatives of countries in Asia, should be discouraged from stating or implying that they are authoritative interpreters of United States policy, or intermediaries without whom the United States cannot be approached.

"4. It should be made clear that if there is delay or difficulty in establishing relations between the United States and Communist-controlled countries, such as China, the trouble comes from the Communist side and not from the United States side.

"5. It should be made clear that friendly and beneficial relations with the United States depend essentially on the inherent friendliness or unfriendliness of the nation concerned, and not on the formalities of diplomatic recognition. In order to facilitate the contrast between countries which are on friendly terms with the United States and countries which are not, the number of countries formally recognized by the United States should be increased.

"As a first step, the United States should accept the list of countries recommended for admission to the United Nations by Mr. Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations. In the first place, it would at this time be a good move for the United States to accept with good will an initiative from the Secretariat of the United Nations. In the second place, the list is on balance more favorable to the United States than to the Soviet Union. In the third place, and with particular reference to the Far East, the move would bring within the scope of United States diplomatic activity the Mongolian People's Republic (Outer Mongolia), an increasingly important potential listening-post country in the heart of Asia.

"6. The United States should disembarrass itself as quickly as possible of its entanglements in South Korea."

Mr. MORRIS. Are you acquainted with the views expressed by Lattimore in the record?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you have read this?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, I have read that memoranda. That memoranda covers many of the points that Mr. Lattimore made in the conference. The memoranda among other things calls for liquidation of American responsibilities in Korea. That was a point which Mr. Lattimore made during the conference. This was in October 1949. Professor Lattimore took the position of prompt recognition of Red China. He was very careful to say we should bargain with them when we were doing it, but nevertheless we should recognize them.

Professor Lattimore was opposed to dividing economic aid in Asia. He wanted to give economic aid to Communist countries equally with non-Communist countries.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you hear expressed at the conference, Professor, a sentiment as to the disposition of Formosa?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Governor Stassen made a very strong appeal to defend Formosa to the letter. I said something on that subject myself. I particularly commended the acceptance of General MacArthur's concept of what is now called the MacArthur line, namely from Korea, Formosa, Okinawa, the Philippines, and around to Hawaii.

Senator FERGUSON. Doctor, do you know that on October 26, if that is the exact date, 1949, the State Department sent a message to the Nationalist government in China notifying them they would not give them any more military aid?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. When did you learn that?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I didn't learn that until I saw that in the newspapers.

Senator FERGUSON. That was after this meeting?

Mr. COLEGROVE. That was shortly after this meeting.

Senator FERGUSON. So the policy was really laid down before you went to this meeting as far as Formosa was concerned?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. In your opinion, with respect to Formosa and breaking the so-called MacArthur line they were therefore aiding the Communists of China?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes. Specifically, Governor Stassen has spent a good deal of time on maintaining Formosa and I believe—I am speaking without any record here—I believe that Joseph Ballantine said something on that subject that is favorable to holding Formosa.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, did General Marshall attend that conference?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes, General Marshall was present at every session. He was one of the first ones there.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he take part in this discussion at all?

Mr. COLEGROVE. No. General Marshall sat in the same seat at the end of the room, not at the conference table, about 5 feet from the end of the conference table, opposite Ambassador Jessup.

Mr. MORRIS. And was he sitting near Owen Lattimore?

Mr. COLEGROVE. He was about 5 feet away from Owen Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he hear Owen Lattimore express his views on those occasions?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I assume he heard Owen Lattimore talk the 13 or 14 times.

Mr. MORRIS. Thirteen or fourteen times Lattimore spoke?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Now could you testify whether or not Rosinger had an active part in this conference?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Not as active a part as Owen Lattimore. He spoke probably six times, and all of his speeches, his comments, were very favorable to Red China.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the record should show that we have had testimony in the past that Benjamin Kizer and John K. Fairbank, whom Professor Colegrove has included with this group dominated by Lattimore, to the effect that both of those were members of the Communist Party also.

How many times did you speak at that conference, Professor Colegrove?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I believe I spoke about 8, 9, or 10 times.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the line of questioning developed by Senator Eastland on the importance of the actual preparation of the letter of transmittal on the white paper, I was wondering if you thought it necessary that we should ask the State Department for the facts behind that letter of transmittal.

The CHAIRMAN. I shall be very glad to write a letter. I may not be able to get any more information than I have, however.

Senator FERGUSON. I move, Mr. Chairman, that you do write a letter, that we keep on trying, because I think this is so vital to the Congress and to the people that we should not be discouraged.

Professor Colegrove, have you anything further to say about the letter of transmittal?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I objected to that letter of transmittal because of the bland statement that the white paper had given all of the evidence and presented a very unbiased view of it. It was very obvious that it had not given all the evidence. Even the Wedemeyer report was slightly expurgated as published by the State Department. All records as to Korea were pulled out of that report and it did not have the Wallace report in it. I felt that the State Department had glossed over the trouble between the State Department and General Hurley. They had not given both sides of that story.

What I objected most strongly to in the letter of transmittal was the argument that the letter made in favor of our policy, favored by withdrawing help to Chiang Kai-shek, and glossing over what help we had given the Chinese Reds, and in particular that paragraph at the end where the State Department sums up, in which it says that the United States Government had done everything that was possible to save the Nationalist government and that the United States had left undone everything that would have been helpful to Red China.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you not really think there was a conspiracy by people in the State Department to throw China to the Communists?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I have been of that opinion for quite a while.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor Colegrove, have you testified to the best of your ability on the question that arose at the conference we have been discussing on the possibility of sending economic aid alike to Communist and non-Communist countries? Is there anything more you can testify to on that score?

Mr. COLEGROVE. At least four members took strongly the position that no economic aid—of course no military aid—should be given to Communist countries in Asia. That would include Governor Stassen, myself, Mr. Brodie, and Mr. Ballantine.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you four took opposition to that?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Yourself, Mr. Brodie, Mr. Ballantine, and Governor Stassen?

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the four whom you mentioned, including yourself, took the position that aid should go to Nationalist China?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes; and in no way to Red China.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the other group?

Mr. COLEGROVE. The other group took the position that economic aid should go to to Communist and non-Communist countries alike.

Senator JENNER. What was their argument for that?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Their argument, curiously enough, was this: That if we gave aid only to non-Communist countries, Soviet Russia would use this as propaganda, saying we were imperialistic, that we were trying to guide the affairs of Asia and be very effective propaganda against it.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the record to show the difficulty the witness would have without the benefit of the transcript which he requested be made available during the testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. What transcript?

Mr. MORRIS. The transcript of the proceedings about which we are taking testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. You want the record to show that the witness is testifying from memory because the transcript is not available; is that correct?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right, and that Professor Colegrove did ask before testifying that he be aided by the transcript in the course of his testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, the record will so show.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Senator FERGUSON. As a committee, I think we should take up this question of getting aid from the executive branch of the Government. Here is a good example that if the committee had, in executive session at least, this transcript which we are asking witnesses to come up and testify on several years later, that we would be aided in the solution of the problem that we have before us, which is a very important problem; and while some of the members of the committee may get discouraged that we are not being given the aid that we should have, and we certainly are not, I think the Chair should keep after this information.

For instance, I can cite another example that was not brought up here. That is where the question came up as to Fred Field trying to become an officer in the OSS of the United States Government. When we tried to get who were his sponsors and who recommended him, and so forth, all we could get from the military authorities even was the memorandum as to his physical examination. Now that is the only thing. I would say if anything was to be kept from the committee, that is the one thing that they must have held out, his physical examination, because that could have shown things that probably did not concern the IPR, but certainly the other items in the report were of great value to this committee in the solution of this problem.

So I hope that the Chair will keep after this, because I think that the time will come when public opinion in America will have something to say on this, and we should have this information before the Congress and the people.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to say, Senator, that the Chair does not get discouraged when it is pursuing a course for the protection of this Government of ours. This committee has pursued that course with diligence and will continue to pursue it with diligence. We will ask for every aid that we think we might be able to get from any of the executive branches of the Government or from any other source that is at all authentic. To that end we will persist.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, our witness for tomorrow will be Raymond Dennett, who was the secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations in 1944 and 1945.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. We stand in recess until tomorrow at 10 o'clock.

(The hearing recessed at 12 noon until 10 o'clock, Wednesday, September 26, 1951.)

22848—52—pt. 3——16

INDEX

(NOTE.—The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee attaches no significance to the mere fact of the appearance of the name of an individual or an organization in this index.)

A

Page

Acheson, Dean---- 716, 717, 718, 719, 722, 723, 724, 729, 730, 858, 859, 899, 902, 903, 904, 917, 918, 920, 928
Adams, Eva B---- 903, 904
Agriculture Department. (See United States Department of Agriculture.)
Air Force. (See United States Air Force.)
Allen, Captain---- 713
Allen, Riley H---- 712, 713
Allied Powers---- 728, 732, 733, 734, 738, 739, 741, 745, 784, 793, 812, 828, 901, 912
Allison, John---- 723
AMCO---- 712
Amerasia---- 714, 788, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 915, 918
American & Foreign Power Co---- 901
American Broadcasting System---- 757
American Committee for International Studies---- 910
American Federation of Labor---- 884
American Government. (See United States Government.)
American Journal of International Law---- 906
American labor---- 706, 707
American lend-lease---- 826
American Mission to Japan---- 752
American Peace Mobilization---- 861, 862, 863
American Political Science Review---- 906
American Red Cross---- 857, 901
American Republic Affairs---- 743
American-Russian Institute---- 768, 769, 857
American White Paper---- 922, 933
Anderson, Mr---- 904
Andrews, Clark---- 757, 758, 759, 761, 762, 763
Angus, Prof. H. F---- 768, 770
Armed Forces Radio Service---- 736, 757, 759
Armed Services. (See United States Army.)
Army Intelligence---- 779, 843, 844, 849, 860
Army War College---- 900
Asiaticus. (See Hans Moeller.)
Associated Telephone Services---- 712
Atherton, Frank C---- 713
Atlantic Charter---- 815
Attlee, Prime Minister---- 732, 733
Austern, Miss Hilda---- 768, 769, 863
AVCO---- 775

B

Baillargeon---- 712
Baker, Newton D---- 890
Ballantine, Joseph W---- 704, 708, 900, 921, 932, 933, 934
Bankers Trust Co. (New York City)---- 901
Barnes, Joseph---- 856, 857, 858, 859, 860
Barnett, Eugene E---- 712, 713, 723

Page
Barrett, David D---- 785
Barton, Edward---- 722
Bassett, Arthur---- 857
Bates, Searle---- 857
Bean, Louis---- 857
Beria---- 869
Berle, Adolph A., Jr---- 857, 893
Beukema, Col. Herman---- 857
Biddle, Attorney General Francis---- 861, 863
Big Four---- 786, 825
Binder, Carroll---- 857
Biographical Register. (See State Department, Biographical Register.)
Bissell, General---- 859
Bisson, T. A---- 838, 890, 891, 901
Blakeslee, Dr---- 708
Board of Economic Warfare---- 857
Bolsheviks---- 880, 887, 889, 894
Borton, Hugh---- 708
Bowman, Dr. Isaiah---- 707
Braden, Spruille---- 743
Briggs, Ellis O---- 743
Brodie, Bernard---- 900, 921, 933
Brookings Institute---- 900
Browder, Earl---- 826, 883, 902, 903
Brownell, Herbert---- 839
Buck, Pearl S---- 713
Budenz---- 839
Bunche, Ralph---- 857
Burden, W. A. M---- 858, 859
Bureau of the Budget---- 857
Buss, Claude A---- 900, 921
Byrnes, James F---- 722, 723, 724, 726, 727, 731, 738, 745, 746, 928

C

Cairo Conference---- 816
Cairo Declaration---- 734
Calkins, Robert D---- 712, 713
Cambridge University---- 714
Canadian Foreign Service---- 749
Canadian Government---- 749
Carlson---- 793
Carnegie Corp---- 857, 916, 928
Carter, Edward C---- 711, 769, 837, 838, 839, 840, 856, 857, 862, 863, 888, 890, 891, 892, 896-905, 915, 924, 925
Case, Everett---- 917
Central Executive Committee (Chinese)---- 809
Central Intelligence Agency (CIA)---- 840
Century Club---- 889
Chamberlain, Joseph P---- 713
Chancellor, Christopher---- 839, 840
Chapman, Mrs. Ralph---- 713
Charles, Allan E---- 713
Chemical Bank (New York City)---- 753
Chen, Han-seng---- 786, 809, 817
Chen, Dr. K. P---- 786, 809, 817
Chen, Peng---- 812
Chen Yi---- 812
Chen Yun---- 812
Chio, Chao-ting ("Hansu Chan")---- 907, 915
Chicago Daily News---- 857
Chicago University---- 715, 720, 901
China Aid Council---- 888
China Lantern---- 835
Chinese Army---- 779, 812, 813, 814, 820, 824, 826
Chinese black marketeers---- 719
Chinese Central Government---- 785, 795, 805, 806, 808, 809, 812, 816, 817, 828

Page
Chinese Government (coalition) 804, 806, 813
Chinese Nationalist Government 709, 711, 732, 733, 772, 771, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 790, 792, 794, 798, 801, 803, 807, 820, 827, 828, 829, 833, 851, 886, 917, 922, 925, 927, 928, 929, 932, 933, 934.
Chinese Republic 801
Chinese revolution 876
Chou En-lai 792, 800, 812, 913
Chu Hsueh-fen 825
Churchill, Winston 731, 811, 828
Chu Teh 812
CIA. (See Central Intelligence Agency.)
Cincinnati University 901
CIO. (See Congress of Industrial Organizations.)
City of Flint (steamship) 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896
Civil Service Commission. (See United States Civil Service Commission.)
Clapper, Raymond 857
Clayton, Will 858, 859
Coe, Frank 858, 859, 860
Colegrove, Kenneth W 712, 900, 905-935
Columbia University 857, 858, 860, 861, 863, 890, 891, 892, 901, 905, 920
Comintern 805, 865, 867, 868, 881, 888
Commerce Department. (See United States Department of Commerce.)
Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy 771, 772
Committee on Foreign Relations, Senate 896, 898
Communist International 864, 865, 866, 867, 871, 883
Communist International (Anglo-American Secretariat) 865, 866
Communist International (Fifth Congress) 876
Communist International (Second Congress) 873, 874
Communist International (Sixth World Congress) 869, 886
Communist International (South America) 865
Communist Manifesto 797
Communist Party (China) First National Congress 812
Communist Party (China) Second National Congress 812
Communist Party (China) Third National Congress 812
Communist Party (China) Fourth National Congress 812
Communist Party (China) Fifth National Congress 812
Communist Party 706, 707, 711, 716, 718, 744, 746-752, 754, 758, 760, 763, 764, 766, 770, 778, 779, 781-784, 786-788, 790-792, 794-809, 811-819, 821, 822, 825-828, 833, 835, 839, 844-847, 852, 854, 856, 859-861, 864-872, 874, 876-882, 884-888, 913-914, 915, 919, 920, 922-926, 928-934.
Communist Party (China) 747, 759, 763, 765, 778, 779, 781-784, 786-788, 790-792, 794-809, 811-819, 821, 822, 825-828, 833, 835, 844, 845-847, 852, 854, 856, 864-870, 871, 874, 880, 881, 886-888, 913, 916, 919, 920, 921, 924, 926, 928, 929, 931-934.
Communist Party (China) Sixth National Congress 812
Communist Party (China) Seventh National Congress 812
Communist Party (Indonesia) 877
Communist Party (Japan) 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 752, 904, 914
Communist Party (New York district) 865, 881
Communist Party (Russia) 781, 794, 892, 930
Communist Party (South America) 865, 866
Communist Party (United States) 705, 866, 867, 883, 902
Communist Political Association 706, 707
Condliffe, J. B 768, 770
Congress. (See United States Congress.)
Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO) 884
Connally 706, 707
Coons, Arthur G 712, 859, 900
Coordinating Committee. (See State, War, and Navy Coordinating Committee.)
Coordinator of Information 857
Counter-Intelligence (SCAP) 749
Cowles, Gardner 857

CPA. (See Communist Political Association.) Page
Cripps Mission 909, 910
Cripps, Sir Richard Stafford 909, 910
Currie, Lauchlin 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 902

D

Dabney, Virginius 858, 859
DaFoe, Dr. I. W 768, 769
Daily Worker 754, 902, 915
Davidson, Captain 735
Davies, John P 776, 778, 785, 794, 795, 797, 804, 806, 828
Davies, Joseph 857, 903
Davies, Lieutenant Colonel 748, 753
Davis, Elmer 729, 730, 839
Davis, Joseph S 713
DeCaux, Len 713, 858, 859, 860
Decker, John W 900
Democratic Party 797, 833, 836, 837
Dennery, M. Etienne 768, 770
Dennett, Raymond 858, 859, 925, 935
Dennett, Tyler 857, 925
Dennison, Capt. R. L 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743
Department of Defense 843
Derevyanko, Maj. Gen. Kuzma 746
Des Moines Register & Tribune 857
Dickover, Earl 708
Dillingham, W. F 713
Dollard, Charles 857
Dooman, Eugene H 703–754
Du Bois, Cora 922, 926
Duke of Devonshire 909
Dunn, James 704, 717, 737
Durbrow, Eldridge 709, 710, 760
Dutch Government 924

E

Earle, Edward Meade 911
Eastman, Max 838
Ecole des Sciences Politiques 768, 770
Eighth IPR Conference 850, 856, 858
Eighth Route Army 812, 814
Eisler, Gerhardt 866
Ellsworth 862
Embree, Edwin R 712, 713
Emeny, Brooks 713, 857
Emeny, Mrs. Brooks 713
Emerson, Rupert 857, 858, 859
Emmerson, John Kenneth 746, 748, 749, 753, 776, 778, 830, 903, 904
En-lai, Chou 792, 800, 812, 913
Epstein, Israel 709, 711
European Commission 722
Executive Department 899
Export-Import Bank 839

F

Fahs, C. B 857
Fairbank, John K 712, 750, 751, 900, 920, 921, 933
Fairbanks, Douglas, Jr 731, 732, 734
Fairfax-Cholmeley, Miss Elsie 839, 840
Farbenindustrie, I. G 740
Far East Area Committee 714
Far East Command 841, 843, 844, 845, 847, 848, 849, 851, 854, 856, 859, 860
Far East Commission 721, 722, 746, 922
Far East Subcommittee. (See State, War, and Navy Coordinating Committee.)
Far East Advisory Commission 738

Page
Far Eastern Affairs 753
Far Eastern Series 800, 804, 808
Far Eastern Survey 712, 754, 788, 911
Far Eastern University 867, 868
Farley, Miriam S 901
Fascist Party 707, 713, 723, 731, 740, 772, 815
Faymonville, Col. Carl 858, 859
FBI. (See Federal Bureau of Investigation.)
FEA. (See Foreign Economic Administration.)
Federal Bureau of Investigation 761, 763, 764, 765, 840
Federal Communications Commission 758
Federal Government. (See United States Government.)
Federal Reserve Bank 858
Field, Edith 862
Field, Frederick V 713, 850, 857–860, 862, 863, 896–898, 907, 925, 928, 934
Fifth IPR Conference 850
Fifth National Congress (Chinese Communist Party) 812
First National Bank (Portland, Oreg.) 901
First National Congress (Chinese Communist Party) 812
Fisher, Galen M 712, 713
Fisher, Sterling 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744
Fly, James Lawrence 758, 764
Fo, Sun 821
Foreign Affairs Council (Cleveland) 857
Foreign Economic Administration (FEA) 858, 859
Foreign Policy Association 890, 891
Foreign Policy Committee 926
Foreign Service. (See United States Foreign Service.)
Foreign Service Act of 1946 709, 710, 760
Forrestal, Secretary 729
Fortier, Brig. Gen. L. Joseph (retired) 843–864
Fosdick, Dr 917, 918
Foss, Charles Burton 912
Fourth National Congress (Chinese Communist Party) 812
Fourth Route Army 812, 813, 814
Franco 781
Free China Labor League 766
Freeman, Mansfield 858, 859
Freeman, R. E 858, 859
Friedman, Julian 708, 709, 710, 711, 714, 755, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 771, 772
Fu-chen, Li 812
Fuchu Prison 748, 749, 753
Fuller 712

G

Gainard, Capt. Joseph A. 892, 893, 894
Gates, Artemus 737
Gauss, Clarence E 829, 839
General Electric Corp 858
George, Harrison 883
German War College 835
Gestapo 818, 825
Gilchrist, Huntington 713
Gilland. (See M. Giran.)
Gillett, Capt. R. M 928
Giran, M 748, 753
Gohol, Mr 908
Goshal, Kumar 712
Grady, Henry F 713, 857
Grajdanzev, Andrew 901
Graves, Kizer & Graves 900
Graves, Mortimer 712, 713, 900
Green, Jerome 712, 713
Greene, Miss 862
Greenslade, Admiral 712, 713

Page
Greenwood ---- 712
Grew, Joseph C---- 704, 705, 715, 716, 717, 718, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 733, 914, 928
Gruening, Ernest H---- 857
Gulick, Luther H---- 857

H

Hackworth, Green H---- 893
Hamaguchi---- 729
Hankow-Canton Railway---- 827
Han-seng, Gen. Chen---- 915
Hart, Senator---- 839
Harvard University---- 714, 758, 760, 764, 900, 901, 905, 920
Hayden, J. R---- 857
Herald Tribune, New York---- 744, 745, 891, 892
Hern, General---- 779
Herod, W. R---- 857, 900
Higashi-Kuni Cabinet---- 739
Hilldring, Gen. John H---- 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743
Hirohito, Emperor---- 705, 706, 713, 716, 725, 727, 728, 731, 736, 738, 739, 751, 914
Hiss, Alger---- 857, 858, 859, 860
Hitler, Adolph---- 835, 891
Hobson---- 823
Ho Chi Minh---- 930
Hodgekinson, Sarah---- 763, 764, 765
Hoffman, Paul---- 713, 753
Holcombe, Arthur N---- 900
Holland, W. L---- 768, 769, 862, 863, 898, 903, 918
Ho Lung---- 812
Hoover, Herbert---- 706, 707
Hopkins---- 788
Hornbeck, Dr. Stanley K---- 754, 857
House Appropriations Committee---- 890
House of Lords---- 909
Hsiang-chien, Hsu---- 812
Hsueh-fen, Chu---- 825
Hsu Hsiang-chien---- 812
Huggins, G. Ellsworth---- 712, 713
Hulen, Bertram D---- 893
Hull, Cordell---- 893
Hull, General---- 831
Humelsine, Carlisle H---- 903
Huntington Library---- 712
Hurley, Patrick J---- 798, 828, 829, 830, 839, 933

I

Indian National Congress---- 910
Institute for Advanced Study---- 911
Institute of Pacific Relations---- 709, 710, 711, 712, 747, 751, 753, 754, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 787, 788, 789, 836, 837, 838, 850, 856, 858, 859, 861, 862, 863, 864, 883, 886, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 896, 901, 906, 908, 909, 911, 916, 918, 920, 923, 924, 925, 928, 934, 935
Institute of Pacific Relations (American Council)---- 711, 753, 754, 788, 836, 850, 858, 861, 862, 863, 864, 886, 901, 928, 935
Institue of Pacific Relations (Eighth Conference)---- 850, 856, 858
Institute of Pacific Relations (Fifth Conference)---- 850
Institute of Pacific Relations (Ninth Conference)---- 709, 710, 850, 856, 897, 898
Institute of Pacific Relations (Pacific Council)---- 768, 769, 850, 858, 859
Institute of Pacific Relations (Yosemite Conference)---- 890
Inter-American Conference (Rio de Janeiro)---- 743
International General Electric Co---- 857, 900
International Labor Office Conference---- 825
International Missionary Council---- 857, 900
International Press Correspondence---- 869, 871
International Secretariat (IPR)---- 711, 768, 788
Iowa State University---- 905
IPR. (See Institute of Pacific Relations.)
Isaac, Harold---- 748, 749, 753

J

Page
Jackson, Justice 740
Jaffe, Philip J 907, 908, 909, 910, 911
Japanese-Americans 742
Japanese Army 734, 738, 805, 811
Japanese Emperor. (See Hirohito.)
Japanese Government 719, 722, 728, 733, 738, 739, 741
Japanese industrialists. (See Zaibatsu.)
Japanese Navy 738
Japanese Peace Treaty 919, 920
Jen Pi-shih 812
Jessup, Philip C 712, 713, 768, 769, 844, 845, 846, 847, 851, 852, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 864, 889, 890, 891, 892, 896, 897, 899, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 928, 932.
Jinnah, Mr 910
Johns Hopkins University 707, 900, 927, 928
Johnson, Mr 753
Johnson, Col. Dana 727
Johnson, Nelson 922
Johnston, Eric 858, 859
Joint Chiefs of Staff 737, 782, 859
Jonathan, Nelson T 721

K

Kai-shek, Chiang 706, 731, 732, 771, 772, 775, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 805, 806, 807, 808, 811, 812, 817, 822, 823, 824, 825, 828, 839, 848, 851, 852, 866, 880, 923, 925, 927, 929, 933.
Kai-shek, Madam Chiang 827
Kang, Kao 812
Kang Sheng 812
Kao Kang 812
Kaufman, James Lee 721, 722
Kampai (political police) 738
Kennan, George 925, 926
Kerr, John H 890
Kilner, E. B 712
Kirk, Alexander C 893, 894
Kirk, Grayson 858, 859
Kizer, Benjamin H 713, 857, 858, 859, 860, 900, 921, 933
Kohlberg, Alfred 712, 923
Kornfeder, Joseph Zack 864–896
Kremlin 782, 783, 799, 804, 805, 834, 887, 907, 914, 916, 919, 920
Kung, H. H 825
Kuni 739
Kuomintang government 706, 707, 711, 772, 780, 781, 782, 783, 785, 786, 787, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 795, 796, 797, 800, 805, 806, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 913, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 866, 877, 879, 880, 886, 917.
Kuroda, Andrew Y 748, 752

L

Lamont, Corliss 836, 837, 838
Lamont, Thomas W 836, 837, 838
Lane, Clayton 837, 838, 911
Lasker, Bruno 864
Lattimore, Eleanor 864, 886, 888
Lattimore, Owen 704, 705, 707, 711, 713, 714, 715, 716, 720, 723, 724, 725, 726, 730, 731, 750, 751, 752, 838, 839, 858, 859, 860, 888, 900, 912, 913, 914, 915, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 925, 926, 927, 928, 931, 932, 933.
Lawrence, David 834
Lawyers Club (New York City) 892

Page
Lenin ---- 771, 865, 869, 884
Lenin School (Moscow) ---- 865, 868
Library of Congress ---- 747, 748, 752
Lie, Trygve ---- 931
Li Fu-chen ---- 812
Lincoln, General ---- 831
Lin Po-hu ---- 812
Lin Yu-tang ---- 827
Lippmann, Walter ---- 858, 859
Li Shao-Chi ---- 812
Lochhead, Archie ---- 857
Lockwood, William W ---- 856, 857, 908, 909, 910, 911
Loomis, Charles F ---- 713
Los Angeles committee ---- 712
Loyalty Security Board ---- 784, 788, 789, 793, 807
Lubin, I ---- 857
Luce, Henry R ---- 713, 728, 788, 827, 857, 928
Ludden, Raymond ---- 776, 811, 828, 830, 903
Ludlam, Kennedy ---- 743
Lung, Ho ---- 812

Mc

McCann, Colonel ---- 926
McCarthy, Joseph R ---- 927, 928
McCloy, John J ---- 723, 729, 731, 737
McConaughy, James L ---- 712, 713
McCoy, General ---- 859
McCoy, Frank R ---- 713
McFall, Jack K ---- 900, 902, 917
McLaughlin, Mrs. A ---- 713
McLaughlin, Emma ---- 712

M

MacArthur, Gen. Douglas ---- 717, 719, 720, 736, 737, 738, 739, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 749, 752, 777, 794, 832, 835, 849, 859, 901, 912, 932
MacKay, J. A ---- 858, 859
Mackinder ---- 911
MacLeish, Archibald ---- 729
MacNaughton, Ernest B ---- 901
Mandel, William ---- 766, 767, 768, 789, 770
Manhattan Center ---- 863
Mao Tse-tung ---- 782, 800, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 844, 845, 846, 852, 913, 914
Marceuse. (See M. Marukyusu.)
Marquess of Crewe ---- 909
Marshall, Gen. George C ---- 729, 730, 732, 733, 797, 831, 832, 833, 835, 901, 925, 932
Martin, Charles E ---- 712, 713
Marukyusu, M ---- 748, 753
Marx, Karl ---- 771, 783, 797, 835, 869, 870, 884, 885, 913
Massing, Mrs. Hede ---- 837
Mattusch, Kurt R ---- 908
Merritt, General ---- 848
Metcalfe, John C ---- 744, 745
Mikado. (See Hirohito.)
Mikhailovitch ---- 784, 787, 852
Millikan, Dr ---- 712
Mills College ---- 712
Minh, Ho Chi ---- 930
Minnesota University ---- 901
Mirkovic, Gen. Bor ---- 852
Mitchell, Kate ---- 712, 768, 769, 908, 911
Mitsubishi ---- 740
Mitsui ---- 740
Moeller, Hans "Asiaticus" ---- 915
Moffat, Abbot Low ---- 858, 859
Molyneaux, Peter ---- 857
Mongolian Peoples Republic ---- 931

Page
Mont Tremblant---- 850, 856, 858, 897
Moore, Harriett L---- 857
Moore, R. Walton---- 893
Morgan, J. P., & Co---- 836
Morison, George Abbot---- 712, 713, 858, 859
Mormacsun (steamship)---- 891, 892
Morris, Lawrence---- 712, 713
Moscow Government---- 894
Moscow Trials---- 889, 890
Moscow University---- 868
Motylev, Dr. V. E---- 891, 892
Mountbatten, Lord Louis---- 776
Mudd, Harvey---- 712
Murphy, J. Morden---- 901
MVD---- 869

N

Nathan, Robert---- 857
Nation---- 714
National Board (Communist Political Association)---- 707
National Broadcasting Co. (See NBC University of the Air.)
National CIO Committee for American and Allied War Relief---- 858
National defense. (See Department of Defense.)
National Resources Planning Board---- 857
National Salvationists---- 821
National Shinto (Japanese)---- 736, 742
Nationalist Chinese Government. (See Chinese Nationalist Government.)
Naval Medical Center (Bethesda)---- 928
Navy. (See United States Navy.)
Navy Department---- 704–707, 717, 731, 734, 736, 737, 743, 824
Nazis---- 733, 742, 835
NBC University of the Air---- 736, 743
New Republic---- 714
News Week---- 721, 748, 753
New York Herald Tribune---- 744, 745, 891, 892
New York Times---- 892, 893, 922, 926, 927, 928
New York World-Telegram---- 764, 765
Nimitz, Admiral---- 777
Ninth IPR Conference---- 709, 710, 850, 856, 897, 898
Norman, Dr. Herbert---- 748, 749, 753
Northwestern University---- 900, 905, 909, 910, 911, 923
Nosaka. (See Susumo Okano.)
Notestein, Mrs. A---- 713
Notestein, Adam Comstock---- 858, 859

O

Occidental College---- 900
Office of Price Administration (OPA)---- 857
Office of Strategic Services (OSS)---- 747, 912, 934
Office of Strategic Services (Far Eastern Division)---- 912
Office of Strategic Services (Japan section)---- 912
Office of War Information (OWI)---- 729, 730, 751, 766, 825, 826, 839, 912, 914
Okano, Susumo---- 747
OPA. (See Office of Price Administration.)
OSS. (See Office of Strategic Services.)
Oumansky, Constantine---- 603, 685, 686, 889
OWI. (See Office of War Information.)
Oxford University---- 714

P

Pacific Affairs---- 911
Pacific Northwest Regional Planning Commission---- 857
Pacificus---- 714
Page, Walter Hines. (See Walter Hines Page School.)
Pan American Airways---- 928
Pan-Pacific Union---- 883

Page
Paris Peace Conference 746
Parker, Philo W 713, 862
Parsons, Reginald 712
Pauley, Ambassador 750, 753
Pauley Report 750, 753
Peake, Cyrus 916
Pearson, Drew 928
Peffer, Nathaniel 901, 920
Pence, Captain 859
Peng, Chen 812
Pennfield, James 722
Pennsylvania University 901
Pentagon 729, 733
Pen, Tah-huai 812
Peoples Political Council (China) 785, 809, 817
Peoples Volunteer Corps 812, 813, 814
Perkins, Milo 857
Peter, King 784, 787
Piao, Lin 792
Pi-shih, Jen 812
PM 714
Po-hu, Lin 812
Politburo. (See National Board, Communist Political Association.)
Political Affairs 706
Potsdam Declaration 731, 732
Powell, J. B 838
Pravda 802
Psychological Warfare Department 727, 731, 734

Q

Quigley, Harold S 901

R

Radio City 743
Radio Institute of America 762
Readers' Digest 838
Reber, Miles 840
Reischauer, Edwin O 901, 920
Republican Party 784, 797, 827, 833, 836, 837, 839
Reuters 839, 840
Rhetts 788
Riefler, Winfield 857
Robertson, William S 901
Rockefeller Brothers' Fund 901
Rockefeller Foundation 858, 916, 928
Rockefeller, John D., III 901
Rogers, Mrs. Dorothy 712
Roosevelt, President 707, 728, 729, 785, 787, 825, 829, 833, 839, 902
Ropes, E. C 857
Rosecrans, W. S 712, 713
Rosenman, Judge 729
Rosinger, Lawrence K 901, 919, 920, 921, 932
Rowell, Chester 713
Russian Army 805, 872
Russian Military Intelligence 860

S

Salisbury, Lawrence 753, 754
San Francisco Conference (United Nations) 815
Sarekat Rayat 878
Sayre, Francis B 857
SCAP 748, 749, 753, 901
Schwellenbach, Judge Lewis B 857
Scott, Walter K 904
Seabald 849
Second National Congress (Chinese Communist Party) 812

Page
Secretariat 710, 859, 883, 931
Security Council. (See United Nations, Security Council.)
Senate. (See United States Senate.)
Senate Appropriations Committee 860
Sen, Dr. Sun Yat 801
Sen, Madam Sun Yat 826
Service, Jack 776
Service, John S 779, 780, 783, 784, 785–89, 793, 807, 808, 811, 828, 830, 903
Seventh National Congress (Chinese Communist Party) 812
Seymour, Lawrence D 712, 713
Shao-Chi, Li 812
Sheng, Kang 812
Shidihara, Baron 729, 739
Shiga, Yoshio 747, 748, 749, 752, 753
Shinto. (See National Shinto, Japanese.)
Shoemaker, Col. James H 857, 858, 859
Sixth National Congress (Chinese Communist Party) 812
Social Democrats 881
Socialist Party 771, 885
Socialist Party (Japan) 742, 872
Sorge, Richard 840
Soviet Embassy (Washington) 889
Soviet Press 894
Soviet Union 706, 707, 716, 718, 722, 732, 733, 738, 744–746, 766, 770, 786, 791, 793, 794, 797–801, 805, 806, 815, 818, 834, 835, 844, 845, 847, 860, 865, 868, 869, 872, 881, 886, 887, 890–895, 907, 913, 914, 921, 927, 929–931
Spotlight on the Far East 771
Sproul, Allan 858
Sproul, Robert Gordon 713, 928
Sprout, Harold 858, 859
Staley, Eugene 857, 901, 921
Stalin-Hitler 891
Stalin, Joseph 771, 784, 805, 815, 868, 869, 870, 884, 886, 891
Stassen, Harold 901, 921, 932, 933, 934
State Department ..... 703, 704, 706–710, 713, 716, 717, 719, 721, 723, 725–727, 729–731, 733, 735–738, 743–746, 748, 751–756, 758, 760, 764–766, 771, 777, 778, 784, 787–789, 793, 794, 800, 804, 807, 808, 824, 831, 832, 835, 840, 847, 848, 849, 857, 859, 860, 892–894, 899, 900, 902–904, 913, 914, 917–919, 921–928, 932, 933.
State Department (Biographical Register) 709, 710, 754
State Department (Bulletin) 735, 736
State Department (China Division) 704, 705, 707, 708, 709, 788, 824, 903
State Department (Division of Foreign Service Personnel) 709, 710, 760
State Department (Division of Labor Relations) 710
State Department (European Section) 708
State Department (Far Eastern Division) 704, 708, 726, 727, 736, 743, 754, 755, 831
State Department (Foreign Affairs Publication Section) 766
State Department (Foreign Service Auxiliary) 709, 710, 760
State Department (Japan Division) 704, 708, 912
State Department (Legal Section) 708
State Department (Loyalty Security Board) 784, 788, 789, 793, 807
State Department (Office of Public Affairs) 899
State Department (Policy Committee) 729
State Department (Psychological Warfare Department) 727, 731, 734
State University of Iowa 905
State, War, and Navy Coordinating Committee 704, 716, 717, 722, 736, 737, 743
Steinhardt, Laurence A 892, 893, 894
Stettinius 706, 707, 754
Stewart, Marguerite Ann 886
Stilwell, Gen. Joseph W 775, 776, 778, 779, 780, 785, 830
Stimson 729, 730, 731, 830
Stinebower, L. D 857
Stines, John 765, 766
Stone, W. T 857

Page
Strike 753
Strong, Robert 850
Sumitome 740
Sun Fo 821
Sun, General 851
Sun Yat-sen, Dr 801, 814, 878, 880
Sun Yat-sen, Madam 826
Sun Yat-sen University. (see Far Eastern University.)
Survey 712
Suzuki, Admiral 728
Swarajists 876, 877
Sweetland, Monroe 858
Swing 859
Swink 704, 716, 717, 722, 723, 727, 735, 737

T

Taft, Senator Bob 784
Tah-huai, Pen 812
Tang, Ting-san 881
Ta Kung Pao 791
Talbot, Phillips 901
Tano, System 914
Tarr, Edgar J 768, 769
Tass 895
Taylor, George E 901
Teh, Chu 812
Texas Weekly 857
Theater Intelligence Division (Far East Command) 843, 844, 848
Third National Congress (Chinese Communist Party) 812
Thomas, Elbert D 713
Time, Inc 857
Times. (See New York Times.)
Ting-san, Tang 881
Tito, Marshal 784, 787, 811, 828, 852
Tojo, General 715, 720
Tokuda, Kyuichi 747, 748, 749, 752, 753
Treasury Department. (See United States Treasury Department.)
Trippe, Juan 713, 928
Trotsky, Leon 866
Truman, President 730, 731, 732, 733, 736, 745, 776, 782, 784, 901, 902, 903, 928
Tse-Tung, Mao 782, 800, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 844, 845, 846, 852, 854, 913, 914

U

United Kingdom 732, 733
United Nations 710, 725, 746, 765, 793, 794, 815, 819, 853, 918, 924, 931
United Nations (Conference of International Organization) 710
United Nations (San Francisco Conference) 815
United Nations (Security Council) 746, 924
United Nations (United States Mission) 763, 764, 765
United Press (UP) 839
United States Air Force 745, 779, 780, 827, 849, 856
United States Army 729, 736, 738, 748, 753, 757, 759, 775, 779, 785, 792, 810, 820, 823, 825, 826, 833, 843, 849, 853, 901
United States Civil Service Commission 756
United States Congress 736, 833, 862, 902, 935
United States Department of Agriculture 857
United States Department of Commerce 857
United States District Court (Spokane) 857
United States Embassy (London) 703
United States Embassy (Moscow) 704, 765, 771, 893, 896
United States Embassy (Shanghai) 758
United States Embassy (Tokyo) 703, 704, 747
United States Embassy (Yugoslavia) 722
United States Foreign Service 703, 710, 746, 754, 760, 778, 793, 799, 804, 808, 825, 829, 830, 903

Page
United States Government 728, 730, 732, 733, 756, 757, 760, 771, 777, 824, 825, 834, 844, 845, 848, 849, 851, 860, 861, 892, 894, 895, 896, 901, 912, 918, 919, 920, 924, 933, 934, 935.
United States Navy 737, 745, 849, 858, 928
United States News 834
United States Senate 710, 905
United States Treasury Department 824, 857
Universal Trading Corporation 857
University of British Columbia 768, 770
University of California 768, 770, 928
University of Chicago 715, 720, 901
University of Cincinnati 901
University of Minnesota 901
University of Moscow 868
University of Pennsylvania 901
Universtiy of Washington 901
UNNRA 825
UP. (See United Press.)
USAF–CBI 779, 780, 785
U. S. S. R. 706, 707, 716, 718, 722, 732, 733, 738, 744–746, 766, 774, 786, 791, 793, 794, 796–801, 805, 806, 815, 818, 834, 835, 844, 845, 847, 860, 865, 868, 869, 872, 881, 886, 887, 890–894, 907, 913, 914, 921, 927, 929–931

V

Vandenberg 706, 707
Versailles Treaty 844
Vinacke, Harold M 901
Vince, Jacob 857
Vincent, John Carter 704, 705, 707, 708, 711, 713, 715, 716, 717, 718, 722, 723, 724, 726, 727, 730, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 750, 755, 788, 792, 831, 839, 858, 859, 860.
Voice of America 756, 765, 766, 770, 771
Voorhis, Jerry 858

W

W. A. E. 756
Wafdists 876, 877
Wakatsuki 729
Wallace, Henry A. 780, 825, 838, 839, 857
Walter Hines Page School 900, 928
War Department 704, 717, 736, 741, 743, 745, 824, 835, 840, 901, 914
War Production Board 857
Washington University 901
Watanists 878
Watt, Robert J. 858, 859
Waymack 859
Webb, Mr. 905
Webster Publishing Co. 864, 886, 888
Wedemeyer, Lt. Gen. Albert C. (retired) 775–841, 933
Welles, Sumner 826, 858, 859, 902
West Point Military Academy 857
Wheeler, Leslie 857
White 788
White, Harry D. 857, 858, 859, 860
White House 717, 730, 733, 736, 745, 752, 826, 857, 860, 863, 894, 901
White, Lynn, Jr. 712
White paper. (See American white paper.)
White Russians 872, 873
Wickett, F. A. 712, 713
Widener, Mrs. William Harry 755–773
Wilbur, Brayton 712, 713, 858, 859
Wilbur, Ray Lyman 713
Wild, Payson 713

Page
Willkie, Wendell L---- 827, 858
Willits, Joseph H---- 858
Willoughby, Gen. C. A---- 840, 845, 901
Wilson, C. E---- 858, 859
Woltman, Frederick---- 764, 765
Women of the World (radio show)---- 762
World Affairs Council of Northern California---- 901
World Bank---- 861
World-Telegram (New York)---- 764, 765
World War II---- 784
Wright, Mrs. Louise---- 713
Wrights, Quincy---- 712

Y

Yale University---- 714, 900
Yarnell, Admiral H. E---- 713, 858
Yat Sen, Dr. Sun---- 801, 814
Yi, Chen---- 812
Yosemite Conference (IPR)---- 890
Young Communist League---- 861
Yun, Chen---- 812
Yu-tang, Lin---- 827

Z

Zaibatsu---- 715, 720, 725, 736, 740

×

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 9999 05018 313 4

Boston Public Library
Central Library, Copley Square

Division of Reference and Research Services

Social Sciences
Department

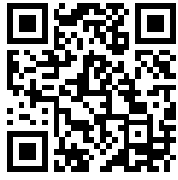
The Date Due Card in the pocket indicates the date on or before which this book should be returned to the Library.

Please do not remove cards from this pocket.

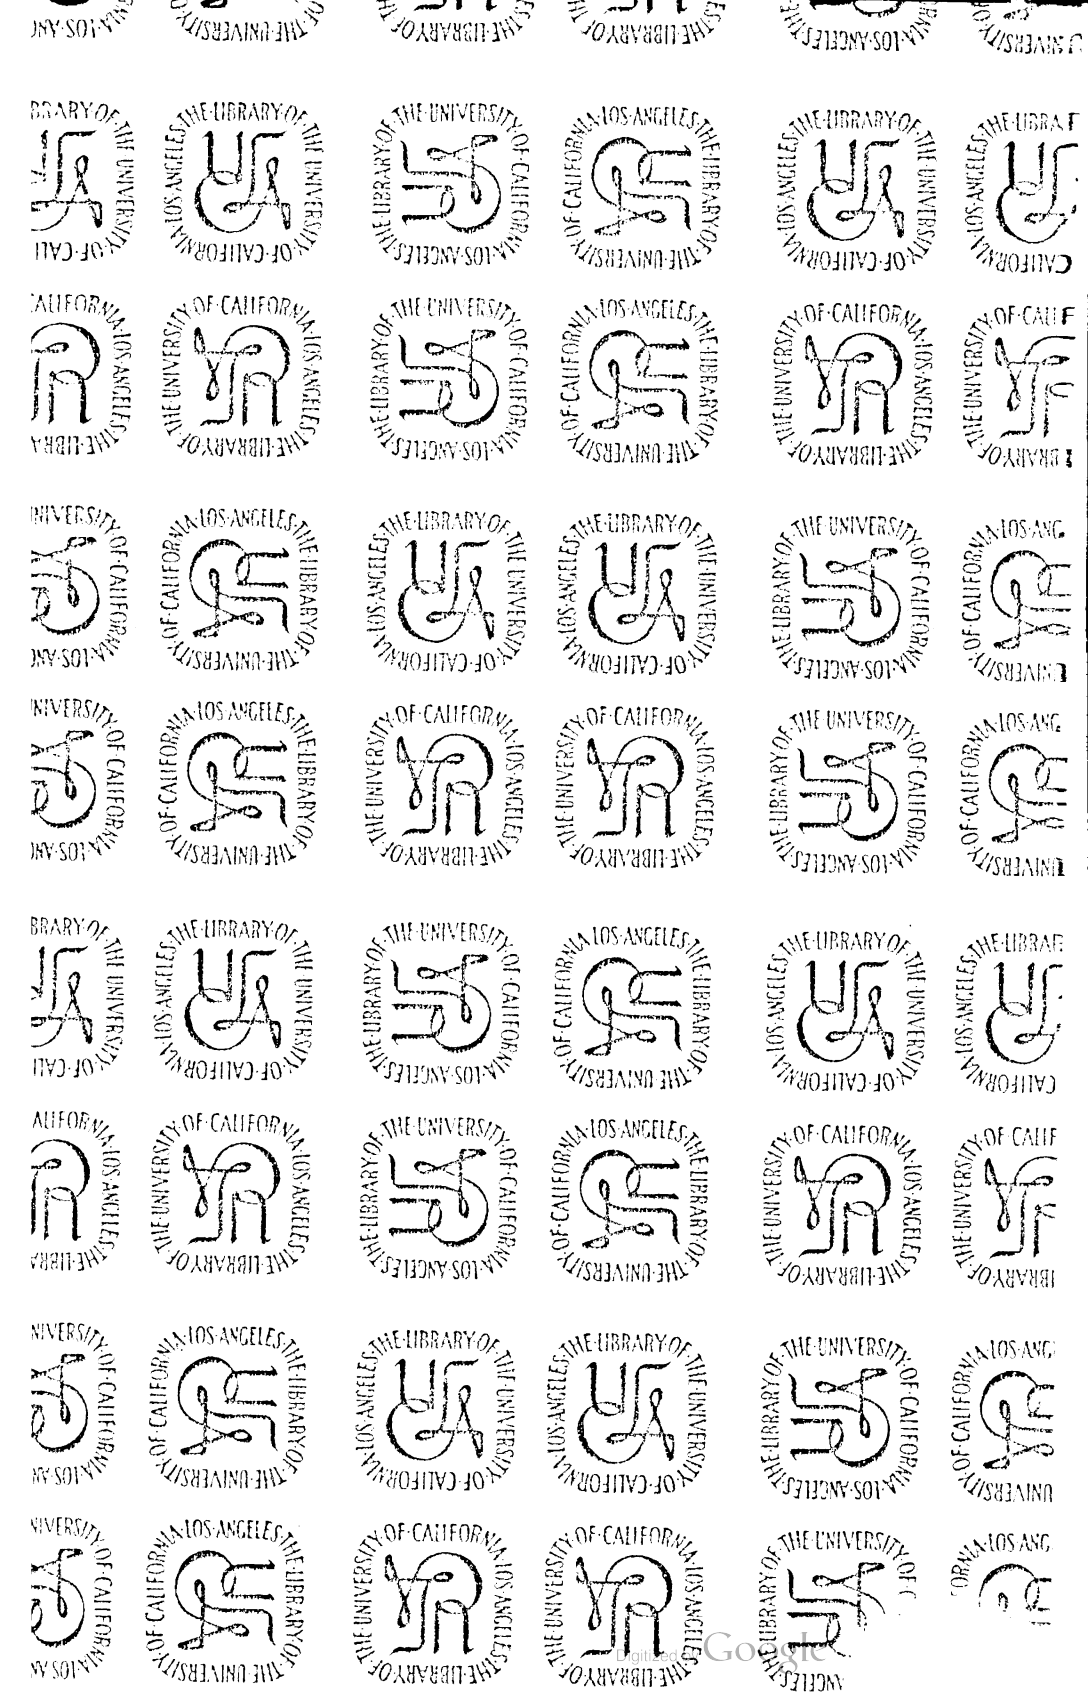
This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google™ books

https://books.google.com



Digitized by Google



Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

HEARINGS

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS

OF THE

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY UNITED STATES SENATE

EIGHTY-SECOND CONGRESS

FIRST SESSION

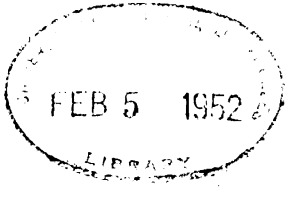
ON

THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

PART 4

SEPTEMBER 26, 28, OCTOBER 1, 5, 6 AND 10, 1951

Printed for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary



UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
83318 WASHINGTON : 1951

Digitized by Google

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada, Chairman

HARLEY M. KILGORE, West Virginia	ALEXANDER WILEY, Wisconsin
JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi	WILLIAM LANGER, North Dakota
WARREN G. MAGNUSON, Washington	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan
HERBERT R. O'CONOR, Maryland	WILLIAM E. JENNER, Indiana
ESTES KEFAUVER, Tennessee	ARTHUR V. WATKINS, Utah
WILLIS SMITH, North Carolina	ROBERT C. HENDRICKSON, New Jersey

J. G. SOURWINE, Counsel

SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada, Chairman

JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan
HERBERT R. O'CONOR, Maryland	WILLIAM E. JENNER, Indiana
WILLIS SMITH, North Carolina	ARTHUR V. WATKINS, Utah

SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi, Chairman

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan

ROBERT MORRIS, Special Counsel
BENJAMIN MANDEL, Director of Research

Digitized by Google

Stack
Annex
DU
1
I5U55
v.4

CONTENTS

Testimony of— Page

Budenz, Louis F ---- 1077
Dennett, Raymond ---- 937
Holland, William L ---- 1139
McGovern, William M ---- 1007
Stassen, Harold E ---- 1035–1112
Appendix I, map of China ---- Facing 1250

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10 a. m., pursuant to recess, Senator Pat McCarran (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Ferguson, Watkins, and Jenner.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order, please.

Mr. Morris, you may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. This is Mr. Dennett, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. DENNETT. I do.

TESTIMONY OF RAYMOND DENNETT, CAMBRIDGE, MASS., DIRECTOR OF WORLD PEACE FOUNDATION, BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, will you give your name and address to the reporter?

Mr. DENNETT. Raymond Dennett, 21 Lowell Street, Cambridge, Mass.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present occupation?

Mr. DENNETT. Director, World Peace Foundation, Boston, Mass.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, did you ever hold the position of the secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. I did, approximately March 1944 to December 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Who first offered you that position, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. I think that first came in a letter to me from William Lockwood, then the secretary, in the spring of 1943.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you decline the offer at that time?

Mr. DENNETT. I declined the offer at that time. Instead, later that summer, I took a job with the Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation and with UNRRA. The offer was renewed in January 1944, at which time I accepted it.

Mr. MORRIS. Who offered the job the second time, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. It was either Edward C. Carter or Harriet Moore, or both.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Why do you think that job was offered to you, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. I know that, when Lockwood left, Miss Moore was acting secretary, and I know she wanted to leave. I assume that one of my qualifications was that I was 4–F and, therefore, available and I wouldn't mind getting the job, and as a result of the manpower shortage. At least, it is possible it was that.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you assume the duties of secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. I did; in March 1944.

Mr. MORRIS. How many people were under your direct supervision at that time?

Mr. DENNETT. Somewhere between 24 and 30, roughly.

Mr. MORRIS. Who made up that group?

Mr. DENNETT. There was a group in New York consisting of the New York staff. Do you want the names?

Mr. MORRIS. As many as possible, Mr. Dennett, yes.

Mr. DENNETT. The assistant treasurer was Tillie G. Shahn; Miss Marguerite Stewart in charge of the school program; Rosamund Lee in charge of promotion; Miss Miriam Farley was in charge of, I think, the pamphlets and the Far Eastern Survey. I think Mrs. Catherine Porter was there when I first came but left very soon thereafter to go with OWI. There were a number of clerical help. I guess Miss Yardumian was in the library.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Rose Yardumian?

Mr. DENNETT. Rose Yardumian. She was later transferred to the Washington office. There was also a Washington office directly under the supervision of the New York office.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was in charge of the staff in the Washington office?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't know as of March 1944, but within a very short time we had a set-up in the Washington office in which Miss Yardumian was in general charge of office procedure, Mr. William C. Johnstone was in charge of the study-group program, and either then or later Mr. Owen Lattimore was asociated with the Washington office.

Mr. MORRIS. In addition to the Washington office, what other branches were there, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. We had a branch in Chicago which was more or less dormant. It was a volunteer group which arranged occasional meetings as visiting firemen came through Chicago. We had a fairly active group in Seattle. We had a very active group in the Bay region.

While I was there, another group was developed in the Spokane area and there was some reactivation of a group which had previously been active in Los Angeles.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, what was the underlying union situation in the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. Well, we had a union contract.

Mr. MORRIS With what union?

Mr. DENNETT. The Union of Office and Professional Workers of America.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know what local of that union?

Mr. DENNETT. No; I don't know the exact local of it.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it local 18, Mr. Dennett?

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. It probably was. It was whatever the local was that was operating in New York City. I never did know the number particularly.

Mr. MORRIS. I think that has a functional rather than a jurisdictional breakdown, Mr. Dennett.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just for the sake of precision, you spoke of the "Union of Office and Professional Workers of America". Did you mean the United Office and Professional Workers of America?

Mr. DENNETT. It was the UOPWA, whatever that stood for.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that the CIO?

Mr. DENNETT. That was the CIO union. We had a union-shop agreement rather than a closed-shop agreement.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you explain what that is, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. The arrangements were that anybody who joined the staff at any level had to become a member of the union within 30 days after joining, with the exception of myself. I represented management. Everybody else had to be a member of the union. That did not apply to the Washington office, but it did apply to the New York office.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, will you tell us the nature of the staff workers at the Institute of Pacific Relations with respect to their objectivity?

Mr. DENNETT. It is a fairly involved story, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us as much as possible what happened in connection with that situation, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. The situation when I came there, very shortly after I arrived—in the first place, I was a little concerned about the nature of the union contract.

Mr. MORRIS. Why were you concerned?

Mr. DENNETT. It seemed to me with a staff of 24 people, which was engaged in research, objective research, that a union contract of this nature in which everybody had to be written into the union was probably an error because there might be some people whom you would want to hire who didn't particularly believe they ought to be members of the union. I was not too certain as to the nature of the staff, how good they were, how bad they were, and I certainly was not at that point in a position to know in any great detail all the individuals who were writing or had been writing for the institute. So, I established a series of outside committees, a research advisory committee, I think a publications committee.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you did not trust the staff; is that right, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. Well, I came not to trust them. I had no feeling of no trust at the time I took over the job, or I would not have taken over the job.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us as much as possible, Mr. Dennett, why you came to distrust the staff?

Mr. DENNETT. Well, the situation developed in 1945, late 1944 and 1945. The executive committee had been after me to get an assistant secretary because I was carrying quite a heavy load. At the time of the San Francisco conference the Bay region peaple wanted me to come out and help them with their San Francisco office. Prior to my departure I went to one of the members of the staff and suggested to her that, if she took over while I was away and did a good job, I would suggest her as assistant secretary upon my return from San Francisco.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Who was that?

Mr. DENNETT. Mrs. Stewart.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Maxwell S. Stewart?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes.

Upon my return from San Francisco in the late part of May or early June of 1945, I went to the executive committee and suggested that she be appointed assistant secretary, was told by some members of the executive committee that they had not been satisfied with her work while I was away, and they turned down the suggestion.

The shop committee of the union immediately came in to see me to protest—this was a grievance—that I had in fact promised Mrs. Stewart the job, and insisted that I appoint her assistant secretary in any event.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were the shop stewards, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. At that time—well, the shop committee changed semiannually. At that time I think Miriam S. Farley and probably Miss Shirley Jenkins, plus one of the clerical help, were on the staff. Mrs. Jenkins and probably one of the clerical help were on the shop committee. I don't recall.

I was going on vacation. I told the shop committee I would transmit their complaints to the executive committee, which I did, and when I returned I found on my desk a communication from the shop committee to the executive committee, from the union to the executive committee, demanding that the executive committee reverse its decision and appoint Mrs. Stewart assistant secretary. This seemed to me to put pretty clearly the question who was running the organization, the staff or the executive committee, and in order to clear the air I submitted my resignation at that time. It was not accepted until the following December.

Mr. MORRIS. Was any effort made to prevent you from going through with your resignation? Did they ask you not to go through with it?

Mr. DENNETT. Well, the executive committee at that time refused to accept it in July.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there any special committee set up to hear the merits of the case?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes; there was a special committee appointed to investigate. It consisted of Frederick Vanderbilt Field and Mrs. Ada Comstock Notestein, both of whom were members of the executive committee. They heard Mrs. Stewart on her side and the shop committee and they heard me on the other. Mrs. Stewart was not appointed assistant secretary. There was some face-saving formula developed to go over the whole procedure.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did Mr. Field take in all of this?

Mr. DENNETT. Mr. Field was rather consistently in favor of the union.

Mr. MORRIS. He was consistently in favor of the union?

Mr. DENNETT. I think that is fair to say yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How about the union?

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. After all, he had put in the union contract when he was in charge of the Institute of Pacific Relations; so I was told, anyway.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, I wonder if you could tell me more about the operations of the staff in connection with the Institute of Pacific Relations? How influential was the staff in the running of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. During the period when I was there the staff was not very influential.

Mr. MORRIS. Was not influential?

Mr. DENNETT. Not while I was there.

Mr. MORRIS. Why is that, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. Because at that time I was brought in I gather that the staff had regularly been appearing at meetings of the executive committee. I was informed that the executive committee in the immediate period prior to my arrival had not been a particularly active group and that was one of the things which was to be changed when I came in, and I certainly had the impression that the staff had had a good deal more to do with the determination of policy than is generally accepted.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, Senator McCarran has been called down to the Rules Committee. We will have to stand by until another Senator arrives.

(Discussion off the record.)

Senator WATKINS. The committee will resume session.

You may proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, I would like to show you a draft of a working agreement between the Book and Magazine Guild, Local 18, United Office and Professional Workers of America, CIO, and the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc., and ask you if that is the local you have been testifying about this morning?

Mr. DENNETT. I assume that it is. This is the 1939 draft. I was not there until 1944 but I think it was a continuing contract annually with the same group.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the union with which you negotiated?

Mr. DENNETT. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce in the record the working agreement between the Book and Magazine Guild, Local 18, of UOPWA, CIO, and the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, which Mr. Mandel will verify was a paper taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator WATKINS. What is the number of the exhibit, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. We are now introducing it, Senator.

Senator WATKINS. Does it have a number?

Mr. MORRIS. Not yet.

Mr. MANDEL. This contract was taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. May that be accepted in the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit?

Senator WATKINS. That will be the order.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 281" and is as follows:)

Digitized by Google

WORKING AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE BOOK AND MAGAZINE GUILD, LOCAL 18, UOPWA, CIO AND THE AMERICAN COUNCIL OF THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, INC.

This agreement, made and entered into this __ day of ------, 1939, by and between the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc., hereinafter referred to as the council, and the Book and Magazine Guild, local 18, United Office and Professional Workers of America, CIO, hereinafter referred to as the guild, witnesses that

Whereas, it is the desire of the parties hereto to establish a permanent and stable basis for the continuance of amicable and harmonious relations between the council and its employees and for the maintenance and improvement of standards of work and conditions of employment; and

Whereas these objectives can best be achieved through an agreement clearly defining the obligations of each party.

Now, therefore, in consideration of the covenants herein contained, the parties hereto mutually agree as follows:

I. UNION RECOGNITION

The council recognizes and acknowledges the guild as the sole and exclusive representative of all employees attached to its New York office, for the purpose of collective bargaining with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and all other conditions of employment.

1. For the purpose of this agreement "employees" shall be defined as persons on the payroll of the council's New York office, whether on a full or part-time basis, and normally working in the New York office. It shall not include persons having the power to hire and fire, volunteer workers, persons engaged temporarily for special projects, workers on a retainer basis, or holders of fellowships working under the supervision of the council but receiving no compensation from it. The list of persons covered by the contract shall be determined by agreement between the council and the office committee, hereinafter provided for, in accordance with the above definition.

2. It is understood that all staff work shall be performed by paid employees, except in cases where a volunteer would not replace a paid worker and where the appointment of the volunteer is made after consultation and agreement with the office committee.

II. PREFERENTIAL HIRING

Employees who are members of the guild at the time of signing of this contract or who subsequently join the guild shall remain members in good standing during the life of this contract. Employees who are not members of the guild at the time of signing shall not be bound by this contract to become members of the guild, although membership shall be open to those eligible for membership under the bylaws of the guild.

1. Hiring.—Whenever a vacancy occurs in any position, the council agrees to fill such vacancy by promotion from among the employees already in the office, or where this is impracticable it shall apply to the guild to fill such vacancy. If the guild is unable to supply a qualified person within 10 consecutive working days, the council may employ a person of its own selection.

When positions are to be filled otherwise than through the guild, the council shall recommend to all candidates that, if hired by the council, they become members of the guild; and in making appointments shall give preference to candidates who will agree to join the guild if hired, unless such preference would result in the appointment of a candidate who is not qualified to fill the position in question.

2. Trial period.—The council shall have the right, at the time of employing a worker, to declare a trial period of not more than 1 month, but the same worker may not be employed for more than one trial period in the same type of work. In special circumstances, however, an extension of the trial period may be permitted by agreement between the council and the office committee.

3. Temporary employees.—Temporary employees may be hired for a specified period, upon designation in advance of the temporary character of the employment, so long as the period of temporary employment shall not exceed 1 month. Any temporary employee retained for a longer period shall automatically become a regular employee. In special circumstances, however, an extension of the period of temporary employment may be permitted by agreement between the council and the office committee. Temporary employees shall be paid 10 percent above the minimum rates established for permanent employees in each category hereinafter provided, except by agreement with the office committee.

Digitized by Google

4. Part-time employees.—Part-time employees shall be paid in accordance with the wage provisions hereinafter set forth, adjusted pro rata in proportion to the average weekly hours of work of such employees.

III. LAY-OFFS, DISCHARGE

Should the council at any time find it necessary to reduce the number of employees, it is agreed that seniority rights will be respected; namely, that the last person hired in any particular capacity shall be the first to be laid off. In the event of a subsequent increase in the staff such employees, if qualified and available, shall be given preference in hiring.

No employee shall be discharged or laid off except for just and sufficient cause as determined by consultation and agreement between the council and the office committee. Nor shall any employee be discriminated against or discharged for his actions in behalf of the guild.

1. Severance pay.—Any employee who is laid off or discharged, except for dishonesty or other serious offense as determined by agreement between the council and the office committee, shall receive extra compensation as follows: One week's pay for every 6 months or major fraction thereof which he has spent in the employ of the council, up to a maximum of 26 weeks' pay. This may be paid either in a lump sum or in installments, as agreed between the council, the employee, and the office committee, provided that the full amount is paid within the period for which the employee is entitled to receive severance pay, and that no single installment is less than the amount of the employee's weekly wage.

2. Resignations.—In the event that any employee desires to resign from the staff, he shall give the council at least 2 weeks' notice of his intention to resign.

IV. WAGES

No employee shall be paid at a rate less than $21 per full-time week. The following minimum wages shall be paid to employees within the classification specified, it being understood and agreed that this schedule represents merely a minimum standard and is not to be regarded as a wage scale fixing the salary of every employee:

	Per week
Office boys, clerical workers, typist	$21
Secretaries	25
Professional workers	30

It is understood to be the policy of the council that in granting wage increases the factor of length of service shall be given consideration together with other factors.

Nothing in this contract shall prevent any individual employee from entering into an individual agreement with the council for a salary above the minimum to which he is entitled under this contract, provided that such agreement be made only after consultation between the council and the office committee. The office committee may also take the initiative in such matters.

At the time when the annual budget of the council is being drawn up, or at any other time when changes in the budget affecting any salaries or reduction of staff are under consideration, the office committee shall be consulted on such changes. No reduction in the wages of any employee shall be made except after consultation and agreement with the office committee.

The salary schedules of the council and such other financial data as may be relevant to the question of salaries shall at all times be open to the inspection of the office committee.

V. TRANSFERS

It is understood that no employee shall be transferred to different work without due notification to the employees concerned.

VI. HOURS

The working week shall consist of 5 days and 35 hours, from Monday to Friday, except that in order to keep the office open to the public on Saturday

Digitized by Google

one employee at a time may be required to work an additional 3 hours on Saturday morning; or in the event of unusual pressure of work any employee may be required to work an additional 3 hours on Saturday morning.

Any employee required to do overtime work shall receive an equivalent amount of free time with pay.

VII. HOLIDAYS

Employees shall not be required to work on legal holidays, nor on religious holidays when leave is requested for observance of such holidays.

VIII. VACATIONS

All employees shall be entitled to the following yearly vacations with full pay: during the first 2 years of employment, 1 weekday for every month of employment; after 2 years of employment, 1 month.

IX. SICK LEAVE

No deductions from an employee's pay shall be made by reason of absence on account of sickness, provided such absences do not exceed a reasonable period as determined by agreement between the council and the office committee.

X. EXISTING PRIVILEGES

No rights or privileges now enjoyed by the employees and not specifically mentioned in this contract shall be withdrawn, curtailed, or modified in any way except by agreement with the office committee.

XI. OFFICE COMMITTEE

Employees who are members of the guild shall elect from among their number an office committee. It shall be the function of the office committee to represent the employees in all dealings with the council or its representative which may concern them as a group; to act as representative of the employees in the consideration and presentation to the management of all employee grievances, whether individual or collective; and to hear, consider, and negotiate for the settlement of all complaints and grievances presented by the council or its representative which may arise from or otherwise concern the relationship between the council and its employees. The office committee may seek the aid of any member of the guild, whether or not employees of the council, in performing any of the above functions.

XII. EMPLOYER REPRESENTATIVE

The council shall designate in writing a particular person or persons with whom the office committee shall conduct any necessary dealings and negotiations and who shall have full power and authority to make decisions with respect to such dealings and negotiations.

XIII. GRIEVANCES

All grievances or complaints, whether of the council or any of its employees, resulting from the operation of this contract or otherwise affecting relations between the council and its employees, shall be made the subject of discussion between the council representative and the office committee, who shall endeavor to adjust the matter by mutual agreement.

XIV. ARBITRATION

In the event of disagreement as to the interpretation, application, or enforcement of this contract, which cannot be settled by negotiation between the parties, such dispute shall be referred to a board of arbitration consisting of one member designated by the council, one member designated by the guild, and a third member to be chosen by the other two. If they cannot agree on the third member, such member shall be chosen by the board of mediation of the New York State Department of Labor. The decision of the board of arbitration shall be accepted by both parties as final.

Digitized by Google

XV. MODIFICATION OF TERMS

At any time before 30 days prior to the date of expiration of this agreement either party hereto may give to the other written notice of desire to change the terms of this agreement by adding to, deleting, or modifying the existing provisions thereof; it being understood that while the office committee shall participate in all steps and negotiations with respect to such changes, said committee shall act only through the guild. The notice herein provided for shall state the nature of the changes desired. Within five working days after receipt of such notice the parties shall enter into negotiations with respect to the proposed modifications, and such negotiations shall be continued until an agreement is reached or until it becomes obvious that the parties cannot agree. If no agreement is reached with respect to the changes proposed, the terms of this contract shall continue with the same force and effect as though no changes had ever been proposed, until its expiration date.

XVI. DURATION OF CONTRACT

This contract shall continue in full force for 1 year from the date of signing and it shall automatically renew itself for an additional year at the end of each and every yearly expiration date, unless either party to it gives written notice to the other that it desires to modify or change this agreement at the expiration date. Such formal notice shall be given at least 30 days before the yearly expiration date of the agreement. In such an event negotiations shall be immediately opened for the purpose of concluding a new agreement. During such negotiations and until the conclusion thereof, either by the signing of a new contract or the withdrawal of either party from the negotiations, this agreement shall remain in effect, even though it extend beyond the stated term.

This contract shall be signed in duplicate and one copy retained by each party.

For the Book and Magazine Guild:

For the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc.:

LIST OF EMPLOYEES COVERED BY THIS CONTRACT

Kathleen Barnes
Annette Blumenthal
Hilda Austern Bretholtz
Miriam S. Farley
Katrine R. C. Greene
Bruno Lasker
William W. Lockwood, Jr.
Michael Minarovich
Catherine Porter
Jeannette Randolph
Elizabeth Raymond
Russell G. Shiman
Margaret R. Taylor
Emily C. Twaddell
Helen Wiss

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, do you have a paper which would indicate that that particular local and that union were expelled by the CIO as being Communist controlled?

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a resolution expelling the United Office and Professional Workers of America, with which the Book and Magazine Guild was affiliated, from the CIO. The last paragraph of that resolution reads as follows:

3. That, in pursuance of the powers granted to the executive board by section 10 of article IV of the constitution of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and pursuant to the findings of this board that the policies and activities of the United Office and Professional Workers of America are consistently directed toward the achievement of the program and the purposes of the Communist party rather than the objectives and policies set forth in the constitution of the CIO, the certificate of affiliation with the CIO heretofore granted to the United Office and Professional Workers of America is, effective March 1, 1950, revoked, and the United Office and Professional Workers of America is, as of that date, expelled from the CIO.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like this whole resolution of the CIO introduced in the record and marked as the next consecutive exhibit.

Senator WATKINS. It may be admitted.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 282" and is as follows:)

RESOLUTION EXPELLING THE UNITED OFFICE AND PROFESSIONAL WORKERS OF AMERICA

Whereas section 10 of article VI of the constitution of the Congress of Industrial Organizations reads as follows:

"SEC. 10. The executive board shall have the further power, upon a two-thirds vote, to revoke the certificate of affiliation of or to expel or to take any other appropriate action against any national or international union or organizing committee the policies and activities of which are consistently directed toward the achievement of the program or the purposes of the Communist Party, any Fascist organization, or other totalitarian movement, rather than the objectives and policies set forth in the constitution of the CIO. Any action of the executive board under this section may be appealed to the convention: Provided, however, That such action shall be effective when taken and shall remain in full force and effect pending the appeal."

and

Whereas the eleventh constitutional convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, held at Cleveland, Ohio, between October 31 and November 4, 1949, adopted a resolution by the overwhelming vote of the delegates in attendance at the convention, which resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas, this convention has amended the constitution to empower the executive board to take appropriate action to maintain the integrity of the CIO and to project it against those who seek to pervert it from its constitutional objectives and purposes: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this convention hereby instructs the executive board immediately to exercise its powers under article VI, section 10 of the constitution and to take appropriate action to protect the CIO and to prevent the use of the good name of the CIO by those who have consistently directed their policies and activities toward the achievement of the program or the purposes of the Communist Party, any Fascist organization, or other totalitarian movement."

and

Whereas, at the meeting of the executive board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, held on November 5, 1949, William Steinberg, president of the American Radio Association and a member of the CIO executive board, filed charges with said board that the policies and activities of the United Office and Professional Workers of America are consistently directed toward the achievement of the program and the purposes of the Communist Party rather than the objectives set forth in the constitution of the CIO; and

Whereas the CIO executive board thereupon by resolution duly adopted authorized the giving of notice of the charges and the appointment by the president of the CIO of a committee to conduct hearings on the charges and to make a report and recommendations to the executive board; and

Whereas pursuant to and in accordance with this resolution, Philip Murray, president of the CIO, designated Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union of America, Martin Wagner, president of the United Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, and Harry Sayre, president of the United Paperworkers of America, all of whom are members of the national CIO Executive Board, as a committee to conduct hearings on said charges and to make a report or reports to the executive board recommending appropriate action; and

Whereas appointment of said committee by President Murray was announced to and approved by the executive board, and due notice of the appointment of said committee and of said charges was given to the United Office and Professional Workers of America; and

Whereas upon notice duly given, hearings were held by the committee at which the committee heard testimony and received exhibits both in support of and in opposition to the charges; and

Whereas the United Office and Professional Workers of America were given full, complete, and adequate opportunity to present testimony and to submit material to the committee in opposition to the charges; and

Digitized by Google

Whereas the committee has presented to and filed with the executive board of the CIO at a meeting of said board duly convened and held in Washington, D. C., commencing February 14, 1950, the report, findings, and recommendations of the committee, copies of which were furnished to the United Office and Professional Workers of America and to all of the members of the executive board present at said meeting; and

Whereas the executive board has considered the report of the committee and has given an opportunity to and has heard the United Office and Professional Workers of America in opposition to the findings and recommendations of the committee, and has heard other testimony both in support of and in opposition to these findings: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the executive board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations at a meeting of the board duly held at Washington, D. C., at CIO headquarters on Wednesday, February 15, 1950, as follows:

1. That the report, findings, and recommendations of the executive board committee appointed by President Philip Murray to conduct the hearing in the matter of the United Office and Professional Workers of America, be and said report, findings, and recommendations of that committee are in all respects approved, confirmed, and accepted as the report, findings, and decision of the executive board of the CIO.

2. That upon the basis of the report of the committee to investigate the charges against the United Office and Professional Workers of America and upon the hearing and argument conducted before this board, the executive board finds and concludes that the policies and activities of the United Office and Professional Workers of America are consistently directed toward the achievement of the program and purposes of the Communist Party rather than the objectives and policies set forth in the CIO constitution.

3. That, in pursuance of the powers granted to the executive board by section 10 of article VI of the constitution of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and pursuant to the findings of this board that the policies and activities of the United Office and Professional Workers of America are consistently directed toward the achievement of the program and the purposes of the Communist Party rather than the objectives and policies set forth in the constitution of the CIO, the certificate of affiliation with the CIO heretofore granted to the United Office and Professional Workers of America is, effective March 1, 1950, revoked, and the United Office and Professional Workers of America is, as of that date, expelled from the CIO.

Mr. MANDEL. Mr. Morris, I have here also the report of the executive board committee appointed by President Murray to investigate charges against the United Office and Professional Workers of America.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will you admit that into the record? It is a long document, and I do not particularly think it is necessary to have it copied in the record.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you wish to have it incorporated by reference?

Mr. MORRIS. I think that would be adequate.

Senator WATKINS. It may be filed and incorporated by reference, but it need not be copied into the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 283" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, is it your testimony that Frederick Field was the man responsible for initiating the negotiations of local 18 of the UOPWA, CIO?

Mr. DENNETT. That is what I was informed. I have no personal knowledge, but I believe the union contract was first written around 1938 or 1939, or perhaps slightly earlier than that, when Field was in charge of the American Council.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you find that that particular contract interfered with the orderly operation of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. Not in precisely those terms. I think I perhaps ought to clarify the situation by saying that prior to the incident to which you refer there had been no particular difficulties with the union in regard to the operation of the union contract. Normal negotiations took place semiannually with no particular difficulties involved.

My personal feeling is that the difficulties arose as the method which I had set up for operations slowly deprived the staff or tended to restrict the staff in their normal, or what had been previously their normal, decisions by referring it to the executive committee or funneling their recommendations to advisory committees, and that as the staff found itself somewhat restricted it began to rely on the union contract as a method for, shall we say, getting rid of me.

Mr. MORRIS. In the last analysis you felt that the issue was whether or not the staff was going to control the operations of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations or whether you as secretary were going to be able to operate and administer the functions?

Mr. DENNETT. Whether the executive committee was going to control or I through the executive committee. I think I previously testified it got to the point where I had to go to one of the members of the executive committee to dictate a memorandum to my own committee because my memorandum would go to the union before it got into the United States mails.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, could you tell us whether the staff workers of the Institute of Pacific Relations were in fact objective research workers?

Mr. DENNETT. I had grave doubts. My problem or my responsibility, as I understood it, was to assure the supporters or be responsible to the supporters of the Institute of Pacific Relations, whether they were foundations, big business, or members, that we were getting balanced objective reports on the Far East. Now that encouraged actually the presentation of different points of view, but the problem was whether or not in the totality of our production we did in fact present a balanced objective scholarly interpretation. It was my feeling that in regard to periodical material and pamphlet material that there was a tendency on the part of the staff to pick people as authors and to submit their manuscripts to other writers for critical comment who by and large tended to agree with the point of view of the staff prior to the selection of either the authors or the readers of the manuscript, and that this tended over the whole period to give less than a complete objective picture, or at least tended to give less than the complete range of critical comment on the Far East that existed at the time.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, were you in a position to know whether or not any of the staff workers were members of the Communist Party?

Mr. DENNETT. I certainly was not, nor did it ever occur to me at the time.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, Mr. Dennett, you feel you are not qualified to judge whether or not they were Communists?

Mr. DENNETT. I certainly am not, nor was I.

Senator WATKINS. May I ask this question? You state that you had a feeling that they were a little less than objective. Did anything specific happen that you could indicate to the committee now on which you based that conclusion? In other words, we would like to have some first-hand evidence of what occurred rather than just your opinion or your conclusion, so we may draw our own conclusions.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Did you yourself ever write anything, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes; I was thinking specifically of one or two instances of that sort. I wrote periodically for the Far Eastern Survey. I recall very specifically one article which I wrote. The normal procedure, I might say, when the articles were written was to circulate them in draft form to the various people involved in the research level for comment before they were put in final form for publication. I remember I wrote one article in regard to the Sino-Soviet treaties of 1945 in which I compared the 1945 treaties with the 1895 and 1898 treaties which the Czars had made with China, discovered there were some 14 or 15 identical articles, and drew among other conclusions this was a reentry by the Soviet Union into the Czarist control of Manchuria and was therefore merely an example of Soviet imperialism rather than Czarist imperialism, but it was in fact part and parcel of the same thing.

Senator WATKINS. Was this treaty of 1945 the treaty that was entered into as a result of the Yalta Agreement?

Mr. DENNETT. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you use the term "Soviet imperialism"?

Mr. DENNETT. I recall I did, and I recall it was the subject of very considerable criticism by some members of the staff who didn't think I should refer to Soviet imperialism.

Senator WATKINS. For what reason? Did they indicate why they did not want you to refer to it?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall the arguments, but the general feeling seemed to be that the connection I had made between the Czars and the Soviets was not precisely accurate because the Soviet Union was, after all, different from the Czarist regime.

Senator WATKINS. Did it in any way reflect on the Soviet Union or Communists?

Mr. DENNETT. I think what you are getting at is basically what I came to feel, Senator, and that is there was a preoccupation with explaining the Soviet Union on the theory——

Senator WATKINS. In other words, a sort of apology for them or at least explaining them in a more favorable light?

Mr. DENNETT. Explaining it on the ground, and I think the staff felt at that time, if we had to live with the Soviet Union during the postwar period we had to explain why the Soviet Unon acted this way. I thought there was a point at which we had to say after all you had to call imperialism imperialism as well as Czars.

Senator WATKINS. In other words, you were speaking rather frankly and bluntly?

Mr. DENNETT. I thought I was speaking accurately.

Senator WATKINS. That is probably a good expression for it.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, do you offer that episode as a typical reaction on the part of the staff and use it to describe the bias you said you attributed to the staff of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. I do not recall any other episode quite as strong as that.

Mr. MORRIS. But that is typical?

Mr. DENNETT. That was the kind of thing which I was running into periodically on various issues.

88348—51—pt. 4——2

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you found there was disposition on the part of the staff to favor the Soviet Union?

Senator WATKINS. Maybe he ought to finish what he started, Mr. Morris. I think he had an idea.

Mr. DENNETT. I was thinking of one other episode in regard to an article on China in which I suggested that some of the adjectives used were a little unnecessary. I don't recall the adjectives, whether they were futile or exactly what they were, but there were a number of rather heavy adjectives, and I thought the article would be just as good without the adjectives. This was describing the Nationalist regime.

Senator WATKINS. Critically?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes, and I had to fight kind of hard to get the adjectives and adverbs taken out.

Senator WATKINS. Indicating a bias against the Nationalist regime?

Mr. DENNETT. Certainly no favorable representation.

Mr. MORRIS. Further than that, was there a bias against the Nationalist government expressed on the part of the staff?

Mr. DENNETT. I think generally, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there a sympathetic and favorable view to the Chinese Communists uniformly expressed by the staff?

Mr. DENNETT. I would say probably. I think now when you are talking about staff we ought to be more explicit because I think the people who are involved in the writing and the upper administration echelons are the people I am talking about. Clerical help were exempt from this. Library help were exempt. The four or five people who were doing the writing and the selection of materials, and so on,——

Mr. MORRIS. Who were they, again?

Mr. DENNETT. Mrs. Stewart, Miss Farley, subsequently Lawrence Salisbury, who joined the staff later, although less in his instance; possibly Mrs. Jenkins, who also joined the staff later. Those are the ones primarily involved in the writing.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you found there was disposition on the part of the staff to favor the Soviet Union?

Mr. DENNETT. If you would use the word "favorable" to interpret the Soviet Union, I would say "Yes."

Mr. MORRIS. I will amend the question.

Senator WATKINS. That amounts to practically the same thing, does it not?

Mr. DENNETT. Sir, I don't like to be put in the position of accusing people when I don't know exactly what they were doing. Favorably interpret, yes.

Senator WATKINS. You saw the result of what they were doing?

Mr. DENNETT. Maybe a distinction without a difference, but it makes me happier to have the distinction.

Senator WATKINS. Of course you are the witness.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, are you acquainted with a publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations entitled "Our Job in the Pacific" by Henry A. Wallace?

Mr. DENNETT. I am.

Mr. MORRIS. This was put out under the auspices of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. That is correct.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Is that pamphlet familiar to you, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. It is indeed.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that pamphlet prepared while you were Secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. It was.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us the circumstances behind the preparation of that pamphlet, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. Early in 1945 I received word from the Washington office that Owen Lattimore believed that Mr. Wallace might be willing to write a pamphlet for a pamphlet series in regard to American post-war Pacific policy. The question was taken up and discussed in the executive committee. It was decided that we should go ahead with this.

Mrs. Eleanor Lattimore was given the job of doing the writing for it. She had, I gather, three or four, two or three, sessions with the Vice President during which she took notes on his ideas. The pamphlet was then prepared by her and the manuscript subsequently approved by Mr. Wallace.

Mr. MORRIS. Where was he when he finally approved it?

Mr. DENNETT. According to my recollection, and I am not sure on this because I was in San Francisco at the time, the manuscript was sent out to him while he was on his trip in China. I didn't handle that last stage of it.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, on the 13th of July, 1951, during the executive session with Owen Lattimore——

Senator WATKINS. You mean while he was before the committee?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. Mrs. Owen Lattimore accompanied Mr. Lattimore and we asked her at this time whether or not she would confirm the testimony of Mr. Dennett which had been taken prior to that time in executive session on this particular point.

Mr. Mandel, will you read from the executive session of Owen Lattimore on July 13, the testimony of Mrs. Owen Lattimore on this particular point?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Lattimore, would you tell us what contribution you made to the preparation of Mr. Wallace's pamphlet on the Far East, which I will introduce here in just a minute?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I think I can describe my contribution as donkey work. I helped with the actual writing, not with the assembling.

Mr. MORRIS. With the actual writing?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. That is what I want to determine for the record, the extent to which you contributed to the preparation of that pamphlet which was later issued under IPR auspices under the name of Henry Wallace.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I suppose I might have been termed the ghost.

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read the colloquy in the afternoon session, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

Mr. FORTAS——

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Fortas is the attorney for Mr. Lattimore who sat in at that session.

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

Mr. FORTAS. Before the recess some questions were asked of Mrs. Lattimore concerning her participation in the preparation of an IPR pamphlet for Mr.

Digitized by Google

Wallace. I wonder if it would be agreeable to you if she stated the facts there in somewhat more detail?

Senator EASTLAND. Surely.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Mr. Fortas thought the term "ghost" was not a very clearly defined term. Perhaps different people understood different things from the term "ghost."

I simply meant that the ideas were Mr. Wallace's, and I simply did the actual writing down. I went to see him and he told me what his ideas were, and I would make a draft and go back to him with the draft.

Mr. MORRIS. How was the draft sent to him?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I don't remember whether I mailed it or took it. I went to see him several times because he didn't have time to do the actual writing himself. He simply dictated a lot of stuff to me.

Mr. MORRIS. My impression was that the draft was being worked on while he was with Mr. Lattimore.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No. This was before my husband went on this trip.

Mr. MORRIS. Wasn't the final draft sent to him in China or Siberia?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Possibly for proof reading or for final O. K. or something. I don't remember.

Mr. MORRIS. It was that that I was asking about, when that was sent out and how.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I don't remember.

Mr. FORTAS. I wonder if Mrs. Lattimore could state just how she came to participate in this.

Senator EASTLAND. That is all right.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you show that to anyone else before you finished with it? Did you consult with anyone?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I am sure I did. The custom with IPR pamphlets was to have a lot of people read them and make suggestions.

Mr. MORRIS. I understand that.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. It originated because Mr. Wallace, who was the Vice President of the United States, had become interested in the Far East, and had some ideas about the Far East, and so the IPR thought it would be very interesting to have a pamphlet written by him. It was one of these very popular pamphlets for very wide distribution.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there anyone who had to approve it before you sent it out?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Mr. Wallace had to approve it and I suppose the editor at IPR.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was that?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I think it was Miss Miriam Farley. I am not absolutely sure about that.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as Mr. Mandel has read the entire excerpt that is pertinent from the executive testimony, there is no need for our introducing that in the record.

Senator WATKINS. It is in the record now as read.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, I wonder if you will read certain excerpts from this particular pamphlet into the record at this time.

Mr. MANDEL. I read from page 24 of the pamphlet entitled "Our Job in the Pacific" by Henry A. Wallace, as follows:

> Free Asia will include first of all China and Soviet Asia, which form a great area of freedom, potentially a "freedom bloc" which is to our interest to have become a freedom bloc in fact. * * *

Then from page 28:

> The Russians have demonstrated their friendly attitude toward China by their willingness to refrain from intervening in China's internal affairs. * * *

Then from page 30:

> Russia's relation to Pan Asia may come to resemble in many ways our own relation to Pan America, with the same choices between good neighborliness and imperialism. * * *

Then from page 30:

> Russian interest in the Far East is not likely to be that of territorial expansion. The Russians certainly want a friendly government in China and a friendly government in Korea just as we do. The term "friendly" does not imply a desire for socialist governments but for governments that will work with Russia and not against her. This is vital for Russia as a matter of security in protecting her far-eastern front. * * *

Digitized by Google

Then from page 37:

* * * Our example in the Philippines, however, together with Russia's enlightened treatment of Asiatic minorities and any steps which China may take toward cultural and linguistic as well as political minorities, can bring tremendous pressure to bear on the whole colonial problem. * * *

Senator WATKINS. May I just at this moment make a suggestion with respect to the excerpt from the transcript of the executive hearing that you had Mr. Mandel read. I wish to instruct the clerk and the reporter to check with his original notes to be sure that it is an exact copy of what was put in the evidence at the executive hearing, so there will be no question about it.

Mr. MORRIS. That will be done, Mr. Chairman.

It may be rather unfair, although I do not think so, to take certain excerpts from this book. Inasmuch as the pamphlet itself runs only 47 pages, I suggest that the whole pamphlet be put into the record, Mr. Chairman.

Senator WATKINS. You mean have it typed into the record or filed as an exhibit, being incorporated in the record?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right, Mr. Chairman.

Senator WATKINS. It will be filed as an exhibit and numbered in consecutive order, not necessarily copied into the record but incorporated by reference only.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 284" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, was there any controversy within the Institute of Pacific Relations on the publication of this pamphlet?

Mr. DENNETT. I recall there was some discussion, yes. When the matter was first brought up in the executive committee there were some members of the committee who felt that Mr. Wallace, who was then in the process of, I gathered from the press, trying to continue his position as Vice President in the forthcoming convention, was too controversial a figure for us to publish the pamphlet. There was another feeling on the part of others that since the Institute of Pacific Relations presented all points of view, Mr. Wallace's point of view was certainly one which was entitled to public hearing, and, therefore, we would not be under criticism if we published this pamphlet. There were others who felt very strongly that we ought to publish it in any event even though this were controversial. So we at least, I would say, had two discussions within the executive committee of this general subject.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it finally cleared?

Mr. DENNETT. It was finally agreed that Mr. Wallace was to write the pamphlet. So far as I recall, there was no reading of what he had written or what Mrs. Lattimore had written because we more or less felt that we were not in a position to edit the Vice President. Therefore we had to accept pretty much what he sent without editing.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Dennett, who was the principal advocate of the publication of this pamphlet in these controversies within the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. Frederick Field, I would say.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. He was the one pushing hardest for the publication of this pamphlet?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes; he was certainly in favor, although I think it is fair to say that the executive committee in the end decided we should publish it.

Senator WATKINS. What position did he occupy?

Mr. DENNETT. He was a member of the executive committee, at the time I was there, 1 of about 10 or 11 members.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the date of publication of this pamphlet?

Mr. DENNETT. Probably late May or June 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know at that time that Frederick Field had a byline in the Daily Worker at that time?

Mr. DENNETT. This was after the San Francisco Conference, so I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it generally known in the IPR office that Frederick Field had a byline in the Daily Worker?

Mr. DENNETT. Make your distinction between office and executive committee.

Mr. MORRIS. I mean them both.

Mr. DENNETT. I think it was certainly generally assumed by everyone that Frederick Field was, if not a Communist, at least a fellow traveler.

Mr. MORRIS. My question was more direct than that. I was wondering if it was generally known he had a byline at that time in the Daily Worker?

Mr. Chairman, we have introduced into the evidence that sometime during 1944 Frederick Field ran a regular weekly column with a byline in the Daily Worker.

Senator WATKINS. Using his own name?

Mr. MORRIS. Using his own name. I am asking Mr. Dennett if as a matter of fact he knew about it and he stated he did.

Mr. DENNETT. I did after the San Francisco Conference. I did not before that.

Mr. MORRIS. That is right. That is at the time of this publication?

Mr. DENNETT. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Now do you know whether or not the staff members or the officers of the Institute of Pacific Relations knew that Field had that byline in the Daily Worker?

Mr. DENNETT. I asume the staff did. I have no knowledge whether the executive committee did or not, because it was not mentioned.

Senator WATKINS. In the course of studies and investigations made by the institute, of course they would see the Daily Worker and it would be referred to and studied to get the point of view at least of the Soviet Government; would it not?

Mr. DENNETT. As far as I know, we did not get the Daily Worker in the IPR office.

Senator WATKINS. You did not have it there?

Mr. DENNETT. No; we didn't have it there. It never came in while I was there, that I know of.

Senator WATKINS That is interesting.

Mr. DENNETT. Frankly, Senator, it never occurred to me that is surprising, but actually, so far as I knew, we never got the Daily Worker in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator WATKINS. You do not know whether you subscribed to it?

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. I know we didn't subscribe to it. As far as I know, I didn't see a copy.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did not consider it to be part of your job to be familiar with it?

Mr. DENNETT. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Nobody ever told you that you should be familiar with it in that job?

Mr. DENNETT. I never saw it.

Senator WATKINS. May I call your attention, for the purpose of clearing the record and probably refreshing your recollection, to the third page of this pamphlet? I think you stated this pamphlet was published in 1945.

Mr. DENNETT. You are right; it is 1944. It was in the spring of 1944.

Senator WATKINS. That refreshes your recollection?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes; it was June of 1944. I thought it was after the San Francisco Conference but it was the year prior to that, which may have some reference as to what Mr. Morris asked when he said testimony had been introduced that Field had a by-line in the Daily Worker in the latter part of 1944. If that came out in the spring of 1944, we would not necessarily have known he had a by-line at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. We have introduced in the record in the past the fact that Frederick Field ran what appears to be a regular weekly column in the Daily Worker commencing April 25, 1944. It runs April 25, May 6, May 13, May 20, May 27, June 3, June 10, and June 17.

Senator WATKINS. Did it have his name in the column?

Mr. MORRIS. It had his by-line.

Mr. Dennett, were you secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations when the Amerasia case broke?

Mr. DENNETT. I certainly was.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you first learn about the arrest of the six Amerasia defendants?

Mr. DENNETT. When I got on the station in Bronxville that morning and saw it in the New York Times, upper left-hand headline.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you recognize any of the names in that story in the New York Times?

Mr. DENNETT. I did indeed.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were the people you recognized?

Mr. DENNETT. The people whose names I recognized, that I knew specifically at that time, were Andrew Roth—I think he was the only one I knew personally. I think I had met Kate Mitchell but I am not sure. The others I knew by reputation or by comment or by the fact that they were working in this field. Mr. Service we had put on in a meeting before the Washington group, before the IPR, very shortly after he came back from Chungking, I thing about a month or three weeks previous to the arrest. I had not met him there; I had not been at the meeting.

Senator WATKINS. Who is that to whom you referred?

Mr. DENNETT. Mr. Service.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe the atmosphere that prevailed in the Institute of Pacific Relations' Office in the subsequent days after that arrest, Mr. Dennett?

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. I would say there was some consternation in the office.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there in addition considerable conversation about the arrest?

Mr. DENNETT. There was conversation about practically nothing else for several days. When I came into the office, knowing that we had put on a meeting for Mr. Service, naturally I was concerned as to what had happened in Washington. I immediately called the Washington office and discovered that Miss Yardumian and her secretary had been questioned by the Federal Bureau of Investigation that morning.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did Miss Yardumian hold at that time?

Mr. DENNETT. She was in general administrative charge of our Washington office. So I hopped the first train I could to Washington to find out what was going on and talked with Miss Yardumian and her secretary when I arrived.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was her secretary, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. A Mrs. Ussachevsky?

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Betty Ussachevsky?

Mr. DENNETT. That is right.

I got from them the facts that they had been interviewed by the FBI that morning. I learned further that Miss Yardumian was quite concerned because several days or a few days prior to this general round-up she had put on a party in her apartment for Mr. Roth, who was about to leave for Hawaii, and that five of the six people had been present at this party, and she was therefore somewhat concerned about her involvement in this particular episode.

Mr. MORRIS. You say that you knew Mr. Roth?

Mr. DENNETT. I had met him, yes; several times.

Mr. MORRIS. At the institute in connection with your duties as secretary?

Mr. DENNETT. He had at one time, I think, worked for the International Secretariat and I saw him both at the Institute of Pacific Relations and I saw him occasionally when I was in Washington. I saw him I think once or twice with Phil Jaffe, but I am not sure.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, you described the atmosphere in the Institute of Pacific Relations as one of consternation. Could you tell us with particularity who some of the individuals were who seemed to be particularly upset by the arrest?

Mr. DENNETT. I think, by and large, most of the research people were upset. I know I was certainly upset because I was wondering whether the Institute of Pacific Relations was going to get involved in this. But I would say that all of the major, the senior staff people, were very much concerned about it.

In the International Secretariat one or two of their staff had also been interviewed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation because they were in one way or another close friends of one another, of the people who had been arrested.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Hilda Austern involved in any way in that case, do you know?

Mr. Dennett. She told me that she had been interviewed by the FBI and that she had been spending some time with Mr. Jaffe and Miss Mitchell in the 2 or 3 weeks prior to the arrest.

Digitized by Google

She was not on my staff, you understand. None of my staff except Miss Yardumian was involved.

Mr. MORRIS. What was Austern's position?

Mr. DENNETT. She was working for Mr. Carter in the International Secretariat. There was a sharp distinction while I was——

Mr. MORRIS. I think it would be appropriate at this time if we had Mr. Dennett, executive secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, describe the structure of the Institute of Pacific Relations with relation to the international organization itself.

Senator WATKINS. You may do so.

Mr. DENNETT. The International Secretariat, the so-called Pacific Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, was run by a separate committee composed of representatives of the 10 or 11 or 12 national councils. The administrative head was Edward C. Carter who had on his staff a director of research, who during the time I was there was either William L. Holland or Horace Belshaw, a New Zealander, and a certain number of people doing research on the payroll of the International Secretariat. These included while I was there T. A. Bissen and Andrew Grajdanzev, and may have included others. I think there may have been a Chinese there while I was there. I don't recall. Miss Austern was his administrative assistant who took care of administration, arranging for conferences and that sort of thing. She was sort of a contact person.

The American Council was separately directed entirely by its own board of directors, its own executive committee, of which Mr. Carter at that time was not a member, and therefore our program was entirely separate from the International Secretariat's program.

By and large, the Secretariat had charge of the publication of research studies and the preparation of conferences. Our fields covered the publication of periodical material with the exception of Pacific Affairs, which was an international publication, and the preparation of pamphlet material for adult use, the kind of thing Mr. Wallace's pamphlet is, and the preparation of simplified pamphlet textbooks which were to be used in the school system and were published by the Webster Publishing Co., I guess it was, and an agreement which we had with them.

Senator WATKINS. You mean to say that your council published pamphlets for use in the schools of the country?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes, sir, we did.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe for us the nature of that operation, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. The general pamphlet program, school textbook program, was under the direction of Miss Marguerite Stewart.

Mr. MORRIS. She is the wife of Maxwell S. Stewart?

Mr. DENNETT. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have had testimony previously to the effect that Mr. Maxwell S. Stewart was a member of the Communist Party.

Senator WATKINS. What about his wife?

Mr. MORRIS. We have had no testimony to that effect.

Mr. DENNETT. This arrangement had been made some time prior to my arrival and a contract had been made with, I guess, Webster. I think that is the publishing house—I wouldn't want to be sure without verifying it—for the preparation of either 8 or 10 pamphlet texts for use in high-school social science courses on various aspects of the Far East.

Digitized by Google

There was, I recall, a pamphlet on India, there was a pamphlet on the Soviet Far East. I don't recall the titles of the other pamphlets.

These were usually 128-page pamphlets designed for use in, I think, sophomore or junior years in high school. Mrs. Stewart located the authors, read the manuscripts. It was circulated to the committee for checking, and then was issued commercially by the Webster Publishing Co. in conjunction with the Institute of Pacific Relations, with the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator WATKINS. How many of those pamphlets would you say were prepared for use in public schools?

Mr. DENNETT. We completed our contract and I think it was either 8 or 10.

Senator WATKINS. In what year was that?

Mr. DENNETT. I think they probably started around 1942 or 1943. I think the last pamphlet was completed during the time I was there. I don't think I saw more than one or two of the pamphlets. The operation had all been set up before I arrived.

Senator WATKINS. Did you have any responsibility for passing on the subject matter or content of any of these pamphlets?

Mr. DENNETT. I did not, no, because they were either—I think the last pamphlet or next to the last pamphlet was in the process of being issued at the time I was there.

Senator WATKINS. You say a committee was set up to pass on that?

Mr. DENNETT. I assume there was. I have no knowledge.

Senator WATKINS. Were there any pamphlets published after your arrival under your direction?

Mr. DENNETT. Not that I recall. There may have been the final one but I have very little recollection of this because Mrs. Stewart was pretty much running her own show at that time. I don't think that these pamphlets went through the research advisory committee which I set up; that is what I am trying to establish.

Senator WATKINS. Mr. Morris, do you have any of those pamphlets or do you have them all?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; we have introduced some of them in the record.

Do you know, as a matter of fact, the Land of the Soviets was so distributed among the schools, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't. I don't know whether that was a pamphlet or the pamphlet was a cut-down version of that book. If I could see the pamphlet, I could tell you, but I don't recall. I haven't seen them in years.

Mr. MORRIS. The one I have in mind is going to come up later in the testimony and it might be appropriate to have it now.

Senator WATKINS. While we are on the subject it might be interesting to tie in what the witness has been testifying to.

Mr. MORRIS. While they are looking for that, Mr. Chairman, may I go on to the next aspect of that?

Senator WATKINS. Yes. You will come back to that?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Do you know whether the Army or Navy bought any of the IPR pamphlets while you were secretary of the American Council?

Mr. DENNETT. A great many of them.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Will you estimate the number, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. During the period that I was there or in the immediately preceding period the Educational and Information Branch of the Army and the equivalent in the Navy purchased somewhere in the vicinity of several hundred thousand total of pamphlets issued by the American Council for use in orientation programs on the Far East. Most of these pamphlets were, I believe, an IPR series similar to the Wallace pamphlet.

Senator WATKINS. Was the Wallace pamphlet one of them?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't think they bought that, but I don't recall. This was called the IPR series. This was called a different series.

Mr. SOURWINE. By "that" you mean the series including the publication Land of the Soviets and by "this" you mean the publication of Land of the Soviets which you now hold in your hand?

Mr. DENNETT. Right. It is primarily the series called IPR pamphlets which were bought by the Army and the Navy. A few of the numbers of this series were bought by the Army and Navy, that is, the ones entitled "A Cooperative Project Between the American Council, IPR, and Webster Publishing Co."

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony that this particular pamphlet was sent to the schools?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes; I think this is perhaps less typical, that is, I hope it is less typical, than some of the pamphlets, than some of the other pamphlets.

Senator WATKINS. Why do you say that?

Mr. DENNETT. This happens to be a pamphlet which I think is a very good example of what I referred to as the lack of objectivity in the American Council staff.

Mr. SOURWINE. Let us be a little more frank about that. What kind of nonobjectivity is this pamphlet an example of?

Mr. DENNETT. I have an impression that Mr. Morris is going to read excerpts from it.

Mr. SOURWINE. We are interested at the moment in your opinion about that. You volunteered an opinion about the pamphlets.

Mr. DENNETT. I only read the pamphlet once and it was some years ago, and I have not read it since. It was certainly my impression that there was a disposition to give the most favorable light possible on the Soviet Union in that pamphlet.

Mr. SOURWINE. That single reading, as a matter of fact, was enough to impress you so that you still remember the impression that this pamphlet distorted the facts for the benefit of the Soviet Union, did it not?

Mr. DENNETT. You are putting words into my mouth which I don't think I put in there. You said "distorted the facts." I am not an expert on the Soviet Far East, on Land of the Soviet, therefore I don't know whether the facts are distorted. I would say such facts as I do know have been interpreted most favorably in that, more favorably than I would have done so.

Mr. SOURWINE. I was simply trying to get the state of your impression at the time you got it, as you now remember it, which is a difficult thing to do.

Mr. DENNETT. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. But it was obviously a strong impression because it has stayed with you all this time from that single reading.

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. That is quite correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was that single reading?

Mr. DENNETT. I wouldn't recall.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it shortly after the pamphlet was issued?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't know when the pamphlet was issued. If I may check the series on that?

Mr. SOURWINE. If you do not recall when you did read it, then looking at the date will not help you answer that last question, will it?

Mr. DENNETT. It must have been some time while I was at the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. SOURWINE. I was trying to relate the time you read it with the publication of the pamphlet. I thought those two matters might stick in your mind.

Mr. DENNETT. This was published in 1942. This was one of the early ones in the series.

Mr. SOURWINE. It was published before you came to the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Probably if we read some excerpts it might refresh the recollection of the witness in connection with Mr. Sourwine's question as to whether or not it conforms with the actualities that existed in the Soviet Union.

Senator WATKINS. At least as to why he formed the opinion and impression he did.

Mr. MANDEL. I read certain excerpts from the pamphlet Land of the Soviets, by Marguerite Ann Stewart.

Senator WATKINS. Has this been put into the record?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Who wrote this pamphlet?

Mr. MANDEL. This was written by Marguerite Ann Stewart and edited by Maxwell S. Stewart.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did Marguerite Ann Stewart, the author of this pamphlet, bear to the whole pamphlet series?

Mr. DENNETT. She was in charge of the educational program of the American Council. She had been hired some time prior to my arrival to work with the schools in the school program of the American Council.

Mr. MORRIS. It is important, Mr. Chairman, to know whether or not this is a typical publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Will you read some sections, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

Because these Soviets were the organ which represented the people most widely at that time, they grew rapidly in influence and respect during the troubled months of 1917 until, on November 7, they became the government.

That is on page 3. Then another excerpt:

As we know, under the capitalist system, property of all kinds may be owned by private individuals or commercial organizations, and all business is conducted primarily for the profit of the owner. * * * But, under a Socialist system, the factories and other types of business are socially owned, that is, they belong to the population as a whole and are operated by the government, not for the profit of any one person or group of individuals, but for the benefit of all the people. * * * And all industry—every single factory, office, bank, grocery, and department store, every theater, movie, bakery, and newspaper—is the property of the people as a whole and is operated by their government or by their organizations.

Digitized by Google

That is from page 6.

But when the Soviets assumed power this was changed. One of their first acts was to proclaim the equality of all people in the country and the right of each to full and free cultural development. No nationality was to dominate another. Each had a right to its own language, culture, and institutions, subraces no longer. The minorities were invited as equals in a free union of free peoples.

This is from page 14.

The Soviet Constitution grants equal rights for citizens of the U. S. S. R. regardless of their nationality or race and warns that any limitation of these rights or privileges for citizens on account of their race or nationality as well as any propaganda of racial or national exclusiveness or hatred or contempt shall be punishable by law.

That is from page 15. Another excerpt:

Ivan Petrovich Petrov might be considered a rather typical Russian city worker. Blonde, rosy-cheeked, and of medium height, he has a keen sense of humor; loves to dance, sing, and talk until late at night and to enjoy himself with his friends; admires things on a big scale and adores mechanical devices and machinery.

That is page 17.

Senator WATKINS. What was the purpose of this, to ascertain what was written before and after?

Mr. MANDEL. That was an idealization of the status of the Soviet worker.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the previous paragraph to that?

Mr. MANDEL. It is a symbol of the worker, not any particular worker.

Then again, on page 15, describing the lot of the typical Soviet worker:

Ivan, a very responsible worker, was a member of the factory committee elected by the workers to advise the director of the plant. Each day he and Anna took Sascha at that time to an attractive nursery school maintained by the factory for the children of its employees.

That is page 17. Then on page 21:

Curious as it may seem to us, the person at the top of the social scale is the worker.

Then on page 26:

But while the Russians are quick to condemn those who display ambition for personal power, they have no place too high for the person who devotes himself conscientiously to the common good. * * * An additional motive peculiar to the Russian system is the pride of ownership of the Soviet workers. They have a voice in running the factories.

There are other excerpts which I could read if they are wanted, Mr. Chairman.

Senator WATKINS. Let us hear a few more of them.

Mr. MANDEL. Now on page 27:

Why did the Russians resort to revolution in 1917? Was such a complete overthrow necessary? And, why, after the revolution, did they set up a system so different from that of other governments? Why were they not satisfied with a republic, for example, like that of the United States?

Then on page 37:

On November 7 (October 25 by the old Russian calendar), the Red Guards were sent by the Soviets to surround the winter palace and all the government buildings in the name of the Socialist Revolution. All the provisional ministers were arrested except Kerensky, who managed to escape. * * * Thus, at one stroke, the peasants attained the right to more than 500 million additional acres which had heretofore belonged to the Crown, the nobility, and the church. Industry, likewise, was taken over as the property of the people.

Digitized by Google

That is page 37.

Mr. Chairman, I might add at this point we have in the files an analysis of this pamphlet made by the Russian experts of the Library of Congress. If you so desire, that analysis can be made part of the record.

Senator WATKINS. Since this is a pamphlet distributed in the public schools of the United States, I think it would be well to have that analysis in the record. At least, have it filed as an exhibit where it would be available, or incorporated by reference if it is too long to be printed in its entirety.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 285," and filed for the record.)

Mr. MANDEL. There was a revolt against the collective system in Russia at the time of collectivization. Mrs. Stewart's comment is as follows:

The Soviet answer to those who thus broke the peace was swift and severe. It regarded such acts as violations against socialist property and punished them accordingly. The culprits were forcibly removed from their villages. In some cases they were imprisoned, but more frequently their property was confiscated and they were sent to another part of the country to begin life again; in a few instances they were shot. * * *

In other words, justifying violence against peasants who refused to give up their property to the Government.

Here is an idealization of Communists on page 66:

Communists are expected to be an example to others.

Senator WATKINS. Did it specify what kind of an example?

Mr. MANDEL. No; but the previous sentence reads:

Conditions for membership are strict for it is generally regarded as a mark of responsible leadership and a high honor. Communists are expected to be an example to others. Applicants have to demonstrate unselfish loyalty to the Soviet state and to the principles of the party. They are required to give up a great deal of time for the party work and pay heavy dues.

And so, on it goes. It is part of a long session praising the work of the Communist Party and the Soviet Union.

The Soviets, as a system, are also idealized. On page 68 it reads:

Each of these has its own village soviet, chosen at a village meeting not unlike our New England town meeting. * * * City soviets are also elected directly by the people.

Senator FERGUSON. Who is writing that?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a pamphlet entitled "Land of the Soviets," written by Marguerite Stewart and edited by Maxwell S. Stewart and published by the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations and the Webster Publishing Co.

Senator WATKINS. Is this one of those pamphlets that 500,000 copies were ordered for the Navy and the Armed Forces?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall whether that was one of those ordered or not. There were a total of some 700,000 of the whole pamphlet series. There may have been 10,000 of one and 25,000 of another. Whether this was included in the orders or not, I don't know.

Digitized by Google

Senator WATKINS. How can we find out?

Mr. DENNETT. It must be in the file somewhere as to what they sold to whom.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether this one was sold to the armed services so they would read it?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think that is a fact?

Mr. DENNETT. Before you came in, Senator, I said this was one of the things which bothered me with regard to the staff of the Institute of Pacific Relations which I think answers your question rather effectively.

Senator FERGUSON. It seems so absurd to have pamphlets put out, let us say, by American taxpayers—not taxpayers but American people who support the Institute of Pacific Relations. That is where it is really supported, by the American people?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. By their donations and membership fees?

Mr. DENNETT. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. As Professor Colegrove said yesterday, he belonged because he wanted to get the pamphlet. Does that mean that the institute would even publish untruths to get both sides? You do not get both sides by publishing an untruth, do you?

Mr. DENNETT. That is quite correct. You don't.

Senator WATKINS. May I suggest this pamphlet was one of the series that was used and sent out to the public schools in the United States.

Senator FERGUSON. Was that one sent out?

Senator WATKINS. I think so.

Mr. DENNETT. It was one of a series of eight that were prepared by Mrs. Stewart for use in schools.

Senator WATKINS. It was not actually published by the Institute of Pacific Relations, but through contract with a publishing house.

Senator FERGUSON. It is sponsorship. In other words, it has the name on it.

Mr. MORRIS. The Institute of Pacific Relations was largely responsible for the initiation and the carrying through of that pamphlet, was it not?

Mr. DENNETT. So far as I know. The whole arrangement was made before I arrived. I think all but one of the pamphlets were prepared prior to my arrival in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. But, Mr. Secretary, here we have the name, Institute of Pacific Relations, which is really a sponsorship, as Professor Colegrove said yesterday. At one time it was considered it was a sponsorship of facts and trying to get to the American people the facts so that they might become familiar with the various problems in the Pacific, and that was the reason why he, as a college professor in political science, and many others who were teaching students, were relying upon this. Yesterday, he indicated that after seeing the so-called letter by Mr. Lattimore to the secretariat, he came to the conclusion that this was, as he appraised it, a fraud upon the public because it was taking a Communist Party line.

Now, we find here the institute sponsoring what seems again is the Communist Party line even down to the school children of America.

Digitized by Google

Wasn't there some censorship to find that untruths were going out and that they were following the party line?

Mr. DENNETT. Senator, as I explained before you came in, Mrs. Stewart presumably had those pamphlets read. By whom I don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I am wondering. Who read them?

Mr. DENNETT. As I explained, when I came in, I set up a research advisory committee and a publications committee, the function of which was to screen precisely such manuscripts as that.

Senator FERGUSON. We were misled once before. That is, the American public was misled. They were told that the satellites were going to have free elections. Now, free elections in Russia's language are not elections at all, which the satellites discovered, but the American public at the time were told a high sounding name of "free elections."

Here we get the same thing in this book. That is why it struck me so forcibly that we are again repeating to the school children about Russia's free elections. Anyone who knows anything about the Russian elections knows there are no elections at all in the sense that the American public knows them. Yet, we are telling our school children, "Here is how the people over in Russia elect their officials."

Senator WATKINS. Would the Senator say it is in line with the Mission to Moscow and such other writings?

Senator FERGUSON. The whole process of deceiving the American public, perpetrating the worst kind of a fraud upon the American public, is to represent that they have free elections over there and we were duped once and the satellites were really taken away from us by virtue of the fraud that was perpetrated in the offering of free elections.

Now we are continuing to do it with publications that are around. I think something ought to be done to gather up these books so the school children do not read books such as this to get the idea they have free elections under communism.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, is it your testimony that all eight of the series were prepared by Marguerite Stewart?

Mr. DENNETT. That is my understanding of it; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Do I understand, out of this series, the Army and the Navy bought something?

Mr. MORRIS. We are coming to that, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. I wish you would find out who in the Army and the Navy was responsible for the purchase of these books and who in the Army and the Navy read them, if anybody did read them, before they were purchased for the Armed Forces.

Mr. MORRIS. We are coming to that as the next item.

While we are on the schools, I have one letter we had planned to introduce later. I think it may be appropriate to read it into the record now.

Mr. Dennett, I show you this memorandum which Mr. Mandel will certify came from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and ask you if you can recall that particular memorandum?

Mr. DENNETT. I can't recall it. It is to me from Edward C. Carter. I have no doubt I received it. Mr. Carter would send anywhere from one to a dozen memoranda a day on various subjects.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you certify that was taken from the files of the institute, and then read the contents into the record, please?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a memorandum headed: "RD" which presumably stands for Raymond Dennett from "ECC" presumably E. C. Carter, dated July 2, 1945, from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

As you doubtless know, Martha Gerbode came to Washington last week in the hope of going abroad for the San Francisco Examiner, but because her husband is overseas, the War Department gave an emphatic no. She plans to be in New York a few days this week before returning to San Francisco. She hopes we have had a good vacation. It occurs to me it might be well if she got a thorough exposure to Mrs. Stewart and her program as Martha could really do a lot in the secondary school field, I am sure, if she got the feel of Peggy's program in vision.

Mr. MORRIS. "Peggy" in this case being Marguerite Stewart?

Mr. DENNETT. Right.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like that introduced in the record.

Senator WATKINS. It may be made a part of the record.

(Document referred to and read in full by Mr. Mandel was marked "Exhibit No. 286" and filed for the record.)

Senator FERGUSON. Who is Martha Gerbode?

Mr. DENNETT. She was a member of the board of directors of the San Francisco Bay region in San Francisco.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean the board of directors of the institute?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes. The bay region had its own group of directors, and she was a member of that. I think she may have also been a member of the national board of directors.

Mr. SOURWINE. She was a newspaperwoman?

Mr. DENNETT. No.

Senator FERGUSON. What do you take to be "Peggy's program in vision," that they were trying to expose Martha Gerbode to?

Mr. DENNETT. I presume Mr. Carter had in mind Mrs. Stewart's school program and his evaluation of her position he considered as her vision.

Senator WATKINS. That would be a program that would get out books like we have had excerpts from read to us this morning?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes. It is beyond my capacity, Senator, to read into what Mr. Carter said what he may have had in mind behind it.

Senator FERGUSON. While we are talking about a program and a vision, we are talking about a vision which would indicate high ideals. Then we get a program that is set forth in these books which, if I can read it properly, is the Communist line to try to indoctrinate into the American people through the school system the Communist line. We get that being called in this organization, the Institute of Pacific Relations, a vision.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Carter was the secretary-general of the Institute of Pacific Relations at that time?

Mr. DENNETT. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. How could Martha Gerbode help them? Was she a writer in magazines or newspapers?

Mr. DENNETT. No; she was not.

Senator FERGUSON. What was she? She was going abroad for the San Francisco Examiner.

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. As far as I know, she never had any connection with newspapers but you would have to ask her that.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I do not understand.

Senator WATKINS. She did not go.

Senator FERGUSON. But she wanted to go.

Mr. MORRIS. Did she have something to do with the secondary school system?

Mr. DENNETT. Not so far as I know.

Mr. MORRIS. There is a reference to that.

Mr. DENNETT. As far as I know, she was the wife of a distinguished surgeon in San Francisco who had been active in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator FERGUSON. There is another word in here that rather intrigues me. It is the word "exposure." When you expose a person to a Communist line, is that not in keeping? You would not call exposing a person to American philosophy, would you?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't quite know what you are trying to get at in your questions.

Senator FERGUSON. I am trying to find out what that word "exposure" might mean here.

Mr. DENNETT. I think that is a question which you could better ask Mr. Carter than I. I had a great many dealings with Mr. Carter, and I still don't know many of the things he meant in the memoranda he sent to me, nor would I try to guess.

Senator FERGUSON. If you were dealing with an American program, it would be an open, frank discussion of the problems, would it not? You would not go around behind the words like "exposure" and try and conceal what you were trying to do and yet have it actually accomplished; is that correct?

Mr. DENNETT. That is probably correct. I would like to make it very clear I do not know by my own knowledge, as I testified earlier, about whether any of these people—Mr. Carter or Mrs. Stewart or any of the rest of them were or were not Communists or Communist sympathizers. Under those circumstances, I do not wish to impute motives when I do not know they exist, because I think that is, by and large, not a particularly wise thing to do.

Senator FERGUSON. Let me put a question to you. If you knew all that you know now, would you have taken the appointment with the institute?

Mr. DENNETT. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Why not?

Mr. DENNETT. For precisely the reasons which I have been giving, Senator, that I do not think it was an objective research organization.

Senator FERGUSON. You feel there was such a thing as trying to put over something that was not definitely and clearly stated; is that correct?

Mr. DENNETT. I won't go that far with you. It may have been; it may not have been. I think that certainly, so far as the staff is concerned, many of them, as I stated in my opinion, were not objective. Some of them may have been Communists. I don't know. I don't know now with the benefit of hindsight, but there were, if you may recall, a great many people in 1944 and 1945 who were not exclusively on the staff of the Institute of Pacific Relations who felt that the benefit of postwar or the future of American security depended upon cooperation with the five major allies.

Digitized by Google

These people may have been sincere; they may have been Communists. In the absence of knowledge they were Communists, I do not wish to accuse them by inference or any other method.

They may have been guilty merely of bad judgment. Bad judgment carries its own penalties. I don't want to be in a position of labeling them by my guess as guilty of the greatest possible bad judgment, which is membership in the Communist Party. I am perfectly prepared to testify as to the factual material which I know. I do not know the facts behind Mr. Carter's mind when he wrote that memorandum.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Dennett, you were in this organization, and there were other people, other people that had no idea when they went in what was going on. I think the so-called cagey letter is an example of the fundamentals underlying what was going on in the institute. As the professor indicated yesterday, he stayed in a long time until he came to the conclusion of what it was. I am satisfied that people who now see that letter—have you read it?

Mr. DENNETT. No.

Senator WATKINS. Please identify the letter.

Senator FERGUSON. It is a letter dated the 10th of July 1938.

Senator WATKINS. Who signed it?

Senator FERGUSON. It was signed by Owen Lattimore.

Senator WATKINS. To whom was it addressed?

Senator FERGUSON. It is addressed to E. C. Carter, and it is on the letterhead of the Pacific Affairs, published quarterly by the Institute of Pacific Relations, and, as I said, dated July 10, 1938.

Mr. DENNETT. It is a very revealing paragraph, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. I think this is true and I will ask Mr. Mandel so it will appear on the record as to whether or not there is anything in the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations where Mr. Carter replied to this and indicated that he was shocked in any way by any such proposition, or indicating that he would, under no circumstances, carry on such a deceptive and fraudulent program?

Mr. MANDEL. I have no knowledge of any such reply.

Senator WATKINS. I may say, in fairness to Mr. Carter, that I think he said he did not agree with that when he was on the stand.

Senator FERGUSON. I just wanted that in the record.

Senator WATKINS. He did not follow out the suggestion.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Carter did not have the role of carrying things out, did he? Pacific Affairs had something to do with what was obtained?

Mr. DENNETT. The publication of the international secretariat, Pacific Affairs.

Senator FERGUSON. We find here at a later date this program that they wanted this lady to be exposed to, in effect, carrying out the program that is set forth in the Lattimore letter of 1938, wouldn't you say so?

Mr. DENNETT. It certainly could be interpreted that way; yes. I assure you, Senator, I am not in a position to interpret Mr. Carter or what he did. I think my position is very clear. I was responsible for objective research. I did not feel there was objectivity, and I resigned and got out.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. Then there was a lack of objectivity?

Mr. DENNETT. That is precisely what I have been testifying to.

Senator FERGUSON. Along what line? Did you find they were following the line that would lead to Moscow?

Mr. DENNETT. I didn't think of it in those terms. They may have.

Senator FERGUSON. Where did it lead, as far as you were concerned?

Mr. DENNETT. It led to the position where I was in charge of a program of objective analysis for the Far East and for which I was responsible, but in which I could not carry out any responsibilities.

Senator FERGUSON. In what way did it vary from being objective?

Mr. DENNETT. As I testified earlier, I felt that it was leading to somewhat too great an emphasis, in my opinion, on explaining the position of the Soviet Union; that is, the tendency always was to explain what the Soviet Union was doing or had done, or why it was doing things, rather than to make judgments upon those actions in the light of what was considered to be, or what I would consider to be, the best interests of our analysis of the Far East.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you think this lack of objectivity, looking back, this lack on the part of the staff, aided the Communist movement?

Mr. DENNETT. It could very well have.

Mr. MORRIS. Did it, looking back, in your opinion?

Mr. DENNETT. It may very well have. I don't know enough about the Communist movement to judge, but I would say it probably did.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, since we are on the subject of schools, I think two excerpts from Institute of Pacific Relations' publications should be put into the record.

Mr. Mandel, will you read these and identify them?

Mr. MANDEL. This is an excerpt from Security in the Pacific, a preliminary report of the Ninth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations held at Hot Springs, Va., January 6 to 17, 1945, as follows:

Since 1941 the IPR has published 72 volumes concerning social, political, and economic problems of the Pacific area. More than a million IPR texts and popular pamphlets have been used by schools, colleges, and by the United Nations' armies and navies in the training of armed forces going into the Pacific region.

Mr. MORRIS. From what is that?

Mr. MANDEL. This is taken from Security in the Pacific, a preliminary report of the Ninth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. That is an official IPR publication?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

This is an excerpt from IPR in Wartime, a report of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, 1941–43, page 24. The excerpt reads as follows:

In the winter of 1942–43, a new series of "unit texts" for high-school use were prepared under the council's auspices, and published by one of the leading school publishers, the Webster Publishing Co. of St. Louis. Thus far the IPR Webster series includes the following titles:, Changing China; Land of the Soviets; Lands Down Under; People of the China Seas; Modern Japan; India (in preparation), and America's Stake in the Pacific (in preparation).

These small books have met with an unprecedented response. Attractively designed and retailing at 40 cents they represent virtually the first authoritatively written materials on Asia to receive wide distribution through American schools. The first edition was exhausted in 6 weeks; the second was running out in the succeeding 3 months. One school superintendent in a midwestern city, for example, was so enthusiastic that he directed that a month be spent on the series in each of the four high-school classes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Is that from an official IPR publication?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. These excerpts may be received in evidence and marked with the next consecutive exhibit numbers.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 287 and 288," and filed for the record.)

EXHIBIT No. 287

Since 1941 the IPR has published 72 volumes concerning social, political, and economic problems of the Pacific area. More than a million IPR texts and popular pamphlets have been used by schools, colleges, and by the United Nations Armies and Navies, in the training of armed forces going into the Pacific region.

(Source: From book wrapper of Security in the Pacific, a preliminary report of the Ninth Conference of the IPR, Hot Springs, Va., January 6–17, 1945.)

EXHIBIT No. 288

In the winter of 1942–43 a new series of "unit tests" for high-school use were prepared under the council's auspices, and published by one of the leading school publishers, the Webster Publishing Co., of St. Louis. Thus far the IPR Webster series includes the following titles: Changing China; Land of the Soviets; Lands Down Under; People of the China Seas; Modern Japan; India (in preparation); and America's Stake in the Pacific (in preparation).

These small books have met with an unprecedented response. Attractively designed and retailing at 40 cents, they represent virtually the first authoritatively written materials on Asia to receive wide distribution through American schools. The first edition was exhausted in 6 weeks; the second was running out in the succeeding 3 months. One school superintendent in a midwestern city, for example, was so enthusiastic that he directed that a month be spent on the series in each of the four high-school classes.

(IPR in Wartime, report of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc., 1941–43 (p. 24).)

Mr. MORRIS. Before getting off the schools, Mr. Chairman, I asked for an analysis made by the Library of Congress which we have already asked to be made a part of the record.

Mr. Mandel, have you obtained that analysis?

Mr. MANDEL. I have here an analysis coming from the Library of Congress:

U. S. S. R.: Some apparent contradictions from one congressional document to statements made in the book Land of the Soviets.

This was prepared by John L. Houk, Foreign Affairs Section, reviewed by Sergius Yakobson, senior specialist, International Relations, May 22, 1951, for the Library of Congress. I just read one excerpt by way of example.

From the Land of the Soviets, on page 70, it says:

The 1936 Constitution of the U. S. S. R. also introduced into the Soviet Union many elements of democracy as we know them in this country. * * *

The Library specialist finds the following as taken from Communism in Action, a Government publication, and this is on page 133, as follows:

* * * It must be kept in mind, however, that Soviet constitutional guarantee, unlike those in the Constitution of the United States, are not legally binding on the legislative and executive authorities of the Union. They are, generally speaking, statements of aims or goals, or, in some instances, descriptions of policies in effect at the time the constitution was adopted. They may be repealed or amended at any time by ordinary laws or regulations.

This is an excerpt from the analysis.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, that is in the record as exhibit No. 285.

Will you read the two letters on the Institute of Pacific Relations' letterhead?

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a memorandum giving the minutes or the proceedings of a meeting of the executive committee of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated October 11, 1945, and it is signed by Philip C. Jessup, acting secretary. I read an excerpt from these minutes:

The treasurer submitted a financial report, including a statement by the executive secretary. He reported that it would be possible to go through November without drawing the additional $3,000 from the publications fund under the previous authorization; $5,000 of the $8,000 authorized for transfer have already been transferred. The sum of $19,000 due from Army-Navy purchases of pamphlets represents a profit balance which will enable the council probably to complete the year with a slight credit balance.

Senator WATKINS. Is that in evidence?

Mr. MANDEL. It has not been placed in evidence yet.

I have another letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated July 20, 1945, addressed to "Dear Board Member" and signed "Raymond Dennett, secretary." I read an excerpt from that:

I am sure you will be interested to know that membership in the American Council has increased to a total of 1,800 as compared with 1,100, 18 months ago. Under the editorship of Laurence E. Salisbury, the Far Eastern Survey has increased from printings of approximately 2,500 to printings of approximately 3,800. In addition, the armed services have recently purchased nearly 700,000 copies of our pamphlet material for their educational work with soldiers being transferred from the European to the Pacific theater.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, do you recall these two letters?

Mr. DENNETT. This one I have no knowledge of, the first one, of October 11. It apparently was an executive committee meeting when I was not present.

This one I have no doubt that I wrote. I can testify to the fact that approximately 700,000 of these pamphlets were purchased by the Army and the Navy, but I do not know what titles or what numbers of what titles.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you certify to these two letters and that they came from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. They may be received and marked with the next consecutive exhibit numbers.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 289 and 290," and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 289

MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, AMERICAN COUNCIL, INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

MIDSTON HOUSE,
New York City, October 11, 1945.

The meeting was called to order by Dean Robert D. Calkins, former chairman, who had been asked to take the chair for this occasion.

The following members of the committee were present: Mr. Eugene E. Barnett, Mr. Frederick V. Field, Mr. Huntington Gilchrist, Mr. G. Ellsworth Huggins, Dr. James L. McConaughy, Mr. Lawrence Morris, Mrs. Ada Comstock Notestein. In addition, the following persons who had been invited to attend were present and took part in the discussion without voting: Prof. Joseph Chamberlain, Dr. Philip C. Jessup, Dr. Grayson Kirk, and Mr. Owen Lattimore.

Digitized by Google

In the absence of the executive secretary, Mr. Jessup was designated as acting secretary.

At the suggestion of the Chair, it was agreed that any decisions would be taken by vote of the members of the executive committee only, but that if questions of principle were decided the views of the guests would be recorded.

On motion made and seconded, the reading of the minutes of the last meeting were dispensed with, in view of the fact that they had been circulated and that they were adopted subject to the filing in writing of any corrections.

The treasurer submitted a financial report, including a statement by the executive secretary. He reported that it would be possible to go through November without drawing the additional $3,000 from the publications fund under the previous authorization; $5,000 of the $8,000 authorized for transfer have already been transferred. The sum of $19,000 due from Army-Navy purchases of pamphlets represents a profit balance which will enable the council probably to complete the year with a slight credit balance.

After discussion, it was moved, seconded, and passed that the report be accepted.

The committee then discussed the item on the agenda of organizational problems and program. There was general consideration of the purposes and program of the American Council and of the problems confronting it.

At the conclusion of the discussion, Mr. McConaughy moved that a special committee, composed of Mr. Calkins, Mr. Gilchrist, and Mr. Jessup be appointed to carry on discussions and negotiations with any officers or branches of the American Council and with any outside organizations with a view to making proposals concerning the solution of the problems facing the council, including recommendations concerning the location of the various activities of the council, the special committee to report to the executive committee definite proposals at its next meeting.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Huggins, Mr. Gilchrist having indicated his inability to serve due to absence from the country, Mr. Conaughy was substituted in his place.

After discussion, the motion was unanimously carried, the nonmembers of the committee indicating their concurrence therein.

On motion of Mr. Gilchrist, seconded by Mr. Barnett, it was agreed that the executive committee, enlarged by the guests in attendance, would continue to function as a group until decisions had been reached on the main problems now confronting the council and that Mr. Calkins be requested to continue to serve as chairman during this period for this purpose.

It was moved and voted that Mr. Morris and Mr. Field serve as a subcommittee to suggest possible personnel who might be willing to serve on the executive committee.

It was agreed, after discussion, that the report of the program committee, submitted on October 1, 1945, would be revised and resubmitted for consideration at the next meeting.

The next meeting was scheduled for Tuesday, November 13, at 6 o'clock, at Midston House, the agenda to include the report of the special committee and the instructions to be given to the representatives of the American Council at the meeting of the Pacific Council in November.

PHILIP C. JESSUP, Acting Secretary.

EXHIBIT No. 290

AMERICAN COUNCIL, INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, INC.,
New York, N. Y., July 20, 1945.

DEAR BOARD MEMBER: Attached herewith is a copy of the auditors' report for the fiscal year 1944 of the work of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

I wish particularly to call to your attention that we had to negotiate a loan to carry us through last year. Although this has been paid off in full, it means that we must make every effort to increase our contributions during the present year.

I am sure you will be interested to know that membership in the American Council has increased to a total of 1,800 as compared with 1,100 18 months ago. Under the editorship of Laurence E. Salisbury, the Far Eastern Survey has increased from printings of approximately 2,500 to printings of approximately 3,800. In addition, the armed services have recently purchased nearly 700,000 copies of our pamphlet material for their educational work with soldiers being transferred from the European to the Pacific theater.

Digitized by Google

Despite financial difficulties, therefore, the work of the American Council is growing in importance and usefulness.

Sincerely yours,

RAYMOND DENNETT, Secretary.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you the names of the pamphlets the armed services did purchase?

Mr. MANDEL. Senator, they are not ready now, but we have a list of the contracts with numbers made with Government agencies for purchase of IPR material. If the committee is willing, we can place those in the record when we have them ready.

Mr. MORRIS. At this point, I think, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read one paragraph from the publication, IPR in Wartime, which is a report of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, 1941 to 1943. Since it bears on this whole subject, I would like this one paragraph read into the record, which I will do, myself.

Under the heading, "IPR Services," it reads:

The first months of the war, therefore, placed exceptionally heavy demands on the Institute of Pacific Relations for direct services to Government agencies as staffs and libraries were hastily assembled to handle far-eastern questions first with the demand for Institute of Pacific Relations publications and bibliographical aids. Happily, a large number of Institute of Pacific Relations' studies began as far back as 1936 were nearing completion in 1941. Together they provided a mine of up-to-date information on the resources, government economy, and problems of Japan, China, Burma, Thailand, Formosa, the Dutch East Indies, Malaya, et cetera. They were rushed into publication, or in some cases made available in proof or manuscript.

Institute of Pacific Relations libraries were exclusively used by officials from a dozen departments. Staff members gave freely of their time in consulting on research materials and programs; second, with requests for aid in recruiting far eastern experts for Government service. Here the IPR's extensive knowledge of scholars, journalists, and businessmen in the far eastern field was put at the disposal of Government agencies. This mobilization of key scholars, so few in number, has had its distressing aspects for it has stripped the universities and educational institutions of virtually all their trained far eastern personnel, but it was necessary and it will have its compensations in the enormous impetus to far eastern studies which the war will give. Hundreds of men are being trained in the far eastern languages through cooperative arrangements among the universities, the Government, and the American Council of Learned Societies which has taken the lead in this field.

Senator FERGUSON. By whom is that signed?

Mr. MORRIS. This is the official publication put out by, apparently, the executive committee. It ends up:

The job of the IPR is boundless and the stakes are high.

but there is no signature.

The next heading is headed: "By educating the Armed Forces."

The third aspect of direct IPR aid in the war effort has been the use of its publications in the education of the Armed Forces. Today, tens of thousands of young Americans are being called upon to fight for their country in a half of the world about which they know virtually nothing—China, India, Australia, New Guinea, the Solomons, and Alaska.

When the Army and the Navy wanted educational materials on these countries for use in camps, and on shipboard after Pearl Harbor, they turned to the IPR. In scores of Army and Navy establishments here and abroad will be found copies of China, America's Ally, Our Far Eastern Record, Meet the Anzacs, Know Your Enemy, Japan, and other Institute of Pacific Relations pamphlets which had been supplied at cost.

Digitized by Google

From the standpoint of the council this is an educational job of first importance. With reference to the varied contributions of institute work to the war effort, IPR members and supporters may have satisfaction in such tributes as the following from a high-ranking official in Washington—

I think we will end up with that, Mr. Chairman. But this is the tribute:

From my own experience, which I know is also shared by others entrusted with official responsibilities has been that IPR publications are an indispensable aid. May I take this opportunity of paying special tribute to the help which the IPR has rendered and is continuing to render to the war effort of the United Nations. Its studies, notably the inquiry, constitutes what is undoubtedly the complete and useful documentation available on the nature, cause, and consequences of the far eastern conflict.

That is from a report of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, 1941 to 1943, entitled "Institute of Pacific Relations in Wartime."

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know certain people were writing articles under the sponsorship of the Institute of Pacific Relations and using fictitious names?

Mr. DENNETT. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you not ever hear that?

(Nodding negatively.)

Senator FERGUSON. Would you have thought that people should write objective facts under fictitious names?

Mr. DENNETT. It has been done in a great many places, Senator. I think it depends on the individual. I believe one of the most important architects of our present containment policy of the Soviet Union wrote an article in Foreign Affairs under the name of "X." I think that is fine.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is that?

Mr. DENNETT. That was George Kennan.

Senator FERGUSON. He has assigned his reason for doing that.

Mr. DENNETT. Well, I think that is reasonable, too. I think just to write under a fictitious name for that purpose is a bad idea. If there is a reason for it, I think that may explain it.

Senator FERGUSON. He had a genuine reason.

Mr. DENNETT. Certainly. I don't know about any people writing under the IPR, so I can't answer your question.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you have approved writing under fictitious names?

Mr. DENNETT. In the case of somebody like Mr. Kennan; yes.

In the case of somebody else; no.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you state a number of people here who were writing under fictitious names?

Mr. MORRIS. The one that came up was Asiaticus.

Mr. DENNETT. I know nothing about him.

Senator FERGUSON. He is the one mentioned in the "cagey letter."

Mr. DENNETT. He was not there when I was there.

Mr. MORRIS. I think we would have to have a compilation of that list.

Senator FERGUSON. Please put it in the record at this place, the people who have written under fictitious names for the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Digitized by Google

(The information referred to is as follows:)

Asiaticus---------- Hans Mueller
J. E. N---------- Edmund O. Clubb

Mr. DENNETT. I was not there when that occurred.

Senator FERGUSON. At least you did not know about it?

Mr. DENNETT. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, were you secretary of the American Council of the IPR when Alfred Kohlberg brought his charges that there was Communist influence in the Institute?

Mr. DENNETT. I was. I don't know whether it was when he brought his charges, because I don't know when they began.

I was there at the time he initiated legal action against the institute.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, was there ever any thorough investigation made of the so-called Kohlberg charges?

Mr. DENNETT. I would say "No." I would say an answer was prepared, which was somewhat different.

Mr. MORRIS. Who prepared the answer?

Mr. DENNETT. Marguerite Ann Stewart.

Mr. MORRIS. Did she make any objective investigation of the so-called charges?

Mr. DENNETT. I am not really in a position to judge that, Mr. Morris. I would be inclined to think not, but I don't recall at what time that was in preparation; but I think the general feeling was that Mr. Kohlberg's charges were so wild as to be ignored.

Mr. MORRIS. That was the feeling of the officers of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. That was certainly the feeling of the staff and I think in the executive committee it was the feeling, at least, of some members.

Mr. MORRIS. As a matter of fact, Mr. Dennett, was there an investigation ever made of the Kohlberg charges?

Mr. DENNETT. I have stated there was not. There was an answer prepared.

Mr. MORRIS. It was prepared by Marguerite Stewart, the author of Land of the Soviets?

Mr. DENNETT. Quite correct.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that ratified by the executive committee? That answer?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall. The sequence of events, to the best of my recollection, is that Mr. Kohlberg issued a subpena on me to show reasons as to why we should not make available to him the membership lists of the American Council for purposes of a proxy fight. At that point, the matter was turned over to the lawyers. After a period of somewhere between 12 and 14 months an agreement was made, as I recall, by which Mr. Kohlberg was entitled to mail out to the members of the Institute of Pacific Relations his material.

We then felt, or it was then felt, in the institute, that we should mail out some material counteracting his. This material was prepared by Mrs. Stewart. I believe it was mailed out prior to the annual elections in March of 1946, at which time I had left the Institute of Pacific Relations.

I don't recall that there was ever any analysis or any investigation by the executive committee of Mrs. Stewart's reply. I know at one time I sent out a memorandum to the board which incorporated certain statistical material which Mrs. Stewart had given me.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. That which you gave was prepared by Mrs. Stewart?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes; and I sent it out to the board members.

Mr. MORRIS. Who designated Mrs. Stewart as the one to prepare an answer to the Kohlberg charges?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall that. It undoubtedly was approved by me at the time. I think it probably was a question of who was free in the office and who could take on this additional job. She volunteered to do it and presumably it would be a long one, so I said "All right."

Senator FERGUSON. Have you ever read The Land of the Soviets by her?

Mr. DENNETT. I explained to the committee that I had, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. After reading that, do you think that you would designate her as the person to make an objective investigation as to whether Kohlberg's charges were true?

Mr. DENNETT. I would not.

Senator FERGUSON. It would indicate now that a thorough investigation not be made for the board and the board put on an offensive before Kohlberg could put his on; was that not right? Was not information sent out to the various people?

Mr. DENNETT. Information was sent out. As I recall the sequence, as I said, there was a court action by Kohlberg that went through the district court and went up and came back down again. There was a compromise which we agreed to mail out to the members—the issue was whether or not Kohlberg could get the membership lists of the American Council. We agreed to mail out his material to the members. At the same time, we were going to mail out this material prepared by Mrs. Stewart so they would receive both Kohlberg's charges and this compilation, this report, of Mrs. Stewart.

Senator FERGUSON. Did the Stewart analysis indicate it was a thorough investigation by the board?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall the covering letter.

Senator FERGUSON. Have we the covering letter, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. We will try to obtain it. If so, we will put it in the record.

(The letter referred to is as follows:)

AMERICAN COUNCIL, INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, INC.,
New York, April 4, 1945.

Confidential.

TO: MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES,
MEMBERS OF THE RESEARCH COMMITTEE,
REGIONAL OFFICES:

Following the policy of the previous confidential memorandum on the Hot Springs Conference, the present report is circulated for the purpose of summarizing recent developments of interest to those in positions of responsibility in the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Conference of the United Nations.—The Bay Region Division, through Ray Lyman Wilbur, has forwarded to the Secretary of State an offer of its facilities during the period of the United Nations Conference which convenes on April 25 next. The Secretary received a request from Admiral John W. Greenslade, executive vice president, to visit San Francisco to assist in making plans for the activities of the office during the Conference, planned to leave New York on March 23, but was prevented by developments in the legal action against the Council by Alfred E. Kohlberg. He now plans to leave New York at the latest by April 10—and earlier if possible—and to stay until after the Conference opens.

Digitized by Google

According to information solicited from friends in the Department of State, the IPR can be of service in the following ways:

1. Through offering the use of its facilities, both library and office, to those in charge of Conference arrangements.

2. Through such arrangements as might be made to assist in the housing of delegates and technical advisers.

3. Through planning informal dinners for the Far Eastern experts in the various delegations.

Although the Department, officially, is discouraging the presence of informal observers from the multitude of American organizations who all have an interest in the Conference, assurances were informally given to the Secretary that the IPR might be able to be of real service both because of the expert character of its information, the projected release of the report of the Hot Springs Conference on April 18, and its international character which rather clearly distinguished it from those groups who will be present. In addition to any services which might be rendered to the Conference and its personnel, it is anticipated that newspaper correspondents covering the sessions may turn to the IPR for assistance and background material for their interpretative reports. The Foreign Policy Association has asked for the cooperation of the Bay Region Division of the IPR in offering office space to Mrs. Vera Micheles Dean and Mr. Blair Bolles, who will cover the proceedings for the FPA, and it is anticipated that such a combination will make the IPR office a real center for expert information. The Pacific Council will probably be represented during a portion of the Conference by various members of the staff of the International Secretariat.

Meeting of the Research Advisory Committee.—At the March meeting of the Research Advisory Committee, to the membership of which the Executive Committee had previously added the names of David N. Rowe of the Yale Institute of International Studies, William C. Johnstone, Dean of the School of Government at George Washington University, and Felix M. Keesing of Stanford University, the following decisions were reached:

1. An allocation of $1,500 was made for the study on colonial dependencies mentioned in the last report of the Secretary. The work is to be undertaken under the general supervision of a small steering committee in Washington which hopes to prepare a manuscript for discussion group consideration by fall, with a publication date line of the Spring of 1946.

2. It reserved judgment on the details of the projected study on the effect of Chinese industrialization upon the American economy pending a further report of a discussion group to be called together in Washington.

American Representatives on International Committees.—The Executive Committee has appointed the following as the representatives of the American Council on the Internaitonal Committees of the Institute:

Pacific Council—Dr. Robert G. Sproul.
International Research Committee—Dr. Eugene Staley.
International Program Committee—Dr. William C. Johnstone, Jr.
International Finance Committee—G. E. Huggins, Treasurer.

Program Planning.—The Executive Committee has authorized the appointment of a subcommittee to meet with the Secretary and the staff to work out a carefully integrated program for the American Council for the next few years. The report of this committee will no doubt provide a basis for discussion at the proposed national meeting of the IPR to be held later this year. It has been felt for some time that it is difficult to assess accurately the demands upon both staff and budget of various projects which are presented to the American Council until a yardstick in the form of a three to five year program has been formulated by which these demands can be judged. The Research Committee has recommended that, so far as research activity is concerned, the activities of the Council should be directed toward the study of those problems the decision on which are likely to set the pattern for Pacific relations for the next few decades. Within this general criterion, however, considerable further elaboration is needed.

The IPR and Mr. Alfred E. Kohlberg.—As indicated in a recent letter sent to the members of the American Council, the Executive Committee finally decided to attempt to solve the problems raised by Mr. Kohlberg's legal action to compel the IPR to furnish him with a list of members by allowing him to circulate the membership in an effort to secure proxies. The only restriction placed upon his communication is that it should not contain libelous material.

Digitized by Google

Prior to this decision, several efforts were made to reach a satisfactory solution with Mr. Kohlberg. The Executive Committee took up Mr. Kolberg's original request for a committee to examine his charges, and suggested that a group composed of Mr. Randall Gould (named by Mr. Kohlberg as one of seven who would be acceptable to him), Mrs. Ada Comstock Notestein of the Executive Committee, and Mr. Arthur Dean of the firm of Sullivan and Cromwell be asked to "investigate whether there had been bias in the publications of the IPR during the last eight years, and whether there had been a suppression or distortion of facts to support such bias." Mr. Kohlberg however retorted by withdrawing the name of Mr. Gould, substituting additional names, and insisting upon the right of the committee to examine files, correspondence, and minutes of all the Councils of the IPR, as well as "hear witnesses" whom he might wish to call. He also insisted that the frame of reference of the committee should not be the question of the existence of bias but an examination of the alleged "communist" background of writers and contributors to IPR publications.

To protect its position, the Executive Committee has (a) sought the advice of the legal firm of Shearman, Stirling, and Wright; (b) secured the authorization of the individual officers of the Pacific Council for its permission to Mr. Kohlberg to include charges against the International organization in his communication to the members of the American Council.

The exact nature of future developments remains uncertain. If Mr. Kohlberg prepares a communication which we are assured by counsel will not open the American Council to possible action for damages, he will presumably circulate the membership with a request for proxies. If he does not prepare suitable material, his petition requesting the court to require the American Council to provide him with the membership list will come up for hearing on April 9. We are advised that his petition is not likely to be granted.

The absurdity of the charges made by Mr. Kohlberg is revealed in a thorough study of his original 88-page document. This study, made under the direction of the Executive Committee, reveals the following facts:

1. Only 33 articles and book reviews, three pamphlets, and one book are quoted. During the period under review, publications of the IPR totalled 1,961 articles and book reviews and 384 books and pamphlets. The charges therefore, are based upon a selection of 2 percent of the articles and book reviews and 0.002 percent of the books and pamphlets.

2. The document, in the large majority of instances, ignores (a) the fact that material supporting the opposite point of view could be taken from the same pamphlets or articles by the same author, (b) the appearance in the same or later issues of the magazines of articles by other authors taking the opposite position of those quoted, or (c) the true meaning of the articles by selecting quotations out of context.

3. A close examination of his document fails to reveal the four definite shifts in attitude toward China which Mr. Kohlberg has charged.

National Conference of the American Council.—No final decision has been reached on the date or the agenda for the national meeting of the American Council as suggested by the informal meetings at Hot Springs. Regional offices have expressed a preference for having the meeting in San Francisco—which may be impossible in June if the United Nations Conference is still in session—but have disagreed as to time. Honolulu and the Inland Empire group prefer September, the Pacific Northwest group prefers June, and no word has been received from Milwaukee, Chicago, or San Francisco.

The Executive Committee would be pleased to receive any comments or suggestions which may come to mind from this memorandum.

Sincerely yours,

RAYMOND DENNETT, Secretary.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., November 5, 1951.

Mr. ROBERT MORRIS,
Special Counsel, Subcommittee on Internal Security,
Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRIS: I have your letter of October 31.

While I don't recall in detail the memorandum which you introduced in the record during my appearance before the open session, I do recall, to the best of my knowledge, that Mrs. Stewart, who was then engaged in examination of Kohlberg's brochure, provided me with the statistical analysis contained in that report which I incorporated with other information which I was sending to the Trustees.

Digitized by Google

Cordially yours,

RAYMOND DENNETT.

Mr. MORRIS. I think, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have in the record at this point the statistical report supplied to Mr. Dennett by Mrs. Stewart and have that made a part of the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have that?

Mr. MORRIS. We have it.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 291."

(Only 33 articles and book reviews, three pamphlets and one book are quoted. During the period under review, publications of the IPR totaled 1,961 articles and book reviews and 384 books and pamphlets. The charges therefore, are based upon a selection of 2 percent of the articles and book reviews and 0.002 percent of the books and pamphlets.)

Mr. MORRIS. Were you secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations when the Hot Springs convention of the Institute of Pacific Relations was held?

Mr. DENNETT. I was.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us when plans were first made for the working out of this conference?

Mr. DENNETT. I imagine that the preparation must have been begun in the spring of 1944 very shortly after I arrived. The conference was scheduled for January of 1945. I did not arrive in the American Council until March of 1944.

I think by the time I had arrived there probably had been some preliminary planning on it, because a conference of that sort takes some time to work out.

I was actively engaged in the preparation for it, I should suppose, by midsummer of 1944.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, would you explain the general nature of this Hot Springs conference with respect to the Institute of Pacific Relations organization?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes.

The Pacific Council, the International Secretariat, the international end of the Institute of Pacific Relations, had for some years—I don't know when it first began—planned periodic international conferences to which the various national councils would send delegations to discuss an agenda agreed upon in advance which usually covered economic and political developments in the far eastern area. These conferences occurred every 3 or 4 years. The delegations usually had from 7 or 8 from the smaller countries to 15 or 25 from the largest countries who were part of the International Institute of Pacific Relations.

At the beginning these conferences had been exclusively limited to individuals, professors, economists, businessmen, and so on.

Starting, I believe, with the Mont Tremblant conference, which I know nothing about, because I was not there, in 1942 there had been apparently a disposition on the part of those in charge of the International secretariat to admit a limited number of government officials partially because many of the far eastern experts were serving governments, partially because I think they thought these discussions might have an air of reality if you had some government people who were closer to what was actually going on.

Digitized by Google

All the people at these conferences participated as individuals and they were not necessarily speaking for their organizations, their businesses, or their official connections.

Hot Springs, therefore, was one of a series of similar conferences to those which had gone before.

The American Council was the host council and therefore had special responsibilities in regard to entertainment and arrangements, et cetera.

Mr. MORRIS. In the preparation of this conference, Mr. Dennett, did the people with the prime responsibility have their eye on the forthcoming United Nations conference?

Mr. DENNETT. I presume they did. I don't know exactly when that United Nations conference was announced as being held. I think, as I recall, the final announcement of the holding of the San Francisco conference did not come out until after the Yalta sessions in January and the Institute of Pacific Relations conference was at about the time of Yalta.

So I doubt very much whether we had that specifically in mind, although I assume we knew there was going to be some sort of a postwar conference.

Mr. MORRIS. At the time of the conference, itself, you were well aware of the forthcoming United Nations conference?

Mr. DENNETT. I would have to check dates, but it must have been about that time, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. In your executive session testimony, you said that generally the Hot Springs conference proved to be a trial balloon for the forthcoming United Nations conference.

Mr. DENNETT. That was unquestionably the case. I don't know whether that was something which we realized on a prior basis or a post hoc propter hoc basis, because I don't recall the announcement of the United Nations conference.

Mr. MORRIS. How similar were the delegations of the Hot Springs convention of the IPR and the subsequent United Nations conference?

Mr. DENNETT. I wouldn't know without a careful checking of the record, but it was certainly my impression that somewhere between a fourth and a third of those who attended the Hot Springs conference from these 10 or 11 countries subsequently turned up at San Francisco, either on delegations or as advisers to delegations of the similar countries.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, I would like to show you a copy of a letter that Philip C. Jessup wrote to you on August 1, 1944, and ask you if you can recall that letter?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall the letter, but I have no doubt I received it.

Mr. MORRIS. This letter was introduced previously as exhibit No. 132 at the hearing of August 16, 1951, Mr. Chairman. It is the one that contains the recommendation on the part of Mr. Jessup to Mr. Dennett who was then secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations for delegates to the Hot Springs convention. It contains the names of Benjamin Kizer, among others, and Lauchlin Currie, John Carter Vincent, Harry Dexter White, Owen Lattimore, Len DeCaux, Col.

Digitized by Google

Carl Faymonville, Joseph Barnes, Frederick V. Field, Alger Hiss, and Frank Coe.

You say you probably did receive that letter?

Mr. DENNETT. I have no doubt I received it.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to introduce into the record at this time a letter from Mr. Dennett to Mr. William C. Johnstone, dated June 27, 1944, and it is on the same subject, that is, recommendations for delegates to the Hot Springs convention.

Mr. Mandel, will you certify the authenticity of this letter and read pertinent paragraphs?

Mr. MANDEL. It is a letter taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated June 27, 1944, addressed to Dean William C. Johnstone, from Raymond Dennett, secretary.

I read portions of this letter:

When I talked to Grew about the conference there was one rather disturbing reaction which I backed away from at full speed. Grew commented that since the conference would be discussing entirely postwar plans he did not see how anyone in his capacity or in his department could attend, even in their individual capacity, since they would naturally reflect the postwar planning of the State Department itself upon which only Mr. Hull was competent to make statements. Not wanting to ask Grew and have him refuse, not to mention that I wanted Vincent and have Grew refuse to consider such action, I changed the subject. It is quite apparent that Grew is hypersensitive since the Chicago speech which he took 15 minutes to assure me was inaccurately reported by the press.

I think it highly important that you do a little sounding out with Currie or someone at that level as to just how we handle this situation. Either Grew has got to be changed or he might even refuse to let Vincent come, quite apart from coming himself. Hornbeck I am sure would like to come, but whether Grew would accept Hornbeck's statement that it was all right I am inclined to doubt. Currie spoke quite frankly in saying that it was unnecessary to worry much about SKH.

Presumably Stanley K. Hornbeck.

Then another excerpt:

You will be interested to know that Currie suggested the Government delegates should be Acheson, Vincent, Dooman (the latter two at the technical level: the first at the over-all policy level), Will Clayton, Harry White, and possibly Frank Coe. Rupert Emerson should be asked to represent FEA. I think this gives you an idea of Currie's opinion of the importance of the conference, but it might take some spade work by him to get Acheson there. His suggestion, of course, is a neat way of bracketing Hornbeck out.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like that introduced into the record and marked accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted into the record at this point.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 292" and is as follows:)

JUNE 27, 1944.

Dean WILLIAM C. JOHNSTONE,
American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations,
Washington 6, D. C.

DEAR BILL: I hope you had a pleasant trip and that you are full of gossip and information as to precisely what happened in San Francisco after I left. Dolly has written me mysterious words, but I have no official knowledge of what went on.

I had a very interesting 3 days in Washington during which I called on Currie, Hornbeck, Grew, Dooman, and various others. Currie was obviously very much interested in the conference and quite obviously would like to come. Hornbeck made an interesting comment to the effect that he rather disliked the apparent growing connection between the IPR and Government and the effort at the last conference to arrive at a consensus which approximated the idea of passing resolutions. He felt that as we approached that level of action the British would outsmart us and we would lose our strength.

Digitized by Google

When I talked to Grew about the conference there was one rather disturbing reaction which I backed away from at full speed. Grew commented that since the conference would be discussing entirely postwar plans he did not see how anyone in his capacity or in his department could attend, even in their individual capacity, since they would naturally reflect the postwar planning of the State Department itself upon which only Mr. Hull was competent to make statements. Not wanting to ask Grew and have him refuse, not to mention that I wanted Vincent and have Grew refuse to consider such action, I changed the subject. It is quite apparent that Grew is hypersensitive since the Chicago speech which he took 15 minutes to assure me was inaccurately reported by the press.

I think it highly important that you do a little sounding out with Currie or someone at that level as to just how we handle this situation. Either Grew has got to be changed or he might even refuse to let Vincent come, quite apart from coming himself. Hornbeck I am sure would like to come, but whether Grew would accept Hornbeck's statement that it was all right I am inclined to doubt. Currie spoke quite frankly in saying that it was unnecessary to worry much about SKH.

I wish you would sound the situation out a little so that all will be clear before any formal invitations are issued.

You will be interested to know that Currie suggested the Government delegates should be Acheson, Vincent, Dooman (the latter two at the technical level, the first at the over-all policy level), Will Clayton, Harry White, and possibly Frank Coe. Rupert Emerson should be asked to represent FEA. I think this gives you an idea of Currie's opinion of the importance of the conference, but it might take some spade work by him to get Acheson there. His suggestion, of course, is a neat way of bracketing Hornbeck out.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND DENNETT, Secretary.

Senator FERGUSON. This man Currie has come up very frequently, and this letter brings him out again forcibly to the attention of the committee.

What did he have to do? What was his position? Here it sounds like a very important position as to how you reach Government officials. He was directly connected with the White House, the executive office.

Will you tell us where Currie fits into this proposition? Was he the liaison between the Institute of Pacific Relations and the Government?

Mr. DENNETT. It is rather difficult to say, Senator, because I think I only saw him twice, of which this summary was one.

I believe that Mr. Carter saw him fairly often, but I don't know.

I had obviously been sent to him by somebody—I don't know whom—to discuss the whole question of membership of the American delegation; that is, the official representation in the American delegation.

I am, therefore, summarizing here what he said to me.

Senator FERGUSON. He must have been a confidante because here it is said:

I think it highly important you do a little sounding out with Currie.

You only sound out with a confidante, do you not?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't know what you mean by confidante. He was no confidante of mine.

Senator FERGUSON. Was he of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. He may very well have been. I heard him mentioned several times.

Digitized by Google

I believe Mr. Carter saw him several times.

Senator FERGUSON. Here you were using this expression, "or someone at that level as to just how we handle this situation."

You wanted Currie to handle the situation that you could not handle with Grew who was the Under Secretary of State, was he not?

Mr. DENNETT. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. Explain who this man was, this man Currie. What could he do for IPR that the Under Secretary under Hull could not do? Why did you not lay your cards on the table and say to Mr. Grew, "Here is what we want to do"?

Why did you want to go around through Currie and manipulate things, which this indicates?

Mr. DENNETT. I assume, Senator, that the reason we wanted that was because we wanted certain people to come to the conference.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not want other people to come?

Mr. DENNETT. I assume so.

Senator FERGUSON. Why did you try to block off Hornbeck?

Mr. DENNETT. Mr. Hornbeck had——

Senator FERGUSON. It is a neat way. You say:

I think this gives you an idea of Currie's opinion of the importance of the conference, but it might take some spade work by him to get Acheson there.

And then you say:

His suggestion, of course, is a neat way of bracketing Hornbeck out.

What is wrong with Hornbeck?

Mr. DENNETT. My understanding of that situation which goes back over 5 or 6 years is that at the time Mr. Hornbeck had already expressed his question as to the wisdom, or as to the desirability of the kind of conference which the Institute of Pacific Relations had put on at Mont Tremblant at which he had been present.

It would be natural, therefore, if he disapproved of this, not to have him as one of the delegates.

Senator FERGUSON. You only wanted yes men at the convention?

Mr. DENNETT. Don't put words into my mouth, Senator, because I didn't say that, nor did I mean to infer that.

The situation in regard to these delegations was somewhat influenced, and I think this is important to understand in regard to both of these letters, by the nature of the delegations coming from other countries.

The way the thing happened was that we would hear that the British were sending so and so and so and so, and the French were sending so and so.

Our problem, so far as the governmental representation was concerned, and as host council, was to attempt insofar as we could, to match the delegations from these other countries.

It was, therefore, logical to go to the Government and say, "Here is this conference. The British are sending somebody who is an expert on economic matters in the Far East. Here is somebody who is in charge, let us say, of the Chinese Desk. We would like to match them with similar people within the department," or whatever it happened to be.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you not want to match them in opinion?

Mr. DENNETT. No, match them with the person holding the office. The office was the thing which was the matter of some concern to us.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. You don't tell me you want to bracket out Hornbeck because of his position. You want to bracket him out because of his opinion. That does not line up with what you are saying here.

Mr. DENNETT. At that time Mr. Vincent was the director of the Office of China Affairs, or whatever it was then called.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know he was pro-Soviet?

Mr. DENNETT. I did not know.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether Currie knew he was pro-Soviet?

Mr. DENNETT. I had no idea what he knew or didn't know.

Senator FERGUSON. This letter, to me, up to this moment—you seem to know in this letter much about Mr. Currie.

Mr. DENNETT. I can assure you I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Was this letter really dictated by somebody else?

Mr. DENNETT. No, sir; that was by me. I saw Mr. Currie and asked him his opinions. Presumably Mr. Carter had talked with him earlier.

I went to Mr. Currie and said, "Well, now, here are the people that are coming that we know about so far. Whom did you suggest ought to come from the United States?"

Senator FERGUSON. Why did you not have this confidential talk with Grew? I notice a line up here that says you shied away from Grew.

Mr. DENNETT. Because at that point Mr. Grew stated, as is stated in the letter, that he thought it would be impossible for anybody to come from the Department of State.

We were particularly anxious to have someone from the Department of State because the British, the French, the Dutch, and others were sending officials.

Therefore, if I had asked Mr. Grew at that time and had a flat "No," we presumably would have had then nobody from the Department of State.

We, as host council, would have been in the position where we would not be giving a delegation of the same character as the other councils.

Senator FERGUSON. Here was the next to the top man that had the power to allow somebody to come, or not, and you were afraid of getting a direct "No"?

Mr. DENNETT. Quite right.

Senator FERGUSON. So, you go to somebody who has not any direct connection, as far as we know, Lauchlin Currie in the White House?

Mr. DENNETT. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Why? To get him to engineer to get you someone so that Grew could not keep him from coming?

Mr. MORRIS. Did you not testify you were asked to go to see Mr. Currie by someone?

Mr. DENNETT. I probably was. I don't recall why or how I got to see him.

Mr. MORRIS. You don't know who sent you?

Mr. DENNETT. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Where did you see him?

Mr. DENNETT. I haven't the remotest idea. I don't know where his offices were.

Senator FERGUSON. Were they not in the White House?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't think they were, but I am not sure.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. What did you think he had to do with Government?

Mr. DENNETT. I knew he was in the White House.

Senator FERGUSON. How did you get to see him?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't know. I have no recollection of whether I called him; whether I wrote him; whether somebody arranged the appointment. I have no recollection of that. It is perfectly obvious I went to see him. I saw him twice during the time I was with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. You were sent on both occasions?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't know. It is presumably in the files. If I wrote a letter, there may be a memorandum to Mr. Johnstone.

Senator FERGUSON. Was this an attempt to use influence through Currie?

Mr. DENNETT. I think it is a fair conclusion to draw that we wanted to get people from the Department of State and thought he could get them.

Senator FERGUSON. He was the one man you could talk confidentially with and get the people you wanted?

Mr. DENNETT. There were a number of people I could have talked confidentially with and did, including Mr. Grew.

I said, "We would like to have some people from the Department of State, Mr. Grew."

Senator FERGUSON. You did not talk confidentially with him because you say you shied away.

Mr. DENNETT. When he did not think anybody could come from the Department.

Senator FERGUSON. Up to that time you were careful in talking with Grew.

Who else could have talked to Lauchlin Currie and obtained influence to get these people?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't know I ever tried to obtain influence.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know of anyone higher than Currie nearer the throne?

Mr. DENNETT. (Nodding negatively.)

Senator FERGUSON. Did you try Harry White?

Mr. DENNETT. I think I saw Mr. White once.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever talk confidentially with him about some of these matters?

Mr. DENNETT. No. The only time I saw Mr. White was when I invited him to come to the conference.

Senator FERGUSON. Where did you really get this idea of putting this in a letter?

Mr. DENNETT. I was reporting to the fellow in charge of our Washington office as to recent conferences in regard to the American delegation to the Hot Springs conference.

Senator FERGUSON. But the idea is that you put in here, it is rather significant to me, that you talked this way about Currie. You wanted to push that letter at the time?

Mr. DENNETT. I had no particular objection. I could talk to Currie, or anybody else about the American delegation.

Senator FERGUSON. This was not a confidential communication?

Mr. DENNETT. It is not labeled as such. I sent it to Bill Johnstone of the Washington office.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. You think he would have wanted Mr. Grew and Mr. Hull to know about it?

Mr. DENNETT. Mr. Grew is a very astute man, and I had no doubt Mr. Grew knew I would like to have the Department of State people there. He may have concluded I did not want to ask him point blank.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think you would want Mr. Grew or Mr. Hull to know that you were going over to the White House to see Currie, who had influence with the President to do this?

Mr. DENNETT. Not particularly.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you think you would even want them generally to know it?

Mr. DENNETT. I had no doubt they knew somebody beside people from the Department could come.

Mr. MORRIS. You can't recall who it was who suggested you go to see Currie?

Mr. DENNETT. No.

Presumably it was Mr. Carter, but it may not have been because he saw a good deal of Mr. Currie.

Senator FERGUSON. You really accomplished your mission getting these people?

Mr. DENNETT. There was no final order that nobody could come.

Senator FERGUSON. You accomplished your mission?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes.

I think I may say that one of the factors in doing that—it may have been Currie—but one of the factors contributing to that was the list of people who came from the other countries as a result of which I think it was fairly apparent to the people in the department that it would be desirable to have some of their people present when other governments considered this sufficiently important to send people of the caliber they did.

So, it is entirely possible that the action of sending people from the department, or elsewhere, was not necessarily the result of any machinations by Mr. Currie, but a result of the discovery of who else was coming from the other countries.

There is another interpretation than that you suggested.

Mr. MORRIS. In connection with this list suggested by Mr. Currie, you will notice he has Harry White and Frank Coe as people recommended.

Mr. DENNETT. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you learn Harry White and Frank Coe were associated with the Communist organization?

Mr. DENNETT. A good deal after I left the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think, in connection with this recommendation of Mr. Jessup's for the same conference, we had some testimony in the past that 10 of those people were connected with the Communists and Soviet organizations. I thought perhaps we might go into the testimony about some other people who were recommended and who were not identified as members of the Communist Party, such as Colonel Faymonville.

Mr. DENNETT. I was about to say—just so that the record will be straight—that, of all the people who were in the Institute of Pacific Relations and with whom I was associated, I think I would be doing a disservice if I didn't state that the person whom I never questioned as having any connection with either the Communist Party or Communist sympathizers was Philip C. Jessup.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. We were not asking you that. We are talking about the list of people recommended by Mr. Jessup. That question does not come up at all.

Mr. DENNETT. I wanted to get that in the record as to my feeling about Mr. Jessup, so you can then discuss this list.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you tell us whom you were suspicious of having Communist leanings that were connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations, since you brought the subject up? Let us have the names of those you were suspicious of.

Mr. DENNETT. I made it clear earlier, I think, that I was primarily concerned with the objectivity of the staff.

Senator FERGUSON. That does not answer my question.

Mr. MORRIS. You brought your suspicions into it.

Senator FERGUSON. Let us have those that you were suspicious of being connected with, either directly or indirectly, the Communists or the Communist line.

We have got one that was not. What about all the others?

Mr. DENNETT. I would say, with the exception of Mr. Field, all the members of my executive committee.

Senator FERGUSON. You were suspicious of Field?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes. There was no question in my mind that——

Senator FERGUSON. That he was a Communist?

Mr. DENNETT. He was not.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. DENNETT. There was no question in my mind that Mr. Field was either a Communist or a Communist sympathizer. I think it was generally accepted he was. He was one out of 11 or 12 of the executive committee, and one member out of the 60 or 70 on the national board.

Senator FERGUSON. What about the writers for the organization?

Mr. MORRIS. How about the names of the people recommended by Jessup for the Hot Springs convention?

That would be more appropriate, Senator.

Mr. DENNETT. I had no suspicions in regard to any of them, Senator.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you not testify previously you were in no position to determine whether or not anybody was a Communist?

Mr. DENNETT. I certainly did. I was in no position to know. I had no way of knowing; and as I have always stated, even with the benefit of hindsight I am very reluctant to impute membership where it may not have been, to impute motives, and I do not know that the motives existed, because I just don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not wish to tell us you were naive on this question of communism back in these days; that you did not understand it; that it did not enter your mental processes?

Mr. DENNETT. Certainly it never occurred to me any of the people with whom I was dealing were Communists or Communist sympathizers.

Senator FERGUSON. When you read such articles as this book The Land of the Soviets——

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. I decided that was a person whom I did not regard as objective, and who may or may not have been sympathetic to the Communist side.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know there was a Soviet line?

Mr. DENNETT. Certainly.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not see any evidences of that line going through the Institute of Pacific Relations and leading over to Moscow?

Mr. DENNETT. There is a difference between seeing a line or a parallelism between two points of view and deciding as a result of that that the person taking this position is or is not a Communist or a Communist sympathizer.

As I suggested, in 1944 and 1945 there were millions of people in this country who really and sincerely believed that cooperation with the Soviet Union was the solution to postwar problems.

They were all guilty of bad judgment, but that does not necessarily mean that the millions who felt that way are all Communists, or were.

Senator FERGUSON. Is it not any wonder that was true when you read this book that was copyrighted in 1942, Land of the Soviets, which Mrs. Stewart had taken out to the public schools?

Mr. DENNETT. If the Institute of Pacific Relations had the influence you suggest, there would be a lot more Communists than there are in the country, I suspect.

You give me faith in education with that comment. I am now in the field of education. I wish I could be as effective as you imply.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you don't think this kind of a book sent to the public schools or to the armed services would have its effect on the thinking of the youth of America and as they grow into manhood they would carry on some of this thinking?

Mr. DENNETT. It may very well.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that the hope of you as an educator?

Mr. DENNETT. It would be my hope it would have some impact; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. If that was not the fact that you wanted an impact, why were you publishing these books?

Mr. DENNETT. Disassociate me from publishing this one, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. I mean the IPR.

Mr. DENNETT. I want to make it clear as to the distinction as to my position and the previous history.

Senator FERGUSON. I hope you do.

I have had a little trouble this morning on the Currie letter that you have not quite made clear to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, we will have to recess at this time until 1:30.

(Thereupon, at 12:30 p. m., the hearing was recessed, to reconvene at 1:30 p. m. of the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

The hearing reconvened at 1:30 p. m., upon the expiration of the recess.

Senator JENNER (presiding). Come to order.

Mr. MORRIS. Who else in addition to Mr. Jessup and Lauchlin Currie made recommendations for delegates to the Hot Springs convention?

Digitized by Google

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall in detail. I know that in regard to the west coast branches of the Institute of Pacific Relations we pretty well decided to let them name their own. I presume there was some sort of a subcommittee of the executive committee which made suggestions.

There were, for example, a number of businessmen suggested. These would have come presumably from some sort of a committee which was set up for it.

Mr. MORRIS. But the outstanding recommendations apparently came from Jessup and Currie?

Mr. DENNETT. Those are the only ones of which there is evidence, but there may be others in the file.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think while we are at this list of recommendations, I might say a letter had been introduced previously on Colonel Faymonville. I think Mr. Mandel will read it now for the record.

Senator JENNER. All right.

Mr. MANDEL. This is exhibit 32, introduced at open hearings on July 26, 1951. It is a letter addressed to Owen Lattimore from Edward C. Carter, dated June 21, 1941. The letter reads as follows:

DEAR OWEN: If you have time while in San Francisco, you and Bill Holland may want to arrange a private talk with Col. Philip R. Faymonville whose present address is Headquarters of the Fourth Army, Presidio of San Francisco, Calif.

He would, I think, have been thoroughly at home and at ease if he had lunched with us at the Mayflower on Wednesday. I think you get the idea. It may be if you get the same favorable impression of him which Harriet Moore and I have, he might be someone who could be exceptionally useful to you and the Generalissimo at some future time in Chungking. If you wish me to, I will wire him for an appointment.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you state what the reference is to the luncheon last Wednesday? The reference was to a luncheon with Oumansky?

Mr. MANDEL. I believe so.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I just had that stated in the record in connection with Colonel Faymonville.

The point is that Edward Carter in writing to Lattimore thought that Colonel Faymonville would be thoroughly at home at this Oumansky luncheon.

Carter goes on to say:

It may be if you get the same favorable impression of him which Harriet Moore and I have, he might be someone who could be exceptionally useful to you.

Harriet Moore has been identified by several witnesses as having been a member of the Communist Party.

What were your experiences with Harriet Moore, Mr. Dennett?

Mr. DENNETT. I saw her only four or five times, I think. She was acting secretary before I was employed. Immediately after my employment, she went to the American-Russian Institute which she was particularly interested in. She was also the author of a book published by the American Council on the Soviet Far East, I believe, which I did not at the time, and do not now, regard as a particularly objective study.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, at the Hot Springs convention, were there any advance caucuses?

Mr. DENNETT. We had a 1- or 2-day advance meeting, as many members of the American delegation could get together in Washington sometime in the fall prior to the Hot Springs conference.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you read into the record excerpts from one of the conferences, the advance conferences, described by Mr. Dennett at this time?

And what is this you are going to read?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostatic copy of a document appearing in the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations headed "Preliminary meeting of the American delegation of the Institute of Pacific Relations, October 28, 1944, morning session, 10 to 11:15 a. m., Carolyn Kaiser and Harriett Mills, recorders."

Recorders apparently are those who do not take a stenographic copy of what was said, but give a digest, which appears here.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that true?

Mr. DENNETT. That is correct. They take down in longhand the substance of what was said and type it up later.

Mr. MANDEL. I read some excerpts from this preliminary meeting:

Chairman, Mr. Jessup: In his introductory remarks, Mr. Jessup stated that this preliminary meeting of the American delegation was not called for the purpose of formulating a "party line" for the delegation, or to present a single point of view at the Hot Springs conference, but for the purpose of clarification of the major issues to be discussed, prior to Hot Springs, to discover points of agreement on opinions and the interpretation of facts.

He explained that the IPR had broken its long-standing precedent in regard to the exclusion of Government officials from the conferences because since Pearl Harbor so many of the authorities on far eastern affairs had accepted responsible positions in the Government. However, Government officials who represent any of the delegations do not speak as Government officials, but as well-informed private individuals.

The main point under discussion during this period of the morning's meeting was what the American attitude should be in regard to the discussion of the internal problems of China, at the Hot Springs conference. Mr. Jessup felt that if the American delegation could decide what "slant" to take in bringing forth a discussion of China's domestic difficulties, it would facilitate a free discussion of this problem at the conference. He pointed out that the Chinese delegates have not wished, and will not wish, to discuss the internal situation in China. The domestic China situation is covered in an indirect way in the agenda of the conference, as a diplomatic concession. He then asked Mr. Lattimore what factors in the Chinese internal situation were likely to come under discussion at the conference.

Mr. Lattimore: He thought that the method of including India as well as China in the topic on the agenda might cushion the Chinese discussion. He said that the Chinese delegation at Hot Springs may occupy the position formerly held by the Japanese delegation at IPR conferences. The Chinese will present the party line, well-cloaked in fog, and individual members of the Chinese party will hew to the party line although they may differ from it as individuals. They won't care to speak of their differences of opinion.

Owing to the scarcity of information about Chinese internal affairs, the discussion at Hot Springs is likely to boil down to a discussion of the Kuomintang and the Communists, although the actual situation is far more complex; there are many smaller groups who are playing active parts in the political picture whose roles will be ignored. Developments in China today will have important political consequences. One example: The development in southeast China, with the United States getting closer and closer to the Chinese coast. China's military leaders may decide to break through the Japanese lines to commandeer United States equipment when we land. The political affiliation of the Chinese commander who might make this move would influence the whole political set-up. The Chinese delegation will present no real data on China's internal situation, even though this situation is of military as well as political importance in the whole international picture.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Who else gave their opinions at this conference?

Mr. MANDEL. We have here a digest of the opinion of Mr. Dennett, Admiral Yarnell, Mr. Chase, and Mr. Field.

Mr. MORRIS. Who is Mr. Chase?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall. He wasn't in the delegation, I don't think. I don't know who Mr. Chase was.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was Mr. Field?

Mr. DENNETT. Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

Mr. MANDEL. Mr. Coe.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was Mr. Coe?

Mr. DENNETT. Frank Coe.

Mr. MANDEL. Miss Farley.

Mr. MORRIS. Who is Miss Farley?

Mr. DENNETT. Miriam Farley.

Mr. MANDEL. Mr. Johnstone.

Mr. MORRIS. Who is Mr. Johnstone?

Mr. DENNETT. William C. Johnstone.

Mr. MANDEL. Mr. Bunche.

Mr. DENNETT. That is Ralph Bunche.

Mr. MANDEL. Mr. DeCaux.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Len DeCaux?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. As far as you can recall, what was the purpose of that advance session?

Mr. DENNETT. I think it is well described by the statement of the chairman; that is, to see what the attitudes of the members of the delegation were, many of them strangers to each other, and to discuss particularly at this session the degree to which it would be possible to examine as part of the discussions the internal developments in China.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read that through completely?

Mr. DENNETT. I have read this through. There are a lot of others I have not read, however.

Mr. MORRIS. With the exception of Admiral Yarnell, would you not agree there was uniformity of opinion there?

Mr. DENNETT. I think that is a fair statement; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the underlying expression of the majority of people there with the exception of Admiral Yarnell, with respect to the Chinese question?

Mr. DENNETT. The underlying agreement was that we certainly should discuss the internal situation in China as it bore very definitely upon postwar situations in China.

Admiral Yarnell's position is, I think, best summarized in one statement, and I am quoting:

> But if criticism leads to the overthrow of the Chungking government, what will take its place? No other party is strong enough at present to assume control.

Mr. MORRIS. Nobody agreed with him?

Mr. DENNETT. They seemed not to.

Are you entering this in the record?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DENNETT. As long as it is in the record, I think I am free to make comments on it.

Digitized by Google

Senator JENNER. This will be received in the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 293" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 293

PRELIMINARY MEETING OF THE AMERICAN DELEGATION OF THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, OCTOBER 28, 1944

Chairman, Mr. Jessup: In his introductory remarks, Mr. Jessup stated that this preliminary meeting of the American delegation was not called for the purpose of formulating a party line for the delegation, or to present a single point of view at the Hot Springs conference, but for the purpose of clarification of the major issues to be discussed, prior to Hot Springs, to discover points of agreement on opinions and the interpretation of facts. He explained that the IPR had broken its long-standing precedent in regard to the exclusion of Government officials from the conferences because since Pearl Harbor so many of the authorities on Far Eastern affairs had accepted responsible positions in the Government. However, Government officials who represent any of the delegations do not speak as Government officials, but as well-informed private individuals.

The main point under discussion during this period of the morning's meeting was what the American attitude should be in regard to the discussion of the internal problems of China, at the Hot Springs conference. Mr. Jessup felt that if the American delegation could decide what slant to take in bringing forth a discussion of China's domestic difficulties, it would facilitate a free discussion of this problem at the conference. He pointed out that the Chinese delegates have not wished and will not wish to discuss the internal situation in China. The domestic Chinese situation is covered in an indirect way in the agenda of the conference, as a diplomatic concession. He then asked Mr. Lattimore what factors in the Chinese internal situation were likely to come under discussion at the conference.

Mr. Lattimore: He thought that the method of including India as well as China in the topic on the agenda might cushion the Chinese discussion. He said that the Chinese delegation at Hot Springs may occupy the position formerly held by the Japanese delegation at IPR conferences. The Chinese will present the party line, well cloaked in fog, and individual members of the Chinese party will hew to the party line although they may differ from it as individuals. They won't care to speak of their differences of opinion. Owing to the scarcity of information about Chinese internal affairs, the discussion at Hot Springs is likely to boil down to a discussion of the Kuomintang and the Communists, although the actual situation is far more complex; there are many smaller groups who are playing active parts in the political picture whose roles will be ignored. Developments in China today will have important political consequences. One example: the developments in southeast China, with the United States getting closer and closer to the Chinese coast. China's military leaders may decide to break through the Japanese lines to commandeer United States equipment when we land. The political affiliation of the Chinese commander who might make this move would influence the whole political set-up. The Chinese delegation will present no real data on China's internal situation, even though this situation is of military as well as political importance in the whole international picture.

Mr. Jessup: He then asked Mr. Lattimore if American interest in China rests chiefly on military grounds.

Mr. Lattimore: It does not. But American military interest will launch the discussion of Chinese internal affairs as they affect the military situation. They have a direct bearing on how soon the war can be finished. The situation is comparable to the situation which would exist if the Japanese had invaded India. Then we would have to take up the domestic situation in India as it applied to the military, and subject it to intense discussion.

Mr. Jessup: He pointed out the economic side to the picture. China's appeal for United States economic and industrial aid is effected by the political situation within China.

Mr. Lattimore: The Chinese party line will be that we cannot discuss the Chinese political situation because it can be clarified only if the United States gives China large funds with which to strengthen the Government, and that that will clarify the political situation.

Mr. Dennett: He stated that the American point of view might well be that America could reasonably object to giving China money to reinforce a form of government with which we might not be in as much sympathy as some others. Our businessmen will not care to invest in a government whose situation is so unstable.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Lattimore: In answer to a query as to whether it is advisable to press the Chinese to express themselves on these problems, Mr. Lattimore said that it was a matter for regret that at previous conferences the other nations had not pressed the Japanese to express themselves on acute issues within Japan. It resulted in a sort of silent condoning of Japanese internal policy.

Admiral Yarnell: The Admiral expressed the opinion that nothing constructive could come from discussing the internal situation in China and India, and that we might serve only to antagonize the members of the delegation involved in these situations. He expressed doubt that we could learn anything from them which would aid in clarifying the situation anyway.

Mr. Lattimore: He stated the bad effect that such a hands-off policy had had on the Japanese delegates: they had gone home and reported that there was no cause to worry about American opinion, that America was "in the bag." There will be an equally destructive effect if the Chinese go home and tell their officials that America condones the Chinese political situation.

Admiral Yarnell: If we do not discuss these problems, the Chinese cannot interpret that to mean that the United States approves of their policy. The situation in China is known to us, the remedy is known; they cannot hope to believe that we do not realize what is going on.

Mr. Jessup: He stated that many people say that the Chinese desire a recording of adverse American sentiment, and that Chunking wishes to know about it.

Mr. Lattimore: Americans who have returned from China say that they are quietly taken aside in Chungking, and encouraged to continue the criticism of Chinese policies.

Admiral Yarnell: But if criticism leads to the overthrow of the Chungking government, what will take its place? No other party is strong enough at present to assume control.

Mr. LATTIMORE: The more reasonable Chinese feel that Chiang's Government is the only hope for a continuing and stable government in China, but that it will be continuing and stable only if it modifies its policy; otherwise it will be overthrown.

Mr. Chase: He stated that at the Hot Springs conference we could take up the discussion of internal factors in China only in relation to the aid which the United States will give her.

Mr. Field: He felt that if the domestic situations in other countries involved in the Pacific area, including the United States, were discussed—these questions which bear directly on the Pacific situation—it would be easier to bring about the discussion of China's domestic situation. If we are frank to discuss our own problems, and take the lead in discussing them before we reach the Chinese discussion, we can encourage the same thing in the Chinese when their turn comes. The point on the agenda which takes up the discussion of Chinese domestic issues comes too soon, Mr. Field felt. Our chances of leading gently and gradually into the Chinese discussion are poor. If we can wash some of our own dirty linen first we can more easily lead the discussion toward Chinese domestic affairs.

Mr. Jessup then asked whether the agenda should be modified.

Mr. Field: The discussion of India at the Atlantic City conference was skillfully skirted, so that a clash was avoided. If, before the conference, we can talk to the British delegates, perhaps we can agree to discuss the internal situation in India frankly. This also will help in leading into the Chinese discussion.

Mr. Coe and Miss Farley stated that the India situation was discussed fully at Mont Tremblant Conference, and could be done so again.

Mr. Field: If we can open up the discussion of pertinent internal topics, it will be of great help all the way around.

Mr. Johnstone: The discussion of domestic affairs at Atlantic City grew out of the discussion of economic aid to China. We said that our aid depended on the internal situation in China. The Chinese said that we had no business discussing the stability of the Chinese Government. What are the points of legitimate American interest to keep in mind in discussing the Chinese situation?

Mr. Jessup: He reminded the meeting that military and economic considerations had already been mentioned, and asked how far we could go in saying that American public opinion is concerned with the domestic Chinese situation. He asked if it was a matter of general informed interest.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Coe: He said that the number of articles and news stories in the American press concerning the domestic situation in China testified to American interest in the situation.

Mr. Lattimore: Many people ask, with great interest, whether China is in for a period of progress when the war is over, or whether she is in for 50 years of civil war.

Mr. Jessup brought out the point that the security question is involved in the discussion, as China is a member of the Big Four.

Mr. Dennett: Let us say that there is widespread American interest in the problem, and the question of the propriety of discussing it or not discussing it is immaterial. The interest and publicity exists, whether it should or not. The more of a problem it becomes to China, the more the United States will discuss it and ask questions about it. Then we remove the question from considerations of personal curiosity, and it becomes a matter of public concern.

Mr. Bunche: How can we divorce national policies from domestic conditions? We cannot avoid discussing internal conditions in China in relation to her future foreign policy, and all other countries as well.

Mr. Lattimore reminded the group of the British insistence on clarification of American foreign policy at Mont Tremblant, because it vitally affected the discussion of international policy.

Mr. Coe: He stated that it would be necessary to either bar the whole discussion of China's internal affairs from the conference, or recognize that pertinent angles with reference to them will crop up continually in the discussion.

Mr. Jessup: We must put the stress on the interest which is based on economic and military grounds. Admiral Yarnell has raised the question of the discussion being helpful or harmful. It has been said that it will crop up in the agenda in several places unless it is directly suppressed. The staff should circulate a memoranda stressing these points before the conference takes place.

Mr. de Caux suggested a redrafting of the agenda, including the questions on foreign investment and long-term security.

Mr. Jessup further suggested that all those present should make notes on the agenda to go to the American secretary who was in charge of drafting the agenda, to see whether they might be included.

Miss Farley: If we assume that the American delegation is responsible for the agenda, it may have to stand as it is. If this meeting is considered to be representative, we should decide when and where the Chinese problem should come up, following Mr. Field's suggestion.

Mr. Jessup said that the matter would be discussed at greater length, and that there would be correspondence on the subject.

Mr. Bunche thought that under section C–1 of the agenda, Dumbarton Oaks should play an important part. And also he brought out the fact that a United Nations conference might take place before the Hot Springs meeting, and that that too should be included in the agenda.

Mr. Jessup then stated that the agenda would undergo revision.

C. KIZER.

Mr. MORRIS. There were many conferences such as this?

Mr. DENNETT. There were a series of meetings. I don't know whether it was one week-end meeting, or whether there were a number of them which covered the major points on the agenda.

Mr. MORRIS. Were they all presided over by Dr. Jessup?

Mr. DENNETT. I assume so, because he was to be the chairman of the American delegation.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have a volume, Security in the Pacific?

Mr. DENNETT. I do.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like you to turn to that page which has to do with the make-up of the American delegation.

Mr. DENNETT. Page 157.

Mr. MORRIS. During the various round-table discussions, who, of all the delegates to the convention, was the most vocal?

Mr. DENNETT. The organization of the conference was such that there were three or four simultaneous round tables going on on different agenda items. I therefore only attended the round table to which I was assigned.

Digitized by Google

I attended the plenary meetings. I would say on the basis of my recollection, the most vocal members were Professor Jessup as chairman of the delegation, Admiral Hart as vice chairman.

In regard to problems of southeast Asia and colonial problems generally, it was Ralph Bunche; Frank Coe very much so on economic matters, since that was what he was dealing with in FEA; Mr. Coons; Rupert Emerson; Frederick V. Field; William C. Johnstone; and Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you say Mr. Lattimore was the most vocal of them all?

Mr. DENNETT. Probably. He created a good deal of animosity.

Mr. MORRIS. Why?

Mr. DENNETT. There was one incident I recall where he commented that, "Just as Lincoln said the United States cannot exist half slave and half free, so the world could not exist half slave and half free until the metropolitan countries had freed their colonial territories."

This did not sit very well with the British, French, or Dutch, who thought he had overstated his case somewhat.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he express any views against the Chinese Government there?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall. My impression is that he was very doubtful as to their ability to continue without liberalization of their regime.

I was not in that particular round table, as I recall, and heard these comments only in plenary meetings, of which there were only four or five.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he comment on the necessity of having a Japanese Emperor?

Mr. DENNETT. You mean the necessity of not having one, I take it?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

Mr. DENNETT. He did, at length.

Mr. MORRIS. What did he say? Can you recall the conversation?

Mr. DENNETT. No; except that his general theme was that the Japanese Emperor probably ought to be removed and he did not feel you could have a democratic Japan as long as you had the Japanese Emperor.

Mr. MORRIS. Did any of the members of the secretariat express themselves?

Mr. DENNETT. Yes; a few did, on the international secretariat, T. A. Bisson, and Andrew Grajdanzev.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it proper for them to have expressed themselves?

Mr. DENNETT. There was some argument on that. Mr. Carter felt it was perfectly acceptable. The British, French, Dutch, and other delegations thought that members of the secretariat should not participate in the discussion since they were not full delegates.

There may have been others.

I am looking over this list just to have a complete record on this.

There may have been others that participated in the discussion. I think Professor Corbett did by invitation. I know he gave a talk at one point by request. It is possible that one or two others joined in—Mr. Tamagna I think did.

Digitized by Google

I remember the opposition of the other delegations which arose, particularly to Mr. Bisson and Mr. Grajdanzev.

Mr. Morris, do you plan to put the list of delegates into the record at some point.

It bears on some of the discussion we had this morning.

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; I think Mr. Mandel will put the list into the record in regard to the United States delegation.

Well, I will offer the full list of the United States delegation to the Hot Springs conference and may that be entered completely into the record, Mr. Chairman?

Senator JENNER. Do you want to identify the pages in this?

Mr. MORRIS. These are pages 157, 158, and two-thirds of the way through 159 of Security in the Pacific.

Senator JENNER. It may go in the record at this point.

(List referred to is as follows:)

UNITED STATES

Jessup, Philip C. (1933, 1939, 1942): Professor of international law, Columbia University; former chairman of the Pacific Council, IPR; Chief, Division of Personnel and Training, OFRRA; Secretary pro tem of council of UNRRA, 1943; legal adviser to American Ambassador to Cuba, 1930. Author, The United States and the World Court, 1929; International Security, 1935; The Life of Elihu Root, 1938; chairman.

Hart, Admiral T. C.: Navy General Board, Navy Department; former commander in chief, United States Asiatic Fleet, 1939–42; vice chairman.

Allen, Edward W.: Member, Allen, Hilen, Froude & DeGarmo, attorneys at law, Seattle; American member and chairman of the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission; member, Seattle Chamber of Commerce.

Bolton, Hon. Frances P.: Representative, Twenty-second Ohio District, United States Congress; vice chairman, National Republican Program Committee, 1938–40.

Bunche, Ralph (1942): Area specialist, Office of Special Political Affairs, Department of State; served with the United States group at Dumbarton Oaks Conference; substitute adviser on the United States delegation to the twenty-sixth session of the International Labour Conference at Philadelphia, April–May 1944.

Calkins, Robert D.: Dean, School of Business, Columbia University; dean, College of Commerce, University of California, Berkeley, 1937–41; vice chairman, San Francisco Regional Labor Board, 1934; chairman, Pacific Coast Regional Committee of Social Science, Research Council, 1939–41; chairman, executive committee, American council, IPR consultant, National Resoures Planning Board, 1940–41.

Coe, Frank (1942): Assistant Administrator, Foreign Economic Administration.

Coons, Arthur G.: Dean of faculty and professor of economics at Occidental College, Los Angeles; visiting professor and research fellow at California College in China Foundation, in China, 1933–34; research chairman, southern California region, American Council, IPR, 1938–41.

DeCaux, Len (1942): Publicity director, Congress of Industrial Organizations; editor of the CIO News; Member, board of trustees, American council.

Emerson, Rupert. Director, Liberated Areas Branch, Foreign Economic Administration. On leave from Harvard, associate professor in the department of government. One year 1932–33, spent in Southeast Asia. Author, "Malaysia; a Study in Direct and Indirect Rule."

Fahey, Col. Daniel D., Jr., member of the Operations Division, War Department General Staff, assigned as working member with Civil Affairs Division.

Field, Frederick V. (1929, 1931, 1933, 1936, 1939, 1942). Executive vice chairman, Council for Pan-American Democracy. Secretary, American County IPR, 1935–1940. Author, "American Participation in the China Consortiums"; editor, "Economic Handbook of the Pacific Area," 1934. General editor, "Economic Survey of the Pacific Area," 1942.

Digitized by Google

Gerbode, Mrs. Frank A. (1929). Member, Executive Committee, San Francisco Bay Region, American Council, IPR.

Gilchrist, Huntington. Executive, American Cyanamid Co.; Chief of Department of Administrative Commissions, League of Nations Secretariat, 1920–25; Assistant Director of Mandates Section, League of Nations, 1925–28; instructor, Anglo-Chinese College, Foochow, 1913–14; Peking University, 1914–15; secretary of the second session of the UNRRA Council, Montreal, 1944.

Johnstone, William C. Director of Washington Study Program, IPE; professor of political science and dean of the School of Government, the George Washington University, Washington, D. C.

Keesing, Felix M. (1931). Professor of Anthropology, Stanford University, Calif.; professor and chairman, department of anthropology and sociology, University of Hawaii, 1937–43; author, "Modern Samoa," 1934: "The Philippines—A Nation in the Making", 1937; "The South Seas in the Modern World," 1941.

Kirk, Grayson. Research associate, Institute of International Studies, Yale University; professor of government at Columbia University; served with the United States group at Dumbarton Oaks Conference; author, "Philippine Independence," 1936.

Lattimore, Owen (1933, 1936, 1939, 1942), director, Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University; consultant, Office of War Information; former political adviser to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

MacKay, J. A. Vice president, National City Bank, New York, in charge of far eastern district.

McCoy, Maj. Gen. Frank R. United States Army retired (1939, 1942). President, Foreign Policy Association. Member of Wood-Forbes special mission to the Philippines, 1921; in charge of American relief activities in Japan following the earthquake of 1923; American member of the League of Nations Commission of Inquiry in Manchuria, 1932.

Morrison, George Abbot. Vice chairman. Bucyrus-Erie Co., Milwaukee; chairman, Milwaukee Office, American Council IPR.

Salisbury, Laurence. Editor, Far Eastern Survey. American Council IPR; Former Foreign Service officer: 12 years in Japan, 5 in China, and 2 in Manila, 5 years in the Department of State.

Staley, Eugene (1939). School of Advanced International Studies, Washington, D. C. Consultant United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration; formerly on faculty of University of Chicago, Institute Universitaire de Hautes Etudes Internationales (Geneva), Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy; author, "World Economy in Transition," 1939; "World Economic Development: Effects on Established Industrial Countries," 1944.

Thompson, Laura. Coordinator of research in administration, Society for Applied Anthropology; formerly consultant to the United States Naval Government of Guam. Author, "Guam and Its People," "Fifian Frontiers," "Steps Toward Colonial Freedom."

Van Zandt, J. Parker. Research associate, the Brookings Institution; observer at International Civil Aviation Conference in Chicago, 1944. Author, "Civil Aviation and Peace," "The Geography of World Air Transport."

Vincent, John Carter. Chief, Division of Chinese Affairs, Department of State.

Waymack, W. W. Editor and vice president, The Des Moines Register and Tribune; chairman, Economic Policy Committee, 1938–41.

Dennett. Raymond. Secretary, American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, 1 East Fifty-fourth Street, New York 22, N. Y., secretary.

AMERICAN SECRETARIAT

Dorothy Borg (1939, 1942), temporary member, American Council staff.

Miriam S. Farley (1936, 1939, 1942). Editor, American Council Pamphlet Series; research associate, American Council, IPR.

Margaret Fischl. American Council staff.

Shirley Jenkins. Assistant editor, Far Eastern Survey, American Council, IPR.

Mrs. William C. Johnstone. Temporary member, American Council staff.

Carolyn Kizer (1936, 1942). American Council staff.

Bruno Lasker (1931, 1933, 1936, 1942). Research Associate, American Council, IPR.

Eleanor Lattimore (1936, 1939). Washington Office, American Council, IPR.

Digitized by Google

Charles F. Loomis (1925, 1927, 1929, 1931, 1933, 1936, 1939, 1942). Secretary, Hawaii Office, American Council, IPR; Chief, Morale Section, Office of the Military Governor, Hawaii.

J. J. Mickle. Temporary member, American Council staff.

Harriet Mills. American Council Staff.

Harriet H. Parker. Assistant to the Secretary, American Council, IPR.

Lawrence K. Rosinger (1939). Far Eastern Research Associate, Foreign Policy Association.

Frances Sharpe. American Council Staff.

Marguerite A. Stewart. Editor and secretary of the school department, American Council IPR.

Rose Yardumian (1942). Washington Representative, American Council, IPR.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you turn to page 161 and describe the makeup of the conference secretariat?

Mr. DENNETT. The conference secretariat was composed, I would say, of three classes of people, perhaps four.

First were members of the staff of the institute, or the international secretariat.

Second were people who were very much interested in coming to the conference who were not quite important enough to be put on as delegates and were brought to take notes.

Third were a number of people who were obtained from the Government to act as recorders and to take notes. Some of these came from the Department of State; some from the Army and the Navy. Some, I believe, were brought by the Canadian delegation.

Mr. MORRIS. What was Michael Lee doing there, do you know?

Mr. DENNETT. Presumably he was acting as a recorder and taking notes. I don't recall him at all.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you recall the role of Lt. Andrew Roth?

Mr. DENNETT. He was a recorder taking notes.

Mr. MORRIS. I notice he was there as a naval officer.

Mr. DENNETT. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you remember anything about the background of his being there as a naval officer?

Mr. DENNETT. I believe Mr. Carter suggested to me at the time we were discussing the staffing of this conference that at Mont Tremblant the conferences had proved to be of sufficient interest so that we had been able to obtain recorders without cost to us by inviting the Army and Navy to send junior officers to attend.

Mr. Carter suggested that since the American Council was the host council that I should take this subject up, which I did do, writing to the appropriate people in the military and naval establishments drawing their attention to the nature of the conference, the people who were going to be there, the agenda which was to be discussed, and asking whether they wished to assign certain people there.

Most of the Army and naval officers on this list were so assigned.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, do we have any correspondence on this point?

Mr. MANDEL. We have an exchange of correspondence dealing with negotiations with Admiral F. J. Horne, Vice Chief of Naval Operations, and in the correspondence is listed those officers who were assigned by the Navy to the conference.

In a letter addressed to Admiral Horne from Raymond Dennett, dated December 4, 1944, as taken from the files of the Institute of

Digitized by Google

Pacific Relations are four officers listed, among whom is Ensign Andrew Roth.

I offer that for the record.

Senator JENNER. It may go in.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 294" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 294

DECEMBER 4, 1944.

Admiral F. J. HORNE,
Vice Chief of Naval Operations,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR ADMIRAL HORNE: This will acknowledge with thanks your letter of December 1, in which you assign the following officers as recorders at the Ninth Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations: Lt. Robert J. Bradley, Lt. (jg) Hugh D. Farley, Lt. (jg) William E. Franklin, and Ensign Andrew Roth.

It is my understanding that if there is any change in these assignments, you will notify me.

Invitations and information about the conference will be sent to these officers by Miss Hilda Austern of the international secretariat.

Thank you again for your cooperation in this matter. I hope the results of the conference will be of value to your department.

Sincerely yours,

RAYMOND DENNETT, Secretary.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you remember such correspondence?

Mr. DENNETT. I remember having correspondence with Admiral Horne.

Mr. MORRIS. I think that is enough, Mr. Chairman.

However, do you remember the presence of Squadron Leader Fred W. Poland at the conference?

Mr. DENNETT. I do not, but I see his name here, so I assume he was.

Mr. MORRIS. This is the conference secretariat?

Mr. DENNETT. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that the international secretariat or the American secretariat?

Mr. DENNETT. It was a mixed bag. The conference secretariat was composed, as I have suggested, by a number of people. They were merely those who were doing the recording, the clerical work, and so on.

I was responsible for getting the military people, some of these people like Mr. Fairbanks, Knight Biggerstaff, and various others, who were people we would like to have had on the delegation, but there was not enough room for all of them.

Others were provided for by Mr. Carter, the international secretariat, or by the Canadian delegation, which was also asked to supply people.

Mr. MORRIS. They all seem to be Americans, but there are a few Canadians?

Mr. DENNETT. There were two Canadians, apparently; Squadron Leader Poland and Lieutenant Doull. Lieutenant Jan may have been an American.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I call attention to the fact that this is a conference secretariat list of a conference being held at Hot Springs in the United States in 1945.

I was wondering if this committee should take any testimony, or take an insert here about the political complexion of Squadron Leader Fred W. Poland. He does appear in our correspondence at other places, and should the fact that he is a Canadian exclude the introduction of these opinions in our record?

Digitized by Google

Senator JENNER. I do not think so.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read an excerpt from the Canadian Royal Commission of the political complexion of Fred Poland, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. I read from the report of the Canadian Royal Commission, dated June 27, 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the Canadian Royal Commission?

Mr. MANDEL. It was a body set up to investigate espionage activities in Canada. One of the persons involved was F. W. Poland.

I read excerpts referring to him.

Mr. MORRIS. Is this the conclusion of the Royal Commission, or testimony taken by the Royal Commission?

Mr. MANDEL. The excerpts include testimony and sort of an introductory statement.

* * * In general, the military espionage network in Canada, headed by Colonel Zabotin, was a self-contained unit directed from Moscow. At times, however, the documents from Colonel Zabotin's secret archives refer specifically to espionage networks in other countries. Some of these documents relate to the "handing over" from one espionage network to another of agents who have moved or are about to move to Canada from another country or from Canada to another country (p. 31).

Now, on page 163, it says:

F. W. Poland was born in the United States on the 20th of June 1909, of English parentage. In the spring of 1942 he became an administrative intelligence officer in the RCAF, Ottawa. He held the rank of squadron leader. As from November 10, 1944, he was seconded to the Armed Forces Section of the Wartime Information Board, and from May 1945 he was executive secretary of the Interdepartmental Psychological Warfare Committee. * * *

Then further, on page 165, it says:

* * * In Zabotin's notebook where he gives the outline of the organization of the Ottawa-Toronto group more fully dealt with in section III–1. (Sam Carr) we find the following entry, probably written in the fall of 1943:

"Poland. Department of Air Force:

"Works in Toronto in the Intelligence Branch. At the moment he has been transferred to Ottawa. He gave a map of the training schools. Is not yet working."

Mr. MORRIS. Please continue with the rest.

Mr. MANDEL. Here is testimony in regard to Poland:

* * * We have only this evidence to indicate that Poland has given any information or documents to the U. S. S. R. He was, however, obviously well known to the Russians, and at a certain period it was thought that he would be more useful if transferred to the NKVD. Speaking of him, Gouzenko said:

"Question. Had you heard of Poland other than what you say in that document? Had you heard his name mentioned?

"Answer. That is right.

"Question. What did you hear about him?

"Answer. I saw it in a telegram which was sent by Zabotin to Moscow in 1943 concerning Poland and he suggested to give Poland to the NKVD.

"Question. Just explain, will you please, what you mean by giving Poland to the NKVD.

"Answer. Poland was described as a clever man and Colonel Zabotin proposed to Moscow in a telegram to hand him over to Neighbours, which is the NKVD. Neighbours is the nickname for the NKVD. Moscow replied that it was not worth while; to wait a while; that he might develop into a good worker. I still do not know his real name or nickname. That was the only other time I saw the name of Poland and still I do not know whether it was his real name or his nickname.

Digitized by Google

"Question. Did you have any knowledge apart from exhibit No. 22 of what Poland was doing?

"Answer. The telegrams that were sent on this subject made no detailed mention of his activities."

This was probably in August 1943 when Poland had not yet been given a cover name, for in Zabotin's notes we see, in the margin, opposite the reference to Poland and to another: "New names not given." (p. 166.).

Heard as a witness, Boyer says of Poland:

"Question. How long have you known him?"

That is referring to Poland.

"Answer. Ever since he came to Montreal, which I think was in the summer of 1939—1938 or 1939, I am not sure.

"Question. And do you know anything about his political sympathies?

"Answer. Well, I know he is sympathetic to the old Communist Party and the present Labour-Progressive Party, or that he was when I last saw him, which is a few years ago now."

In Poland's notebook, which has an alphabetical index, we find the name of Corporal Lawson, W. T. This man has been identified as William Lawson who was formerly connected with the Communist Party of Canada in Toronto. In 1939 Lawson acted as a teacher in the Leadership School of the Young Communist League, and in the January 1, 1940, civic election in Toronto, was elected as the representative of ward 4 to the Toronto Board of Education. Later he publicly admitted that he was a Communist, and went into hiding for a certain period of time until he was eventually located and detained in 1942 under regulation 21 of the Defense of Canada Regulations.

Mr. MORRIS. Does that mean that Poland publicly admitted he was a Communist?

Mr. MANDEL. No, that is referring to William Lawson whose name was found in Poland's notebook.

In the same notebook we find the names of Nightingale and Agatha Chapman, the latter being one of the main organizers of Communist cells in Ottawa, from where were recruited many of Zabotin's most ardent agents.

Poland also had some correspondence with a man named Mark Frank. It has been established that this person was connected with a magazine named the New Advance, which was the organ of the Young Communist League. Other inquiries reveal that Frank had also received subscriptions for the Clarion, the official organ of the Communist Party in Canada.

Mr. MORRIS. May that be introduced into the record purely to show the make-up of a conference being held in Hot Springs, Va., in the United States, Mr. Chairman?

Senator JENNER. It may go in the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 295" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 295

F. W. POLAND

* * * In general, the military espionage network in Canada, headed by Colonel Zabotin, was a self-contained unit directed from Moscow. At times, however, the documents from Colonel Zabotin's secret archives refer specifically to espionage networks in other countries. Some of these documents relate to the "handing over" from one espionage network to another of agents who have moved or are about to move to Canada from another country or from Canada to another country (p. 31).

F. W. Poland was born in the United States on June 20, 1909, of English parentage. In the spring of 1942, he became an administrative intelligence officer in the RCAF, Ottawa. He held the rank of squadron leader. As from November 10, 1944, he was seconded to the Armed Forces Section of the Wartime Information Board, and from May 1945 he was executive secretary of the Interdepartmental Psychological Warfare Committee (p. 163).

* * * In Zabotin's notebook where he gives the outline of the organization of the Ottawa-Toronto group more fully dealt with in section III–I. (Sam Carr) we find the following entry, probably written in the fall of 1943:

Digitized by Google

"3. Poland, Department of Air Force: Works in Toronto in the Intelligence Branch. At the moment he has been transferred to Ottawa. He gave a map of the training schools. Is not yet working" (p. 165).

* * * We have only this evidence to indicate that Poland has given any information or documents to the U. S. S. R. He was, however, obviously well known to the Russians, and at a certain period it was thought that he would be more useful if transferred to the NKVD. Speaking of him, Gouzenko said:

"Q. Had you heard of Poland other than what you saw in that document? Had you heard his name mentioned?—A. That is right.

"Q. What did you hear about him?—A. I saw it in a telegram which was sent by Zabotin to Moscow in 1943 concerning Poland and he suggested to give Poland to the NKVD.

"Q. Just explain, will you please, what you mean by giving Poland to the NKVD.—A. Poland was described as a clever man and Colonel Zabotin proposed to Moscow in a telegram to hand him over to Neighbours, which is the NKVD. Neighbours is the nickname for the NKVD. Moscow replied that it was not worth while; to wait a while; that he might develop into a good worker. I still do not know his real name or nickname. That was the only other time I saw the name of Poland and still I do not know whether it was his real name or his nickname.

"Q. Did you have any knowledge apart from exhibit No. 22 of what Poland was doing?—A. The telegrams that were sent on this subject made no detailed mention of his activities."

This was probably in August 1943 when Poland had not yet been given a cover name, for in Zabotin's notes we see, in the margin, opposite the reference to Poland and to another: "New names not given" (p. 166).

Heard as a witness, Boyer says of Poland:

"Q. How long have you known him?—A. Ever since he came to Montreal, which I think was in the summer of 1939—1938 or 1939, I am not sure.

"Q. And do you know anything about his political sympathies?—A. Well, I know he is sympathetic to the old Communist Party and the present Labour-Progressive Party, or that he was when I last saw him, which is a few years ago now."

In Poland's notebook, which has an alphabetical index, we find the name of Corporal Lawson, W. T. This man has been identified as William Lawson who was formerly connected with the Communist Party of Canada in Toronto. In 1939, Lawson acted as a teacher in the Leadership School of the Young Communist League, and in the January 1, 1940, civic election in Toronto, was elected as the representative of ward 4 to the Toronto Board of Education. Later, he publicly admitted that he was a Communist, and went into hiding for a certain period of time until he was eventually located and detained in 1942 under Regulation 21 of the Defense of Canada Regulations.

In the same notebook we find the names of Nightingale and Agatha Chapman, the latter being one of the main organizers of Communist cells in Ottawa from where were recruited many of Zabotin's most ardent agents.

Poland also had some correspondence with a man named Mark Frank. It has been established that this person was connected with a magazine named the New Advance, which was the organ of the Young Communist League. Other inquiries reveal that Frank had also received subscriptions for the Clarion, the official organ of the Communist Party in Canada.

In Poland's office, room 309 of the New Post Office Building, a calendar pad was also found. The name of Pavlov, who is the head of the NKVD in Ottawa, appears on pages dated the 30th of October 1945; the 1st of November 1945; the 4th of November 1945; the 5th of November 1945 (plus a telephone number which is 5–4341); the 15th of November 1945; the 19th of November 1945; the 23d of November 1945; the 26th of November 1945; the 17th of December 1945; the 28th of December 1945; and the 5th of January 1946. The telephone number 5–4341 is that of the Soviet Embassy, 285 Charlotte Street, Ottawa (pp. 167–8) (the report of the Royal Commission, June 27, 1946).

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have here about four or five more exhibits. They are not particularly important. If you have to hurry, we can let them go.

Senator JENNER. Please proceed.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, I offer you a copy of a letter which purports to be a communication from Mr. Carter to you and ask you if you can recall that letter?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't recall the letter, but as I testified earlier, I was continually getting memoranda from Mr. Carter.

I assume this is one of many.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you certify the authenticity of that letter?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat copy of a letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated December 29, 1944, headed "R. D. from E. C. C.," presumably Raymond Dennett from E. C. Carter.

It reads as follows:

When Michael Greenberg was in the other day he asked whether Irving Friedman, who has just returned from Chungking for the United States Treasury, was going to Hot Springs. I told him that I didn't know for sure, but would refer the matter to you.

From all accounts Friedman had a very successful experience in China and India. He is Harry White's right-hand man on the Far East in the Treasury. You will remember the exceptionally good book he did for the IPR in the Inquiry series when he was a member of the international secretariat.

I remember that Amco originally hoped to persuade Harry White to join the American group. I also know that your list is already over full and that this suggestion comes to you late in the day. I therefore do not anticipate that you will be able to act affirmatively in this matter; if so I know it will cause you and your colleagues great regret.

I sympathize with you in your difficult situation. I am in the same plight myself in that I am having to similarly turn down many applications, some of them from people who would be a real asset. Most of these people don't realize the limits that have to be put on the conference in order to get real discussion instead of the conference being a general town meeting.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the letter introduced in evidence.

Senator JENNER. It may go in.

(The document referred to and read in full by Mr. Mandel was marked "Exhibit No. 296" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. I show you a letter from Mr. Carter to you, dated October 19, 1945, and ask you if you can identify that?

Mr. DENNETT. That is in the same category as the others. I have no doubt I received it.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you authenticate that letter, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. It appears to be an interoffice memorandum and is dated October 19, 1945, headed "R. D. from E. C. C."

It reads as follows:

I don't know whether you ever knew Duncan Lee. He was, I think, at one time a Rhodes scholar; then he went into OSS and has ended up a colonel. He is likely to return to Gen. "Big Bill" Donovan's law firm in Wall Street and certainly would be a useful member of Amco and might conceivably be a useful member of the Amco board and executive committee. He has a very deep interest in the Far East and has been there a good deal for OSS.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Lee has been identified before this committee as being a Communist. I would like that introduced in the record.

Senator JENNER. It may go in.

(Document referred to and read in full by Mr. Mandel was marked "Exhibit No. 297" and filed for the record.)

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. I show you what purports to be a letter from yourself to Rose Yardumian, dated March 5, 1945, and ask you if you can identify that letter?

Mr. DENNETT. I can.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you authenticate that letter, please, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated March 5, 1945, addressed to Miss Rose Yardumian, from Raymond Dennett. It reads as follows:

Please make an appointment for me to see Dr. Ludwik Rajchman, 2300 Decatur Place NW, Washington, D. C. I have dropped him a note about wanting to see him and enclosed a letter of introduction from Huntington Gilchrist.

I should imagine that the best thing would be to try and get me an afternoon appointment at his home. I probably would want to spend pretty nearly an hour with him; so, you can plan things accordingly.

See you Monday. With cordial best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

RAYMOND DENNETT, Secretary.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like that letter introduced, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JENNER. It may go in.

(Document referred to and read in full by Mr. Mandel was marked "Exhibit No. 298" and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have a paper that will show that Mr. Ludwik Rajchman is presently a delegate of the Polish Communist Government to the United Nations?

Mr. MANDEL. Permit me to recall a letter previously introduced in evidence from the Department of State from H. J. L'Heureux, Chief of the Visa Division, to Senator Pat McCarran.

I read the last sentence in reference to Ludwik Rajchman:

The bearer of the passport was described as Polish Government delegate to and chairman of the Children's Emergency Fund of the United Nations.

Mr. MORRIS. That has been introduced already, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DENNETT. May I for the record say, as I recall, I was talking to Dr. Rajchman about League of Nations activities and public health in southeast Asia, so there will be no inference as to what I was doing with him on the basis of the record that has been made so far.

Mr. MORRIS. That is a fitting observation on the part of Mr. Dennett.

Mr. DENNETT. I want to be clear on that.

Mr. MORRIS. On the basis of your experience as secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, whom would you describe as the leading forces in shaping policy for the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. DENNETT. You are talking now about the American council?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DENNETT. Rather than the Pacific council?

Mr. MORRIS. I am going to ask you about both. Please give the over-all impression.

Mr. DENNETT. The major policy formulation in the American council, my impression was prior to my time the staff had a great deal more to do with policy than they should have.

So, I would say from the point of view of the board of directors the most interested people in the American council were Owen Lattimore and Dr. Jessup, with Mr. Huggins and probably Mr. Seymour as the No. 2 people.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Did the influence of Mr. Lattimore and Mr. Jessup even show during those periods when the staff did have a dominant influence in the affairs of the institute?

Mr. DENNETT. I don't think I would go quite that far, because Lattimore was engaged in Government work in the OWI and was seldom around on the council's activities.

Jessup I saw for a portion of the time he was there. I made him chairman of our research advisory committee, but he was not on the executive committee while he was there.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jessup, as far as you know, was an influence in the Institute of Pacific Relations for a period of many years?

Mr. DENNETT. That certainly was my impression.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know whether Mrs. Ellen Atkinson attended the Hot Springs conference?

Mr. DENNETT. I think she did, but I am not sure.

Mr. MORRIS. Again, was that arrangement made through the War Department?

Mr. DENNETT. Presumably it was; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. I have a letter here. Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate it?

Mr. MANDEL. There are two letters here from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, one dated December 24, 1944, from the War Department addressed to Mr. Raymond Dennett, coming from Clayton Bissell, major general. It reads:

Reference is made to your letter of December 12, 1944, in which you suggest that Mrs. Ellen Atkinson might be detailed to attend the discussions of the conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations to be held in Hot Springs from January 5 to January 19, 1945, because of her experience in the Far East.

Thank you for the suggestion. It is believed, however, that it is preferable to adhere to the original arrangement. I am sure you will be pleased with the four officers whose names were included on the original list.

Then the next letter is dated December 27, 1944, to General Bissell from Raymond Dennett, reading as follows:

Many thanks for your letter of December 24, stating that Mrs. Atkinson will not be assigned to the conference.

I had no intention whatsoever of requesting her assignment but merely wished to draw her to your attention in case you were disposed to assigning her.

I am sure the four officers you have assigned will prove most helpful to us.

With sincerest best wishes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like those introduced in the record.

Senator JENNER. They may go in.

(The documents referred to and read by Mr. Mandel were marked "Exhibits Nos. 299 and 300" and filed for the record.)

Mr. DENNETT. Does that say she was or was not assigned, because I think I said she attended.

Senator JENNER. Was not.

Mr. DENNETT. Then my guess that she was there should be removed, because I was not sure.

Mr. MORRIS. In connection with the mention of Squadron Leader Fred Poland, and I think the record should show that on March 23, 1946, he had a habeas corpus proceeding filed for him, and on January 17, 1947, he was acquitted of charges of espionage in the County

Digitized by Google

Court of Ottawa on January 17; so, I would like the record to show that.

Senator JENNER. It may so show.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Dennett, was Gunther Stein, about whom we have had testimony in the past, present as a member of the United States delegation to the Hot Springs convention?

Mr. DENNETT. That is correct.

Senator JENNER. We will close at this time until 10 a. m., Friday morning.

(Whereupon at 2:15 p. m., Wednesday, September 26, 1951, the hearings were recessed until 10 a. m., Friday, September 28, 1951.)

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 2 p. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. James Eastland presiding.

Present: Senators Eastland and Ferguson.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

Senator EASTLAND. The committee will come to order.

Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I do so state.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM MONTGOMERY McGOVERN, NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

Mr. MORRIS. Before we commence the testimony, there is a letter from Prof. Rupert Emerson, of Harvard University, which I would like to read into the record. Mr. Mandel, will you read the letter or put it in the record?

Senator EASTLAND. It will be inserted in the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 301" and is as follows:)

HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCES
DEPARTMENT OF GOVERNMENT,
Cambridge, Mass., September 26, 1951.

Senator PATRICK MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Senate Internal Security Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: It is reported in the New York Times today that Prof. K. W. Colegrove testified before your committee yesterday that at a State Department round table conference in October 1949 I fell into a group which he labels as pro-Communist. I believe that a glance at the record will demonstrate that I was not invited to this conference and did not participate in it. I refer you to page 280 of the Tydings report on the State Department employee loyalty investigation of July 20, 1950, which gives a list of those present at this conference. I find it dismaying that the procedures of your committee allow the publication of misinformation which is easily verifiable.

I was, however, for a brief time, a consultant to the State Department on far eastern matters. In that capacity, as in my teaching, speaking, and writing, I freely expressed my views which were arrived at on the basis of independent study and conviction. The free expression of such views appears to me to be the right, and the obligation, of an American citizen. I have no doubt that from time to time these views were in disagreement with those of Professor Colegrove, and even with the official policy of the United States, but I am profoundly shocked that such disagreement can give rise to the loose and dangerous charge of procommunism.

Digitized by Google

For the sake of the record I should like to add I have never had any connection of any kind with the Communist Party nor, to the best of my knowledge, any association with Communist groups.

Since I have no other knowledge of what Professor Colegrove said than the Times report, I would appreciate it if you would have a transcript of the proceedings in which my name was mentioned sent to me.

Sincerely yours,

RUPERT EMERSON.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator McCarran's reply to Professor Emerson is also introduced in evidence.

Senator EASTLAND. That will be ordered.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 302" and is as follows:)

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION
OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT
AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS,
September 28, 1951.

MR. RUPERT EMERSON,
Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

DEAR MR. EMERSON: I have your letter of September 26, 1951, in which you protest being mentioned by Professor Colegrove as being a member of a pro-Communist group that attended the State Department round-table conference in October 1949.

I write this to say that Professor Colegrove did not mention your name in his testimony, and, in fact, the list of people who attended the conference and which was inserted in our public record did not contain your name.

However, I will be glad to enter your letter and this answer into the record.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give us your name, please?

Mr. MCGOVERN. William Montgomery McGovern.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present address?

Mr. MCGOVERN. My private address is 1412 Judson Avenue, Evanston, Ill. My business address is care of Northwestern University.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present position?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I am professor of political science at Northwestern University.

Mr. MORRIS. How long have you held that position?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I have been at Northwestern since 1929, first of all as an associate professor and later, since 1936, as professor.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your education? Will you give us a brief sketch of it?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I would say a good deal is through travel. I was born in New York City of an American mother and father, but I spent a good deal of my boyhood in the Far East, in China, Japan, and the Philippines, attending various schools.

Later I completed my education in England, France, and in Germany at Oxford, the Sorbonne at Paris, and the University of Berlin in Germany.

Mr. MORRIS. What degrees do you hold?

Digitized by Google

Mr. McGOVERN. Ph. D.

Mr. MORRIS. Where did you obtain it?

Mr. McGOVERN. Oxford.

Mr. MORRIS. How many books have you written?

Mr. McGOVERN. I have written all together 10 books.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you sketch those notable ones dealing with the Far East?

Mr. McGOVERN. As a matter of fact, the first book I wrote was a book called Modern Japan: Its Political, Military, and Industrial Organization. I wrote a Japanese grammar called Colloquial Japanese.

I wrote a book called Early Empires of Central Asia. It took me about 7 years to write that, based on the Chinese and other sources dealing with the history of central Asia.

I also wrote a report for the congressional Committee on Foreign Affairs dealing with the political, military, and economic situation in Japan, China, and Korea.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, when did you first have occasion to study the political forces that were at work in the Orient?

Mr. McGOVERN. As far as that is concerned, when I was a young boy and young man in Japan and China I began studying them at first hand, talking to various Chinese, Japanese, Korean, and Philippine people. So I kept my interest in them ever since.

For a while, I was in London at the University of London teaching Chinese and Japanese at the School of Oriental Studies. So naturally I had to keep up my contacts there.

Ever since I have been back in the United States at Northwestern University I have been professor of political science with a special reference to international relations, and I have had to try to keep in touch with developments both in the Near East and the Far East.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you first become aware of the existence of the Chinese Communist movement in China?

Mr. McGOVERN. Of course, I read about it in a general sort of way in the very confused period of Chinese influence in 1920, read about the early rise of the Communist movement there, but I began taking more serious and intensive interest in the Chinese Communist movement around 1935 and 1936.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you think then they were agrarian reformers and not Communists?

Mr. McGOVERN. No, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. That they were not connected with Moscow?

Mr. McGOVERN. No, sir. I went into it with an open mind. In the 1920's I had an open mind. In 1935–36 I began reading what the Communists were doing and saying in their published records. I became convinced they were really Communists. I am always willing to keep an open mind as long as possible.

I kept an open mind until 1937–38 when I was in the Far East studying the situation on the ground. By 1937–38 I was convinced they were Communists. And that they were in close cahoots with the Kremlin.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you think they were getting supplies and materials from Moscow?

Mr. McGOVERN. The amount was astonishingly small. The thing that interested me was how close they followed the party line.

Digitized by Google

Senator EASTLAND. Did they get any help from Moscow?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I was never able to put my finger on any actual munitions that came from the Communists. In 1937 I was especially interested in that, and I was unable to see they were getting actual supplies, although in 1937 they were still following the party line. Why, it is mystery.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you read the Communist basic literature on the relation between the Chinese Communist Party and the Communist International?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes; I have read it, both in Chinese and in various English translations. It so happens, having grown up in the Far East, I read Chinese and Japanese quite well, and I was not content with the English translation of it. I have studied very basic documents, books, and articles by Mao Tse-tung.

I have also read the various articles and addresses and speeches made by Chou En Lai, who to my mind is the most authoritative spokesman of the Communist group.

Senator FERGUSON. Your opinion is he is an international Communist and follows the Moscow line?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir; I am convinced of that. There was no sudden conversion. He has been a complete Marxist. He is a Marxist Communist, but not only a Marxist Communist but a Stalinist Communist as well.

Mr. MORRIS. Are these basic underlying doctrines that show the Chinese Communists as compared to the Communist International available to all scholars?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Certainly anyone who reads Chinese should have no difficulty. Some of the translations of Mao Tse-tung of China's New Democracy are not very good translations. You might be in doubt if you read the English translation. If you read the Chinese you would have no doubt. If you read it carefully even the bad English translation seems to be clear and obvious.

Senator FERGUSON. Who translated that into English?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I have forgotten. The best available translation is published in a publication brought out by the congressional House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Senator FERGUSON. I was wondering whether or not you saw any evidence in that translation that it was done poorly to conceal the real tie?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Even with the poor translation I think it is very clear. After reading that English translation, I went back to the Chinese original. To my mind the Chinese original was more definite and clear.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you first meet Owen Lattimore?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I first met Owen Lattimore for a few moments in 1928 or 1929.

Mr. MORRIS. At that time were you able to arrive at any substantial conclusion as to his political beliefs?

Mr. MCGOVERN. No, sir; in 1928–29 it was purely a social occasion. He was going to central Asia, Outer Mongolia, so we talked about travel and travel conditions. I saw him much more in the winter of 1937–38 when I found him spending the winter in Peking, as was I. I was on leave of absence from Northwestern University, and I found he was out there spending his winter there. I saw quite a good deal of him during that period.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. What year was that?

Mr. MCGOVERN. 1937–38.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he ever discuss with you during that period the political complexion of the Chinese Communists?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir. During the period 1937–38 in various luncheon parties and dinner parties at which we were guests he was frequent in showing his warm admiration for the Chinese Communists—that they were the future for China and that they represented the real people.

On several occasions he indicated they were not Communists, and that is where we had violent differences of opinion.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you give him your views they were?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir. I always like to keep an open mind. At that time my mind was getting more and more convinced they were Communists. I asked him for evidence to show they were not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you give him the evidence they were?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I told him about the articles and essays of Mao Tse-tung and the other Communist leaders. I was certainly of the opinion that he could read Chinese and was going to read them.

Mr. MORRIS. On approximately how many occasions did you have these discussions with Owen Lattimore during the period late 1937 and early 1938?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Without having my diary before me, I cannot answer exactly, but I would say certainly more than 10 times and less than 15; 10 to 15 times.

Mr. MORRIS. There was a uniformity of consistency to his views?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he ever change those views?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I was somewhat surprised, considering his general attitude and frequent remarks in 1937–38. I again saw him after an absence of some years in the winter of 1941–42. After December 15 when I was called to active duty here in Washington and before March and April, that is, I saw him five or six times here in Washington then. I was very much surprised when he was at that time rather enthusiastic about Chiang Kai-shek. He was expressing great admiration for him as a great leader and a great leader of a democratic movement, and considering the conversations I had heard in 1937–38, I was somewhat surprised at that change of attitude.

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony now that after you heard Professor Lattimore express the views at great length in 1937–38 that he did, which views were consistent with the Chinese Communists' aims, you then heard him in 1941 praise Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you call that to his attention?

Mr. MCGOVERN. No, sir. This was wartime. I thought he and I were both working for the Government. I did not think it was necessary to bring it up. I thought he changed his mind. I am now convinced it was more part of the general technique of the fellow-travelers to have a united front during that particular time.

You find in reading the writings of the Mao Tse-tung himself that was so during that period.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. Will you tell us why you think that was true?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Merely because of the fact that from time to time various Communist and pro-Communist leaders and popular front leaders have changed their line of approach to fit the world situation both in Europe and in Asia and inside the United States of America, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. Browder at one time would say one thing, and a few weeks later say the opposite thing, according to Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony that the Communist Party line with respect to Chiang Kai-shek changed in 1941?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir. After the attack on Pearl Harbor the Communist line definitely changed, as you can see in the writings both of Moscow and in the speeches of Mao Tse-tung.

Senator EASTLAND. You say you can tell from readings a man's work what kind of a Communist he is?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Would you repeat that?

Senator EASTLAND. You say from reading what a person writes you can tell what kind of a Communist he is?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Not invariably. There are some people who hew exactly to the party line. In other words, if you read the New York Daily Worker, you can tell what A, B, and C are going to say the next day.

Senator EASTLAND. You could tell whether one was a Trotskyite or a Stalinist?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Those who follow the full-fledged Communists are those who essentially are Stalinists, and those you can tell.

Senator EASTLAND. You have always read what Owen Lattimore wrote?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I will not say I have read every word he has written, but I have read several of his books.

Senator EASTLAND. What kind of a Communist did you think he was?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I have no evidence whatsoever that Mr. Lattimore——

Senator EASTLAND. I know you have not seen his card. You have not been to a party meeting, but then what is your judgment now from reading his works?

Mr. MCGOVERN. From reading him and hearing him talk, that he is a popular front man, either using or being used by the Communists.

Senator EASTLAND. Is he a Stalinist?

Mr. MCGOVERN. He is not a Trotskyite. He is definitely following the Stalinist line.

Senator EASTLAND. He has always followed the Stalinist line?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. I want to show you a letter which is an exhibit and have you read two paragraphs. The original of this was written by Owen Lattimore to E. C. Carter. I have marked the paragraphs I would like to have you read.

Senator EASTLAND. Read them aloud.

Mr. MCGOVERN (reading):

I think that you are pretty cagey in turning over so much of the China section of the inquiry to Asiaticus, Han-seng and Chi. They will bring out the absolutely essential radical aspects, but can be depended on to do it with the right touch.

For the general purposes of this inquiry it seems to me that the good scoring position, for the IPR, differs with different countries. For China, my hunch is that it will pay to keep behind the official Chinese Communist position—far enough not to be covered by the same label—but enough ahead of the active Chinese liberals to be noticeable. For Japan, on the other hand, hang back so as not to be inconveniently ahead of the Japanese liberals, who cannot keep up, whereas the Chinese liberals can. So the chief thing is to oppose the military wing of Japanese aggression in China, counting on a check there to take care of both the military and the civilian components of aggression in Japan. For the British—scare the hell out of them, always in a polite way, but usually in a way that looks as if it might turn impolite. The British liberal groups are badly flustered, and being British, the way to encourage them to pull themselves together is to fluster the Tories. For the U. S. S. R.—back their international policy in general, but without using their slogans and above all without giving them or anybody else an impression of "subservience."

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. That was written by Owen Lattimore to E. C. Carter, who was then the secretary of the IPR. Could you comment on that as to what that means?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I am not at all surprised. I did see this letter, but not until fairly recently when it came out in testimony. I am not surprised because I read Pacific Affairs rather closely and followed his editorials. That, I may say by way of comment, was the reason why I refused to join the IPR.

For many years past I have been teaching Chinese and Japanese affairs. Everyone wondered why I did not join. After having read several copies of Pacific Affairs, I felt they were taking a line which I could not sponsor, directly or indirectly, and my membership might seem I was.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think that would be advocating the Stalinist party line?

Mr. MCGOVERN. There is very clear evidence that he was trying to advocate the Stalinist approach.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that the normal way that these people act in concealing the fact that they are actually following that?

Mr. MCGOVERN. That is very true.

Senator FERGUSON. Deceive the public?

Mr. MCGOVERN. That has been true from the time of Karl Marx himself. If you remember The Life and Times of Karl Marx, in 1848–49, when he was the editor of the Rheinisch Zeitung in Cologne it had an open policy of liberal, and his secret policy of communism, and he was keeping the two. From time to time he would throw in a few suggestions in his newspaper and letters showing what his position was to fool people by false play, by pretending to be one and using camouflage.

Senator FERGUSON. This is a historic line of the Communists?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not change your mind about the fact that Owen Lattimore was favorable to Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. MCGOVERN. No, sir, I did not, in 1941–42. I was somewhat surprised, raised my eyebrows once or twice, but I began to look at what was the attitude of the Chinese Communists. When I found they favored the popular front and ceasing their attacks, I was not too surprised.

Senator FERGUSON. That did not lead you to the conclusion he had changed his mind on the Communists in China?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I was open-minded again on the subject. When I first heard him I thought he changed his mind. When I heard the comments by Mao Tse-tung I realized there was no such change as I had imagined.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to put into the record two statements by Owen Lattimore. One is an excerpt from the publication America and Asia, by Owen Lattimore, published in 1943.

Senator EASTLAND. What is the next one?

Mr. MORRIS. I would like this one paragraph read by Mr. Mandel, please.

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

One of the oldest historical controversies turns on the question of whether great men create the events of their time, or are created by them. The career of Chiang Kai-shek shows that the problem cannot be limited to such narrow terms. The truth is that great men and great events interact on each other in a subtle and close way that results in creating history. This is true of Roosevelt, Churchill, and Stalin as it is of Chiang Kai-shek. What may be called the functional test of the historical importance of Chiang Kai-shek is the fact that, throughout an already long political career, he has grown steadily greater and greater. The greater the crises through which he has led his people, the greater he has become as a symbol. The greater the decisions he has made, the greater the decisions he is able to make. In this he is a part of the contemporary history of all Asia.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like that made part of the record together with this article from the San Francisco Chronicle dated July 6, 1941.

Mr. MANDEL. This is an article from the San Francisco Chronicle dated July 8, 1941. I read the first and last paragraphs:

Owen Lattimore, newly appointed political adviser to Chinese Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, said farewell to the United States last night in a speech that rang with faith and confidence in the China he is to serve.

Lattimore spoke before members of the Institute of Pacific Relations on the fourth anniversary of the opening of the Chinese-Japanese War. He leaves this afternoon by clipper for Chunking, President Roosevelt's nominee for the post as adviser to the Chinese leader.

The last paragraph reads:

Concluding, Lattimore praised the man he is to serve as a symbol of the growth of new China. "Among the handful of great world leaders, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek is conspicuous for the fact that he is not only a great leader, but a leader who has steadily grown in strength and stature in the last 4 years, a growth commensurate with that of the country itself."

Senator EASTLAND. That is received in evidence.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 303" and is as follows:)

[San Francisco Chronicle, Tuesday, July 8, 1941]

ADVISER TO CHIANG KAI-SHEK

CHINESE CANNOT LOSE, DECLARES OWEN LATTIMORE

Owen Lattimore, newly appointed political adviser to Chinese Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, said farewell to the United States last night in a speech that rang with faith and confidence in the China he is to serve.

Lattimore spoke before members of the Institute of Pacific Relations on the fourth anniversary of the opening of the Chinese-Japanese war. He leaves this afternoon by clipper for Chungking, President Roosevelt's nominee for the post as adviser to the Chinese leader.

Cannot be beaten

"It has become one of the standards of our belief," he said, "that China cannot and will not be beaten. Where 4 years ago we regarded China as only a secondary power, today she is one of the major defenses against international chaos. Russia and China, linked geographically, are the land powers holding back the Axis forces as Britain and the United States are doing as sea powers.

Digitized by Google

"China does not have institutional democracy, but this difference from the western democracies is to China's advantage. We have been defending an established democracy. The Chinese have been pouring out their lives to defend a democracy they do not have, but are determined to win.

Creating a new order

"What is essential in a democracy is the creative spirit of change, growth, and development. The Chinese have more of that in their struggle than we. While the Japanese are talking on paper of their "new order," the Chinese, with the help of the United States are creating a real new order in Asia.

Concluding, Lattimore praised the man he is to serve as a symbol of the growth of new China. "Among the handful of great world leaders, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek is conspicuous for the fact that he is not only a great leader but a leader who has steadily grown in strength and stature in the last 4 years, a growth commensurate with that of the country itself."

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read the one sentence on page 45, Mr. Mandel, of America and Asia?

Mr. MANDEL. On page 45 we find the following in the book, America and Asia:

Many people talk of the danger of civil war in China at the end of this war, but I think that the danger of civil war in China is probably less than the danger of civil war in many countries in Europe. One reason is that we have in Asia a world statesman, of real genius, in Chiang Kai-shek.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you see Owen Lattimore after 1940?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Late in the 1944 or early 1945 period. At that time there was a committee, an informal committee which met at the State Department and served as an advisory committee to the policy making of the OWI. You had various members from the State Department, various people from OSS, various people from OWI.

I was an unofficial liaison with the Joint Chiefs of Staff representing the military.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your position at that time?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Merely to listen to what they were saying and to report to my chiefs on one side. The other thing was to give my personal advice as to the line of propaganda that would be best pursued in dealing with broadcasts to China and Japan.

Mr. MORRIS. You were a naval officer?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You were assigned to the Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. With the Joint Intelligence Committee?

Mr. MCGOVERN. At that particular time I was a member of the Joint Intelligence Staff but assigned to the Joint Strategic Survey Committee.

Mr. MORRIS. As such you would attend these advisory committees that would give advice on what particular policy should be adopted toward various things in the Far East?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. In what capacity did Owen Lattimore attend those meetings?

Mr. MCGOVERN. He attended as an official of OWI.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he ever express views toward Chiang Kai-shek at that time?

Digitized by Google

Mr. McGOVERN. At that particular time most of the discussions were naturally how we can best approach the Japanese, how we can lower Japanese resistance. So we were talking about more means of defeating Japan than the future policy of China.

In those meetings he was very definitely thinking we should throw in our propaganda lot. We should play up to the Chinese Communists and through the Chinese Communists play upon the so-called liberal elements in Japan.

In other words, at that particular moment they already had the notion that the best way to overthrow Japan was to utilize the Chinese Communists and propaganda in the approach to Japan. Already at that particular moment some sharp differences of opinion came up as to the treatment of Japan and the Japanese Emperor. Those came out of the various meetings informally. No minutes were held, and I have no minutes to show what was done. A number of people were present—Mr. Dooman was present and can confirm what was said.

In these discussions it was very clear that Mr. Lattimore was very much in favor of overthrowing the Japanese Emperor and trying the Emperor as a war criminal. It was agreed it was not to be put in the official record as a part of the official propaganda.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the policy of the Joint Chiefs of Staff with respect to the Emperor?

Mr. McGOVERN. They had a different policy. I gave them advice that I thought the best way to bring about the surrender of Japan would be not to dispose of the Emperor. If we attempted to attack him and are going to use him as a war criminal, the Japanese resistance would have gone on indefinitely, and we might have lost another million lives.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the official policy with respect to the Emperor, Professor?

Mr. McGOVERN. Actually there was no official policy. There was talk here and there. I would run up to the State Department once or twice a week trying to find out what the policy was. The policy was not decided until 1945 actually.

At one time the Joint Chiefs of Staff were willing to listen to the State Department on the matter, though they themselves felt, I know, individually and collectively that it would be unwise to depose the Emperor or announce that they were going to depose him.

The Joint Chiefs were not trying to run the political or diplomatic portion of the country. Therefore, they would listen to the State Department. They were firmly of the conviction, which I shared and wrote two or three papers on, that to get the surrender of Japan it would be much better to leave the Emperor out of it.

Mr. MORRIS. You did hear Lattimore express himself to the extent the Emperor should be eliminated?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, sir. I was somewhat shocked and horrified, not only as to his views with regard to the Emperor, but he wanted to have not only a strict and stern policy, but a bloody peace in Japan. If I may paraphrase his ideas, he wanted to impose a Morgenthau plan on Japan. He did not use that term, but he wanted to completely reduce Japan to beggary and impotence. He was bitter in his attacks upon Japan. He would reduce Japan and wipe out the bloody deeds they had done.

Digitized by Google

As far as that is concerned, the whole policy of this was to purge all the Japanese officials, to reduce Japan back to an agricultural country and destroy all Japanese industry.

Senator EASTLAND. Japan cannot raise enough food, can they?

Mr. MCGOVERN. It was ridiculous as far as that was concerned, and Japan now has a population of 83,000,000. Then it was about 73,000,000. Japan in the best of times cannot live on her own food supply. She must import at least 25 percent of the food supply. Therefore, unless she can export something, she cannot pay for her own food.

The one way to bring on communism certainly in Japan was to have the Japanese starve and to deprive them of their industry.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know who the real author of the Morgenthau plan for Germany was?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I have been told it was Mr. White. I do not know that.

Senator FERGUSON. How long ago were you told that?

Mr. MCGOVERN. That was rumored around back in 1944–45, and at that particular time the Morgenthau plan came before the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Most of the Joint Chiefs were very vigorously opposed to it. They were not trying to interfere with the diplomatic decisions. I was told Mr. Roosevelt was influenced by Mr. Morgenthau, who was influenced by Mr. Dexter White. I have no official knowledge of that, however.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, in connection with Professor McGovern's testimony about Owen Lattimore's views toward postwar Japan, I would like to refer to exhibit No. 139, introduced at our open hearings. That is an extract from the Daily Worker of September 5, 1945, reporting on a press conference given by Owen Lattimore. It bears the title "Allies Must Break Japanese Monopolist Grip," says Lattimore. It is Wednesday, September 5, 1945.

Mr. Mandel, will you read a few appropriate portions from that, please?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

> Owen Lattimore, former adviser to Chiang Kai-shek, said today that the Allies must free Japan of the Zaibatsu's grip before democracy can develop there. He declared that the Zaibatsu—or industrialists—merged completely with the militarists in controlling Japan for aggression and that the primary control always was civilian.
>
> "Together," he said, "they are like a small octopus with huge tentacles which holds everything in its power. Their tool and front was the Emperor, owner of vast shares and estates, and he still is—although now they are loudly disclaiming the militarists * * *."

Mr. MORRIS. That has already been introduced in the record, Mr. Chairman. I would like to make reference to it again.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a publication called the Spotlight on the Far East, which is published by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, which has been identified by the Attorney General as a Communist-front organization. This contains an article by Mr. T. A. Bisson, who himself has been identified as a Communist before this committee.

I would like Mr. Mandel to read a few pertinent extracts from that in connection with Professor McGovern's testimony.

Mr. MANDEL. This is taken from the issue of Spotlight on the Far East, of February 1948, published by the Committee for a Democratic

Digitized by Google

Far Eastern Policy. This organization has been cited as a Communist front by the Attorney General.

Here is an article by T. A. Bisson. I will read some excerpts:

Keynoting the conference session on Japan, T. A. Bisson, writer and analyst, who recently returned from Japan where he was special adviser to the Government Section of General MacArthur's Headquarters, told how dominance by the empire-minded Zaibatsu (big business families) continues under MacArthur, in spite of nominal democratic reforms effected by the American occupation. It is true, Mr. Bisson pointed out, opposition parties can now exist, and that labor unions can now function and expand. But "two fundamental weaknesses of occupation policy are leading inevitably to what history will record as failure of the total operation."

* * * * * * *

The second major failure of the occupation, the economic one, has had equally great significance. It was, Bisson said, " * * * a direct outgrowth of the old guard's virtual monopoly of the Diet, the Cabinet, and the bureaucracy during the occupation's first 21 months."

Mr. MORRIS. I think that is enough, Mr. Chairman.

Will the entire article be introduced in the record?

Senator EASTLAND. It is ordered in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 304" and is as follows:)

OCCUPATION FAILS TO DEMOCRATIZE JAPAN, MACARTHUR'S ADVISER SAYS

Keynoting the conference session on Japan, T. A. Bisson, writer and analyst who recently returned from Japan where he was special adviser to the Government Section of General MacArthur's Headquarters, told how dominance by the empire-minded Zaibatsu (big business families) continues under MacArthur, in spite of nominal democratic reforms effected by the American occupation. It is true, Mr. Bisson pointed out, that opposition parties can now exist, and that labor unions can now function and expand. But "two fundamental weaknesses of occupation policy are leading inevitably to what history will record as failure of the total operation."

Mr. Bisson described first of these weaknesses as political and said it was clearly exposed by Japan's two post-war elections. The first or "trial run" election, Mr. Bisson said, "returned members of the Diet's (parliament) lower house, the house of representatives. What was the outcome? Representatives of the old regime, marshaled chiefly under the banners of the so-called Liberal and Progressive Parties, won three-fourths of the seats. It was the Yoshida Cabinet, formed as the result of the election which made inevitable the disastrous inflation of today."

Before the next election, the old guard found that new machinery would be necessary if it was to retain its power. A gerrymandering election law was the result, which Bisson called the clear responsibility of the MacArthur administration.

"It would have been easy," Bisson said, "for MacArthur to refuse to give Yoshida permission to introduce this bill. He could have rejected it as a tricky old guard maneuver concocted at the last minute."

But instead he gave his permission. In the election of April 1947, Japan again remained in the grip of its former rulers, though a plurality was returned by the Social Democratic Party.

"This," said Bisson, "was the outstanding example, although there were also others, of direct intervention by the occupation authorities to influence the election results."

The second major failure of the occupation, the economic one, has had equally great significance. It was, Bisson said, "* * * a direct outgrowth of the old guard's virtual monopoly of the Diet, the Cabinet, and the bureaucracy during the occupation's first 21 months."

When the Japanese labor movement sought in February 1947, to protest inflation by political action, it was prevented by direct orders from General MacArthur. This was one of the clearest cases of direct American support for the economic and political program of the old guard.

Digitized by Google

UNITED STATES PEOPLE GAIN LITTLE

The American people, on the other hand, have gained little from the occupation.

Bisson said, "If we could say that we have put the Japanese people in control of their Government and that it was now being run in their best interests, that this new democratic Japan will be a bulwark of peace and stability in the postwar Far East, that the United States has thus made a constructive contribution to the welfare and security of the American people; then I think we would say that the investment has been worth while.

"I do not believe we can say these things. As matters stand now, there is every chance that representatives of the old regime will maintain control of the Government of Japan; that this Government will run, not in the best interests of the Japanese people as a whole, but in the selfish interests of the old vested clique of bureaucrats, business tycoons, and party leaders." Those leaders made the war.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor McGovern, will you comment on that last article introduced in the record?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

May I again point out that the fact that people are in agreement with Communists does not necessarily prove they are Communists, but I have heard Mr. Lattimore and Mr. Bisson hold discussions on that thing, and I was very much surprised how again and again their views did coincide with Communist views. Those are the well-known Communist views.

If I may call your attention to the report which I made to the congressional Committee on Foreign Affairs, the position of the Emperor with Zaibatsu and reparations, in which I felt that the whole economy of Japan would go to ruin if they tried to have too abrupt a change—I am all in favor of equalizing the wealth—but too abrupt a change, the abolition of Zaibatsu overnight would wreck the Japanese industry and it is up to the American taxpayer to see that Japan is not wrecked, otherwise we will have to support Japan.

Senator EASTLAND. Not only that, but if the economy of Japan and Germany is wrecked, what would happen to our own economy? We have to have markets.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes.

I would like to make it plain I am not pro-Japanese or pro-German, but simply as a student of international politics I know you cannot have a prosperous America if the rest of the world is wrecked.

I thought it was important to restore some level of prosperity within Germany and Japan.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you heard Owen Lattimore express himself on whether or not the institution of the Emperor should be abolished in Japan?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes; on several occasions, he was very much opposed to the Emperor. He wanted him treated as a war criminal.

Senator EASTLAND. He wanted him murdered?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you ever hear him advocate the murder of the Emperor's family?

Mr. MCGOVERN. No, sir, I did not. All I can say is that he said they should be treated as among the worst of the war criminals.

Senator EASTLAND. His family?

Mr. MCGOVERN. The whole imperial family.

Mr. SOURWINE. You say that is all you heard him say?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Senator EASTLAND. That is, the imperial family?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. That would mean his wife and children?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I suppose so. I did not ask him.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever hear him advocate taking him and turning him over to the Chinese?

Mr. MCGOVERN. That was said on one occasion, not to me but someone else, in my hearing. He thought the best way to dispose of him was to turn him over to the Chinese who would know how to deal with him. But that was a side remark that I happened to overhear.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Lattimore has set forth his views on the Emperor in his book Solution in Asia. I understand we do not have those expression in our records.

At this time, I would like to have a few of them inserted in the record, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANDEL. These are views taken from Owen Lattimore's book, Solution in Asia:

Page 29:

* * * Sacred Cow No. 1, and in fact the cow to end all cows, is the Japanese Emperor. * * *

Page 30:

The orthodox "expert" approach to the position of the Emperor in Japan is all too often weakened by accepting the premise that in Japan the Emperor is officially holy. * * *

Page 34:

* * * Under this rigid structure of power the Emperor remained ritualistically the source which conferred a sanction on the real power held by the shogun. In spite of this venerability, however, neither the common people nor the nobles who enjoyed real power worked very hard at venerating him. The prevailing attitude toward the Emperor was a good deal like that of the many Christians who believe that of course God exists and religion is a good thing, but rarely go to church. * * *

Page 40:

* * * The Emperor was brought into the team by the investment of "imperial household" funds in the new enterprises. In this way the Emperor remained the ideological pillar of the feudal system and became at the same time a main pillar of vested interest in the new, capitalistic structure. * * *

Senator EASTLAND. That will be admitted into evidence.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 305," and is as follows:)

EMPEROR

(Solution in Asia, by Owen Lattimore, Little, Brown & Co., Boston, 1945)

"* * * Sacred Cow No. 1, and in fact the cow to end all cows, is the Japanese Emperor * * *" (p. 29).

"* * * The orthodox 'expert' approach to the position of the Emperor in Japan is all too often weakened by accepting the premise that in Japan the Emperor is officially holy * * *" (p. 30).

"* * * Under this rigid structure of power the Emperor remained ritualistically the source which conferred a sanction on the real power held by the shogun. In spite of this venerability, however, neither the common people nor the nobles who enjoy real power worked very hard at venerating him. The prevailing attitude toward the Emperor was a good deal like that of the many Christians who believe that of course God exists and religion is a good thing, but rarely go to church * * *" (p. 34).

Digitized by Google

"* * * The Emperor was brought into the team by the investment of 'imperial household' funds in the new enterprises. In this way the Emperor remained the ideological pillar of the feudal system and became at the same time a main pillar of vested interest in the new, capitalistic structure * * *" (p. 40).

"* * * The militarists have forced crises abroad partly in order to seize and keep control at home; and since, in these crises, they have always professed to be defending the interests of the Emperor, the Emperor is now identified as the resort of final appeal against any democratic trend. The democratic potential is still there, but if it is ever to emerge we must first, in the words of Sun Fo, 'puncture the myth of the divinity of the Mikado' * * *" (pp. 44–45).

"* * * If the Japanese themselves decide to do without an emperor, well and good. If not, we should show that militarism has been so catastrophically defeated that we, the victors, do not need to use the Emperor. He and all males eligible for the throne by Japanese rules of succession and adoption should be interned, preferably in China, but under the supervision of a United Nations commission, to emphasize united responsibility. His estates, and estates belonging to members of Zaibatsu families and important militarists, should be made over to an agrarian reform program, conspicuously without his sanction and by order of the United Nations. Eventually, after his death and after a new civil service and a new management of finance and industry have taken hold, the remaining members of the imperial line can be allowed to go where they like. New vested interests will by that time be able to prevent the restoration of a monarchy * * *" (p. 189)

Mr. MORRIS. Professor McGovern, before we finish this period of 1944–45 at the OWI advisory committees, did Mr. Lattimore ever express himself in disparagement of Chiang Kai-shek at those hearings?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir, "we have to build on the forward-looking elements in China."

When I asked him, he said the people in Yenan.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, he had reversed himself again from the 1941 position?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes.

In 1944 and 1945, he was rather bitter in his expressions and opinions regarding Chiang Kai-shek, and very definitely in favor of cooperation with the Communists.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he refer to them as Communists?

Mr. MCGOVERN. To the "people in Yenan." I never heard him call Mao Tse-tung and his people the Yenan people, but I never heard him use the expression "Communist." But there was no question about whom he was referring to.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you acquainted with the numerous political reports submitted to the State Department by John Stewart Service and John Paton Davies, Jr.?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir. A great many reports came over my desk in the JCS. I did not see all State Department reports, but a great many reports sent to the State Department were sent down by the State Department to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and those came to my desk for comment.

My function there, serving with the Joint Survey Committee, was to follow political trends in different parts of the world and annotate those and call them to the attention of my boss. Therefore, I saw a number of the statements made, written by John Davies, when he was serving as political adviser to General Stilwell.

I saw some of the reports made by John Stewart Service when he was in China and I had several long talks with Mr. Service after his return from China, I am going to say early in 1945.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Now, did these reports uniformly express a political point of view?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Very definitely.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the general nature of these reports, as you can now recall?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Both Mr. Davies and Mr. Service were wholehearted in their dislike of the Nationalist Government and their theory was that we should support the Chinese Communists.

One thing that I objected to most seriously from the intelligence point of view, and I was serving as a member of the Joint Intelligence Committee—and that is intelligence should be to estimate the capabilities and intentions both of our allies and of our enemies—and to my mind they were quite wrong in emphasizing that the intentions of the Chinese Communists would be friendly toward the United States, and quite apart from anything else, I thought that was completely wrong.

There is no use arguing the rights and wrongs of communism on which I have opinions, but apart from anything else, will they be with us or against us? I was convinced at that time, and still convinced, that they would be definitely anti-American—not that I think the Nationalist Government is pure, sweet, and holy, but I thought that at least the Nationalist Government would remain friendly to the United States, and I was convinced that the Communist Government would be very unfriendly to the United States, and, for that reason, I made my report to General Embick along those lines.

I though it was bad advice handed by the State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. What was General Embick?

Mr. MCGOVERN. General Embick was Chairman of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee, and my immediate boss. The committee consisted of General Embick, Admiral Wilson, and General Fairchild.

Senator EASTLAND. Of course, what they were advocating was not a negative policy but the United States assisting the Communists in overthrowing the Nationalist Government and taking over China, that we just not send aid to the Nationalist Government.

Mr. MCGOVERN. But throwing our whole weight behind the Communists.

Senator EASTLAND. That we actually assist the Communists in overthrowing the Nationalist Government.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I was quite shocked at this for a peculiar reason. I knew Mr. Service had been sent back from China—in fact, he told me.

Mr. MORRIS. He told you that?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes. He was sent back and he was very violent against the way in which our foreign policy was going in China under General Hurley, the Ambassador, and General Wedemeyer, who was head of our troops over there.

I might say, in the summer of 1945, I was sent on this special mission around the world but Service spent some little time in China.

At that time I talked to General Hurley, and General Wedemeyer, whom I knew quite well. General Wedemeyer, for whom I had personal admiration both in regard to personality and his soundness and ability, discussed the situation and he was very much shocked with the kind of poor political intelligence that was being sent in by such men as Service.

Digitized by Google

Senator EASTLAND. Did you hear Service advocate any measures to implement the policy that he was advocating?

Mr. MCGOVERN. No, sir. The only thing I heard him say was that we should throw our full weight behind the Communists, withdraw all assistance to the Nationalists, and throw our full weight to the Communists.

Senator EASTLAND. That meant aiding the Communists?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. I was interested in the remark you just made. Did you say you were quite well acquainted with General Wedemeyer and his views and policies?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. That was over a period of what time?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Over a period of years. I first met him in 1942 when he was attached to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, serving with the Joint War Plans Committee on which I saw him many, many times then.

Then, he is the son-in-law of General Embick, my immediate boss.

When I was out in China, General Wedemeyer was kind enough to ask me to stay at his house, so I got to know him quite well.

Mr. SOURWINE. Had you any occasion to read the Kunming message or messages recently released?

Mr. MCGOVERN. You mean those sent back by Mr. Wallace?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I have seen them recently.

They did not come over my desk during the war, but I have seen them recently, copies of them.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you read them recently?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir; I looked through them again.

Mr. SOURWINE. I should like to ask for your opinion in particular and in general with regard to those messages, as to whether they are anti-Communist or pro-Communist, and if you do not mind, I would like to read just a few passages from the messages.

Senator EASTLAND. Give him the message and let him comment on it if he wants to.

Is that Wallace's report to President Roosevelt?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Recently released?

Mr. SOURWINE. There was a report which was delivered in person by Mr. Wallace. There were a few days prior to that, two cables sent from Kunming.

Senator EASTLAND. From Wallace to Roosevelt?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Are these the documents which have been recently released?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCGOVERN. "Paraphrase of Vice President Wallace's message to the President."

There are one or two points here which I would like to just mention:

* * * the attitude of Chiang Kai-shek toward the problem is so imbued with prejudice that I can see little prospect for satisfactory long-term settlement.

And again Mr. Wallace says—

Digitized by Google

I emphasized to him the importance of reaching an understanding with Russia. With regard to the economic situation, there is little that we can do and the Chinese appear incapable of coping with it * * * Instability and tenseness characterize the political situation with a rising lack of confidence in the Generalissimo * * *

The message is full of statements, as I now remember it, which shocked me, because Mr. Wallace said it was not at all pro-Communist, but certainly if it is not pro-Communist it certainly is giving aid and comfort to the Communists trying to disparage the Nationalist Government entirely and trying to throw his weight behind support of a pro-Russian policy.

Mr. SOURWINE. It has been said that this was an anti-Communist message because it transmitted the request as made by Chiang Kai-shek that General Wedemeyer be considered in connection with the appointment of a presidential liaison man between the President and the Generalissimo.

Could you say, sir, whether at that time such a recommendation with respect to General Wedemeyer was an anti-Communist recommendation?

Mr. MCGOVERN. No, sir; General Wedemeyer had never expressed himself on Chiang Kai-shek. He was not an unknown figure. He was a well known man as a military planner and strategist and had served as spokesman for General Marshall on several occasions in discussions with the British planners. He had never expressed his views on communism, or never expressed his views on China.

As a matter of fact, some people wrongly thought that Wedemeyer would go along with the Communists, because with the Joint Chiefs he thought we should not invade the Balkans or interfere with the Russian campaign in eastern Europe.

On that ground, some people thought General Wedemeyer would go along with the Communists.

Knowing General Wedemeyer personally, I knew they were completely wrong in their reading of him, but no doubt some felt or thought that, because he did attack the Balkan campaign and attacked Churchill on the Balkan campaign.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you aware that these so-called Kunming cables mentioned General Chennault and referred to his unavailability for the post?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you say that if it were a choice between General Wedemeyer and General Chennault for the job in question, that one of the two would have been less anti-Communist than the other?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I am trying to think back to the thinking of that particular period. I am trying to think now what I knew about General Wedemeyer. General Chennault's opposition to the Communists was violent and emphatic. At that time there was an open mind as to where General Wedemeyer stood. He never committed himself and never made a formal position.

Knowing both people, I knew both were anti-Communist. I would say General Chennault was more anti-Communist. General Wedemeyer was brought in as a new man with no far-eastern background.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you hear any Communist objection to General Wedemeyer's being named?

Digitized by Google

Mr. McGOVERN. No, sir. But I again emphasize that I don't attend Communist meetings, so I am not aware of the inner circles.

Senator FERGUSON. I am wondering whether or not Mr. Mandel knows what attitude the Daily Worker took to the Wedemeyer appointment.

Mr. MANDEL. I think that will be brought out in a few days.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor McGovern, do the views set forth in that Kunming cable coincide with the views in the Service and Davies reports to which you have testified?

Mr. McGOVERN. I would certainly say they covered the same general point of view. Never having seen the cables until recently, I had no knowledge whether Mr. John Carter Vincent or Mr. Service or Davies actually saw these things beforehand. I would be unable to say. But they certainly correspond very closely with the views expressed by Mr. Davies, by Mr. John Carter Vincent, and Mr. Service, those three people who expressed the same kind of views that are expressed in here.

I must say that I never heard either one of them talk about General Wedemeyer one way or the other.

Senator FERGUSON. After your reading of that document, you say that it is not an anti-Communist document?

Mr. McGOVERN. Definitely it is not an anti-Communist document.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just prior to the time that the cables were sent, was there any agitation for the promotion of General Chennault in that regard? Was there any consideration of him as a successor to General Stilwell or in an improved position vis-a-vis Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. McGOVERN. There was some discussion of it. But may I summarize the situation? For personal reasons, General Chennault was not very popular with some of the brass hats at the Joint Chiefs of Staff building, and quite apart from any political considerations, his personality was such that they did not like him and therefore would have disliked putting him in unless forced to do so.

Mr. SOURWINE. I was wondering if you regarded this cable as in any way a counter move against the possible naming of General Chennault to a higher position.

Mr. McGOVERN. It may very well. Not having discussed the matter with Mr. Wallace, I have no notion what was in the back of his mind, but if Mr. Wallace had thought there was a plan to put General Chennault in, I would have told him there was very strong opposition on the part of my boss to putting General Chennault in.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know John K. Fairbank and Wilma Fairbank?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, sir; I have met them on several occasions. I first saw them in Harvard when I was teaching in Harvard. I again saw them in Peking, or at least I saw Mr. Fairbank in Peking in the same winter of 1937–38. He and Mr. Lattimore went to Peking at the same time for a very short period.

At the same time, Mr. Reischauer, Mr. Lattimore, and Mr. Fairbank were all in Peking. Mr. Bisson was also there. There was quite a gathering of the clan.

Again, I saw much more of Mr. Fairbank in the spring and summer of 1945 when I was sent on this mission out to China, and at that time I saw Mrs. Fairbank was working with OSS, I saw Mr. Fairbank was working with OWI, and had two or three fairly long discussions with them. I was shocked with the fact that they thought of going even further to the left than had Mr. Service.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Were they critical of the Chinese Government?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Extremely critical of the Nationalist Government.

Mr. MORRIS. Did they give forth expressions favorable to the Chinese Communists?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Very definitely.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor McGovern, were you in China in 1947?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the occasion of your being in China in 1947?

Mr. MCGOVERN. In 1947, I was appointed a consultant to the Congressional Committee on Foreign Affairs and was sent out there to examine the conditions in Japan, in Korea, and in China.

I represented the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but actually I traveled out with the Armed Services Committee.

Senator EASTLAND. The House committee?

Mr. MCGOVERN. The Armed Services House Committee. They went on around the world. I stayed for some time in Japan and China, and I came back with the House Committee on Domestic and Foreign Commerce.

I mention these things because going along with these Members of Congress, was briefed officially, and unofficially briefed, by the various commanding generals and the ambassadors wherever we went. As a matter of fact, as I stayed on after they had left, I had much longer and more personal conversations with many of the same people.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you briefed at all in China?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir; we were briefed considerably at the time in China.

First of all, we stayed for some little time in Peking and saw the various local Chinese officials there. Then we went down to Chengtu to see the Navy mission there, and then we went to Nanking. I had long talks with the Ambassador, the then Ambassador, Mr. Leighton Stuart, whom I had known previously. We were also briefed by Mr. Ludden, of the Embassy.

Mr. MORRIS. Who is Mr. Ludden?

Mr. MCGOVERN. That is Raymond Ludden. He was either first secretary or consul of the Embassy. He was immediately under Mr. Leighton Stuart.

Mr. Leighton Stuart and I had a talk, and he said "Go down to the Embassy and be briefed by Mr. Ludden."

Mr. Ludden gave a speech and gave us a very dim picture of the possibility of the Nationalist Government surviving and a very strong briefing in favor of the ground movement in favor of the Communists.

While I was in Nanking I was very much interested also in the fact, which I had heard before, but it was not officially confirmed, we were also briefed by the then head of the Army Military Mission, General Lucas. He was telling us what he was doing. I asked what he was not doing. One of the things he was not doing was not giving tactical advice to the nationalists. He said they were allowed to give strategic advice to the Nationalist Government but always in such a way as not to have any effect on the war with the Communists. He was instructed not to train them how to man machine guns or tanks to fight Communists and never in any way to give effective aid in their fight against the Communists.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Who told you that?

Mr. MCGOVERN. General Lucas.

I inquired, "This is your own personal choice?"

"No, sir; these are orders from Washington."

I said, "Is that the orders of the Defense Department?"

He said, "I get it from the Defense Department, but I understand it is from the State Department."

Mr. MORRIS. Did you hear that view from anybody else?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir; I asked two or three of the other men, colonels, who were assistants. When I was down to Shanghai, the head of the naval mission went down to meet us in Shanghai.

I repeated the question to him and he said the same thing.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Solomon Adler in Nanking at that time?

Mr. MCGOVERN. At that time he was present at some luncheon parties, but I had no conversation.

Mr. MORRIS. You know he was there?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. In what capacity?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I don't know. I saw him at a luncheon party given by the Embassy for us.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you proceed to Japan from China?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I had already been in Japan. Then I returned to Japan. Mr. Judd was coming over and Mr. Judd telegraphed me and asked me to meet him in Japan. Congressman Judd knew very little of Japan. So, I gave him my briefing in addition to the briefing he was getting through SCAP.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you write a report for the congressional committee?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Is this your report, Professor McGovern?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir. This is the Economic and Political Conditions in the Far East: Japan, China, Korea.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, I would like to direct your attention to that portion which deals with reparations.

Mr. Chairman, we have had an acknowledgment by Mr. Lattimore that he was largely responsible for the preparation of the Pauley report. With that background, I would like to ask Professor McGovern questions relating to his report on reparations which he made to the Foreign Relations Committee of the Congress.

Mr. MCGOVERN. That was one of the things in which I was particularly interested.

Mr. MORRIS. By that you mean the Pauley report?

Mr. MCGOVERN. The Pauley report had called my attention to the great to-do over whether we should or should not have reparations and the amount of reparations. Therefore, having read the Pauley report, I then went in and examined with some care the various people, both Japanese and American officials there in SCAP.

After a long discussion with various groups, official and unofficial, I came out with the following conclusion:

Another major factor in retarding Japan's economic recovery has been the problem of reparations.

It is clear that the reparation demands by some of the Allied powers have been based upon political and psychological considerations rather than upon economic realities. A quite natural desire to wreak vengeance upon the hated enemy, and an equally natural desire to build one's own industry in a cheap and easy way, have resulted in exorbitant demands upon Japanese plants and industrial equipment, which, if fully carried out, would permanently wreck the whole Japanese economy and make it impossible for the Japanese mission ever to become self-supporting again. (It would be equivalent to the application of an exaggerated Morgenthau plan to Japan.) It is equally clear that in many cases, if the plants were dismantled and transported elsewhere, it would result in permanent economic waste for everyone. The Japanese would be deprived of plants they urgently need, while the countries to which they were shipped would never be able to make use of them because of wastage in shipment, the lack of skilled workers and technicians in the receiving countries, and so forth.

Digitized by Google

May I bring out just one or two things in this support?

Mr. MORRIS. Is it pertinent to this particular discussion?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir; not about reparations, it is in connection with Korea I want to talk about.

Senator EASTLAND. Yes, sir; proceed.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I felt then, and feel now, that I was rather good in my predictions as to what was going to take place. This report was printed in March of 1948.

Senator EASTLAND. 1948?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Go ahead.

Mr. MCGOVERN. In dealing with Korea, I said:

At the same time it must be borne in mind that if we withdraw from the southern zone—

in Korea—

it is practically certain that the small but powerful and well organized Korean Communists, backed by the Russians, will seize control over the whole peninsula. There has already emerged in North Korea a ruthless and self-perpetuating Communist oligarchy which is fully prepared to extend its sway over the southern area. In the event of American withdrawal it is very likely that the Russian forces would directly aid in carrying out this coup. Even if this were not the case, the Communists should have little difficulty in forcibly seizing power, as the Russians have already organized and trained a Communist indoctrinated "North Korea People's Army" (of about 150,000) men while in the south the Americans have neglected to organize any indigenous native force capable of meeting invasion from the north.

I should like to bring out this point in connection with that thing, because of the statements that Mr. Lattimore and others have made that it would be to our advantage to let the Communists seize control of the whole of Korea, reverting to an earlier position here. I thought if we did withdraw, they would seize power; and we did, and they did exactly as I predicted.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor, are you acquainted with Owen Lattimore's memorandum which he submitted in connection with the State Department round table conference in 1949?

Mr. Chairman, the last witness before this committee, Professor Colegrove, gave extensive testimony concerning the round table conference held by the State Department in October 1949.

I have here the text of Mr. Lattimore's memorandum, which was submitted in connection with that conference. I would like to call the attention of Professor McGovern to the first five points.

In the first place, Professor McGovern, have you seen this memorandum before?

Digitized by Google

Mr. McGOVERN. I have seen this memorandum. I have heard about it some time. I was told the general contents. It was only recently that I saw the actual wording of it.

Mr. MORRIS. You will notice at the very outset he has made five distinct points.

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, sir; and I think this is so important, the first point:

The type of policy represented by support for Chiang Kai-shek does more harm than good to the interests of the United States. * * *

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, at this time in 1949 when this memorandum was submitted, Mr. Lattimore clearly there is opposed to support of Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. McGOVERN. It is very obvious here. At the same time I was making my report here to the congressional Committee on Foreign Affairs on the danger of Chinese communism undermining the whole support of the Nationalist Government, which was brought out.

The second point is:

China cannot be economically coerced by such measures as cutting off trade.

In other words, in this trade he wants to recognize Communist China and to trade with Communist China on the idea we will both benefit by it. It is perfectly impossible.

There is a third point which I think is very important:

It is not possible to make Japan a satisfactory instrument of American policy.

In other words, again he comes back to his old Morgenthau plan to keep Japan powerless and impotent.

As I tried to stress in my own report, written a year earlier, Japan is a pro-American bastion as a net result of which they attempt to keep a free Asia for the free Asiatics by the union of such free countries as Japan, Philippines, and Siam, of which Japan is the most important and strongest.

In the meantime, the Japanese became very pro-American through the wisdom of our administration out there, and certainly as to our support of a free and independent Japan not under Communist domination and make those the center of a new open-door policy for the Far East which will mean equal opportunity, with no special privilege, and integrity of the Far East.

There is one point here—

South Korea is more of a liability than an asset to the interests and policy of the United States.

In other words, let it slide. As Mr. Lattimore said, let it sink.

I think it is contrary to our own policy. If the Communists get control of the whole of South Korea, it will be a dagger pointed to the heart of Japan and will overthrow our whole foreign policy in the Far East.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest that in view of the questions which were asked the professor with regard to the Kunming messages, it might be desirable to have the text of those two cables in the record at that point or just preceding the professor's comments on them.

Senator EASTLAND. They are ordered in the record.

(The text of the two cables follows:)

Digitized by Google

KUNMING MESSAGE

(Paraphrase of Vice President Wallace's message to the President drafted in Kunming June 26 and dispatched from New Delhi about June 28:)

MESSAGE NO. 1

The discussions between the representative of the Chinese Communists and those of the Chinese Government are taking place in Chungking, but the attitude of Chiang Kai-shek toward the problem is so imbued with prejudice that I can see little prospect for satisfactory long-term settlement. Chiang has assured me that only "political" measures will be used to reach a settlement.

Chiang expressed a desire for an improvement in relations with Russia and for our assistance in bringing about a meeting of representatives of China and Russia. I emphasized to him the importance of reaching an understanding with Russia.

The economic, political, and military situations in China are extremely discouraging. The morale of the Chinese is low, and demoralization is a possibility with resulting distintegration of central authority. With regard to the economic situation, there is little that we can do, and the Chinese appear incapable of coping with it. However, a general collapse does not seem imminent. Instability and tenseness characterize the political situation with a rising lack of confidence in the Generalissimo and the present reactionary leadership of the Kuomintang. With regard to the military situation, I can only say that it might be worse. It is critical in Hunan Province. Potentialities and plans are in existence for stiffening China's defense south of the city of Hengyang, but there is a serious threat that east China may be severed from contact with west China. Morale in remaining free China would of course be affected by such a development.

Calls Chiang discouraged or China military outlook

Prior to the receipt of your message of June 23 on the subject of a United States Army observer group proceeding to north China to obtain military intelligence, Chiang had informed me of his agreement to the dispatch of the group as soon as it could be organized. After receipts of your telegram I again discussed the matter in detail with Chiang. General Ferris, chief of staff in charge of General Stilwell's headquarters at Chungking, was present, and we obtained what should prove to be the full cooperation of Chiang in arranging for the early dispatch and effective operation of the group.

Chiang Kai-shek seems to be unsure regarding the political situation, bewildered regarding the economic situation and, while expressing confidence in his army, distressed regarding military developments. Current military reverses are attributed by him to low morale caused by economic difficulties. He is convinced that a general offensive in Burma early this year would have bolstered the Chinese will to resistance and have prevented military reverses. He has assured me that the Chinese will continue to resist to the limit of their ability, but he displays discouragement rather than optimism.

Our need is vital for a more vigorous and better coordinated United States Government representation in China. In its military and related political aspects, our effort in China requires more positive direction and closer cooperation with the Chinese if this area is to be an effective basis of operations against the Japanese.

MESSAGE NO. 2

Loss of eastern China to Japanese predicted

There is a strong probability that east China wlil be severed from west China in the near future. It is the general opinion that such a development can only be prevented by unforeseeable chance.

There are various estimates with regard to the rapidity with which the Japanese may be able to carry out their intentions. Although the time factor may be longer than most people seem to expect, I feel that we should be prepared to see all of east China in Japanese hands within 3 or 4 weeks.

The loss of east China will nullify our military effort in this area. It will also prove a violent political and economic shock to the Chungking regime.

China may be rendered almost valueless as an Allied military base unless determined steps are taken to halt the disintegrative process. Popular and military morale, both seriously impaired already, must somehow be strengthened. A new offensive effort must somehow be organized, primarily guerrilla in character, probably.

Digitized by Google

It is necessary also to consider political factors. Disintegration of the Chungking regime will leave in China a political vacuum which will be filled in ways which you will understand.

The foregoing picture has been drawn on the basis of the best available information to show you how serious is the situation. However, the situation is far from hopeless and may actually be turned to both military and political advantage if the right steps are taken promptly. The Generalissimo is alarmed, anxious for guidance, and, I believe, prepared to make drastic changes if wisely approached. Insecurity has undermined vested interests in the Government. It should be possible to induce Chiang to establish at least the semblance of a united front necessary to the restoration of Chinese morale and to proceed thereafter to organize a new offensive effort.

Wedemeyer is proposed for liaison with Chiang

As I took leave of Chiang, he requested me to ask you to appoint a personal representative to serve as liaison between you and him. Carton De Wiart occupies somewhat the same position between Churchill and Chiang. In my opinion a move of this kind is strongly indicated by the politico-military situation.

An American general officer of the highest caliber, in whom political and military authority will be at least temporarily united, is needed. It appears that operations in Burma make it impossible for General Stilwell to maintain close contact with Chiang. Furthermore, Chiang informed me that Stilwell does not enjoy his confidence because of his alleged inability to grasp over-all political considerations. I do not think any officer in China is qualified to undertake the assignment. Chennault enjoys the Generalissimo's full confidence but he should not be removed from his present military position. The assignment should go to a man who can (1) establish himself in Chiang's confidence to a degree that the latter will accept his advice in regard to political as well as military actions; (2) command all American forces in China; and (3) bring about full coordination between Chinese and American military efforts. It is essential that he command American forces in China because without this his efforts will have no substance. He may even be Stilwell's deputy in China with a right to deal directly with the White House on political questions or China may be separated from General Stilwell's present command.

Without the appointment of such a representative you may expect the situation here to drift continuously from bad to worse. I believe a representative should be appointed and reach Chunking before east China is finally lost so that he can assume control of the situation before it degenerates too far.

While I do not feel competent to propose an officer for the job, the name of General Wedemeyer has been recommended to me and I am told that during his visit here he made himself persona grata to Chiang.

I realize that my opinions are based on a very short stay and that the number of people who could be consulted has necessarily been limited. In particular, I regret not having been able to see General Stilwell and get his views. Nevertheless, I am convinced of the need for the decisive action summarized in the final paragraph of my previous message.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you finished the fifth point?

Mr. MCGOVERN. The final point is in connection with southeast Asia, such as Indochina, in which he is obviously saying we should back here Ho Chi Minh and Communists in southeast Asia, which I think would be perfectly disastrous. I think you have to make it a point in our national policy to realize that any place where you have a Communist government or a Communist-dominated government, it is going to be anti-American. And whereas I have absolutely no use for French interest in Indochina, it would be disastrous to allow Indochina to fall in the hands of avowed enemies of the United States and both the Chinese and the Russian Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, there is no need of introducing those in the record. In fact, they have already been introduced in the record as exhibits 280–A and 280–B.

Mr. SOURWINE. What is already in the record?

Mr. MORRIS. The memorandum.

Digitized by Google

Professor McGovern, did you have any dealings with Alger Hiss during your experience with the General Chief of Staff?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, purely informally and purely personal. Mr. Hiss served in a different capacity with the State Department. I saw most of him during the period when he was assigned to the creation of U. N. during the Dumbarton Oaks Conference and before and after the San Francisco Conference. I was then serving with General Wilson and General Embick.

On several occasions I had to go to the State Department and give documents to Mr. Hiss and receive documents from Mr. Hiss to bring back to the Chief of Staff.

I may add that General Embick, on three different occasions, hammered on the table and said, "Now be sure and don't discuss any war plans or any other military secrets with Mr. Hiss. I don't trust that man."

Mr. MORRIS. In what year was that?

Mr. McGOVERN. Early in 1945. I saw him first in 1944. I have seen him, as a matter of fact, when he was with Mr. Hornbeck but only very casually, coming in and out of the room, but in 1944 and 1945 when I was at the State Department, two or three times a week, that was the time I saw most of Mr. Hiss, but after those words of advice from General Embick, I was careful to discuss only the weather with Hiss.

There are many people—my bosses, brass hats—in the Army and Navy, who had sincere doubts as to Mr. Hiss's loyalty. General Embick would not say he was or was not Communist. He thought he did not have loyalty to the United States. Therefore, I was warned not to discuss matters with him.

Senator EASTLAND. Did he attempt to get information from you?

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Chairman, that is hard to say. He tried, on several occasions, to get into chit-chatty personal conversations. I was rather cold in my replies. I was so scared that we might have a general conversation that might lead me to divulge military secrets that I knew, I thought it was better not to discuss anything with him.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you judge he was attempting to get military secrets from you?

Mr. McGOVERN. He knew I came from the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He knew I had full possession of all military plans at that time, and I think he was interested in knowing what they were.

Senator EASTLAND. Your answer is that you thought he was attempting to get military information from you?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions to ask of Professor McGovern.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you trust him?

Mr. McGOVERN. No, sir; I did not. I still have no knowledge whatsoever that he was a member of the Communists. I never met Mr. Chambers, so far as I know, I had no knowledge of a thing, but I certainly did not trust him at all and was very glad not to have official meetings with him.

Mr. MORRIS. Those are all the questions we have of Mr. McGovern.

I would like the record to show that we have sent out a letter today to President Truman asking for the loyalty file on a member of the staff of the Institute of Pacific Relations who served in military intelligence during the war.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that letter is that we have a letter from Robert Ramspeck, Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission, which reads, in part, as follows:

Ellen Van Zyll De Jong Atkinson was employed by the War Department from October 22, 1941, to April 30, 1945, when she resigned. In connection with an application for a position with the Office of War Information, Mrs. Atkinson was the subject of an investigation as to her qualifications, including loyalty. Mrs. Atkinson was not appointed and the investigation of her was discontinued. Precautionary measures were taken to prevent Mrs. Atkinson's reemployment in the Federal service at a later date until the question of her loyalty has been resolved.

In view of that statement and in view of the fact that Ellen Atkinson was a member of the Institute of Pacific Relations, Senator McCarran sent a letter to President Truman asking that that file be made available to this committee. That reads, Mr. Chairman:

A letter from Robert Ramspeck, Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission, dated July 13, 1951, contains the following statement about Ellen Van Zyll De Jong Atkinson: "Ellen Van Zyll De Jong Atkinson was employed by the War Department from October 22, 1941, to April 30, 1945, when she resigned. In connection with an application for a position with the Office of War Information, Mrs. Atkinson was the subject of an investigation as to her qualifications, including loyalty. Mrs. Atkinson was not appointed and the investigation of her was discontinued. Precautionary measures were taken to prevent Mrs. Atkinson's reemployment in the Federal service at a later date until the question of her loyalty has been resolved."

Inasmuch as Ellen Atkinson was a staff member of the Institute of Pacific Relations which is presently under inquiry, it would be appreciated if her file were made available to this committee.

May that go into the record, Mr. Chairman?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Chairman, as a footnote to my testimony, may I make one concluding remark?

Mr. MORRIS. May I ask what this request is about?

Mr. MCGOVERN. This request was with regard to the policy of the Espionage Act, the difficulty that I had in uniform in discussing matters with the State Department, with the OSS, and with the OWI, that a good part of my time I had to go over to OSS and go up to the State Department and try to get information from them which I would feed to my bosses.

Again and again General Embick and others would point out certain specific persons he thought were dangerous, but in general, "Don't talk about any military plans with civilians."

I said, "Why?"

"Because the wording of the Espionage Act was so vague that even if they were caught telling news to the enemy, there is little we could do about it."

The net result is that in contrast with England, we were handicapped with that thing, that the British Espionage Act is much stronger than ours and therefore the British Foreign Office would and did discuss matters with the British Joint Chiefs of Staff and could discuss matters fully and freely, whereas over here in America, the Espionage Act was so weak we felt there were a number of leaks inside the State Department and nothing could be done about it, and therefore we decided not to discuss any military plans with them.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you think many of those leaks were pro-Communist?

Digitized by Google

Mr. McGOVERN. I think many of those leaks were pro-Communist. I say that under advisement because I was interested in investigating the record after our successful operations in Europe and our successful invasion of Japan, and we were able to check the German and Japanese records and they did not know of our plans and intentions.

On the other hand, it is now very clear that many of our plans and intentions were known to the Russians.

Senator EASTLAND. Whom did you suspect?

Mr. McGOVERN. That I could not say, sir. I just knew these leaks were taking place. The net result of it was that we just simply had to tighten up. It hurt our effort when you could not deal with responsible officials in high places and the State Department and elsewhere. It did hurt our war effort.

Mr. MORRIS. If this last letter from Mr. Ramspeck is placed in the record, we have nothing else.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 306" and is as follows:)

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington 25, D. C., July 13, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Further reference is made to your letter of June 27, 1951, wherein you request information concerning 13 persons who you state have been employed by the Civil Service Commission.

The specific questions asked in your letter concerning these individuals are as follows:

1. Are they still employed by the Civil Service Commission? If so, in what capacity?

2. Have they severed their employment with the Civil Service Commission? If any questions of loyalty were involved, would you please indicate? What were the circumstances of their severance?

The records of the Civil Service Commission show that although all of these individuals have been employed in the Federal service, none has been employed in any capacity at any time by the Civil Service Commission.

A full report showing the Federal service of each of the 13 individuals you list is being furnished herewith for your information.

* * * * * * *

Ellen Van Zyll De Jong Atkinson was employed by the War Department from October 22, 1941, to April 30, 1945, when she resigned. In connection with an application for a position with the Office of War Information, Mrs. Atkinson was the subject of an investigation as to her qualifications, including loyalty. Mrs. Atkinson was not appointed and the investigation of her was discontinued. Precautionary measures were taken to prevent Mrs. Atkinson's reemployment in the Federal service at a later date until the question of her loyalty has been resolved.

* * * * * * *

If I can be of further assistance to you at any time, please let me know.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT RAMSPECK, Chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. We have another hearing at 2 o'clock on Monday.

Senator EASTLAND. All right.

We thank you very much, Professor.

Mr. McGOVERN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

(Whereupon, at 3:45 p. m., Friday, September 28, 1951, the hearing was recessed until Monday, October 1, 1951, at 2 p. m.)

Digitized by Google

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION
OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 2 p. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. Pat McCarran, presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, O'Conor, Smith, Wiley, Ferguson, Jenner, Watkins.

Also present: Senators Thye and Welker.

J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel, and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Will you stand and be sworn?

You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the Committee on the Judiciary will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. STASSEN. I do.

TESTIMONY OF HAROLD E. STASSEN, PRESIDENT, UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA

The CHAIRMAN. Governor Stassen, you have been subpenaed to come here to make such statements to this committee as may be pertinent to the subject before the committee. You are not asked to criticize or condemn anyone but to make a straight statement of the facts as you see them on any subject that is pertinent to the matter before the committee.

You may proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. STASSEN. Thank you, Senator.

May I say, in response to that, that I do appear in response to your subpena and that it is my basis of appearing and my understanding that I am not here to make accusations against anyone, nor to give exoneration to anyone, but to answer the questions as to the facts that I know in the matter pertinent to your inquiry.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator, Governor Stassen was subpenaed to appear here today to testify primarily concerning a State Department round-table conference which was held on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949.

That conference is directly in the scope of our investigation of the Institute of Pacific Relations because we had observed that the majority of people in attendance at that conference were members of the Institute of Pacific Relations and many of them were very active in that organization.

Digitized by Google

We had planned, Mr. Chairman, to have Mr. W. L. Holland, secretary general of the Institute of Pacific Relations, to be present today to identify exactly how many of the 25 in attendance at that conference were members of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Mr. Holland was not able to appear, but has sent in a letter which indicates that of the 25 in attendance 17 were members of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Then he proceeded to give the degree and the extent of activity of each one of these 17.

Mr. Chairman, subject to being verified by Mr. Holland when he appears here under oath, will you accept this list of people at that conference who were connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be filed with the committee and identified, and Mr. Holland may further identify it when he comes.

Senator FERGUSON. Will it not speak for itself as to what it is? It is a memorandum, rather than a statement under oath, and it will complete our record. Could it not be received on that basis?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be received and placed in the files of the committee, and we can insert it in the record at a later time.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, when did you first become interested in problems of the Far East, Far East political problems?

Mr. STASSEN. About 25 years ago, when I was a student at the University of Minnesota.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you tell us to what extent you have followed up your study of Far East developments?

Mr. STASSEN. I followed them quite actively ever since that time. I studied Far East policy and Far East history as a student at the University of Minnesota, and then followed it in a general way in subsequent years, and then, of course, became very closely touched with it during the war when I was on Admiral Halsey's staff; and during the major part of the war I was the assistant chief of staff to Admiral Halsey, and thereby, of course, knew all of the intelligence and other information of both General MacArthur's and Admiral Halsey's command and of the Washington headquarters.

In fact, it was my responsibility to follow it at that time.

Then, toward the end of the war, I was appointed by President Roosevelt as one of the Republican delegates to the San Francisco Conference of the United Nations.

Mr. MORRIS. As such, you encountered many of the problems confronted, looking into the Far East situation?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes. In fact, then, in the delegation, I was assigned to be in charge of the trusteeship portions of the Charter, and the trusteeship portions, of course, dealt in very great measure with the islands of the Pacific, with the areas of the Pacific and other parts of the world, and I had then assisting me Mr. Ralph Bunche and Benjamin Gerig, assigned to the staff at San Francisco.

Subsequent to the end of the war, I was in Japan during the liberation of the prisoners, and then have followed and traveled in that direction since the war.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you first take cognizance of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. STASSEN. My earliest recollection is that sometime after I was elected Governor of Minnesota I was invited to membership, and I declined.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony you have never been active in the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. STASSEN. I have never been active in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, do you recall a 3-day round-table conference held by the United States State Department, presided over by Philip C. Jessup, in October 1949?

Mr. STASSEN. I do. It was October 6, 7, and 8 of 1949, presided over in part by Dr. Jessup and in part by Dr. Fosdick.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you attend that conference?

Mr. STASSEN. I did; about two-thirds of the conference.

Mr. MORRIS. When were you invited, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. I was in London in September——

Mr. MORRIS. September 1949?

Mr. STASSEN. Of 1949, and about the 17th of September Mr. Julius Holmes, of our London Embassy of the United States, told me that he had a cable request to ask whether I would attend a conference on Far East and Asiatic and China policy to be held October 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. MORRIS. Who had invited you?

Mr. STASSEN. The American State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. No one particular person?

Mr. STASSEN. It was just Mr. Holmes who, at that time, was Minister of our Embassy in London, and he was conveying the cabled invitation from the State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know why you were being invited, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. I have an assumption in that regard, but I had previously conferred with Mr. Jessup, following an earlier activity on my part in Asiatic policy. In other words, I had been openly very critical of the trend of Asiatic policy in this country and particularly on April 1 of 1949 at MIT, when I appeared with Mr. Churchill, in my address there I was very specific and very emphatic on the need of a change in our Asiatic policy.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you publicly expressed yourself on that, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. What did you say at that time?

Mr. STASSEN. It was a background of interpreting our clash with the Communists on the world scene, and then I said:

> Relating this inescapable situation to the specific China problem, we must conclude that by our inaction and by our withdrawal of aid we are foolhardy thus to contribute to the Communist domination of China. We should move and move promptly to bolster the southern half of China, to assist by materials and by counsel in maintaining the independence of Canton, the four southern provinces of Kwangtung, Kiangsi, Fukien, and Yunnan, and the outlying islands of Hongkong and Formosa. Giving due consideration to our economic situation and capacity, we should regularly invest a portion of our resources in Asia for the resistance to communism.

I went on further in a further description of a major program in Asia. Because of the deterioration there and the delay, the vacuum that existed, I considered to be very serious.

From that speech at MIT, from that period on, I was very active in the public discussion of need of a change in Asiatic policy and a certain amount of controversy over it.

Digitized by Google

Following that, then came the appointment of the Jessup committee. That, as I recall, occurred on July 27 of 1949. At that time, Secretary Acheson announced that a thorough review of the United States policy toward the Far East would be made under the guidance of Ambassador at Large Philip Jessup, and then on July 30 he announced that Dr. Case and Dr. Fosdick would act as consultants in an objective appraisal of Far East problems in general, with a view to making recommendations to the Secretary of State for the formulation and implementation of policy concerning those areas.

When I saw that announcement in the paper, having been advocating that there must be a new policy in Asia, I called Dr. Jessup up, and I congratulated him on his appointment and told him I felt it was tremendously important that they move forward promptly on the matter of Asiatic policy.

Mr. MORRIS. What month was this, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. This would have been the end of July, the first part of August of 1949.

I told him I would be glad to talk to them about it. He then invited me to come to Washington. So, on the 7th of September of 1949, I came down to Washington with Mr. Ed Larson of my staff, and met with Dr. Jessup, Dr. Fosdick, Dr. Case, and a few members of the State Department staff; and there I made a presentation of what I urged should be done and done promptly in Asia. We came down with our maps, with our documents, and spent considerable time urging this change in policy.

Mr. MORRIS. Did the recommendations that you made at that time coincide with the recommendations you made at the conference yourself, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. They did.

Mr. MORRIS Did the State Department people express themselves in response to your recommendations?

Mr. STASSEN. In that conference, no. They were only asking questions and probing various aspects of my recommendations in the September 7th conference.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the first manifestation to you of the fact that a review of foreign policy was in fact being undertaken?

Mr. STASSEN. The public announcement on July 27, Secretary Acheson's announcement.

Mr. MORRIS. The consummation of that plan took place when, for the first time? When was the first overt act undertaken?

Mr. STASSEN. Insofar as the October conference——

Mr. MORRIS. Was the October conference the first thing that that committee did?

Mr. STASSEN. I do not have information of what they did between their appointment and the October conference.

I do not remember any public statement of what else they were doing during that period of time.

Mr. MORRIS. As far as you know, the first manifestation of that activity was the 3-day conference that was held on October 6, 7, and 8?

Mr. STASSEN. When you say "first manifestation," I am not sure of what you mean. I know they were in Washington. I know they were spending some time down here. I know they were in the State Department. But, so far as I have ever heard, the October conference was the first major grouping and discussion of the thorough study of Asiatic policy that they had been appointed to perform.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. Governor, I would like to go back to the July 27th notice in the press. Did that indicate to you that it was to be a study so that there would be a change, or what did it indicate?

Mr. STASSEN. Well, there had been considerable advocacy of a change, in the Senate, in the House, in the press, by myself personally, and out of that controversy before the public over the advocacy of the change; and then came the announcement that there was going to be—and this is a literal quotation from the stories—"an objective appraisal of Far East problems in general with a view to making recommendations to the Secretary of State for the formulation and implementation of policy concerning those areas."

That was the announcement in quotation marks.

Senator FERGUSON. So, it was indicated that there was going to be at least a study which might lead to a change; is that correct?

Mr. STASSEN. Furthermore, on October 6, which is 10 days after the announcement, Senator Arthur Vandenberg said publicly that the review of policy by the Jessup group should not overlook the possibility of finding a way to aid the non-Communists.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know at the time that Senator Vandenberg had insisted that he had not been consulted on the previous policy in the Far East?

Mr. STASSEN. Senator Vandenberg told me so, and I have also seen his public announcements to that extent.

Senator FERGUSON. You were familiar with that?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you appear in Washington, Governor Stassen, to attend this conference?

Mr. STASSEN. At about 9 o'clock on the morning of October 6. In other words, I returned to this country on October 4th from England and then came down here to the opening of this conference on the morning of October 6.

Mr. MORRIS. You had no preliminary discussions with anyone prior to the actual conference?

Mr. STASSEN. None whatsoever except my own staff, of course.

Mr. Robert Matteson, who is here with me, is my research assistant and has been for years.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Governor Stassen, who presided on the first day of the conference?

Mr. STASSEN. Dr. Fosdick.

Mr. MORRIS. He was Ambassador Jessup's assistant at that time, was he not?

Mr. STASSEN. He was an associate on this committee of three that had been appointed.

Mr. MORRIS. Was a transcript taken of this conference?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes, a Stenotype transcript was taken.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you request that a copy of the transcript be given to you?

Mr. STASSEN. As the conference opened and when I observed the stenotypist, I stated that I wished a copy of the transcript of everything that I, myself, said during the conference, and that I would not participate unless I was assured of receiving that transcript. There was some demurring and some discussion and then it was agreed that I would receive a transcript of everything that I said during the three days.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, did you, as a matter of fact, receive such a transcript?

Mr. STASSEN. I did.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you receive it?

Mr. STASSEN. I received it immediately following November 29, that is, it was forwarded on November 29, and reached me on the 30th or on the 1st of December, after I had followed up the failure to receive it by a telegram to Secretary Acheson.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Governor Stassen, did you, in addition, take notes at this conference?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the transcript that Governor Stassen has received and about which he was just speaking, together with his notes, will form the basis of the questions that will be addressed to him in this session.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that we had requested that a full copy of the transcript be made available to this committee, but that transcript was denied us, and for that reason it is necessary for us to have witnesses testify as to what took place at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I ask the witness one question?

Did your notes, Governor, unlike the transcript which was furnished you, cover what was said by others than yourself at the conference?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes; although I am never a person who takes extensive notes. I rely mostly on my memory.

Mr. SOURWINE. They were to remind you, and not verbatim?

Mr. STASSEN. My own notes are to remind me of what I want to rebut or in answering something, and my memory is what I primarily rely on, but the transcript is a stenotype record of what I said at the various times during the conference.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not just desire the transcript for corrective purposes?

Mr. STASSEN. No; not at all for that.

Senator FERGUSON. You desired it so that you might have a transcript of what you had said?

Mr. STASSEN. Right.

Senator FERGUSON. And, therefore, you did not make any corrections and send it back?

Mr. STASSEN. No.

Senator FERGUSON. You have the original of that transcript?

Mr. STASSEN. I have the original transcript of my statements.

Senator FERGUSON. I assume, then, that your statements would refresh your memory as to what others said?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes, certainly.

Senator FERGUSON. So that you feel that you now have a memory of what took place at this conference?

Mr. STASSEN. I do.

Senator FERGUSON. And I assume that recently, after you were subpenaed, at least you have gone over your notes and also your transcripts?

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. After I received the subpena, I went over my notes and the transcript, and I prepared a memorandum for my own assistance in this conference.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, briefly for background purposes, I wonder if you could describe the condition existing at that time with respect to the various problems that were about to be discussed at the conference? I think it would be better if we had a little background of these facts before we begin.

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

In thinking of the conference itself, it is very important to keep in mind what the circumstances were at the time. Of course, one of the most important things to keep in mind is that this was 9 months before the Korean war. The Korean war did not break until 9 months later.

About 4 months or 5 months before this conference, the Peiping radio had broadcast a statement that the Red Chinese would fight on the side of Communist Russia in the event of another world war.

Then on July 27, 1949, Secretary Acheson had announced this review that we spoke of a moment ago.

On August 5, 1949, the State Department had issued the white paper on China. You are all familiar with that.

I might say that a copy of that was mailed to me when I was asked to attend this October conference. In other words, that is just 2 months before the conference concerned, the white paper was issued.

On August 6, 1949, Senator Vandenberg had made this statement that I referred to, that it should not overlook the possibility of finding a way to aid the non-Communists of Asia.

On September 12, 1949, a little less than a month before, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Armed Services Committee had recommended 20 to 3 the $1.3 billion military assistance program including $75 million for the general area of China, and Congress passed the measure on September 28, 1949.

On October 1 of 1949, the Chinese Communist People's Republic was proclaimed. In other words, this is just a week before the conference when the Chinese Communist People's Republic was proclaimed in China.

On October 2, 1949, the U. S. S. R. recognized the Chinese Communist People's Republic. Bulgaria and Rumania followed with recognition on October 3. Poland and Czechoslovakia followed with recognition of the Chinese Communist People's Republic on October 4.

On October 5, 1949, the line of the internal war in China extended across the nation at a point about 120 miles north of Canton, with the four southern provinces and approximately 40 percent of the people of China not under Communist control.

So that was the picture as the conference opened on the morning of October 6.

Mr. MORRIS. Professor Kenneth Colegrove testified here last week. He stated that a group of people at that conference were able to loosely band themselves together and form a prevailing point of view, that their point of view prevailed throughout the 3-day conference.

Governor Stassen, did you notice while you were present at this conference the tendency of any group of people present to dominate the conference or to lead the conference?

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. Mr. Morris, before proceeding as to what took place in the conference itself, I should like a specific ruling of the chairman on this point. In other words, I am perfectly willing and in the national interest will go forward to answer thoroughly all your questions with all facts, but I would like to have the record show and the chairman to rule that you are aware that the State Department has called this a confidential conference. You are aware that the transcript is stamped "confidential" and you are aware that the transcript is also stamped that it contains information affecting national defense, and so forth, and that it has taken the position that it, itself, will not release the transcript, and that knowing those things, as I understand it, Senator, you are now asking me to proceed to discuss what took place in this conference in your own pursuit of the national interest in your functioning of the United States Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. You have correctly stated the position taken by the committee.

What is more, aside from what may be matters that would affect the national security, it is the chairman's opinion that you are entirely free to discuss anything and everything that went on in that conference except that which would affect national security. I think your own judgment is sufficient when that is in question.

Senator FERGUSON. I would like to know whether or not, since the conference, you have been notified in any way that this was a confidential conference and therefore everything in it was secret. Have you been so notified by the State Department?

Mr. STASSEN. No. When I received the transcript, it carried on each page a stamp "Confidential." Of course, I am also aware of the issue that came up on the same transcript in the so-called MacArthur hearings when Secretary Acheson was on the stand.

Senator FERGUSON. Could you tell us what part of the transcript has this notation about security? Is it typed in there?

Mr. STASSEN. It is typed in at the top of the page.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you please read that to us?

Mr. STASSEN (reading):

This document contains information affecting the national defense of the United States within the meaning of the Espionage Act or information of vital interest to the Federal Government and is transmitted for official use only.

Senator FERGUSON. Could I inquire whether or not that was mentioned at the time?

Mr. STASSEN. It was not.

Senator FERGUSON. The Espionage Act was not mentioned?

Mr. STASSEN. No. And in Mr. Holmes' invitation to me and in the follow-up letter of September 27 to Mr. Russell, there was nothing said that the conference would be confidential. That was announced at the opening of the conference and that is what led me to insist that I have a transcript of my own remarks.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, do you, as a former governor, and with your knowledge of foreign affairs and domestic affairs, have knowledge of anything in this document that you believe would be adverse to the United States security?

Mr. STASSEN. It is apparent from the transcript and it will be apparent from the total transcript—it was apparent from the conference—that the national security would, in fact, be served by the release of the transcript rather than by holding it classified, and that the national security would have been served by the publication of the proceedings the day after the conference closed so that the American public and the Congress then could have had its say on it.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. And could have seen the whole picture that took place at this conference?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, are you familiar with the fact that on October 26, our Government sent to the Nationalist Government notice that we would not give military aid to the Nationalist Government as far as the defense of Formosa was concerned?

Mr. STASSEN. I am aware of that, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. And if this had been released between the time of the conference and that date, public opinion could have operated and acted upon any such policy?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. So you feel now that the national interest would have been served and still served by a release of what took place at that conference?

Mr. STASSEN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. I may say just a little further with respect to the ruling on the matter submitted by Governor Stassen: The Governor is here under subpena. He has been interrogated aside from this public hearing. The committee is not inclined to elicit anything that would be detrimental to the national security. The Governor has wide experience which would justify him in saying that any answer he might give might be detrimental to the national security. Other than that, the Governor is here under subpena and is under the direction of the committee to answer the questions propounded.

Senator WATKINS. Governor Stassen, in line with the question that has just been asked, did I understand you to say that at this conference questions were asked of those who had been called in from outside of the Government by the State Department?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. Rather than any information being given to you by the State Department?

Mr. STASSEN. There were both. There was a briefing, so-called, and then the discussion of the participants.

Senator WATKINS. As I understand it, you gentlemen were there at the invitation of the State Department to give advice and counsel with respect to policy to be adopted?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Senator WATKINS. One which was sought to probably be a reversal or change of what had been going on?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Senator WATKINS. I got the impression from what you said that probably the State Department officials were in the position more of listeners and questioners rather than revealing anything to you that might affect the security.

Mr. STASSEN. That is predominantly true.

Mr. SOURWINE. Governor Stassen, do I correctly understand your testimony that at the time of this conference there was no oath of secrecy imposed on those who attended?

Mr. STASSEN. There was not.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. And at the time you requested this transcript of your own testimony there had been no condition imposed on you that you might not discuss what you had said outside the conference?

Mr. STASSEN. They had announced at that point that there was not to be any press release on the conference and that they did not wish us to discuss publicly what took place in the conference.

At that point I insisted then that I have a transcript of my own statements.

Mr. SOURWINE. Up to the time you received this transcript of your statement bearing the usual security note classifying it as confidential, did you feel up to that time that you would have been prohibited from discussing, say, in this committee, what you had said at that conference?

Mr. STASSEN. No; I would not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you, then, take the classification notice as an imposition, in connection with the transmission of that transcript, of a security ban which, prior to that time, did not attach?

Mr. STASSEN. No, I take it as a matter of my response to this committee under proper subpena; so that is the basis, in other words.

You had asked a question and then I asked for this clarification.

Your question was as to whether or not there was a leading group in the conference, and there was.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was the leader of that group, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. There were two leaders in this, one perhaps senior, Mr. Owen Lattimore, and Mr. Lawrence Rosinger. They were the leaders in the discussion of the prevailing group.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, as we have pointed out, during the course of the testimony of Prof. Kenneth Colegrove, each of those two men mentioned by Governor Stassen have been identified in each case by more than one witness as being members of the Communist organization.

Mr. STASSEN. I have no comment on that statement of yours, of course. That is your own statement.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. That is a statement of the record made before you came on.

Mr. MORRIS. It was understood, Governor Stassen, you would not be qualified to say whether or not Lattimore or Rosinger is a Communist.

The CHAIRMAN. He is not called upon to state.

Senator FERGUSON. He is not being asked.

Mr. STASSEN. Unless I had the FBI files.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, would you in a concrete way set forth some of the recommendations that you recall those two gentlemen and the group that was, roughly, associated with them, made during the conference?

Mr. STASSEN. The group that was led in the discussion by these two gentlemen recommended 10 points for American policy in China and in Asia.

Mr. MORRIS. What were those 10 points, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. I would summarize them, first, and then if you wish, go further into them.

The first point was that Asia should be approached as a long-term problem to be studied and deferred; that the Russian Communist attention was concentrated first on Western Europe with its industrial strength; that the United States should likewise give priority to Europe.

Digitized by Google

Their second major point was that an aid-to-Asia program should not be started by the United States until after long and careful study because of the complexity of Asia and the dangers of a Communist charge of United States imperialism.

The third major point was that the Russian Communists were not as aggressive as Hitler and would not be apt to take direct military action to expand their empire.

Their fourth major point was that the United States should recognize the Communist Peoples Republic government of China under the leadership of Mao Tse-tung at an early date.

Their fifth point was that the United States should encourage the recognition of the Communist Peoples Republic government by Britain and India and follow with its own recognition soon thereafter.

Their sixth point was that it should be United States policy to turn Formosa over to the Chinese Communist government.

Their seventh point was that it should be United States policy to permit the Chinese Communists to take Hong Kong if they insisted.

Their eighth point was that Premier Nehru had shown reactionary and arbitrary tendencies and should not be leaned on or assisted as a leader of non-Communist forces in Asia.

Their ninth point was that the United States should not approve of the blockade of the Communist Chinese coast by the Chinese Nationalists under Chiang Kai-shek, should assist in breaking it, and should send economic aid to the area of China under Communist control.

Their tenth point was that no aid should be sent to the non-Communist Chinese guerrillas in the south of China, nor to the Chiang Kai-shek forces, and the military supplies en route to them should be cut off.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, did you and other members attending that conference oppose those views as they were expressed by this prevailing group?

Mr. STASSEN. I opposed each and every point in this 10 group and had considerable support in the conference in opposition, but a minority support, and in the force and repetition of argument, the Lattimore-Rosinger group prevailed.

Mr. MORRIS. How frequently did Lattimore speak while you were present, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. I would say 8 or 9 times.

Mr. MORRIS. And Rosinger?

Mr. STASSEN. About 5 or 6 times.

Mr. MORRIS. You say that you were there 2 of the 3 days; is that right?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Could I inquire, Governor, whether or not it became apparent after the meeting started that there was a group advocating these 10 points?

Mr. STASSEN. It was very apparent that Mr. Lattimore and Mr. Rosinger would fit their comments in together and then others would come in and you would not know, of course, so clearly whether that was just the thing that would happen or there was any prearrangement of discussion.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. But it did appear that after you got started, there was a rather distinct agreement among the group as advocating these 10 points?

Mr. STASSEN. There was a prevailing agreement on the points. You wouldn't have every member of any distinct group expressing agreement with every point, but as the discussion went on there would be supporting comment and in turn critical comment directed at the position which I and others had taken.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you say that the 10 points were advocated by Lattimore or Lattimore and Rosinger or a larger group?

Mr. STASSEN. Lattimore, Rosinger, and the group that was as a whole joining in with them.

Senator FERGUSON. Advocating the 10 points?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Senator WATKINS. Was there any comment by the State Department officials on the 10 points that were advocated by this group?

Mr. STASSEN. Not at the time that the formal discussions were taking place.

Senator WATKINS. There was no indication of how the State Department representatives felt about those recommendations?

Mr. STASSEN. Not at that time during the conference. There was subsequently.

Senator FERGUSON. I would like to know how long after you did find that the State Department was approving or disapproving of certain of these 10 points.

Mr. STASSEN. We went on and I opposed these and advanced my position as to what we ought to do and I had support.

Then at a recess, around noon of the third day, I spoke to Dr. Jessup. I said I certainly hoped that they would not make the tragic mistake of following this recommended program that had been advocated by Mr. Lattimore and his group.

Senator FERGUSON. What did he say?

Mr. STASSEN. He responded that he felt that the greater logic was on that side.

Mr. MORRIS. That is, the side of Lattimore and Rosinger?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right, and then I pleaded with him that he should not follow that view and urged that before he moved in that direction, that he should go to Tokyo and see General MacArthur to discuss the whole situation with him. I told him I had not seen General MacArthur or had any communication with him since the end of the war, but that I knew from the whole wartime experience that he was extremely brilliant and well informed about these very problems we were dealing with in this conference, and that it was, in my judgment, tremendously important that he go promptly to see General MacArthur and discuss with him the recommended Lattimore program.

Senator FERGUSON. What did he say about that?

Mr. STASSEN. He said he may do that, and that was the end of that conversation.

Senator JENNER. Did he ever go, Governor, that you know of?

Mr. STASSEN. He went 3 months later. He arrived there, I believe, on January 6 of the next year.

Senator JENNER. In his public statements had be changed when he went over there?

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. Well, changed——

Senator JENNER. Changed from the Lattimore line back to your line regarding the problems of the Orient and the Far East.

Mr. STASSEN. I do not know of him ever taking a stand in accord with my position. I do not know of him ever really expressing publicly in any definitive detail his position on these problems. I may have missed some of his speeches, but I was watching it quite closely.

Senator FERGUSON. Governor, on the one point of this Nation of ours giving notice to Chiang Kai-shek's government on or about the 26th of October 1949, that we would not furnish the Nationalist Government any more aid as far as Formosa was concerned, that would indicate, at least on one of these principles, that they were following the Lattimore line?

Mr. STASSEN. There was much evidence in the succeeding weeks that the State Department and the United States Government was proceeding to implement the Lattimore program. I was following that, of course, very closely out of this situation.

Senator FERGUSON. You saw no signs of our acts that indicated they were following what the other group with you were advocating?

Mr. STASSEN. Not until after the Korean war broke, which was 9 months later, then there was some different evidence. During the 9 months' period, from October until the Korean war broke, I was following it very closely, very anxiously, and there was no indication that they were implementing anything that I had urged, and, on the contrary, the indications were that they were implementing the Lattimore proposals.

Senator WATKINS. May I inquire if there was any expression of the situation in Korea at this conference?

Mr. STASSEN. I understood on the third day that there had been a bit of it on the second day, but I do not know the details of it. It was not a major part of the conference.

The CHAIRMAN. In that respect, you attended 2 days?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right, at least the major part of 2 days. You see, I was on short notice with a schedule already planned and I had to readjust.

I remember on one of those evenings, I had to go to Harrisburg to speak to the Pennsylvania newspaper editors and I think I had to leave a little early on that day; things of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Your principal attendance was on the first and third days?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, would you accept testimony from this witness showing that each one of these 10 points, inasmuch as the governor has made them as definite and as precise as that, was opposed and ineffectively opposed, and there was an implementation on the part of the Government in each of the 10 cases subsequent to that time?

The CHAIRMAN. I think he has already testified in substance to that.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you take testimony on each particular point, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Senator FERGUSON. First, I think we also seem to have notes and I move that the governor's minutes of what he said in the conference be received as part of our record.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. That motion will be granted. He has not dealt on those minutes yet.

Mr. MORRIS. I was proposing that we take each point singly and discuss them in detail.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. The witness is capable of saying what opposition was expressed to each of the points and whatever implementation was subsequent to that.

The CHAIRMAN. He is testifying of his own knowledge; he being present and on the ground, has a perfect right to do so.

Senator FERGUSON. My idea was to have the notes to implement his testimony. He would not want to read his notes.

The CHAIRMAN. Notes that he made himself?

Senator FERGUSON. That have been sent to him, his memorandum plus the notes.

The CHAIRMAN. The notes are one thing and the stenographic report is another.

Senator FERGUSON. I would like to move that we make both the notes and the stenographic report part of this record.

The CHAIRMAN. The notes, I understand, are to enable the governor to testify. The stenographic transcript is a correct transcript?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And the notes you made yourself?

Mr. STASSEN. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be received as evidence in this case.

Senator WATKINS. I take it you would like to have the governor go into each point?

The CHAIRMAN. They are now before the committee and they are in evidence, and you may inquire.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Governor Stassen has stated that this document is a copy of the notes made by himself at this conference.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 307," and is as follows:)

MEMORANDUM PREPARED BY HAROLD E. STASSEN, AFTER BEING SUBPENAED TO TESTIFY BEFORE THE INTERNAL SECURITY SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, WASHINGTON, D. C., ON OCTOBER 1, 1951, AT 1 P. M.

Subject: Conference on Asiatic policy, called by and held at the State Department, on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949.

I appear in answer to your subpena. I will answer your questions thoroughly because of the importance of your inquiry. But I wish to make it clear that I do not intend to make accusations against anyone, nor do I intend to give exoneration to anyone. I will simply and directly state facts. It is your province to form opinions and to reach conclusions.

A complete stenotyped record of the proceedings of the conference was taken by the State Department so that everything I testify to about the conference discussions can be verified from this record.

Before I began to speak at the conference I insisted upon a copy of the transcript of my own statements in the conference and I have this transcript in my possession for verification of my own statements and my own position in the conference.

In considering this matter it is important to have in mind the background at the time.

The conference was held 9 months before the Korean war began.

On April 3, 1949, Peiping radio broadcast a statement of the Red Chinese that

Digitized by Google

China would fight on the side of Communist Russia in the event of another world war.

On July 27, 1949, Secretary Acheson had announced that a thorough review of United States policy toward the Far East would be made.

On August 5, 1949, the State Department issued the white paper on China.

On August 6, 1949, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg said that the review of Asiatic policy should not overlook the possibility of finding a way to aid the non-Communists of Asia.

On September 12, 1949, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Armed Services Committee recommended 20 to 3 the $1.3 billion military assistance program including $75 million for the general area of China, and Congress passed the measure on September 28, 1949.

On October 1, 1949, the Chinese Communist Peoples Republic was proclaimed.

On October 2, 1949, the U. S. S. R. recognized the Chinese Communist Peoples Republic; Bulgaria and Rumania followed on October 3, and Poland and Czechoslovakia followed on October 4.

On October 5, 1949, the line of the internal war in China extended across the nation at a point about 125 miles north of Canton, with the four southern provinces and approximately 40 percent of the people of China not under Communist control.

On October 6, 1949, the conference began.

The prevailing group in the conference was led in the discussions by Mr. Owen Lattimore and Mr. Lawrence Rosinger. They recommended 10 points for American policy in China and in Asia as follows:

1. That Asia should be approached as a long-term problem to be studied and deferred; that the Russian Communist attention was concentrated first on Western Europe with its industrial strength; that the United States should likewise give priority to Europe.

2. That an aid to Asia program should not be started by the United States until after long and careful study because of the complexity of Asia and the dangers of a Communist charge of United States imperialism.

3. That the Russian Communists were not as aggressive as Hitler and would not be apt to take direct military action to expand their empire.

4. That the United States should recognize the Communist Peoples Republic government of China under the leadership of Mao Tse-tung at an early date.

5. That the United States should encourage the recognition of the Communist Peoples Republic government by Britain and India and follow with its own recognition soon thereafter.

6. That it should be United States policy to turn Formosa over to the Chinese Communist government.

7. That it should be United States policy to permit the Chinese Communists to take Hong Kong if they insisted.

8. That Premier Nehru had shown reactionary and arbitrary tendencies and should not be leaned on or assisted as a leader of non-Communist forces in Asia.

9. That the United States should not approve of the blockade of the Communist Chinese coast by the Chinese Nationalists under Chiang Kai-shek, should assist in breaking it, and should send economic aid to the area of China under Communist control.

10. That no aid should be sent to the non-Communist Chinese guerrillas in the the south of China, nor to the Chiang Kai-shek forces, and the military supplies en route to them should be cut off.

During the conference I opposed all of these 10 points, and as the stenographic transcript will show I urged the following:

A. That American Asiatic policy should be given immediate attention as I considered Asia to be the No. 1 priority of the Russian Communists and that they would move into the vacuum in Asia at an early date. That this was true because Asia was the vast underbelly of the Soviet Union, and the Communists would not move aggressively toward either Europe or Alaska so long as they were uncertain about Asia.

B. That an American aid-to-Asia program should be promptly established under able men with a headquarters in Bangkok, to assist the non-Communist peoples and that study and action should move forward together as in the Marshall plan.

C. That the Russian Communists were potentially just as aggressive as Hitler and that America should consider aggressive action by the Soviet Union as one of the definite alternative possibilities.

Digitized by Google

D. That the United States should not recognize the Communist government in China, and that to do so would be one of the most tragic moves the United States could make in long-term world strategy.

E. That the United States should announce that it considers Formosa a vital part of our perimeter and that we would not permit an armed assault from the mainland on Formosa.

F. That the United States should back up the British at Hong Kong, and that if the British, who must be our close partner in the world, decided to stand and fight at Hong Kong we should back them up with planes and ships.

G. That Nehru was an important leader of the non-Communist areas of Asia, that India should receive economic aid, that he should not be opposed in his effort to develop his third position in the world struggle.

H. That for the sake of world peace and our own security, high American policy should be to prevent Russian Communist imperialistic consolidation of Asia, that every move of opposition to the Communist advance in Asia should be made, and that all forces resisting communism in Asia should be aided militarily as well as economically.

There was considerable support in the discussion for my position, but the Lattimore—Rosinger group prevailed.

Near the conclusion of the sessions I said, directly across the conference table (sec. D, pp. 6 and 7 of the original transcript p. 15 of transcript of Stassen remarks) that the steps advocated by the opposing group could best be characterized as steps that would hasten the victory of the Communists and that these steps would be a very sad mistake in American world policy.

Mr. MORRIS. The second, the witness has testified, is a copy of the transcript which was sent to him by the State Department at his request.

The CHAIRMAN. And is a correct transcript, he testified.

That also will be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 308," and is as follows:)

TRANSCRIPT OF COMMENT OF HAROLD E. STASSEN AT A SPECIAL CONFERENCE IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT REGARDING ASIATIC POLICY HELD ON OCTOBER 6, 7, AND 8, 1949, TO WHICH HE HAD BEEN INVITED BY CABLE TO LONDON ON SEPTEMBER 16, 1949.

(Minor editing for grammar and stenographic corrections have been made without change in substance. All discussion was informal without manuscript. Upon first being called upon for views by Dr. Fosdick at about 12 o'clock October 6)

Thank you, Doctor. I might say that it is with considerable reluctance that I explain my position before all these experts. I am willing to do it with the same motives I discussed with Dr. Jessup's committee in September. I state my views in the hope that I might contribute something toward thinking through to a new policy in Asia. I understand that is the process now going on.

I might say that my reluctance to state my views is increased by the fact that present at this table is the man who many years ago attempted to give me my first information about China and Asia, Dr. Harold Quigley, I add, with a smile that he will in no sense be responsible for what I say today even though he did stimulate my original interest in Asia many years ago at the University of Minnesota.

I am willing to give my tentative views very frankly and precisely in order that it might contribute toward seeing where we are at in Asiatic policy.

I have been listening with a great deal of interest to the discussion thus far and will participate as much as I can throughout the remainder of the conference. I am gravely concerned about the future of our American policy in Asia —perhaps more so than I should be—but I give you the basis for my deep concern for your own evaluation.

In my judgment Asia is No. 1 on Russia's board. I think that Russia puts Asia up in first place in her considerations. I say that, notwithstanding the other recognized centers of industrial power in the world that Mr. Kennan discussed this morning. I say that, because the geography of the situation is such that Asia is the underbelly of vast Russia. Russia has one projection out toward Europe, and the other projection out toward Alaska, and the underbelly is Asia. The Russians are very security conscious, but I do not agree with Mr. Kennan that you can consider that their thinking is different from Hitler's; that is, I do not feel it is correct to say the Communists are less aggressive in their tendencies than Hitler was.

Digitized by Google

While it is true the Communists consider that capitalism has the seeds of its own destruction, I understand their doctrine to be that when capitalism sees it is about to be destroyed by those seeds, capitalism will begin an imperialist war. The Communists have demonstrated before, in the case of Finland, that they will take aggressive advance action, in an effort, as they see it, to prepare themselves for an inevitable capitalistic imperialistic war. Thus I say that in our world strategy we should consider aggressive action by the Soviet Union as one of the very definite alternative possibilities. In that sense I put a different interpretation than Mr. Kennan does on the world picture.

Looking at the over-all objectives of our country on a world basis, it seems to me that clearly these objectives are to advance the standards of living and the freedom of peoples throughout the world, and to do so in a world at peace. We are going to have peace, for a generation at least, unless Russia commits aggression. I see very little possibility that there would be any war on this earth of any consequence in the next generation unless Russia commits an act of aggression. Therefore, the great problem of peace in the atomic period focuses down to our key consideration of what will affect the policies of the leaders of the Soviet Union. I believe that so long as the Kremlin leaders are uncertain about the future of Asia and of Asia's attitude, they are not very likely to commit aggression. That is why they are at this time giving great concentration to Asia.

They are starting with their infiltration methods throughout Asia—and not just in China.

I do not feel that within a generation anyone will draw from Asia any great forces or any military potential to play a part in aggressive action toward some other continent. But I do feel that the question of whether the military forces of Asia, limited in their military effectiveness though they may be, need to be contained by one side or the other in a world struggle, might be crucial in a future war. That status of these Asiatic military forces, therefore, might be crucial in a decision by the Kremlin as to whether or not a war should be attempted. That is one reason why there are many indications of concentration on the part of Russia upon Asia as No. 1. They are now in the early stages o' their concentrated attempt to consolidate the vast area of Asia.

Moving on from that analysis it, therefore, follows that very high American policy should be the determination to prevent Russian consolidation of Asia. I have the strong feeling that we are spending altogether too much time thinking of a China policy as a separate matter. I think that is a very unfortunate aspect of our thinking in these recent months and years. I emphasize also that as I see it we are not meeting to either approve or condone any past act, but the question is, Where do we go from here?

I think it is of vital importance that our country adopt a comprehensive Asiatic policy, of which the Chinese situation is an important part but definitely a subordinate part of the whole Asiatic approach. It is not quite so significant how far the Communists advance in China, or just exactly what happens in the Nationalist government or the Communist government of China. The question is, rather, How does all this affect the whole vast area of Asia? As we all know more than half the peoples of Asia are outside of China—in Malaya, Siam, Burma, India, Indonesia, Indochina, and the Philippine Islands.

Looking at the total situation, our country should at the earliest date, which presumably would be after Congress meets in January, initiate an economic aid-to-Asia program. The exact framework and details must be developed as time goes on, but I think some comment could be made on details at this time.

If we continue for a long period an atmosphere that the United States is waiting to see what happens in Asia, the result is a vacuum. Certainly all the lessons show that the Communists thrive on vacuums. They push into a vacuum with rapidity. So far as possible we must not permit vacuums to be present in Asia. Therefore we should establish an aid-to-Asia program, and we should decide, considering all the total demands upon our resources, what we can afford to spend in Asia. Clearly our own defense forces, the Marshall plan, and the arms for the Atlantic Pact members must all be firm and prior commitments. Our own internal problems of social security for our own people and of expenses of our Government are also demands upon our resources.

Digitized by Google

Furthermore, there is a limit to our resources. But it seems to me when you add all those things up, and look at the world picture, we not only can afford up to one-fortieth of our national budget for Asia, or one two-hundredth part of our year's annual income, which is $1 billion a year; but we cannot afford not to do it. We should also establish a headquarters in Asia for the program.

It is my feeling that Bangkok in Siam would be the best headquarters for an American office for an aid-to-Asia program. From this headquarters this affirmative aid program for whatever area remains not under Communist domination in China and in the rest of Asia should be carried on.

In many respects it should be similar to that superb plan in Europe which is named for the distinguished American that sits at this table—the plan that has done so much for the advancement of the world's peace—the Marshall plan. Of course, in other respects it must be very different because the conditions in Asia are so different.

I would say it should be a firm rule of that plan that we do not hand out any aid to or through any governments in Asia because of the experience and the knowledge of the corruption and weakness of those governments. We should consult with governments as to what is to be done, and we should have joint committees for operation; but the aid must be handed out directly through American agents, having in mind not only the corruption, but also the great importance of evidence of aid from the standpoint of good will among the peoples.

In this positive program for China and for the rest of Asia, I would try to do such things as the drilling of wells in those plateaus that have good water—with good well-drilling equipment—the development of land use in conservation and fertilization. Admittedly this would make a small dent on that vast area but those are the types of constructive things that should be carried on. A portion of the program should include underwriting American private capital in going in and developing some of the natural resources of Asia. Underwriting under point 4 or a clause similar to the Marshall plan provision would be appropriate. From the special headquarters in Bangkok, selected for its central location and stability, an air service should be instituted with planes with American flags on them flying once again throughout Asia, carrying officials and some of the minor supplies. Some newsprint and informational services throughout the whole of the Asiatic area should be provided. Of course, measures having to do with health and with education would be included.

In other words, the immediate and the long-term to me are not two separate problems in Asia because there is only one kind of program you can have in Asia and that is a long-term one because it is a long-term continent as I see it in its position with reference to Russia.

Now, then, this economic aid to Asia program I would put up first and carry on regardless of what happens in China. From the military side, which clearly should be a separate program and should be under the direction of our own military leadership, I would emphasize here that there may well be intelligence information on which I do not have, and do not seek to have, which would vitiate the position I take.

I do not feel anyone can be certain that you can write off non-Communist China at this time. I think there should be encouragement to opposition to the Communist advance anywhere in Asia and, with the rough terrain to the south, you might well find there would be considerable pockets of opposition that would continue on for a number of years. During those years of time the problems of the Communists in the rest of China will clearly multiply.

Mr. Kennan has correctly said that China is the most have not of the have-not nations. This is the first time that the Communists have taken over a have-not nation. We all recognize that Russia has tremendous resources. When the Communists took over Russia with its great fields of grain, and mineral resources, and coal mines, they had within their borders a lot of natural resources. Now they are taking over in China what clearly should be characterized, in relation to the numbers of population, a have-not nation. The likelihood is that in these next 2 or 3 years, while the pockets of resistance would continue in the non-Communist China, a great amount of difficulty will arise in those areas under Communist domination, possibly leading to starvation within the Communist area and riots causing great difficulties that no one can foresee.

I had a conversation with one of the men most informed about the whole of China and of Asia. When I asked him at the end of the war what would happen in China, he said: "Governor, if anybody asks you what will happen in China, don't answer him." There is a lot to that kind of advice. Nobody can draw a blueprint for the future of China.

Digitized by Google

I do know that in some respects the Communist advance through south China has been slower than was estimated; the advance up in northwest China is faster than was estimated. We are inclined to think, from our standpoint, that the withdrawal of forces show weaknesses. But if you are facing a million men with 250,000 men and with lack of morale maybe the best thing you can do is try to keep your men intact and keep on withdrawing until you get to the very nethermost areas of your country. I mean, China is so different that you should not attempt to appraise it from our standards. I think there is every indication that if we have a basic policy of opposition to the Communist advance, and opposition to the Communist consolidation of Asia, that then we should play out every card of opposition. That, of course, means that it would be unthinkable to recognize the Communist government in China and to withdraw recognition from the Nationalist government. Even though the last vestige of military opposition disappear, in my feeling, very strongly, a number of years should still go by before we recognize that new government. We must remember that the recognition of the new government would have a tremendous impact throughout Asia. It would place the new government with a seat on the Security Council of the United Nations, with full veto power. In my judgment it would be one of the most tragic moves we could make in the long-term world strategy. I feel very strongly that we should not recognize the Communist government in China even though they go on and consolidate the remaining area, which may still be a long way off in the very rugged terrain of the south of China. I am thinking again from an Asiatic and world-wide policy rather than exclusively the China policy.

On the other military question, I am inclined to feel that Formosa is an important strategic area for our own outer perimeter. Here again the military judgment should carry. There are excellent airfields in Formosa. If antagonistic air bases exist on Formosa the Philippine Islands and Japan are quite effectively severed from each other. Formosa is immediately astride of the airway and direct seaway. We should have in mind the psychological effect of a firm position and the fact that Formosa is still in an uncertain legal position because when the war ended, Formosa was not given the Nationalist government.

China was only given the right to go on Formosa to disarm the Japanese. There had been no peace treaty, no decision handing Formosa to China. The legal situation as to Formosa is an uncertain one and an undecided one. In view of that and in view of the picture in China, I feel that we ought to ask the United Nations to take the position that an attack on Formosa would not be countenanced at this time. Obviously, the United Nations could not take such action under the veto of Russia. We should then announce that we consider Formosa a very vital part of our perimeter and that we would not permit an exterior armed assault on Formosa. That is a very firm position to take. I think the whole picture requires some of that kind of firmness. If Formosa falls by internal infiltration, I feel we should not and cannot take action to counteract that. We should not land troops on Formosa, but we should take a firm position against assault from the mainland of China upon Formosa.

I think if the British take a stand in Hong Kong we ought to back the British up with everything they want us to back them up with in Hong Kong. These are matters of alternative, and if the British, who must be our close partner in this world picture, decide they are going to stand and fight, what do we do? Do we appear before the world as weak and indecisive? Do we back away from our British friends, or do we send ships and give them some air cover and do that sort of thing and indicate that we stand with them in a firm position against the Communist assault on Hong Kong? I grant these are grave decisions, but I think the whole picture demands that kind of very firm action. This military side leads to the question of Pacific pact. I know of these statements of Quirino and Rhee, and others. I cannot see that an affirmative Pacific pact of the nature of the Atlantic pact can be solidly formed at this time because I do not believe that India could join such a pact now, and I think that India must be a major consideration in our Pacific policy.

Therefore I think we ought to say to Quirino and Rhee that we do not think they should take action unless Nehru joins in it, and that will automatically defer it and cause a more gradual policy in that area. It ought to be our position that as far as association of the non-Communist area of Asia, it should not move any faster than Nehru is willing and India is willing to go along with it. We should develop an economic relationship in India which, I understand, the British have made more open to us now, by sending in equipment to assist in the development of hydroelectric power and of dams, engineers and capital and supplies and all that that involves. With these measures should be included constant pressure—not too great, but definite—upon the Dutch and the French to work out their situations in Indochina and in the Indies on a favorable basis. Perhaps if the Dutch policy now evolves into fair stability that pattern might be the basis of pressure on the French to try to move in the same direction. It will be slow and difficult; there will be set-backs; but I think it is the unending kind of thing we must do in Asia. I do feel strongly that adopting an over-all coordinated policy and putting it under able men who are out there in a headquarters at Bangkok, and who will then give it body and sinew and detail—much as did General Marshall and then Paul Hoffman in the Marshall plan—that kind of a development out of the beginnings of a broad policy will lead to a hopeful situation. I am perfectly willing to contemplate that the Communist advance might go a lot farther before it subsides, and the question of its subsiding is really the question of our own fundamental future.

Digitized by Google

That's an outline of my thinking and I state it not with an attitude that here are the answers, but more to expose in definite form a set of thinking that has developed over a period of years so that it might be differed with, it might be modified, and we might contribute toward an answer. I have purposely refrained from discussing the situation publicly since the white paper was published because I felt that by direct conferences with Dr. Jessup and such as this there might be a better chance of developing governmental policy than by any public debate at this stage, at least, on the situation.

[Later in the conference after a question:]

We might focus on the economic program for a bit. Supose, as I envisage it, that in various areas of south Asia American economic aid is coming in and getting some results in improved crops, in slightly better living conditions, in improved water and irrigation, and all that goes with it; whereas up in the Communist area of China they are going into a real economic tailspin. Is not that the kind of circumstance that over a period of a few years would begin to make some sense and give some answer to the great promises and claims of the Communists in Asia. I do not see where you have really differed in your specifics to that kind of an approach, and I do emphasize that if we pour in large sums of money in the hands of governments it is very unlikely that it gets out to the peasants. So what I am emphasizing is that what we do should be in terms of simple farm implements and of well-drilling equipment and of the simplest kinds of things put directly in the hands of the people without charge. Then it would be very hard for them to label that as imperialistic.

I agree that you should not require that they have an affirmative anti-Communist program politically as a prerequisite for economic aid; you should simply require that they be non-Communist-dominated and on that basis move on your economic aid.

Dr. Fosdick, to answer that I would say that it is very important, but I don't say that it is a prerequisite. In other words, I feel that the whole of Asia is such a vast problem that you cannot say anything is a prerequisite to the program. Just as the matter of studying just how you do these economic things, granted they need continuous study, but if we wait until we conclude our studies until we act, why we will all be dead before there is any action. So my feeling is that nobody could have painted out the Marshall plan when Dr. Marshall made that great presentation at Harvard. But after an exchange of views men were placed in charge of a program. Then study and action went forward together. That's what I feel is needed in Asia—study and action going on at the same time.

I, of course, do not mean to go in in spite of local governments or use American power to force our way in on the economic program. I mean that we go in with the permission and with joint working arrangements with the local governments, as we have in fact done in some of the South American countries. But there should be this distinction in the actual distribution of material—that is, that the prerequisite of our reaching agreement with the local government is that we be on hand in the distribution, so that it does not go into the black market and does not get dissipated as happened to so much of the former economic aid in Asia.

Dr. Fosdick, I want to clarify my position. I think Mr. Lattimore was under a misapprehension. By what I said regarding American aid, I did not mean to indicate that Asia was an exclusive problem of our country. I fully realize the interrelation of Europe and Asia and the whole world. But what I wish to emphasize is that when we are the country that has the most; when we actually, with about one-sixteenth of the world's people, produce one-third of the world's goods and services, we do have a very heavy responsibility toward this great continent and its have-not peoples there.

Digitized by Google

It has key relevance in the world security aspect with reference to Russia. I do not indicate that we try to pass upon whether there are any Communist tendencies in any country before giving economic aid, but I do feel strongly that if there is Communist dominance of a country, we should not go in with an economic aid program.

I feel that there is a grave clash of ways of life that has far-reaching implications for the future, and it is foolhardy for us to pour what is admittedly a limited resource into the area under Communist dominance. I not only feel that from a positive program but I think that in fact it would be quite academic to argue to the contrary. We must remember the realities: That we are talking about a program that will require congressional action for money and you will never get through Congress.

Question from the floor: Would you condone the Yugoslav policy?

I will get to that in a minute. You will never get through Congress a program that would permit the giving of economic aid to the Communist-dominated sectors of China. There are those who advocate aid to the Communist areas of China in the hope there would develop a form of Communist Titoism there. That has a false promise. Tito did not move away from Russia because of any promise of aid on the part of this country toward him. As a matter of fact, he moved away at a time when we had been very firm with him following the shooting down of United States planes. As long as he could follow a position of in effect taking directions from Russia and taking resources from us, that was the role he played. But when he had to choose, and chose Moscow, then came up against the result of his choice and the tightening of the screws by Russia, then the famous break came.

I actually asked Tito in March of 1947 whether he was going to take his economic direction from the Soviet Union and he got up from the luncheon table and paced up and down and said, "We are learning much from the socialist experience of the Soviet but Yugoslavia is a sovereign country. We all fought in the mountains—General Velebit (his interpreter) fought in the mountains." He was agitated on the nationalist angle. Now having made the break, I think it is right that we should be able to give some limited aid. But I think we should couple it with some insistence that there be a gradual moving toward more freedom in Yugoslavia, even though it be very slow and very gradual. The direction of movement of a government while receiving American aid should be toward the freedom of its people. Clearly American aid should not go in when the direction of the movement of a government is to the contrary and against the freedom of its people.

When it is the over-all aspect of security and the problem of Russia, then we need to think of the world strategy that is involved. I definitely do not agree that any softness toward the Communists of China will give a better prospect of Titoism developing. I say it should be firm and clear: If a country is under Communist dominance, it does not qualify for American generosity. If a country breaks with communism, then there will be American generosity. I think that should be clearly our action in this economic aid struggle.

As to being accused of imperialism, I think it is elementary that as long as we are producing more than the rest of the countries and living at a higher standard of living, we are going to be accused of imperialism in every argument that comes up all over the world regardless of what you do. If you let the accusation of imperialism stop you from a clearly indicated program of action, it would be a sad day.

Thus we need to move carefully, with all possible consideration of utilizing the nationalism Mr. Taylor emphasized, but definitely move. In the movement try to negate the charge of imperialism, but do not let that charge stop you from moving.

Mention has been made of India as a center of Asiatic operation. As I indicated before, I agree on Nehru and India being of great importance. But it would be a mistake to put our Asiatic headquarters in India, because on the one hand there is the sensitivity of India toward the British, just having come out from under, and a greater sensitivity there toward others coming in than there would be in other areas of Asia.

You would also get into the question of India and Pakistan, and the Hindu and Moslem religious issues in having our headquarters in India.

Someone suggested that our headquarters should be in Manila. The atmosphere then would be that we were returning to Manila rather than beginning a new Asiatic program. There is not the degree of democracy you would ideally desire in Siam. The strong man's record with reference to the Japanese in early 1942 is not good, but when you consider that Siam with approximately 17,000,000 people has one of the least dense populations and best food resources and greatest element of stability and a good location for travel by sea and air, I think you will come to feel that Bangkok is the logical center on the mainland of Asia for a long-term American aid program. Also, you have the fact that the terrain is additional security as to both Burma and Malaya, so for the greatest possible Communist onslaught, Bangkok would apparently be the last place to fall either by attack or infiltration, even if you take a black look at the future. That is why I am inclined to urge Bangkok as a center of Asiatic economic aid.

Digitized by Google

I emphasize that it is not to be a unilateral program and not to be one that we in America will do alone. It must be an aid to the people in Asia that help themselves. But let us be sure it will get to the people and not to corrupt elements in the governments. It will be a delicate operation. Let us also be certain we do not become involved in a joint operation with the British or French in a way that would bring to us the onus of their past colonial position. We do have a more favorable reputation in most of Asia than they do. While we must work closely with them in the world picture, let us not give ourselves this handicap in a new aid program by tying ourselves too closely to them.

Dr. Fosdick, I would say that clearly there should be consultation with the United Nations agencies and the utilization of them at every possible turn, but I cannot conceive that you could turn over the substance of American aid to be decided by United Nations agencies in Asia for a number of reasons. One is the aspect of the colonial powers being in there. The other is the amount of aid we give would fall so far short of what could well be used that I do not feel you could have the division of allocation that would parallel the OEEC in Europe. I think we would need to keep a more detailed control of the funds and of the goods in Asia than we do in Europe. I do grant and would urge that the United Nations agencies should be used to every degree possible.

I just want to say that I associate myself with Dr. Talbot and others who say that we must not try to have the Indians take positive sides between the Communists and ourselves. I think we must let that picture develop on pretty much their own pattern, and I also emphasize the view that you should try to get the greatest amount of the business approach into the situation, more of the underwriting and self-respect approach to the people of India. That is why, too, the Pacific Pact proposal, which might cause India to be outside of it, would be a very bad move, in my judgment.

Dr. Jessup, I might say first that I regret very much that I have not been able to sit through the entire conference. I made the greatest possible readjustment of my schedule when I received the invitation to be here and I will address myself very concisely to the point now under discussion and through the kind assistance of Dr. Talbot, I had some briefing of the discussion, and particularly of General Marshall's able presentation this morning.

I stated on Thursday that I was opposed to recognition of the North Government in China at this time and not at least for a question of a couple of years. I want to go into that a little more thoroughly because at that time I merely stated my position on it.

My first comment is on some of the related discussion this morning that has been advanced that along with recognition other steps we ought to take were proposed. I say, frankly, these steps, to me, could be best characterized as steps that would hasten the victory of the Communists in China and hasten the complete liquidation of the Nationalist Government. I think that would be the correct characterization of the related steps that have been advanced along with the urging of recognition at the earliest possible date.

To me that would be a very sad mistake in our world policy. If we recognize the Communist Government of China now, clearly that does mean we must at the same time not only withdraw recognition of the other Government—the Nationalist Government—but that we must then join in affirmative action to throw the Nationalist Government out of the United Nations. There are no halfway measures on this. You cannot be recognizing a government in one way and then in the United Nations tribunal, in which we a great leading nation, take a different position to that. Nor should we possibly abstain. That would be a cowardly and weak position to take. So, we would then be in the position of going into the United Nations, with our great prestige, and throw out from that United Nations the representative of whatever you may wish to call them—the remnants of a former government that still has now, and I think will for some foreseeable time, the effective jurisdiction over one-third of the area of China and one-third of its people and that is continuing to put up some form of resistance to the Communist areas.

Digitized by Google

Now, to put ourselves in that position in my mind, cannot be countenanced and I might urge, as I go forward, and respectfully submit that there have been some implications that perhaps those that oppose recognition are trying to play the popular tune in America, and the high view of statesmanship is the contrary and difficult and unpopular course. I will not attempt to draw any cloak of statesmanship about me this morning, or any other time, but I would modestly state that the steps that I took in the early days of opposition to Hitler and lend-lease and the whole question of isolation and world trade have not been popular courses at the time they were taken particularly in my home part of the country. To the greatest degree, it is possible, I approach these policies from the standpoint of what is right in the long view for our country and our ideals rather than what is the current popular view. In fact, I have such faith in democracy that if a policy is right, then I am certain you can interpret it to the American people and convince the majority of them it is right.

Going to the specifics of recognition, it seems to me that taking the affirmative stand of ejecting the Nationalist Government from the United Nations and placing in its stead the Communist Government of the north would be a clear invitation to a disregard of our fundamental ideals and objectives in the world picture. Whatever else may be said about the Nationalist Government, it seems to me that there has been a greater measure of democracy, a greater measure of individual freedom, the right of free expression, of a free press, of the communication of news in that area than there has been in any of the Communist areas of the world.

I might project my views of the Communist Government of north China. I believe that in the early stages they have brought in some of those who are not Communists into leadership—some of those we might call moderates. In the early stages they will say to the American businessman, if your country treats us better and recognizes us that will facilitate your doing business here. However, you will find quite rapidly as they consolidate their control over the country, and as they introduce people into these industries and businesses who learn something about them, they will proceed to throw out the moderates from the Government and will tighten up and possibly expropriate and take over the businesses, and that process will move forward steadily.

In saying that I anticipate that the pattern followed in Communist China will be the same as the Communist pattern in the Balkan area. I have a vivid recollection of a conference with President Benes of Czechoslovakia 2½ years ago in which he stated that Czechoslovakia was cooperating with the Soviet Union. He thought it was the best policy and that they were seeking to build a bridge between east and west and he had been pledged cooperation by Stalin. Benes thought it was the right policy for his country, and Stalin had pledged to him that Czechoslovakia could work out its solution in a broad democratic framework.

I think it is quite clear now that approach was used to Benes and other people of Czechoslovakia as a means of getting control, first, of the police and of the Department of Industries. After getting the Communists into the various industries they took over completely. Now week after week and month after month they obliterate more human rights and they bring the country under iron-handed dictatorship. The record in Poland has been similar to that.

If that effort is made in China, I believe you will find then disaffection of some of the generals in the Communist armies of China which will have to be met by rapid liquidation and new leaders being set in. Or it might involve a real split up and further division within the vast area of China in its leadership. This process, as I vision it, while the armies are in being and still moving about, would take place within the next few years, and I would think it would be regretted if we added to the prestige of the Communist Government of China, and then a process of this kind began to take place and we in fact would be in the position of always strengthening the hand of the new Communist government, which would be successively wiping out the liberties, freedoms, and opportunities of the Chinese people and would be putting down the efforts of those who wanted some nationalism in China and who wanted some independence and who were breaking away from the Communist leadership.

In my mind the plusses are very large on the side of saying that we want to watch this picture for a couple of years before we recognize the Communist Government of China. We may well find that just as the experts' anticipations have been unfounded so many times in China, that the anticipation and prediction now that the Communist armies can consolidate all China on their own timetable may meet many a reverse in some of the mountain passes by some of the troops who begin to defend their own territory as compared with defending an area far away from home.

Digitized by Google

Nobody knows the future under the frailties of the human race. Chiang Kai-shek in more recent months and years has had an unfortunate conclusion of what in many respects was a brilliant and remarkable career. Who knows but that Chiang at his age may pass from the picture and others may rise in the uncertain period of a few years and that in that we might find grounds perhaps; first, for a withdrawal of the full powers of the Nationalist Government in the United Nations, and perhaps even a request for a United Nations commission to study the situation in China, and that we might thereby gain time. We might serve notice that we are watching what the new government is doing in the matter of observing the recognized international amenities, and how it is treating American businessmen and missionaries; and how it is going about the obligations of international treaties; before we move in to recognize and to urge their seating in the United Nations.

I regret that I have not heard in detail the other arguments, but just what could be gained in that kind of a picture by a rapid recognition, I cannot evaluate as a counterbalance. It seems to me that after some period of time a group of men such as this could be assembled again to reevaluate the situation as to recognition and then analyze Russian dominance. In the meantime, let it be known that we are studying their independence on each of it.

Certainly the situation as to Tito is no indication that you move people away from the Soviet Union by being generous to them. He moved away at a time when we were being most firm and clearly classifying him in that area. On the other hand he was professing his association with the Soviet Union at a time when he could do that and still retain full American aid and full American assistance under UNRRA. There was no reason then for him to take any other position. But when he had to make a choice with the increasing tightening up of domination by the Soviet Union, he made the choice to move away.

If there are indications in China in the future of moving away from Moscow and of a greater recognition of rights of people within North China, that would be the moment at which we might decide to recognize and send assistance. But at a time when all statements being made by the leaders and the Communist Government are insulting and attacking our country, when the treatment of nationals is at a low ebb, clearly that is not a time to think of recognition. I think our prestige is involved in all of Asia and all we have done and all we will do.

I make the further point on this that by all means we should have a new aid to Asia economic program under way and functioning before we recognize the Communist government of the north of China.

If at a stage such as the present when the world says, what is America's Asia policy; the one outstanding fact was to be that we recognized the Communist Government of North China and joined in throwing out of the United Nations the Government that stood firm in the years of Japanese invasion; I think the result would be very sad. But if we start a new affirmative approach of aid to Asia in a positive way, and if our new American program and policy begins to project itself and be understood, if at that stage we find the intelligence officers' reports are of complete consolidation, and if at that stage we find there is an element of increasing stability and respect for rights rather than the reverse in the north of China, then at that stage I think recognition should be given after a full consideration—but not before.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, I wonder if you will address yourself to the first of those 10 points and tell us what opposition was expressed at this conference.

Mr. STASSEN. The first point that they had urged was that Asia should be approached as a long-term problem to be studied and deferred; that the Russian Communist attention was concentrated first on Western Europe with its industrial strength; that the United States should likewise give priority to Europe.

It was my view before and expressed at the conference and since that American Asiatic policy should be given immediate attention because I considered that Asia was the No. 1 priority of the Russian Communists at that time and that they would move into the vacuum in Asia at an early date. I said that in no uncertain terms in this transcript that you have.

Digitized by Google

I said this was true because Asia was the vast underbelly of the Soviet Empire and that the Communists would not move aggressively toward either Europe or Alaska, so long as they were uncertain about this vast underbelly below their great projection. In fact, in the conference with Dr. Jessup in September, we brought down the maps from the university to explain that whole situation and our basic analysis of it.

The CHAIRMAN. That was with Dr. Jessup?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That was your September meeting with him?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right, when we used the maps, but the same points were made as the transcript will show, in the October meeting. But at that time we had official State Department maps on the wall and we did not bring our own maps down.

Mr. MORRIS. For what purpose did you use the maps, Governor?

Mr. STASSEN. To give emphasis and clarity to our analysis of the world strategic situation, that it was foolhardy for America to be thinking only in terms of Europe and to leave a vacuum in Asia in which I was positive the Communists would move in, and that would upset the whole world situation. That was the plea I was making at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. Did it not seem apparent to you that if it was deferred and only studied that the Communists might take over all of China, and southeast Asia, for that matter?

Mr. STASSEN. Exactly. If you deferred and studied that, then you left a vacuum and an atmosphere of hopelessness and you fitted in then with the Communist charge that America was neglecting and didn't care about what happened to the people in Asia, so that you left that weakness in Asia and weakness in American position during these crucial months.

Remember now, this is the point when the civil war is going on in China with approximately half the people on each side of the line, and these are the crucial months that you are going through. That was why I urged so strongly that I was certain that Asia was No. 1 on Russia's board and that America must countermove promptly.

Senator FERGUSON. Was this the beginning of the let-the-dust-settle policy?

Mr. STASSEN. That was in the middle of it, and I was trying to change it, and I was trying to get a positive policy instead of that.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you been in a position to observe any implementation of that recommended policy?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes. From that time on, and again on up into the Korean war, and specifically through the conference that was held in March of 1950, at the State Department, in which they had leaders of many organizations present, there was always a sort of general discussion of doing something in Asia and never a concrete moving ahead, always a continuing general talking back and forth and not a specific implementation and moving on a countering program.

Senator FERGUSON. On the second item, if we waited and did nothing to avoid the Communist charging us with imperialism, that also would play into the hands of the Communists much better and in a much stronger manner than their charge of imperialism; would it not?

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. It would leave the same vacuum there that the others could move into; yes. I can recall that part of the discussion very much, and I had told them then, and it will appear in the transcript, that as long as we were a nation of great success and great resources the Communists would always be charging us with imperialism, whatever we did, and that the real way to answer it was to have a broad world-wide approach to the economic gain of other peoples. That was the answer that I made at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. That is point No. 2, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right, point No. 2. There was this extended discussion on their part that you did not know just what would happen in one country or another and the relations between them, and therefore you had to do a lot of studying; that you could not start anything unless you did a lot of studying, and they constantly brought that up. I insisted that you should establish the program, put able men in charge of it, just as Paul Hoffman was put in charge of the Marshall plan, and then have the study and the action go forward together. Of course, you should study, but you just should not sit still and study and leave a vacuum in Asia.

I stated specifically a headquarters should be established in Bangkok to show that America meant business, and then go forward studying and acting at the same time to assist the non-Communist portions of Asia.

Mr. MORRIS. Has there been any implementation of that particular recommendation on the part of this prevailing group, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. After Korea, long after Korea—in fact, in December of last year—the first recommendation was brought up by the State Department for aid to India in the form of wheat, which was then acted on a couple of months later. The first tangible moves on the point 4, which is partially in this area, but is not the direct kind of program that was then recommended, came forward; but from the time of this conference until Korea broke there was just a continuation of the delay and the study which had been recommended by the Lattimore group and no positive implementation such as our group had recommended.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, will you address yourself to the third point?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the third point?

Mr. STASSEN. The third point was that the Russian Communists were not as aggressive as Hitler and would not be apt to take direct military action to expand their empire.

I contended that the Russian Communists were potentially just as aggressive as Hitler—I pointed out Finland as an example—and that America should consider that aggressive military action by the Soviet Union was one of the definite alternative possibilities and that we should have that in mind in our policy.

But then, again, between that conference and the outbreak of the Korean war, there was no action taken to strengthen the military readiness or alertness of this country on the Soviet perimeter, but rather that attitude that they were not going to move by military force persisted until they proved when they went across the line at Korea that our analysis was right and that the analysis they urged was wrong.

Digitized by Google

Senator JENNER. When were our troops taken out of Korea?

Mr. STASSEN. In June 1949, just before this conference; June 29, 1949, the last 1,500 troops of the United States Army left South Korea, leaving a military mission to aid in training South Koreans.

Senator FERGUSON. Governor, it appears now that you were correct in your views because aggression did take place in Korea, and of course they would be correct if you did not do anything about it and created the vacuum and allowed them to penetrate without force, which was their first two points, was it not?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, will you address yourself to the fourth point?

Mr. STASSEN. The fourth point was that the United States should recognize the Communist Peoples Republic government of China under the leadership of Mao Tse-tung at an early date.

That, of course, has continued to be an issue up to this time with the declaration since Korea on the part of the officials of our Government that we would not recognize the Chinese Peoples Republic.

Senator JENNER. Has not our Government taken the attitude that we are not going to permit Red China to fight its way into the United Nations?

Mr. STASSEN. That is one of the statements that was made. I think General Marshall said, "Shoot its way in."

Senator JENNER. That does not preclude the fact that if you could stop the war, and so forth, and Great Britain and the other nations recognize them, then we could recognize?

Mr. STASSEN. There has been much public discussion since Korea of this issue.

Senator FERGUSON. That was a very live subject at that time because just 5 or 6 days before the Communist government claimed this sovereign power.

Mr. STASSEN. It was a very hot subject at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. The country was evenly divided both as to people and territory; is that not so?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. So, about 6 days afterward, they were advocating that we recognize the Communist Government, which would have been, of course, withdrawal of our recognition from the Nationalists?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, would you care to comment under the heading of implementation of that point?

Mr. STASSEN. The fourth and fifth tie in together.

In the discussion it was urged by the Lattimore group that the United States should encourage the recognition of the Communist Peoples Republic government by Britain and India and then follow with its own recognition soon thereafter. Of course, in the implementation, which we were following at the time, that is exactly what happened.

On November 16, Mr. Bevin, in the House of Commons, said, on the question of recognition of Communist China, they were waiting for the United States and others to make the same decision. Then on January 5, 1950, in other words a few months after this conference, Britain did recognize Red China, which, on the surface, indicates the implementation of the recommendations of the Lattimore group in the October conference.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know when India recognized them?

Mr. STASSEN. India recognized them on December 30, of 1949, in other words, just 5 days before Britain.

So these two recognitions, which were in the conference urged as the way to lead it off, did take place.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know what public opinion was around that time or after Britain and after India did recognize Communist China? In your opinion, was there a strong public opinion here in America against our recognition?

Mr. STASSEN. It was a divided opinion. I don't remember any polls at that particular period on it. In fact, I haven't followed the polls so much on it.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, did you hear any person publicly identified with the policy making of the United States Government express a prediction or a recommendation that the United States should recognize Communist China?

Mr. STASSEN. Did I hear them publicly express?

Mr. MORRIS. Or privately express.

Mr. STASSEN. In the conference, Mr. Butterworth of the State Department said that when the Communist Chinese crossed the Yangtze River, which, as I recall, would have been about April of 1949, that then this Government had approached these other governments as to their views about recognizing the Chinese Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. We have had testimony before this committee, Governor Stassen, by General Fortier of General MacArthur's staff that Ambassador Jessup early in January 1950 expressed the view to him that the United States was about to recognize Communist China in a period of 2 or 3 weeks.

I was wondering if you heard publicly or privately such a prediction or such an expression of opinion.

Mr. STASSEN. No; I did not, but that testimony would tie in exactly with what the Lattimore group had said in the October conference. In other words, in the October conference they had said that the United States should encourage India and Britain to act first and then the United States should follow a couple of weeks afterward so that that would exactly relate to the testimony you recite to me from Mr. Fortier, but I do not know that first-hand from Mr. Fortier or from Mr. Jessup.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know what date Mr. Jessup arrived in Japan?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes. He arrived in Japan on January 6th of 1950, 5th or 6th. There is a change in date line between Japan and here and I am not just positive what date line applies here.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there any expression of policy made in connection with that particular visit of Ambassador Jessup to Japan?

Mr. STASSEN. The day that Ambassador Jessup arrived in Japan, the President of the United States announced that the United States had no intention of providing military aid or advice to the Nationalists on Formosa or of using its Armed Forces to interfere there, which was widely characterized as the abandonment of Formosa by the United States, which was another one of the public indications of the implementing of the Lattimore group's policies which we followed in these succeeding months. That occurred before Ambassador Jessup saw General MacArthur.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, Governor, that policy was announced before General MacArthur's opinion was made known, at least verbally, to Jessup?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right, before there was an opportunity to make it known.

Senator FERGUSON. You had indicated that your opinion was that Jessup should see General MacArthur?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. About the Far East?

Mr. STASSEN. About the whole series of recommended points, which I said would be tragic for America.

Senator WATKINS. Do you remember who represented the State Department at this conference?

Mr. STASSEN. Not all of them. There were, I would say, eight or nine officials in and out on the different days. Of course, on the opening day, as I said, Dr. Fosdick presided. Later on, Dr. Jessup presided. Some came in for briefing. A number were sitting there taking notes that never were identified, so I do not know who they all were.

Senator WATKINS. Was Secretary Marshall there?

Mr. STASSEN. General Marshall was there but he was not then Secretary. General Marshall sat on the extreme right end of the table and Mr. Jessup at the extreme left end of the table.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether General Marshall expressed himself on any of these points?

Mr. STASSEN. General Marshall, on the opening of the third day, before I arrived, gave a statement which was then briefed to me and it was then indicated—it will show, of course, in the transcript—he did not go into any of these specific points, as it was then indicated to me.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether he was present at the time Lattimore was advocating some of these points?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes; he was.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it to Lattimore or Jessup that you expressed your hope that the policy put out by the Lattimore group would not be carried out?

Mr. STASSEN. To Dr. Jessup.

The CHAIRMAN. I caught it to be to Lattimore.

Mr. STASSEN. No, it was to Dr. Jessup that I said that. I pleaded with him not to implement the Lattimore policy. This, you understand, was at the recess of the third day when I saw the way the discussion was going, and when I felt strongly as to the tragic implications of it for our country.

The CHAIRMAN. He expressed himself contrary to your views?

Mr. STASSEN. He said he felt the greater logic was on the position advanced by the Lattimore group.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, we have partially covered point No. 6, namely, that it should be United States policy to turn Formosa over to the Chinese Communist government, but lest we miss anything that may appear in your notes or in the transcript, is there anything more you can add by way of expression of opposition to that or by way of implementation to that?

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. I discussed that extensively in the conference. I took the position that the United States should announce that it considered Formosa a vital part of our perimeter of defense and that we would not permit an armed assault from the mainland on Formosa. That will be found at the bottom of page 7 of the transcript as given to you. It starts out:

On the other military question, I am inclined to feel that Formosa is an important strategic area for our own outer perimeter.

Remember, this is 2 years ago, before all of this military discussion, but I felt it from knowing it during the war. You see, we sailed all around Formosa with Admiral Halsey's fleet and I knew the information as to the strategic position of Formosa.

Then I referred to the maps, and I said:

If antagonistic air bases exist on Formosa the Philippine Islands and Japan are quite effectively severed from each other. Formosa is immediately astride of the airway and direct seaway. We should have in mind the psychological effect of a firm position and the fact that Formosa is still in an uncertain legal position because when the war ended, China was not given the Nationalist Government—

I mean Formosa was not given to the Nationalist Government.

There has been no peace treaty, no decision handing Formosa to China—and so forth.

Then when they could not count me on the analysis of the perimeter, they said, furthermore it will do no good to defend Formosa from attack on the mainland. Formosa is going to fall from interior infiltration inside Formosa because of the weakness of Chiang's generals and the greater amount of communism on Formosa.

I said that is contrary to my information and I did not believe that Formosa would fall by internal infiltration.

That was the argument they pushed on the matter of giving up Formosa at that time.

Then in the implementation of that position in the ensuing months, on December 23 of 1949, in other words, a little over 2 months after this conference, the State Department sent a memorandum to foreign personnel throughout the world playing down the importance of Formosa. That memorandum has been entered into the records of the Armed Services Committee in recent weeks, but it went to everybody, the Voice of America, and all our representatives all over the world, in effect preparing the way to giving up Formosa.

That was another evidence to me, as I was following it, that the Lattimore policy was being implemented in the ensuing months.

Senator JENNER. Governor, if Dr. Jessup had followed your suggestion before he went out to confer with General MacArthur, he could easily have ascertained that General MacArthur determined that Formosa was the main key to the chain of defense for the security of this country; is that not correct?

Mr. STASSEN. It is clear now. As I said, I had not talked to General MacArthur before I said these things. We now know from General MacArthur's testimony that he at all times felt that way, that Formosa must be held, and he said that to everyone who asked him in these various conferences, both military and diplomatic, since the war.

Digitized by Google

Of course, you see, in following this thing through in trying to analyze it, it is a fact that Dr. Jessup took the boat from San Francisco to Japan to see General MacArthur. In other words, he went by boat and not by air. He left San Francisco, I believe, on December 21. He arrived in Japan on January 6. During the time he was en route on the sea, the State Department memorandum on Formosa was issued around the world. India recognized Red China. Britain recognized Red China, and President Truman announced we had no intention of defending Formosa. Then the day after that Mr. Jessup arrived for the conference with General MacArthur.

Senator FERGUSON. Governor, did you know that even prior to the issuing of the note on the 23d to the world, in fact, that is, the State Department in various parts of the world, that they were at the first part of December, or around the 1st of December, circulating the report that China was going to fall, that Formosa was going to fall from within, and therefore could not be defended? Did you ever hear that?

Mr. STASSEN. We were told that in this October conference. We were argued against on that, and the so-called briefing of an intelligence basis attempted to give credence to it. Of course, I have had enough experience during the war with intelligence briefing to know that we were not really given an intelligence briefing. We were given a sort of presentation to fit in with what was being recommended.

Senator FERGUSON. There is no doubt that is what was happening in the various embassies in the Far East?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Senator WATKINS. Governor, did you follow the testimony given before the Foreign Relations Committee when the hearings were held on the Atlantic Pact?

Mr. STASSEN. Quite closely.

Senator WATKINS. Do you recall the questions that were asked of General Bradley with respect to our defenses in the Far East when he outlined the Territory of Alaska, the Aleutians, Japan, Okinawa, the Philippines, and left out Formosa?

Mr. STASSEN. That was Secretary Acheson's speech to the Press Club.

Senator WATKINS. What I am calling your attention to is General Bradley's testimony given for the Foreign Relations Committee. He responded to a question I asked him with respect to our far-eastern line. He had already stated that the defense line in Europe was on the Elbe, and I asked him then where it was in the Far East. He left out Formosa.

I wondered if that had any significance.

Mr. STASSEN. I am not aware of that testimony. I do not know anything about it.

Senator WATKINS. As I remember, that is what he said.

Mr. STASSEN. I do not know.

Senator WATKINS. If that is true, that would indicate that the State Department was probably acting in conjunction with the Defense Department.

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. I would rather not attempt to characterize something, particularly if I have not seen the original testimony, and I have not seen that testimony.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, would you care to develop the next point for us, please?

Mr. STASSEN. That it should be United States policy to permit the Chinese Communists to take Hong Kong if they insisted.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there opposition to that point expressed?

Mr. STASSEN. Definitely. I insisted that we must back up the British in the then Asiatic picture and show strength rather than weakness. I said, and it will show on page 8 of the transcript——

I think if the British take a stand in Hong Kong we ought to back the British up with everything they want us to back them up with in Hong Kong. These are matters of alternative, and if the British, who must be our close partner in this world picture, decide they are going to stand and fight, what do we do? Do we appear before the world as weak and indecisive? Do we back away from our British friends, or do we send ships and give them some air cover and do that sort of thing and indicate that we stand with them in a firm position against the Communist assault in Hong Kong? I grant these are grave decisions, but I think the whole picture demands that kind of very firm action.

That, of course, was one of the hot arguments of the conference. I just felt that if we showed that kind of weakness and backed away from the British, as they were urging, that it would have a very deteriorating effect throughout Asia and throughout the world.

Mr. MORRIS. Is there anything to be said by way of implementation of that recommendation on the part of the group?

Mr. STASSEN. There was a statement, one of these sort of official information, from the State Department, in November of the following month, that the United States had no intention of defending Hong Kong.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, will you develop point No. 8?

Mr. STASSEN. That Premier Nehru had shown reactionary and arbitrary tendencies and should not be leaned on or assisted as a leader of non-Communist forces in Asia.

I insisted then, and I had a great amount of support on this point in the conference, that Premier Nehru was an important leader in the non-Communist areas of Asia, that there frequently would be difficulty in understanding him because of the difference of the Hindu background and all of the multiple problems of India, but that in my judgment he definitely was non-Communist, he was being attacked by the Communists, and that India should receive economic aid and that Nehru should not be opposed in his effort to develop his third position in the world struggle. That position that I took in that respect was then ridiculed by the Lattimore group in the conference.

Mr. MORRIS. Actually, subsequent to that time, the attacks on Nehru were discontinued, were they not, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. No. Months subsequent to that, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any information or any evidence to give us which would indicate why this change had taken place? That is, why the Communists were criticizing Nehru at this particular time, and today apparently they seem to be taking a different position?

Mr. STASSEN. They are not really taking a different position at this time.

Mr. MORRIS. They are not?

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. The Communists are still attacking Nehru. They play various angles in time, but the basic Communist approach is still trying to tear down Nehru and to get Communist leadership in India, but at any time that Nehru takes a position that is opposed to something that the United States is doing, then the Communists will back him on that particular thing; but as far as the continuing leadership of Nehru, the Communists continue to endeavor to undermine him and oppose him in this and to weaken him. That is very extreme.

In the Voprosy Economiki, which is a Russian Communist publication, you will find this language:

> In India Nehru has turned from a left-wing congressite and exposer of imperialism into a nimble servant of two masters, Britain and the United States, into an ally of the Indian princes and landowners, a bloody strangler of the progressive forces of India.

In other words, that is the attack the Communists make on Nehru.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the date of that attack?

Mr. STASSEN. That is October 26, 1949.

There has been no basic change in that on the part of the Communists except as they will play a particular issue versus the United States.

You understand further that the Lattimore group's opposition to Nehru in the October 1949 conference was not on the basis that he was pro-Communist. It was on the basis that he had shown reactionary tendencies, reactionary and arbitrary tendencies, and therefore should not be backed by the United States.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you address yourself to the next point, point No. 9?

Mr. STASSEN. That the United States should not approve of the blockade of the Communist Chinese coast by the Chinese Nationalists under Chiang Kai-shek, should assist in breaking it, and should send economic aid to the area of China under Communist control.

I had strong support in the conference that for the sake of world peace and our own security, high American policy should be to prevent Russian Communist imperialistic consolidation of Asia, and that every move of opposition to the Communist advance in Asia should be made, and that all forces resisting communism in Asia should be aided militarily as well as economically.

In other words, that we should have a consistent unending policy in opposition to the Communist advance.

Subsequent to the conference, on this point, I noted that on November 16, in other words, 6 weeks after the conference, Secretary Acheson publicly protested the Nationalist Chinese firing on the Flying Cloud which was running the Nationalist blockade and taking supplies in to the Communist Chinese, which, of course, appeared to me to be an implementation of the view that had been advanced in the conference by the Lattimore group.

Then on December 3 Secretary Acheson said that the United States did not recognize the legality of the Nationalist Chinese blockade and protested the shelling of the United States ship of the Isbrandtsen line, which was a further indication of following those recommendations.

Then when Korea broke, and the United States intervened in Korea, at the same time the United States Seventh Fleet was told to prevent the Chinese Nationalists' Navy from blockading the Chinese Communist coast, so at that point when the Korean war broke out the Chinese Nationalist blockade was ended and war supplies began once more to move into the Chinese Communist area.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, do you know of any attempt made on the part of the United States Department of State to impose a complete blockade on the Chinese Nationalist Government during the time that they were still struggling on the mainland with the Chinese Communists?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you relate what you know about that particular subject, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. I know what Senator Arthur Vandenberg told me.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what he told you about it?

Mr. STASSEN. When I saw Senator Vandenberg, for whom, as you know, I have the very highest regard, for the last time in his home in Grand Rapids, Mich., in November of 1950 just prior to my last trip through Asia and around the world, he told me of a White House conference on this question of stopping supplies for Chiang Kai-Shek

Mr. MORRIS. Will you develop that for us, if there is any more to develop?

Mr. STASSEN. Senator Vandenberg told me in this conference he was called in to, which he said was the only conference that he had been called in to on Asiatic policy, it was there proposed by Secretary Acheson and Dr. Jessup to the President that the supplies which were then being loaded in ships in Hawaii and San Francisco for the Chiang Kai-shek government be dramatically stopped as a move toward world peace.

That is that all armaments should be immediately cut off from the Chinese Nationalists and that the ships that were then on the way and then being loaded, as I recall—he said there were five such ships that would be carrying supplies to the Chinese Nationalists—they should all be stopped in a dramatic and direct announcement to stop the supplies that were continuing the internal war in China; that he then vigorously opposed it and analyzed it, and that after discussion with members of the Cabinet who were present, the President decided not to go ahead with the recommendation of Secretary Acheson and Dr. Jessup in view of Senator Vandenberg's statement he would publicly oppose it, and he was certain he would get the majority of the United States Senate to join with him in the opposition to that policy.

Mr. MORRIS. Were these supplies purchased by the moneys appropriated by Congress during the 1946–48 period?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Were they the supplies referred to by Senator Vandenberg?

Mr. STASSEN. They would be purchased by various sources, by the Chinese Nationalists. It was to be all arms en route to the Chinese Nationalists, just a complete stoppage of all supplies of a military nature for the Chinese Nationalists, whatever their source of purchase had been.

Mr. MORRIS. That in effect would have been a complete blockade?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, may we give consideration to point

Digitized by Google

No. 10 here? That is, if you have finished the implementation of point No. 9. I am not sure you have.

Mr. STASSEN. I think I have.

That no aid should be sent to the non-Communist Chinese guerrillas in the south of China, nor to the Chiang Kai-shek forces, and the military supplies en route to them should be cut off.

That again was a subject of intense discussion, and as I earlier indicated, I had urged and supported that everyone opposing the advance of communism should have had American help, and that if we did that it could well be in this argument as to what Chiang Kai-shek's ability was, et cetera, that other leaders would come up in China opposing communism, and we might find new leaders in some of these provinces in the south, so it would be worthy of continuing support, and that you would begin to develop countermoves to the Communists.

So that we ought to assist everybody that showed some effectiveness and some willingness to oppose the Chinese Communists. But that was ruled out in this Lattimore group approach; that we should turn toward giving aid to the Chinese Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the date of the White House conference that Senator Vandenberg told you about?

Mr. STASSEN. I do not know the date. It can be traced down at the point when these ships were going to sail from Hawaii and San Francisco with these supplies.

Mr. MORRIS. I ask you that by way of determining whether or not that instrument would be an implementation of point No. 10.

Mr. STASSEN. It was It was so discussed with Senator Vandenberg on that basis.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you add anything else by way of implementation of this recommendation?

Mr. STASSEN. At the time the Korea war broke out the Seventh Fleet was also directed to stop the airplane flights from Formosa over to supply the Chinese guerrillas still fighting in the south of China, and they were stopped at that time.

In other words, the guerrillas' supplies were stopped by the United States Seventh Fleet at the time of the beginning of the Korean war.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, we had testimony last Friday by Professor McGovern, of Northwestern University, that while he was an adviser, a consultant to the congressional committee that was reviewing foreign aid for Congress, that he was advised by the United States military missions in China in 1947 they were prohibited from giving any tactical recommendation or tactical assistance whatever to the Chinese Nationalist forces.

In your experience have you heard of anything that would be such to corroborate his testimony along those lines?

Mr. STASSEN. I have not heard of that particular matter, but I have not talked to the United States military missions that were in China at that period, so I wouldn't have had an opportunity to hear it.

Mr. MORRIS. Such a policy, if it took place subsequent to this 1949 conference, would have been implementation, however, of the recommendations of Lattimore and Rosinger, would it not?

Mr. STASSEN. You said this was in 1947. That would have been prior.

Mr. MORRIS. If it had taken place subsequent.

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. Yes; but I had no knowledge of it.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor, you have expressed extensively the views that you set forth in opposition to the 10 points proposed by Lattimore and Rosinger. Did you make any over-all conclusion? In other words, a general conclusion that would not be addressed particularly to any of the 10 points?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes, I did, near the close of the conference.

Mr. MORRIS. What did you say, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. I had better give you that exactly from the transcript.

Mr. MORRIS. Please do.

Mr. STASSEN. On page 15 of the transcript in the middle of the page. This is the last time I spoke in the conference.

My first comment is on some of the related discussion this morning—

this is the morning of October 8—that has been advanced that along with recognition other steps we ought to take were proposed.

This is the group of steps I have been discussing with you.

I say, frankly, these steps, to me, could be best characterized as steps that would hasten the victory of the Communists in China and hasten the complete liquidation of the Nationalist Government. I think that would be the correct characterization of the related steps that have been advanced along with the urging of recognition at the earliest possible date.

To me that would be a very sad mistake in our world policy. If we recognize the Communist government of China now—

this is October 8, 1949—

clearly that does mean we must at the same time not only withdraw recognition of the other Government—the Nationalist Government—but that we must then join in affirmative action to throw the Nationalist Government out of the United Nations. There are no halfway measures on this. You cannot be recognizing a government in one way and then in the United Nations tribunal, in which we are a great leading nation, take a different position to that. Nor should we possibly abstain. That would be a cowardly and weak position to take. So, we would then be in the position of going into the United Nations, with our great prestige, and throw out from that United Nations the representative of whatever you may wish to call them—the remnants of a former government that still has now, and I think will for some foreseeable time, the effective jurisdiction over one-third of the area of China and one-third of its people, and that is continuing to put up some form of resistance to the Communist areas.

Now, to put ourselves in that position in my mind, cannot be countenanced—and then I went on from there.

That was my final attempt to break through this related policy that was being advanced. I said these things to them right straight across the conference table. They are in the official transcript.

Mr. MORRIS. It was subsequent to all of this that you say that Ambassador Jessup said that he thought that greater logic was on the side of Lattimore and Rosinger?

Mr. STASSEN. I think you might have sensed somewhat of my feelings. Then the conference recessed. I stepped up to Dr. Jessup and the conversation I earlier described took place.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, is there anything else in your notes or in your transcript that has not been covered by our going over each of the 10 points and by our taking that general conclusion? Is there anything else which we should have in our record bearing on this point?

Mr. STASSEN. You have the whole transcript. Obviously there are the things you had not gone into that are necessary. The whole transcript is full of important statements, but I think you certainly covered the main outline of the clash of policy that existed at that time in that conference.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Did you notice anything about the make-up of the personnel attending this conference? In other words, Governor Stassen, did you have the impression there was a predominance of Institute of Pacific Relations people present?

Mr. STASSEN. I did not have any knowledge then and had not attempted to define who were members and who were not. I had declined membership in the institute way back 10 years before and had not followed the institute. So I did not know as to that part of it. I did notice the absence of some people that it seemed to me should have been present, among them, for example, Dr. David Rowe of Yale University, who is one of the great authorities on Asia and China and the Far East; Dr. Arthur Steiner of UCLA, on the west coast, a very eminent writer and a distinguished scholar; Dr. Norman Brown of our own University of Pennsylvania, who is the director of our southeast Asia area study group.

It is the only southeast area study group in the United States in any university. There are other parts in other universities, but it is supported by the various grants. General Wedemeyer I thought clearly was in a position to give much light in a reexamination of policy. Admiral Nimitz clearly would have been from the Pacific standpoint. General Frank McCoy of the Far Eastern Commission; Maxwell Hamilton of the Far East Commission, and those are entirely apart from the question of whether you are going into the senatorial side.

I know many Members of Congress, such as Walter Judd and others, are very well qualified, but entirely apart of whether you go to the congressional side, there were many distinguished scholars and students of far eastern affairs who were not present.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, did you attempt to make known your views when you saw that our foreign policy was taking a course different from what you had recommended and a course you felt was basically wrong?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you tell us what steps you took to express yourself on that subject?

Mr. STASSEN. As I watched these implementations unfold I described to you, it was of grave concern as to what they would mean to our country. I felt so certain the Communists would move into that vacuum with tragic consequences to our country. After it appeared to me apparent that you could not get results on it in any of these conferences with the State Department people, I then sent a wire to Senator Connally and asked whether I could appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on it.

I will see if I have that letter here.

On April 22 of 1950 after watching this implementation of Lattimore and being more and more concerned as to what that would mean to our country and the world situation, I wired Senator Connally on April 21, 1950, as follows:

I am gravely concerned with the status of American foreign policy in Asia and the deteriorating situation in that continent in the cold war. I would deeply appreciate an hour in which I might present to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee constructive proposals for American action in Asiatic policy and a concise analysis of the current situation. As you know, I was a participant in the State Department conference last October 6, 7, and 8 on Asiatic policy. I concentrated on Asia and on dependent territories in large measures at the San Francisco Conference of the United Nations, and I spent most of the last war in the Pacific. My knowledge of the urgency of the situation and my sincere belief I have information which would be helpful to you and to our country motivates this request.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Did you get a reply to that, Governor?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes. Senator Connally replied on April 26:

Re telegram: Foreign Relations Committee this week is busily engaged on the ECA bill. We shall endeavor next week to find time to hear you in executive session. Signed, Tom Connally, United States Senate.

Then I waited a week. On May 8 I sent another wire. I said:

Supplementing our previous communications I of course understand that the ECA bill kept you engaged all last week. I trust a convenient hour can be set this week. Sincerely yours.

On May 10 he replied:

Re telegram: Committee is still busily engaged in conference with House on ECA bill, and it will not be possible to hear you this week.

That was on May 10. I heard nothing further.

Then Senator Vandenberg was ill. I felt so certain this thing was very serious. On June 8, 1950, I wrote to Senator Vandenberg:

DEAR ARTHUR: I have been delighted with reports of your regaining strength and of your reappearance at the Capitol. I hesitate to write to you on this matter, and yet I cannot find rest easily unless I do. I am greatly concerned about the course of our policy in Asia and believe I can make some constructive contribution, and as a result of many years of study of that area. I feel this can best be done through an hour with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. As the enclosed copies of communications will show, Senator Connally indicated that they would hear me in executive session after the ECA bill was completed. I have heard nothing further from him. I know I need not assure you that my presence will be affirmative and thoughtful. I believe we are moving in the wrong direction now, and only a conviction on the part of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee can change the policy. If you wish and felt able to do so, I would be pleased to come to Washington at your convenience for a personal discussion of my analysis and recommendations. Sincerely yours.

Then Senator Vandenberg's secretary called me and said she was sorry to report the Senator was not able to handle the situation, was not able to see me because of his illness. She called me about a week later. Then the Korea war broke.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, you mentioned in the first part of your testimony you had some experience with Japanese prisoners at the end of the last war. In that connection did you encounter any undue or inappropriate courtesies extended to the Japanese Communists who had been held in prison by the Japanese Government on the part of the occupying forces?

Mr. STASSEN. I had no experience with Japanese prisoners, sir. I was the chief staff officer in the liberation of American, British, and Australian prisoners under Admiral Halsey at the end of the war in Japan. My entire experience was with liberating the American and allied boys and not with the Japanese prisoners.

Mr. MORRIS. We had testimony along the lines of my questions. I thought perhaps you had encountered such courtesies.

Mr. STASSEN. I had no knowledge of that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Have you attended any subsequent conferences in connection with formulation of far-eastern policy, Governor Stassen?

Mr. STASSEN. No; I have not. I mentioned the one when they called in the heads of organizations, about 200 or so. That was not a policy-formulation session. That was in March 1950. That was when they made various speeches to the group.

Senator WATKINS. What was the purpose of that meeting?

Mr. STASSEN. Apparently to present the State Department's view on various subjects to the leaders of various national organizations.

Senator FERGUSON. They do not really ask you for views at those meetings; they tell you what their program is and back it up?

Mr. STASSEN. It would be more accurate to say they do not tell you their program.

Senator FERGUSON. What do they give you?

Mr. STASSEN. They make talks that are somewhat of the nature of public talks. They tell you some parts of the program. They are not really comprehensive or specific.

Senator FERGUSON. They are not complete and show what the program actually is?

Mr. STASSEN. No.

Senator WATKINS. I have heard of those meetings. Could you tell us how they are conducted, who is invited to take part, and what happens?

Mr. STASSEN. They invite the chairman or representative of various national organizations to come in. That basic thought is a good one. As a matter of fact, it started at the San Francisco Conference. There we met with them as consultants. It was a give-and-take. It was a good approach.

The only ones since the San Francisco Conference that I was a delegate to was this one in March 1950.

Senator FERGUSON. Then they did not use both parts of the program, give and take; they only gave the information. Is that correct?

Mr. STASSEN. They broke up into some sections for a while and opened up a chance for questions. In the section on India which I went into I asked why they were not moving forward with a program for aid to India and for wheat for India. There was no answer given. It was sidestepped and general talking around. You did not come to grips with these matters. There were subordinates in the State Department there, so it was not a conference in which you could advance a consideration of policy, but more it was an informational policy from the State Department to these leaders of national organizations.

Apart from that I have attended no conferences in the State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions?

Senator JENNER. Governor, have you been invited after your appearance on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949, back to any conference?

Mr. STASSEN. No; I have not.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, there is just one point I would like to make. We introduced into the record what may appear from the record to be the notes of Governor Stassen. May the record show that that is a memorandum prepared by Mr. Stassen on the basis of his notes. I think that is accurate.

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. Notes and transcript.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Thank you, Governor, very much for your presence here.

(Whereupon, at 3:55 p. m., Monday, October 1, 1951, the hearing was recessed subject to call.)

Digitized by Google

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10 a. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. Pat McCarran (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Ferguson, and Watkins.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read into the record a request made by you to the Honorable Dean Acheson in connection with the transcript of the minutes of a conference held in September 1949.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you read that letter in full?

Mr. MANDEL. The letter is as follows:

OCTOBER 5, 1951.

HON. DEAN ACHESON,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Will you make available to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee a transcript of the minutes of a conference held by the Jessup commission, presided over by Philip C. Jessup, on September 14, 1949, in Washington, at which were present Messrs. Meaney, Delany, and Lovestone, of the American Federation of Labor, and Messrs. Carey and Ross of the CIO? Your cooperation in this matter will be appreciated.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, we had requested the minutes of the meeting of October 6, 7, and 8, or maybe the 5, 6, and 7, being the meeting where Harold Stassen and Professor Colegrove were with Mr. Jessup and others in the State Department, and we were denied the minutes.

After that, Professor Colegrove and Governor Stassen both testified as to what took place at the meeting. I understand that Mr. Lattimore has requested that the State Department furnish those minutes.

I ask that you again, by letter, request that those minutes be delivered to this committee, so that we may have the entire matter before us tomorrow morning when Governor Stassen appears before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, have you reliable information that Mr. Lattimore has requested that the minutes be furnished?

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. All I have is in the press, and I take it the press report is accurate on that.

I see no reason at all, from the contents of the testimony, why there could be any question now of security.

Also, Mr. Rosinger and Mr. Lattimore have both made statements as to what took place.

Therefore, the minutes would be the best evidence, under all rules of court procedure, at least.

The CHAIRMAN. I am entirely in agreement with your ideas, and your request will be made.

Senator WATKINS. I would like to say that I also favor the suggestion made by Senator Ferguson.

The CHAIRMAN. The request will go down to the Department just as soon as I can prepare it.

Senator FERGUSON. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Mr. Morris, you may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have gotten an answer to one of our requests of Mr. Dean Acheson on the question of the letter of transmittal of the white paper. Our letter of September 25, 1951, reads as follows:

Hon. DEAN ACHESON,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: According to an analysis made in testimony by Prof. Kenneth Colegrove, a well-known authority on the Far East, the letter of transmittal dated July 30, 1949, under your name as a foreword to United States Relations With China, bears the earmarks of having been prepared by one or possibly more individuals other than yourself. In view of the heavy demands made upon your time as a public official, it is felt that it is quite possible that you may have had this material prepared by others for your signature.

Would you therefore kindly inform us as to the name or names of the individual or individuals who prepared this letter of transmittal. This question is asked by me in accordance with a motion adopted at a meeting of the Internal Security Subcommittee held on September 25, 1951.

The answer is dated October 2, 1951:

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I have your letter of September 25 requesting "the name or names of the individual or individuals who prepared" my letter of July 30, 1949, transmitting United States Relations With China to the President.

As I remember the circumstances, several drafts of a letter of transmittal were submitted to me prepared by various persons. None of these drafts was satisfactory; and, using one or another of them as a basis, I rewrote the letter myself. Inasmuch as the letter expressed my views and because it represented my best judgment, the responsibility for it is entirely mine.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON.

I think both of those should be introduced into the record, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be inserted in the record.

(Documents referred to and read in full were marked "Exhibits Nos. 309 and 310," respectively, and filed for the record.)

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. We have communications from Professor Rishauer, of Harvard University, and Maxwell Stewart, of New York City. They have transmitted to us, in the first case, a letter, and in the second case a telegram, asking they be inserted in the record.

I ask that they go into the record, Mr. Chairman.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. What are they?

Mr. MORRIS. Rishauer was named in the Colegrove testimony, and he would like to make a statement addressed to that testimony.

The same is true in the case of Maxwell Stewart. Maxwell Stewart is concerned with other testimony.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I agree that these communications ought to go into the record, but I also think that these people should also be given the opportunity to make statements under oath because the other testimony is under oath.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. That is the reason why I paused on admitting them into the record. We will hold them.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Budenz has been called back to complete his testimony. He is sworn, and I think we can continue.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Proceed.

TESTIMONY OF LOUIS FRANCIS BUDENZ, CRESTWOOD, N. Y.—Resumed

Senator FERGUSON. You understand, Mr. Budenz, that you are under oath now, because of having been previously sworn.

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. I understood when I left the stand here at the hearings that I was under continuing subpena.

Senator FERGUSON. That is correct, and you are still under oath.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know a woman, who was the wife of Isidore Schneider, by the name of Helen Schneider?

Mr. BUDENZ. I did. I knew both of them personally; that is, Mr. and Mrs. Schneider.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Helen Schneider a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. She was a very active member. Indeed, at one time she was in what was considered to be quite a key position, a receptionist at the Daily Worker. She has also been active in the party in other capacities.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you give us as much detail as possible on that score, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. I can say that she was interested in various front organizations and the like; their names, I can't give you.

But I have met Isidore Schneider and Helen Schneider over the years while in the Communist Party a great number of times, and know them quite well, on a personal basis.

From that meeting, I can say that she was a Communist during the entire time I was in the Communist Party. In fact, she was a Communist when I joined the Communist Party, being then located at the Daily Worker.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, two witnesses before this committee have identified Lawrence K. Rosinger as a member of the Communist Party. Did you know Lawrence Rosinger as a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I did not know Mr. Rosinger personally, but I did know, from official communications, that Mr. Rosinger was a member of the Communist Party.

Digitized by Google

Specifically, I can recall during 1944, in a discussion of some of his writings on the Far East, that he was so mentioned officially in the Politburo.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you testify to this fact before any senatorial committee?

Mr. BUDENZ. I did. Before the previous committee, headed by Senator Millard Tydings.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the connection of Mr. Rosinger to the Institute of Pacific Relations has already been established.

Are we prepared to introduce documents, Mr. Mandel, showing Helen Schneider's connection with the Institute of Pacific Relations, at this time?

Mr. MANDEL. Our files show that Helen Schneider was a member of the staff of the IPR, and we are supporting that with documentary evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. Your documentary evidence is what? Where is it contained?

Mr. MANDEL. From the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have had testimony in executive session on that.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that, in making a statement of that kind, it would be best to have your documents present.

Senator FERGUSON. I agree with the Chair that we ought to have it first.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, did you know Harry F. Ward to be a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. I knew Dr. Ward very well and over a great number of years.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you tell us the circumstances that enabled you to conclude that he was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Dr. Ward has been active in a great number of Communist fronts, including the American League for Peace and Democracy. As a matter of fact, he was the head of that organization. In that connection, and also in connection with many other activities of Dr. Ward, he was—I won't say frequently, but not infrequently a visitor to the national headquarters of the Communist Party, consulting with members of the Politburo, sometimes in my presence.

Senator FERGUSON. A consultant in your presence?

Mr. BUDENZ. Consulting them in my presence.

Senator FERGUSON. Thank you.

Mr. BUDENZ. I also know, from conversations with Dr. Ward personally, of his Communist affiliation.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Harry F. Ward's name will be turning up in forthcoming testimony, and it is for that reason that we had Mr. Budenz identify him as a member of the Communist Party while he is here today.

Mr. Budenz, did you testify before this committee about the association or lack of association of John Stewart Service with the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you restate that testimony for us, please?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, as I recall it, in brief, the testimony was that I did not know officially that Mr. Service was a member of the Communist Party; that is, he had never been specifically referred to in that respect; that he had, however, in Politburo meetings, particularly in connection with the Amerasia case, been referred to as Lattimore's pupil.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. Lattimore's what?

Mr. BUDENZ. Pupil.

That was a political term, since it didn't indicate that he was a student of Mr. Lattimore, but a pupil of his politically.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you testify to that fact, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. At the recent hearing of this committee.

I also testified substantially to the same thing in the hearings before the committee chaired by Senator Millard Tydings.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, have you identified John Carter Vincent to be a member of the Communist Party before this committee?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; from official communications.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you testify that John Carter Vincent was a member of the Communist Party before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, before which you appeared a year ago?

Mr. BUDENZ. No, sir; I did not. I asked leave in the executive session to have more time to place Mr. Carter on the list, where I could explain in detail what I knew about his political affiliations.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say "Mr. Carter," you mean Mr. Vincent; do you?

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. Vincent. Excuse me.

Senator FERGUSON. What were you told?

Mr. BUDENZ. May I read the extract here, because it is better than my interpretation?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. This was after I was queried about Donald Hiss and John Davis, Senator Hickenlooper asking me.

The CHAIRMAN. You are reading from what record, please?

Mr. BUDENZ. This is the record, Senator, of hearings before the Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate, Eighty-first Congress, second session, the chairman of which was Senator Millard Tydings. This is page 613 of that record in executive session:

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Senator McMahon mentioned three names, three other names. I mention here Ruby Parsons and John Carter Vincent, who is now Minister to Switzerland.

Mr. BUDENZ. I would prefer not to discuss those at the moment, until I can file the list with the committee. That will permit—I feel this is quite a responsible obligation—without being more careful in my statements.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I shall not press——

Mr. MORRIS. What did you do subsequent to that in connection with making that testimony available to the committee, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. I wrote to the committee; that is, the counsel of the committee, Mr. Morgan, and Mr. Morris, the minority counsel, with carbon copies to Senator Tydings, Senator Hickenlooper, and Senator McMahon, among others, stating that this list, which didn't only include John Carter Vincent, but many more names on which I had been questioned, would be prepared by September.

I explained that the Federal Bureau of Investigation had kept me engaged on going over the list of 400 concealed Communists, which had been brought up at that time, and that it would require until September to complete this list.

Digitized by Google

The committee did not avail itself of my offer because it ended its sessions before September came around.

Mr. MORRIS. What else did you do, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. I also advised Robert Morris, who was minority counsel of that committee, even before the hearings that John Carter Vincent was known to me, from official communications, to be a Communist. I advised Mr. Morris of this because I had had an acquaintance with him, knowing him to be a Naval Reserve Intelligence officer.

It was under those circumstances that I first met Mr. Morris. And he assured me that he would file a report on Mr. Vincent in accordance with my communication to him.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, there is such a report in existence, and I think it is appropriate that we ask that that be made available to our committee, to establish the fact that Mr. Budenz did make such a report.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you mean the Tydings committee official files?

Mr. MORRIS. No. There is a report in the Intelligence files that Mr. Budenz reported Mr. Vincent to be a member of the Communist Party a year ago.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire?

The CHAIRMAN. It is all right.

Senator FERGUSON. In what files?

Mr. MORRIS. It should appear in the files of the Naval Intelligence and the FBI.

Senator FERGUSON. So when you were a Naval Intelligence officer you put a report in the files, did you?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that we obtain this report from the proper officials of the Naval Intelligence.

The CHAIRMAN. We will try.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I point out that there is nothing confidential being violated here, because the source of our information in that report is Mr. Budenz, who appears before this committee. So there is no question of security whatever involved.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. BUDENZ. I also reported, Mr. Senator, to the Federal Bureau of Investigation on Mr. John Carter Vincent a considerable time ago, the exact time of which I cannot tell you at the moment.

Senator FERGUSON. Could you tell us the year?

Mr. BUDENZ. It was the year 1950, so far as I can recall. It may have been earlier; it may have been slightly later.

Senator FERGUSON. Was it before the Tydings testimony?

Mr. BUDENZ. That I can't be sure, Senator. It is my impression that it was.

In regard to the case of Mr. Morris, I am very clear, because I remember his stating that he was to make a report on the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. I am at a loss to get the connection of Mr. Morris.

Senator FERGUSON. He was a Naval Intelligence officer.

The CHAIRMAN. It was at the time that he was in the position of a Naval Intelligence officer, was it?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is what I understood, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Or was it after his severance?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I can answer that question.

Mr. Budenz reported to me, as a Naval Intelligence officer, the fact that John Carter Vincent was a member of the Communist Party, and I made a report on that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that report in writing?

Mr. MORRIS. There is a written report on it. I transmitted mine verbally, and a written report was made. So there is one in existence.

The CHAIRMAN. Who made the written report, if you transmitted yours verbally?

Mr. MORRIS. It is an official record of the Naval Intelligence Office.

The reason why I know there is one there is because, there was a follow-up on it, Senator. Several people subsequently came around to see me about it.

The purpose of this testimony, Mr. Chairman, is to show that Mr. Budenz did report at least a year ago that Mr. Vincent was a member of the Communist Party.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think it was before the Tydings investigation?

Mr. MORRIS. It was about the time of the Tydings investigation.

Mr. Budenz, I wish you would address yourself to a copy of the Kunming cable that Henry Wallace sent in 1944. I am going to ask you, Mr. Budenz, if you will take that cable and analyze it, paragraph by paragraph, and let us have the benefit of your interpretations of that particular cable.

This is message No. 1.

The CHAIRMAN. What was his position with reference to that cable, by reason of which he can authoritatively testify to this committee?

Mr. MORRIS. The background, Mr. Chairman, of this series of questions is the following:

Testimony of Mr. Budenz has been disputed in several sources, the testimony of Mr. Budenz that John Carter Vincent was a member of the Communist Party. It has been stated by unsworn testimony that John Carter Vincent saw and approved the particular cable that we are now addressing ourselves to.

The argument is then made that this cable is so demonstrably anti-Communist that anyone acceding to it and going along with it would necessarily not be a Communist, and therefore, Mr. Budenz' testimony was impeached.

I think we should address ourselves to this because so much of it has been made, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a few preliminary questions before the witness testifies.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Budenz, I suppose that you have seen by the public press and the official records, that is, the records of the United States Senate which it has had inserted in newspaper articles, that your testimony could be false. In fact, it indicates that your testimony was false in certain respects.

Have you seen those articles?

Mr. BUDENZ. I have looked through them: yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Budenz, you are again called to the witness stand this morning, and I want to ask the question whether or not you want to change any of your testimony.

Mr. BUDENZ. Absolutely not, sir.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. You now again reiterate, do you, under oath, that the previous testimony is true?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And I assume that you understand the value of an oath.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, most decidedly.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I mean. You have sworn to these articles that are not under oath, the Senator has inserted them in the record, and you again reiterate that that testimony is true; is that right?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. And I can explain why, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. All right, I wish you would give an explanation.

Mr. MORRIS. I think the explanation, Senator, could take the form of our addressing ourselves to the cable itself.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I mean.

From now on, explain it.

Mr. MORRIS. The point of it is this: The contention has been made that these cables are demonstrably anti-Communist.

Mr. BUDENZ. In order to explain those cables, I should review the period briefly in which these cables occurred and the attitude of the Communists at that time.

It is common knowledge, public knowledge, that the Communists not only changed their line, but changed their interpretation of their line.

What they are seeking at some specific moment, 1 year later they will have emphasized much more, or not have emphasized much more.

What were the Comunists seeking during this period? They were seeking:

1. What they call Chinese-Soviet friendship, and under the guise of that, they had hoped that they would be able to advance the Communist Chinese and also the Soviet domination of Chinese policies;

2. They were not pressing—although they had raised the question of a coalition government, they did not begin to press that until a year later. They did not feel that they were in a position to press it at that time.

Indeed, at that time, as point No. 3, they were urging that Chiang Kai-shek withdraw his troops from what they called the blockade of the Communists in order, as they contended, to war upon the Japanese; but, in reality, to be able to allow the Chinese Communists to act at their own will.

That is, there had been a civil war in China, and Chiang Kai-shek cautiously was trying to prevent the Chinese Communists from attacking in what we might call the rear while he had the Japanese situation on his hands.

They demanded an end to what they called this blockade.

Senator FERGUSON. Do I understand, then, that the Communist line at times takes a line——

Mr. BUDENZ. May I get the fourth one in, Senator, so that the whole picture will be in?

Senator FERGUSON. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BUDENZ. Fourth, preliminary to pushing the coalition government on a big scale, they wished to have Washington receive the impression that Chiang Kai-shek was an inefficient, incompetent, and more or less blundering personality, who could not exist long in control of China.

Digitized by Google

That, by the way, is a tactic used in every country where the Communists have taken over. They brought Mikolajczyk back to Poland and represented him in such capacity, to a greater or lesser degree, according to circumstances. And we could recall other roles of leaders of this type who have been given this treatment.

So we have the fourfold objective of the Communists, which was particularly centered on sending to Washington the idea that Chiang Kai-shek was incompetent and that he was incapable of controlling the situation for a long period of time.

They did not demand immediately that Chiang Kai-shek be deposed; no Communist literature at that time did. Nor did the discussions in the Politburo.

But they were preparing for a big campaign of the coalition government, and the first essential of that was the necessity of showing Chiang Kai-shek to be incapable of leadership in the situation.

Senator FERGUSON. Do I understand now that the Communist Party then at times does change its party line and even the underlying principles of that party line to acquire a long-distance, far-away future objective? Is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is the secret of its success.

Senator FERGUSON. That is the secret of its success?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. And words do not mean anything to it; facts do not mean anything. They lay down their own line and go along that line to acquire their success in the future; is that correct?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

And the Communists know that you have to take the line by stages very frequently. That is to say, in this case of the coalition government, they understood that they couldn't sell to the United States the idea of coalition government or Communist China at once; that first they had to belittle Chiang Kai-shek.

At that time they even expressed fears that there be a coup against Chiang Kai-shek, publicly, I mean, within the Kuomintang. They even looked like they were solicitous about him, to show that he was a weakling. They didn't in that respect, through their propaganda, let the public know that Chiang Kai-shek had put up a very stiff fight against the Japanese, when you consider he had a civil war on his hands, and did a better job perhaps than France did against Hitler.

Now, it is in the light of this that I would like to call attention to some of the items in these cables.

Senator FERGUSON. Go ahead.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you read each paragraph that you address yourself to, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes.

The first paragraph is in message I:

The discussion between the representatives of the Chinese Communists and those of the Chinese Government are taking place in Chungking, but the attitude of Chiang Kai-shek toward the problem is so imbued with prejudice that I can see little prospect for satisfactory long-term settlement.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that an anti-Communist expression, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Most decidedly not. It helps the Communists. If some person visiting the United States, of a diplomatic character, were to be represented to the American authorities today as prejudiced against the Communists, that would be of a kind, except that in this case Chiang Kai-shek has had civil war on his hands for a number of years, and Chiang Kai-shek's experience shows that he could not trust the Communists, and events proved he was correct.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Will you address yourself to the second point in that cable, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. The second point is the sentence:

I emphasized to him the importance of reaching an understanding with Russia.

This was the first point in the Communist drive at that time, in their literature and in the discussions with the Politburo. The necessity for what they called Russian-Chinese friendship.

And that was an authority purchasable, when you come realistically to consider it, only by the Chinese Communists coming to the front in China. That is what they understood.

Incidentally, this isn't exactly what the Communists were stressing at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. You feel, no nation that is anti-Communist could have friendly relations with Russia?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think history has proved it is impossible.

Senator FERGUSON. So a friendly relationship between China and Russia, real friendly relations, would have to be on the basis of both being Communists?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

This is particularly true of small nations, as we see in the case of the Baltic countries, who were promised that they were going to be liberated and then were taken over by the Red army.

There are plenty of examples now.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, what is the date of those cables of Henry Wallace there?

Mr. BUDENZ. June 28, 1944.

However, the point I make here, Senator Ferguson, is that, regardless of that, I am just showing what the Communists had in mind. This was in accordance with the Communist drive at that time, these recommendations.

Senator FERGUSON. Of course, at the time these were sent, you are talking about a policy when you were in the Communist Party?

Mr. BUDENZ. I was in the Communist Party very decidedly and present in the Politburo meetings in which they were discussing and giving instructions in order to convey it through the pages of the Daily Worker.

Senator FERGUSON. You were right in the inner circle and knew the policy from official sources?

Mr. BUDENZ. As far as could be the case of any individual.

The CHAIRMAN. This cable that you are reading from, or these cables, are they cables of Henry Wallace?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you contend, or is it your position here, that these are pro-Communist cables?

Mr. BUDENZ. My contention is that they were in accord with the Communist policies at that time. Whether Mr. Wallace was aware of that, I am not stating.

The CHAIRMAN. That is exactly what I wanted to bring out now.

Digitized by Google

From what source would Mr. Wallace get these thoughts and this policy if he did not have them himself?

I think that should be cleared up.

Who were his advisers? Where was he getting the advice that gave rise to these expressions?

Mr. BUDENZ. I testified, Senator, before the committee before, that the Communist Politburo was very pleased with the fact that Mr. Lattimore and Mr. John Carter Vincent were present on Mr. Wallace's mission, which not only included, by the way, China, but Soviet Asia.

They considered these two questions together.

As a matter of fact, if I may mention it, in Soviet Asia Mission, Mr. Wallace says, on page 156:

> On my mission in China I was fortunate to have along an adviser who had served in 1942–43 as President Roosevelt's personal envoy to Chiang Kai-shek. He was Owen Lattimore, a State man in Pacific affairs, and a scholar in the Chinese language.

And Mr. Wallace refers in like language more or less to Mr. Lattimore in this book.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I wanted to clarify at this point.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, was it the mission that Mr. Wallace was cabling about that he mentions in his book?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. This was the mission to Soviet Asia and China. This is called Soviet Asia Mission, but the whole trip was the same trip.

Senator FERGUSON. And these were messages coming back officially from him on that mission, were they?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Thirdly—and I consider this very important, in view of what the Communists were driving for at that time—

> Instability and tenseness characterized the political situation, with a rising lack of confidence in the generalissimo and the present reactionary leadership of the Kuomintang.

That, again, I think very emphatically represents Chiang Kai-shek as incapable of coping with the situation.

This is stressed still further when it says:

> Chiang Kai-shek seems to be unsure regarding the political situation, bewildered regarding the economic situation, and while expressing confidence in the army, distressed regarding military developments.

That is the picture the Communists were trying to have presented of Chiang Kai-shek, as incompetent and incapable of handling the situation. There is no mention here of the long struggle of Chiang Kai-shek against the Japanese in any definite terms, and the picture is out of focus. That, therefore, confirms to what the Communists wanted presented to Washington.

In message No. 2, we note:

> It should be possible to induce Chiang to establish at least a semblance of the united front necessary to the restoration of Chinese morale and to proceed thereafter to organize a new offensive effort.

Now, the term "united front" is not a popularized Communist term, but it is well known, and was well known, at that time that "united front" is a term used by the Communists historically to represent their coalition efforts with other governments, or with other groups; and the fact that in this report there is no reference made to "united front" within the Kuomintang or "united front" of the Kuomintang and other forces which are not found to exist here, but a "united front" in itself, is in accord with the campaign being conducted by the Communists.

Digitized by Google

The only "united front" you could have in China which would be of any substantial character would be a "united front" with the Chinese Communists.

Therefore, these messages, in light of the period, were what the Communists wanted presented.

Senator FERGUSON. Could it be possible, Mr. Budenz, that the reason that this document has been classed as non-Communist and absolutely opposite to the Communist line is that the people who criticize it as such or say that it is not Communist, were not familiar with the Communist line as of that date?

Mr. BUDENZ. That may possibly be.

Senator FERGUSON. But you are swearing under oath now as to what the line was, and it is your opinion that this document is not anti-Communist?

Mr. BUDENZ. Decidedly not. It gives aid to the Communists in the policies they were forwarding at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you continue, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. There is also a reference here to General Wedemeyer.

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. Will you address yourself to that, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

General Wedemeyer, when he first came into public attention, was not opposed by the Communists. Indeed, the Communists felt that the compromise made with Wedemeyer was a good compromise. They were not opposed to Wedemeyer. They thought he was nonpolitical.

By the way, I am quoting.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you mean by the compromise made with Wedemeyer? Who compromised with Wedemeyer?

Mr. BUDENZ. The compromise made by bringing Wedemeyer into the situation.

Mr. SOURWINE. There was not any compromise with Wedemeyer.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, no.

Did I say with Wedemeyer?

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't mean to imply that he ever compromised with the Communists; do you?

Mr. BUDENZ. No; not at all. I meant to say, if I didn't say it, the compromise by which Wedemeyer came to his position in China. The Communists were very much opposed to General Chennault and didn't want him in the picture at all. They thought Wedemeyer was a better choice. He was not political and, in addition to that, he was supposedly, according to their discussions, of a school in the Military Establishment friendly to General Marshall.

Without any reflection on General Marshall, the Communists felt that that group would be more reasonable toward the Communists in various countries.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you discussed the Wedemeyer reference?

Senator FERGUSON. How was he mentioned in this report, in other words?

Digitized by Google

Mr. BUDENZ (reading):

As I took leave of Chiang, he requested to ask you to appoint a personal representative.

Then it recommends that General Wedemeyer be appointed. I have it marked off right here where the reference is made.

These facts are hinted at in my report to Roosevelt on July 10, in which it is noted as "significant" that "T. V. Soong took no part in the discussions (with the generalissimo) except as interpreter" while Gen. Chen Cheng is mentioned along with Gens. Chiang Fa-kwei and Pai Chung-Hsi as the sort of men who might rally the Chinese armies to greater efforts.

I don't find here the reference to Wedemeyer which I had marked off.

Unfortunately, I used two or three copies, and that one I have neglected to mark. There was a reference to General Wedemeyer, a recommendation.

What I wish to say is that General Wedemeyer in 1944 was not unacceptable to the Communists. Indeed, to a certain degree, they thought he was a good compromise, since it excluded General Chennault.

It wasn't until 1945 that the Communists began their real attack on General Wedemeyer when they discovered his position, and also, of course, this was intensified by the fact that they were beginning to organize a cold war in addition.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have brought up into this part of the record the testimony of Prof. William Montgomery McGovern, given September 28, 1951. This is the testimony of Professor McGovern on this particular point.

We had shown Professor McGovern the particular cables we are discussing, Senator, and his testimony is the following:

The message is full of statements, as I now remember it, which shocked me, because Mr. Wallace said it was not at all pro-Communist, but certainly if it is not pro-Communist it certainly is giving aid and comfort to the Communists trying to disparage the Nationalist Government entirely and trying to throw his weight behind support of a pro-Russian policy.

Then there is a question by Mr. Sourwine:

It has been said that this was an anti-Communist message because it transmitted the request as made by Chiang Kai-shek that General Wedemeyer be considered in connection with the appointment of a Presidential liaison man between the President and the generalissimo.

Could you say, sir, whether at that time such a recommendation with respect to General Wedemeyer was an anti-Communist recommendation?

Professor McGovern:

No, sir. General Wedemeyer had never expressed himself on Chiang Kai-shek. He was not an unknown figure. He was a well-known man as a military planner and strategist and had served as spokesman for General Marshall on several occasions in discussions with the British planners. He had never expressed his views on communism, or never expressed his views on China.

As a matter of fact, some people wrongly thought that Wedemeyer would go along with the Communists, because with the Joint Chiefs he thought we should not invade the Balkans or interfere with the Russian campaign in eastern Europe.

On that ground, some people thought General Wedemeyer would go along with the Communists.

Knowing General Wedemeyer personally, I know they were completely wrong in their reading of him, but no doubt some felt or thought that because he did attack the Balkan campaign and attacked Churchill on the Balkan campaign.

Digitized by Google

I would like that testimony correlated with the testimony given by Mr. Budenz.

The CHAIRMAN. That is already in the record.

Mr. MORRIS. It is, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You are just bringing it forward.

Senator FERGUSON. And McGovern was a professor.

Mr. MORRIS. At Northwestern University. But he worked with the Joint Chiefs of Staff at the time, connected with the military campaign.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Budenz, have you any documents to back up your testimony on this score?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you mean you have documents showing the party line as of that time?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, and their attitude toward Wallace's expedition through China and Wallace's attitude on the Pacific.

In the first place, almost coincident with these reports, on June 24, 1944, by order of the Politburo, Frederick Vanderbilt Field has a column on Vice President Wallace's pamphlet on the Pacific, published by the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. You say almost coincident with these reports. I take it that you mean coincident with the Wallace cables?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. BUDENZ. Just for a few quotations:

Vice President Wallace's pamphlet, Our Job in the Pacific, just published by the Institute of Pacific Relations, is a progressive and statesmanlike approach to problems of our foreign policy.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Budenz, when the Daily Worker printed that kind of language, can we assume and should we say that it meant the Daily Worker was approving? They did not just write factual news.

Mr. BUDENZ. The Communists must write under the most rigid discipline, and in a case like this, on such a vital question, either by orders of the Politburo or in consultation with the Politburo, and Frederick Vanderbilt Field was the man who had the chief responsibility for the far eastern situation, so far as the Politburo was concerned, that is, immediately. He was an authority on the question from the Communist viewpoint.

Senator FERGUSON. So that he was writing not news; he was writing propaganda.

Mr. BUDENZ. He was writing not only propaganda; he was writing a directive. The Daily Worker is an agency for directives of the conspiracy. It is not a daily paper in the normal sense of the word.

Every Communist studies the Daily to know what he should do.

This meant Wallace's pamphlet should be expanded, put into organizations and the like by the concealed Communists.

Here is the important point about this:

I have studied and compared these sections of the Wallace pamphlet with the chapter on National Liberation in Asia in Earl Browder's Tehran. Our Path in War and Peace. Both stand for the most rapid reconstitution of the colonial system consistent with the maintenance of unity among the United Nations. * * *

Digitized by Google

And the reason I am giving this for political purposes is to emphasize Mr. Wallace's high standing among the Communists, which verifies my testimony on the question.

The reason I am giving this is that these two publications, namely, Wallace's Our Job in the Pacific and Tehran, Our Path in War and Peace, is to show the highly controversial problem of the colonies.

Mr. SOURWINE. You referred to Mr. Wallace's high standing with the Communists at that time, do you?

Mr. BUDENZ. At that time.

Mr. MORRIS. And this is now Frederick V. Field writing in the Daily Worker of what date?

Mr. BUDENZ. June 24, 1944; page 7.

To compare Wallace with Browder favorably was the highest compliment that the Communists could pay any public figure. Browder was always hailed as the greatest Marxist-Leninist in the Western Hemisphere—at that time, I must again, during that period—and to compare anyone to Browder was, I say, the highest compliment that could be paid, in so far as the Communists were concerned.

Secondly, I would like to call the committee's attention to the Daily Worker of July 11, 1944.

Mr. MORRIS. Excuse me, Mr. Budenz.

Mr. Chairman, may that article, the previous one, go into the record?

Senator FERGUSON. The whole article.

Mr. MORRIS. It is the article by Frederick V. Field in the Daily Worker of June 24, 1944.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

That is the article read from by the witness.

Mr. MORRIS. We would like the whole article to go into the record, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole article will go into the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 311," and is as follows:)

TODAY'S GUEST COLUMN

VICE PRESIDENT WALLACE'S PAMPHLET ON THE PACIFIC

(By Frederick V. Field)

Vice President Wallace's pamphlet, Our Job in the Pacific, just published by the Institute of Pacific Relations, is a progressive and statesmanlike approach to problems of our foreign policy.

The question of the future of the British, Dutch, and French colonial empires in the Pacific is given conspicuous attention. Mr. Wallace does not come out for the immediate freedom of India, Malaya, the Netherlands Indies and the other colonies, as certain newspaper headlines would have us believe. He says there is a "Free Asia" and a "Subject Asia" or "Colonial Asia." "It is to our advantage," Mr. Wallace writes, "not to perpetuate this division but to see an orderly process of transition so that the area of free Asia will grow and the area of subject Asia continually diminish."

In order to accomplish the orderly process of transition, the Vice President envisages the drawing up of a system of training and preparation for self-government and the acceptance by the sovereign government "of a definite date for the termination of trusteeship and the beginning of independence and self-government." All of this is to take place within the framework of the international organization projected at the Moscow Conference.

Mr. Wallace advocates a positive United States policy on the colonial question not only because of our special relation to the Philippines, whose independence is already guaranteed, and possible military bases which we may acquire elsewhere among the Pacific islands, but also "because in southeast Asia there are conflicting forces in operation which have in them the seeds of future wars."

Digitized by Google

I have studied and compared these sections of the Wallace pamphlet with the chapter on National Liberation in Asia in Earl Browder's Tehran, Our Path in War and Peace. Both stand for the most rapid reconstitution of the colonial system consistent with the maintenance of unity among the United Nations. Mr. Browder, however, carries the analysis several steps beyond where the Vice President leaves off.

The United States, Mr. Browder points out, requires the release of national energies in the prewar colonies because after the war our internal economy will depend in good part upon the markets provided by the rapid development of the areas previously stifled by colonialism. "Colonial or semicolonial regimes provide narrow and restricted markets, while independent, self-governing nations provide expanding markets." This leads to a potential basic conflict with the British and other colonial powers who, in a desperate effort to compete against the more powerful American capitalism, cling to their colonial monopolies. This is a conflict the solution of which cannot be relegated to the postwar period. Unity during the war is affected by the proposals being made on both sides even though these proposals may not come into operation until after hostilities.

How can this conflict be reconciled? Mr. Browder provides a concrete solution within the framework of the United Nations. In return for a progressive colonial policy on the part of Britain, perhaps one such as Mr. Wallace advocates, the United States must provide a quid pro quo. This should take the form of "an economic concord which will limit the play of free competition between them on the world market," providing a guaranteed proportinate share to the weaker capitalist power, Great Britain. And the agreement must be of such a character that it would gain the support and participation of the Soviet Union.

* * * * * * *

These two publications mark an advance in the American thinking on the highly controversial problem of colonies. It is an advance made possible by harmony between leaders representing traditionally divergent economic and political interests which are now coming together to win the war and to carry forward the spirit of Tehran.

Mr. BUDENZ. These are being introduced merely to show that the Communists consistently had more than a friendly attitude toward Mr. Wallace in 1944 and 1945, and therefore my testimony that they were pleased with his Soviet and China mission is verified.

Wallace's charter for our self-interest in Asia.

This is from the Daily Worker of July 11, 1944, page 8. There they declare in this statement by Mr. Wallace, which was his first statement after returning from China and Soviet Siberia, in which he recommended aid to Soviet Siberian China, but with certain conditions. They declared that:

It is vision of a great American statesman—this insight that Wallace has into American-Soviet-Chinese collaboration * * *.

And they go on to say that—many of these ideas are contained in Wallace's pamphlet Our Task in the Pacific, published last month by the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Then they point out something very significant:

Wallace attached only one condition to the help which "thousands of technical and businessmen in the United States" are ready to give China and the U. S. S. R. And this is the only reference to the immediate political situation.

"They want to be certain" he said, "before they lay the foundations and make the necessary outlay, that there is no foreseeable likelihood of conflict within China or between China and Russia."

The Vice President is referring, of course, to the danger of civil war in China because of the Kuomintang's blockade of the Communists. He is also referring, no doubt, to certain anti-Soviet moods that he encountered "behind the scenes" in Chungking.

He is very right in this warning, but also very right in placing the issue of China's unity and Sino-Soviet friendship within the framework of America's own interest * * *.

Digitized by Google

Then down below a little further:

Wallace has shown the way. If we don't have the intelligence and understanding of our own interests to follow it, the fault won't be his.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Budenz, do I understand you correctly that you are attempting to make the point that because of these nice things the Communists were saying about Mr. Wallace at that time, it indicates that they approved these Kunming cables that you just read and the report that he had filed with it recommending Wedemeyer?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not necessarily; no, sir. It is in confirmation of my testimony that the Communists were pleased with the Wallace mission, which I gave at the last hearings of the committee.

Mr. MORRIS. That was not your testimony, was it, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, that they were satisfied that he would be guided into the right channels; which means the same thing.

That is, I didn't say specifically that they were pleased, but I said that they were satisfied that Mr. Wallace would be guided correctly in the mission.

And it is in order to show that they continued their support of Wallace on the Far East and elsewhere after his mission was completed that I introduced this evidence.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Budenz, do you know whether or not the Communist Party was able to get copies of these messages and this report that was kept secret? Is that the kind of a document that they would want?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, they would want the document. But I have heard no reference to any written documents by Mr. Wallace. I have heard discussion of his attitude on Soviet Asia and China which are along the lines of these cables, so the cables don't surprise me.

That is to the effect that he was disgusted with Chiang Kai-shek and that his recommendations had the effect of weakening Chiang Kai-shek's prestige in Washington.

As a matter of fact, there was an almost remarkable knowledge of those documents, though I have not heard any reference to written documents.

Senator FERGUSON. I want to ask the counsel whether or not these documents appeared in the white paper, the Chinese white paper, or the State Department's releases or white papers.

Mr. MORRIS. My recollection on that point, Senator, is that they did not, and I believe there was a statement in the footnote that these things did not exist.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes. I recall speaking on the floor about this so-called report. Senator O'Conor had in some way obtained a memorandum either of the report or about the report. The question was as to the accuracy of that document.

So I wondered whether or not you had any evidence to indicate that the spy system was able to get these particular secret documents that have been secret until just a few weeks or——

Mr. BUDENZ. Not to my knowledge.

Of course, there were gaps in my attendance at the Politburo. There were no references that I can recall, to written documents. There was a very elaborate recommendation from Frederick Vanderbilt Field and it was discussed by the Politburo on several occasions as to Mr. Wallace's attitude and to his possible recommendations or even possibly to his recommendations. I just can't recall, of his possible recommendations, or possibly recommendations.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. In answer to Senator Ferguson's question, I am now reading from the white paper, page 549, footnote 11. It says here:

By John Carter Vincent, Chief of the Division of Chinese Affairs, who accompanied the Vice President to China. The files of the Department do not contain any indication of the existence of a report in written form made by Mr. Wallace to President Roosevelt or of the nature of any oral report made.

Senator FERGUSON. Which is an unusual thing to appear in the so-called white paper of this country which was published in its United States Relations With China.

The transmittal letter is as of July 30, 1949. So that the State Department then indicates that there are no such reports as we now have produced at this time.

Is not that correct, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. In the State Department?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

It seems to be a strange thing that they appear at certain times, but they cannot be found at other times.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a little strange also that they evidently constitute the background for publications in the Daily Worker under the byline of Frederick Field and others.

Mr. BUDENZ. May I, violating chronology, call your attention to another column by Frederick Vanderbilt Field, on December 2, 1944.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, before we proceed to the next one, may that entire article go into the record?

The CHAIRMAN. You are referring to the article just testified to by the witness under what caption?

Mr. MORRIS. The Daily Worker, Tuesday, July 11, 1944, page 8, under the heading "Wallace's charter for our self-interest in Asia."

The CHAIRMAN. That article may go into the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 312" and is as follows:)

INTERPRETATION, PLEASE—WALLACE'S CHARTER FOR OUR SELF-INTEREST IN ASIA

When Vice President Henry A. Wallace returned from his tour of Latin America just a year ago, he was attacked on all sides as a "visionary" and a "dreamer." But only 2 months ago, a commission of North American and Latin American government and business spokesmen at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York endorsed in essence Wallace's ideas.

Industrialization of our neighbors to the south of us, Wallace had declared, is in our own self-interest. It means a truly united hemisphere, based on rising living standards everywhere. Now Wallace returns from his historic trip to Soviet Siberia and China, and again he brings back the same message.

OUR OWN INTERESTS

America's self-interest, he says, in a very good example of vision and hard-headed practicality, demands unity and friendship with our neighbors of the North Pacific.

Convinced that the American way of life is best for us, Wallace nevertheless stresses "cooperation with other nations and other peoples whose way of life is different from ours, but who need our cooperation quite as much as we need theirs, and who are not only willing, but eager to cooperate with us."

What Wallace saw in his visit to Soviet Siberia and China convinced him that the "main area" of new development after the war—"new enterprise, new investment, new trade, and new accomplishments—will be in—the North Pacific and eastern Asia."

Digitized by Google

A POSTWAR VISION

It is vision of a great American statesman—this insight that Wallace has into American-Soviet-Chinese collaboration. It is a vision of vast trade with the already industrial growing industrial civilization which the Russian and Mongol peoples have built on their soil.

China is on a much different level, he says, but with China also we can look forward to immense trade once that country enters "the machine age," as the Soviet people have already done.

Many of these ideas are contained in Wallace's pamphlet, Our Task in the Pacific, published last month by the Institute of Pacific Relations. What he has added are the insights of his own travel and observation.

All in all, it makes for a great document, a charter for peace and development in Asia, and stamps its author as a man who could be entrusted to lead American destinies.

A WARNING

Wallace attached only one condition to the help which "thousands of technical and businessmen in the United States" are ready to give China and the U. S. S. R. And this is the only reference to the immediate political situation.

"They want to be certain," he said, "before they lay the foundations and make the necessary outlay, that there is no foreseeable likelihood of conflict within China or between China and Russia."

The Vice President is referring, of course, to the danger of civil war in China because of the Kuomintang's blockade of the Communists. He is also referring, no doubt, to certain anti-Soviet moods that he encountered behind the scenes in Chungking.

He is very right in this warning, but also very right in placing the issue of China's unity and Sino-Soviet friendship within the framework of America's own interest. Yes, our businessmen for the sake of their own future have a stake in China's unity, and China's good neighborliness with Soviet Siberia.

Wallace has shown the way. If we don't have the intelligence and understanding of our own interests to follow it, the fault won't be his.

Mr. BUDENZ. In order to indicate the nonhostile attitude toward General Wedemeyer on the part of the Communists, December 2, 1944. This represented, however, previous discussions in the Politburo, but it is a summing up by Frederick Vanderbilt Field:

I disagree with those who take an entirely pessimistic view regarding recent developments in China. On the contrary, for the first time in several years that situation shows signs of improving. Those who argue that the recall of Stilwell indicated nothing but the intransigence of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek or those who interpret the recent Cabinet shifts as a mere reshuffle designed to camouflage the continuance of reaction are failing to see the movement of history.

Then this is the important part I wish to call to your attention. He mentions three conditions, but the third is the one that is important to the question of General Wedemeyer:

* * * as to the third, we know only that there was a breakdown over the particular person nominated as commander in chief, General Stilwell, and that President Roosevelt wisely and quickly compromised on that point. There is no indication that the general proposition for an American commander has been refused.

Then he goes on to say about evidence of progress in China:

* * * another is Major General Wedemeyer's reaffirmation on November 23 that it would be necessary to engage Japanese forces on the Chinese mainland and his further statement that Chiang Kai-shek had approved his recommendations for redisposition of the forces in China for more effective operation, and that these plans were already being carried out.

Digitized by Google

That sounds like cooperation to me.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that go into the record?

The CHAIRMAN. It may go into the record.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the Daily Worker column by Frederick V. Field, appearing in the Daily Worker, December 2, 1944, page 7.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 313" and is as follows:)

TODAY'S GUEST COLUMN

SOME STEPS FORWARD IN CHINESE SITUATION

(By Frederick V. Field)

I disagree with those who take an entirely pessimistic view regarding recent developments in China. On the contrary, for the first time in several years that situation shows signs of improving. Those who argue that the recall of Stilwell indicated nothing but the intransigence of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek or those who interpret the recent cabinet shifts as a mere reshuffle designed to camouflage the continuance of reaction are failing to see the movement of history.

As I write this I have before me the AP dispatch from Chunking which appeared in newspapers Thursday morning and in which P. H. Chang, Chinese cabinet spokesman, said: "It would be necessary for the Government to reach an agreement with the Chinese Communists," and added that "the Government is sparing no effort in trying to reach a settlement."

The latter part of that statement is not likely to impress anyone, because for years Chunking spokesmen have been saying the same thing while "sparing no effort" to accomplish the very opposite. What is worth noting is that Mr. Chang conveyed the impression that the Chinese Government now has no choice except that of reaching an agreement with the Communists. In other words, the situation has reached the point where it is either death for the Chinese nation or a progressive solution of their internal difficulties.

The Chinese people, backed as they are by the influence of the United States, will see to it that a solution is reached before the final breakdown occurs. And the recent cabinet shifts were made in order to make possible the negotiations leading to some sort of solution.

At the time of General Stilwell's recall the press reported—reliably, in my opinion—that the United States had conveyed to the Chinese Government three conditions for effective coalition warfare against Japan. These were, first, that the Chinese high command undertake a thorough reorganization of its armies in order to make them effective fighting units; second, that the military effort of the Kuomintang and Communist-led armies be unified; and, third, that an American be named commander in chief of all allied forces in China.

What is the status of these conditions—not ultimata—for coalition warfare? I believe that the first two remain intact and that progress is being made to carry them out. As to the third, we know only that there was a breakdown over the particular person nominated as commander in chief, General Stilwell, and that President Roosevelt wisely and quickly compromised on that point. There is no indication that the general proposition for an American commander has been refused.

The evidence that progress is being made is found in several very recent events. The Cabinet shifts, eliminating Ho Yin-ching, H. H. Kung, and Chen Li-fu from their most important posts, and bringing Gen. Chen Cheng, who had cooperated closely with Stilwell, into the Ministry of War is one of these events. Another is Major General Wedemeyer's reaffirmation on November 23 that it would be necessary to engage Japanese forces on the Chinese mainland and his further statement that Chiang Kai-shek had approved his recommendations for redisposition of the forces in China for more effective operation, and that these plans were already being carried out. That sounds like cooperation to me, and cooperation based upon the need to develop coalition warfare between American and Chinese forces.

Then a day or two before the announcement of his appointment as the new United States Ambassador to Chungking, Major General Hurley gave a public and publicized banquet in honor of Chou En-lai, who had just arrived in the Chinese capital to reopen unity negotiations with the Government. That could hardly have been done without the acquiescence of the generalissimo.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I might say we have found the reference in the Wallace cable to General Wedemeyer. The paragraph reads as follows:

While I do not feel competent to propose an officer for the job, the name of General Wedemeyer has been recommended to me, and I am told that during his visit here he made himself persona grata to Chiang.

The whole cable has been introduced into the record, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. Chairman, without wishing to intrude on the time of the committee, I would like to introduce one or two more documents here.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BUDENZ. One is a critical reference to the report publicly made by Chiang Kai-shek and Henry Wallace publicly in China, in Chungking. The criticism is that it didn't include the question of raising the blockade of the Chinese Communists.

But the Daily Worker hastens to say:

But there is no focus on these events in Wallace's statement, for which I do not, of course, blame the Vice President * * *

And he goes on to indicate why the Vice President should not be blamed.

The CHAIRMAN. Who says that?

Mr. BUDENZ. This is Joseph Starobin in the Daily Worker.

Mr. MORRIS. What was Mr. Starobin's position, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. He was foreign editor of the Daily Worker, and that is a responsible position because the foreign editor is knee deep in international intrigue, I might say.

I would like to point out that Mr. Starobin seems to know here what is on Mr. Wallace's mind, because he says that his statement at Chungking in regard to relations between China and Siberia, which the communists applauded, leads to this conclusion:

He—

that is, Mr. Wallace—

is clearly perturbed with the many hostile expressions against the Soviet Union which he heard in Chungking, and in saying this I am telling no special secrets. * * *

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, this writer indicated that he was getting information as to what Mr. Wallace's real thinking was.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct, although he said he is telling no special secrets.

Mr. MORRIS. This is the Daily Worker of June 28, 1944, page 6.

The column is headed "Between the Lines—Wallace learns about China," by Joseph Starobin.

May that be introduced into the record, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be inserted into the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 314," and is as follows:)

WALLACE LEARNS ABOUT CHINA

(By Joseph Starobin)

Henry A. Wallace is probably on his way home now after his dramatic visit to Soviet Siberia and China. The most important document summarizing his week-long stay in Chungking has gone before him. I mean the joint statement signed with Chiang Kai-shek, and published last Sunday.

Digitized by Google

On the face of it, Wallace and the Chinese generalissimo say some excellent things. It would appear that their discussions have been "informal, frank and friendly." Special emphasis is placed on the "cornerstone position of China in Asia," in a system of Pacific security, built upon Chinese, Soviet, British and American collaboration, and the "permanent demilitarization" of Japan.

As for the realization of Sun Yat Sen's three principles, the statement speaks of "national sovereignty" as something already achieved for China, of "democracy" as something apparently not yet achieved but "implicit in the plans for a new constitution," and economic reconstruction as something for the future.

The order in which these principles are discussed in significant; I suppose we must be grateful that the long-delayed constitution is mentioned at all.

WALLACE ANXIOUS FOR CHINA-SOVIET TIES

A curious feature of the joint statement is its emphasis on the relations between China and the Soviet Union. Wallace and the generalissimo consider it "axiomatic" that the future peace of Asia must rest on a "continuation of the ties of friendship that have characterized American-Chinese relations for over a century." And then in the same sentence, virtually on an equal basis, they place the importance of "mutual understanding" between China and the Soviet Union—"China's nearest great neighbor."

It is nothing short of historic that Chinese-American and Chinese-Soviet relations should be discussed in the same breath and on the same plane. Yet it must be noted that in the case of our own country the statement speaks of a century-long friendship, whereas in the case of the Soviet Union is pleads only for mutual understanding.

If we bear in mind the Vice President's excellent remarks upon arriving in Chungking to the effect that the borders between China and Siberia ought to be as free and peaceful as the borders of Canada and the United States, we have a right to conclude that something is preying on Wallace's mind.

He is clearly perturbed with the many hostile expressions against the Soviet Union which he heard in Chungking, and in saying this I am telling no special secrets. In Cairo last December many a hardboiled British and American diplomat was shocked to hear vigorous anti-Soviet opinions from leading Chinese officials. The Vice President has now heard them also. He has gone out of his way to emphasize his own view of the Soviet Union's importance to China. Let us hope that the generalissimo's signature to the same statement will have its effect in Chungking.

But weighing the excellent, long-range implications of this document, one must also pause on the fact that they are so long-range.

Nothing is said on the one question that must surely be uppermost in everyone's mind: the extremely difficult military situation in central China and its connection with the extremely serious and continuing blockade of the Chinese Communists in the northwest border region.

The Wallace-Chiang statement is therefore more interesting for what it does not say than for what it says. Perhaps not all Americans realize that 120,000 Japanese soldiers are at this moment plunging from captured Changsha toward the vital junction of Hengyang, threatening to control the key railway from Peking in the north clear down to Canton in the south.

This is a terrific offensive designed to cripple China, to trap our inland air bases, to force a coup de'etat against the generalissimo and an effective separate peace.

So far the Japanese have had their way. The only redeeming feature of the dark picture lies in the fact that sections of Hunan and Honan province used to be guerrilla strongholds in times gone by and guerrilla warfare will undoubtedly revive there on a large scale.

But there is no focus on these events in Wallace's statement, for which I do not of course blame the Vice President. The immediate picture could not have been discussed without noting that 500,000 Chinese soldiers are all this while blockading the northwest in a futile, treacherous, "frozen" kind of civil war. The fact that Wallace could not (even by implication) comment on this overshadowing problem reflects the gravity of the problem itself.

TWO PICTURES—AND THE STAKE FOR AMERICA

The most striking fact about the world picture today is the contrast between the military and political crisis in China as against the heartening military and political successes everywhere else among the United Nations.

Digitized by Google

Without losing our sense of perspective, it must be said that very alarming things can happen in China, affecting the whole course of the war unless unity is achieved between the Kuomintang and the Communists, and in a hurry.

It is the job of conscientious Americans to leave no stone unturned in facilitating that unity. History has a way of forcing its pound of flesh for the mistakes and errors of the past. In this case, Japan will be the Shylock. And Uncle Sam, among others, would be the loser.

Mr. BUDENZ. Mr. Chairman, now, if I may be permitted, I would like to show very briefly that this Communist applause of Mr. Wallace—and this is not for the purpose of pillorying Mr. Wallace but for the purpose of showing that his mission was not regarded by them as to be considered as very hostile to the Communists—led them into the big campaign to support Mr. Wallace for Vice President in 1944, and then led to the big campaign for Mr. Wallace for Secretary of Commerce in 1945.

I was knee deep in both of these campaigns and know very thoroughly of the almost hectic and extensive campaigns conducted by the Communists on behalf of Mr. Wallace, which meant approval of all that he stood for.

Now, I would like to introduce just a sample of this approval.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you mean to say, then, that the Communist Party was interested in the domestic policies in the United States, as far as the Secretary of Commerce was concerned, and that they were carrying on certain programs?

Mr. BUDENZ. They conducted the biggest campaign of any group or political unit on behalf of Mr. Wallace for Secretary of Commerce.

Senator FERGUSON. How did they do it? Out in the open, we Communists advocate this, or how do they do it? Both ways?

Mr. BUDENZ. They advocated it in the sense it was in the columns of the Daily Worker, which meant transmission to the Communists everywhere.

It also took the form of getting unions to be for Mr. Wallace; getting Negro groups for Mr. Wallace; of getting other groups to be for Mr. Wallace, and then publishing that in the Daily Worker to show a tremendous popular campaign for him.

In that connection, I just want to bring a couple of these items to your attention, of scores that I could have brought before this committee.

The first is the editorial "The People Want Him"—referring to President Roosevelt.

But in that connection, they say:

Thus, the fight on Wallace has become the vehicle for the anti-F. D. R. resurrection within the Democratic Party.

Because of this, and because of Wallace's policies and his great services to the Nation, he should be continued in office.

That was only an opening gun of an official editorial.

The CHAIRMAN. That is when he was up for Vice President, was it?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. The date of that, Mr. Chairman, is July 13, 1944. That is 2 weeks after the cables.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that with reference to the Democratic Convention in Chicago?

Mr. BUDENZ. That was on the eve of the convention.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that whole article go into the record?

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. The article may go into the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 315" and is as follows:)

THE PEOPLE WANT HIM

The proverbial man on the street is breathing easier today now that all doubt concerning the President's candidacy has been resolved.

In Democratic and labor circles there was, naturally, wholehearted approval of the President's announcement. And quite as naturally, the insurrectionists within the Democratic Party were displeased. For they are not only fifth columnists within that party but enemies of the national interest as well, and that interest can be served by the President remaining in office.

The anti-Roosevelt newspapers, and they remain the great majority, have performed in the accustomed manner. Their cry is that F. D. R. has remained too long in power. There is a note of contempt for the people in that argument. For, as the President says, the people are sovereign and they will determine whether he has remained too long in office.

DIVERSIONARY TACTICS

Any cry of opposition today based on a fourth term is pure smokescreen. The problem today is the winning of the war, the establishment of a secure, democratic United Nations peace, the reconversion to a peacetime economy of prosperity. Anyone who dares put up against these issues that of length in office is clearly practicing diversionary tactics because he doesn't want to face them.

The military problems are still terrific. The war is far from won. And despite Governor Dewey's position, it is the business of the President to serve as Commander in Chief and to be thoroughly familiar with those problems. Otherwise he is abdicating his responsibilities.

The problem of relations with the United Nations is a complex and delicate one. Not only is the President's familiarity with it a factor in the elections, but who can honestly compare Governor Dewey with him as the American spokesman on a world scale?

Suppose the President were not to run. The Democratic Party would immediately be torn between various factions with naked defeatism and reaction organized to take over or to ruin. The G. O. P. would win the election hands down and would no longer find it necessary even to cover itself with the pretense of supporting a war for complete destruction of the Axis, in collaboration with the Soviet Union and England. There would be fear and suspicion generated abroad, and rightly so. In place of the ideals for which the world is fighting would be substituted the cynical imperialism of the G. O. P. spokesmen. The Axis would be encouraged to continue resistance.

For the Republican Party, as now constituted, would not represent a continuity of leadership in America if it should win the election. This is obvious from the speeches of its present leaders, from its candidates, from its platform and from its activities in Congress and elsewhere. It is evident in its rejection of Wendell Willkie and his program.

The danger of this leadership coming into power is reason enough to rule out the argument that F. D. R. has been in office too long.

THE VICE PRESIDENCY

The problem of the Vice Presidential nomination still remains to be decided. That office has undergone a transformation in the last 4 years. It is no longer a place for a "Throttlebottom," as Walter Lippman has described Governor Bricker. Henry A. Wallace has made it an important cog in the Federal machine.

With the President immersd in military and foreign policy problems, the job takes on important aspects. The country needs a Vice President who is both capable and a consistent supporter of the President's policies.

There are several who might fill the bill. But those who are fighting Wallace would also fight them, because the anti-Wallace movement is essentially an anti-Roosevelt movement that has become diverted because the President is too popular. Thus, the fight on Wallace has become the vehicle for the anti-F. D. R. resurrection within the Democratic Party.

Because of this, and because of Wallace's policies and his great services to the Nation, he should be continued in office. We are not greatly impressed by the argument that he is unpopular. Every poll taken among the people and among Democratic leaders has shown him leading by a wide margin among prospective candidates.

Digitized by Google

We feel that a change in the Vice Presidency could be considered only if there were an opportunity for a coalition ticket such as President Lincoln organized in 1864.

Lacking that, we are sure that the people will not only plunge into the fight to reelect the President, but will give full support to Vice President Wallace, as well.

Mr. BUDENZ. Then on June 18, 1944—and I say I am only making selections—we have this editorial: "Renominate Wallace," which I wrote personally.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that in the Daily Worker?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir. And in it they say that—

The decision will be made in the next 48 hours. We suggest that the people back home everywhere let the delegates to the Democratic convention know at once that they desire the nomination of Henry Wallace for Vice President.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why did you write that, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. I wrote that upon request of Earl Browder, who was the leader of the party, and because the Politburo was convinced that Mr. Wallace represented those views, whether he was aware of it, or not, which the Communists thought should be forwarded.

In that connection, there was a great, extensive debate, and Mr. Wallace's whole record of having declared in public addresses that Soviet Russia had many features of democracy superior to our own, although he also said we had features superior to theirs, such as ethnic democracy of Soviet Russia and women's democracy, sex, and his speech in 1943, where he had said that if peace is ever broken, it will be solely due to the American double-cross of Soviet Russia; those things were debated at that time, and it was on the basis of that record of Mr. Wallace and his entire career that this stand was taken.

Senator FERGUSON. You were writing the Communist line at that time and praising Mr. Wallace and advocating his selection, were you?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. And claiming that it would be great for the United States.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. You do not claim much pride this morning in that work that you did back in '44, do you, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, Senator, I wouldn't want to discuss Mr. Wallace in person here.

Senator FERGUSON. No. I mean as to carrying out the party line?

Mr. BUDENZ. I think I have endeavored to make amends, as much as I could, under great difficulty.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes, you have.

Mr. BUDENZ. It has been my feeling that the damage that I did to the United States must be compensated for by my service to the Government insofar as I can do it today.

Senator FERGUSON. And to the people of the United States.

Mr. BUDENZ. And to the people.

But I certainly am ashamed, very bitterly ashamed, of my whole career as a Communist.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; and that you attempted to carry out the party line as you did in this editorial.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Digitized by Google

Of course, I wish to say here, without wishing to introduce extraneous matters, that the Communists were encouraged in this by instructions or representations from abroad; also from Mr. Wallace, as a result of his Soviet-Asia visit.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by from abroad?

Mr. BUDENZ. I mean from Moscow, from the Communist international representatives.

Here is one sample of day-after-day campaigning of the Daily Worker for Mr. Wallace, merely to indicate their deep interest:

Drive to renominate Wallace gains at Democratic convention—

in which we must understand that in the Daily Worker these articles are also directives as well as just observations. They are also directions and they constantly are endeavoring to inspire or whip up the Communists to the campaign.

I didn't give the date, Senator, but it is quite obvious there.

The CHAIRMAN. Wednesday, July 19, 1944.

Mr. BUDENZ. Right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will you accept this into the record, this article by Adam Lapin, which appears on page 2 of the Daily Worker of Wednesday, July 19, 1944, entitled "Drive To Renominate Wallace Gains at Democratic Convention"?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted into the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 316" and is as follows:)

DRIVE TO RENOMINATE WALLACE GAINS AT DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

(By Adam Lapin)

CHICAGO, July 18.—Upsetting predictions by professional politicians and many newspapermen that Henry A. Wallace was out of the running, the Roosevelt and labor forces backing the Vice President for renomination made significant gains today.

The powerful Pennsylvania and California delegations, with 72 and 52 votes respectively at the convention, both went on record overwhelmingly for renomination for Wallace.

Former Gov. Culbert L. Olson introduced the resolution to back Wallace which was enthusiastically approved by the California delegates. CIO, AFL, and railroad brotherhoods delegates spoke in favor of the resolution.

At the Pennsylvania caucus, the fight to back Wallace was led by CIO President Philip Murray and Senator Joseph Guffey.

Other significant developments showing the stubborn strength of the Wallace forces among rank and file delegates included:

A resolution passed by Negro leaders and delegates to the convention last night insisting on Wallace.

Statements by W. Murray and CIO Political Action Committee Chairman Sidney Hillman at a huge press conference that "It's Wallace" and "We have no other choice, as far as labor is concerned."

TORY MANEUVER

Reactionary southern delegates and some of the politicians opposing Wallace attempted to make capital out of the statement in the President's letter that he did "not wish to appear in any way as dictating to the convention."

But the fact that Roosevelt said that he would vote for Wallace's "renomination if I were a delegate to the convention" clarified the President's position and actually strengthened Wallace's position.

With his campaign picking up, Wallace was scheduled to arrive here tomorrow to take personal charge of the forces backing his nomination.

There were also persistent reports that in the event of a deadlock Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas would have influential support.

Digitized by Google

One story which was current was that Senator Harry Truman of Missouri, who has been prominently mentioned for the Vice Presidential spot, had agreed to place Byrnes in nomination.

Truman was reported to have asked the CIO for support but was flatly turned down by Hillman who said that Byrnes would not be satisfactory.

CIO SOLID FOR WALLACE

Hillman confirmed at the CIO press conference late this afternoon that he had breakfasted with Truman this morning.

"We're not discussing other delegates," Hillman said, emphasizing that Wallace was the only choice of the CIO.

Murray declared that "the strength of the rank and file is behind Wallace."

He expressed the hope that the delegates would come to appreciate "the strength which will be given by putting Wallace on the ticket."

Murray confirmed reports that two Cabinet members had voted against Wallace on the first ballot in the Pennsylvania delegation, but said that one of them later switched over.

The two Cabinet members were Attorney General Francis Biddle and Postmaster General Frank Walker.

The vote in the delegation was 41 for Wallace, 6 against and 15 abstained.

Mr. BUDENZ. Then in regard to the campaign for Secretary of Commerce, in which I was deeply involved, because I directed the publicity specifically for the Communist Party—and, indeed, my name appeared on many articles on behalf of Mr. Wallace—I would like to present two exhibits of many that could be presented.

This was even a bigger campaign in some ways than the one for Vice President, because they had more time to carry it through.

The CHAIRMAN. What date is that?

Mr. BUDENZ. The date I am presenting first is January 27, 1945. They had "Wallace's Program for Postwar America" in detail, but it is to the editorial that I direct attention:

All United States has stake in Wallace fight.

In speaking about Wallace's testimony which clashed with that of Jesse Jones, they make a contrast between the two, and then they say about Mr. Wallace:

> There was grandeur about the Wallace testimony, a grandeur imparted to it by the vision of the man, by his profound concern for the future of the people—all of the people—of America, by his understanding of the interconnection between the economic welfare of the people and the maintenance of American democracy, by his grasp of America's position in a postwar world, by his boundless confidence in the Nation's ability to go ahead.

There is much more to the same effect, in which they conclude by urging that Henry Wallace be confirmed as Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MORRIS. That is page 4 of the Daily Worker, Saturday, January 27, 1945; an editorial, "All United States Has Stake in Wallace Fight".

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. May that go into the record, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Were you connected with the Daily Worker as an editor on that date?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, sir; I was directing that campaign specifically. I was assigned by the Politburo to the Wallace campaign to see it was effected.

The CHAIRMAN. It may go into the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 317," and is as follows:)

Digitized by Google

ALL UNITED STATES HAS STAKE IN WALLACE FIGHT

AN EDITORIAL

All Americans must have been impressed with the profound contrast in the testimony presented to them by Jesse Jones and Henry Wallace.

Where Jones sneered at those who want to build a prosperous postwar America as "impractical dreamers," Wallace presented a sound, concrete program for building that kind of America.

When Jones attacked those who would "remake America," Wallace placed his faith in the ability of America to "remake" itself so that there would be no more starvation, mass business failures, recurrent crises.

There was a grandeur about the Wallace testimony, a grandeur imparted to it by the vision of the man, by his profound concern for the future of the people—all the people—of America, by his understanding of the interconnection between the economic welfare of the people and the maintenance of American democracy, by his grasp of America's position in a postwar world, by his boundless confidence in the Nation's ability to go ahead.

His testimony revealed that this was no "impractical idealist" talking, but one who had full command of the realities facing postwar America. His "practicality" was evident from the brief review of his own experience as Secretary of Agriculture, when he administered successfully several huge Federal farm programs. And he appeared as a thorough exponent of the policies of President Roosevelt. Those who would attack Wallace as a "dreamer" for projecting that kind of postwar program would also have to indict the President. Yet who, in his sense, would today call FDR an "impractical idealist," after his immense achievement in peace and in war?

Wallace noted that the attack on his "inexperience" was subterfuge; that the only true issue involved in the controversy over his confirmation was whether or not the resources of the Government should be used to guarantee prosperity for all Americans. The President and Wallace say they shall be so used. The foes of the Wallace appointment say they shall not.

Is there any doubt where the American people stand? Is there any question that all of us, whether worker or farmer or large- or small-business man, want a prosperous postwar America? Will anyone dare say openly that the people want a return to Hooverism? Yet this is what the foes of Henry Wallace are saying by indirection.

And when we say that the people want such a program as outlined by Wallace, we include the bulk of the 22,000,000 who voted for Dewey. Whether they voted Republican for partisan reasons or whether they were taken in by Dewey's demogogy, these 22,000,000 did not vote for a return to Hooverism.

In his statement to the Senate committee, Wallace made it clear there is no issue of "big business versus small business" involved in his appointment, any more than there is an issue of "socialism versus capitalism." Big business and small business alike will profit from the kind of America to which he aspires. And it will be an America where private enterprise will be stronger and healthier, not weaker.

Thus, the President's appointment of Henry Wallace advances national unity. Wallace's program provides the economic foundation for advancing the interests of all groups and classes in American life. Worker, farmer, big-business man, and small-business man have a common stake in seeing that Henry Wallace is confirmed as Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MORRIS. And you say the Soviet Union and Moscow had cognizance of this particular drive?

Mr. BUDENZ. They have cognizance of all drives. The drive I specifically referred to was the drive for Vice President.

Mr. MORRIS. I see; not this one?

Mr. BUDENZ. Not this one.

This is the Daily Worker, New York, Thursday, January 25, 1945:

CIO, AFL unions rally to Wallace; Anti-Wallace press aims at F. D. R.

There are two articles here, almost a whole page devoted to it, Negro Leaders Rally Behind Wallace, and the like.

Digitized by Google

Then there is another article here, and another by myself, under my byline, in which I take a review of the Nation's press and show that the Fascists and reactionary press is against Mr. Wallace. That was the line of the Daily Worker at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. What relationship does the Daily Worker bear to the Communist Party in America?

I think you have testified to that before, but I would like to have you testify again.

Mr. BUDENZ. The Daily Worker is the official daily organ of the Communist Party in the United States, completely controlled by the party and unable to make a move without the approval of the Politburo.

This is a literal matter, Senator. There is a representative of the Politburo always as a liaison representative of that organization in the editorial board of the Daily Worker.

This personnel is changed from time to time.

Secondly, the Daily Worker, from that position as daily organ, is the telegraph agency of directives to the conspiracy. That is, every morning a Communist leader out through the country opens up the Daily Worker, from it decides what campaigns to carry forward, whom to support, whom to attack, what organizations to rout.

That is one of the sources of the success of the Communist conspiracy in this country: the quickness with which they can operate.

Senator FERGUSON. That is the party line, is it not?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is the party line as it is delicately interpreted from day to day by the Daily Worker, because even in the party line there are certain changes from time to time, emphasis to get certain things out more rapidly, to get certain organizations into activity quicker, and the like.

The Daily Worker, for example, once had a circulation of 8,000. That didn't bother the Communist Party, from information I have received. That wasn't while I was connected with it.

Senator FERGUSON. What was the circulation when you were there?

Mr. BUDENZ. The daily circulation was around 29,000, and the Sunday circulation ran about up to a hundred thousand on the Worker, but it ran up and down from seventy-five to a hundred.

That was not the concern of the party, though, of course, the more circulation they got, the better they liked it. But their concern was that it reached quickly those Communists who could transmit what it said out in waves to others.

The CHAIRMAN. How is it supported? By its subscriptions, or by its advertising, or by what means?

Mr. BUDENZ. It is largely supported by what is called a financial drive every year for the Daily Worker, in which several hundred thousand dollars is raised, because neither its subscriptions nor its advertising would, of course, bring it any substantial revenue.

The main advertising it has is from such organizations as the International Workers Order, which is an adjunct of the Communist Party and which from time to time, as a gift, but in the form of an ad, gives large ads to the Daily Worker.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that go into the record, that article of January 25, 1945?

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. It may go into the record.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 318" and is as follows:)

CIO, AFL UNIONS RALLY TO WALLACE; ANTI-WALLACE PRESS AIMS AT FDR

(By Louis F. Budenz)

Rallying behind President Roosevelt in his selection of Henry A. Wallace as Secretary of Commerce, the Greater New York CIO Council yesterday wired Senators Wagner and Mead urging them to work for Wallace's confirmation. Joseph Curran, president, and Saul Mills, secretary, asked the Senators to oppose unequivocally any attempt to divorce the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (RFC) from the Department of Commerce.

The Wayne County (Detroit) CIO Political Action Committee also pressed for approval of the President's appointment. The Detroit PAC wired the President that his action "will further cement our national unity front against the facist Axis."

In Washington, CIO president Philip Murray and presidents of the largest AFL unions and railroad brotherhoods also spoke for confirmation.

Murray said that the CIO "hails with delight the nomination of an outstanding American in the person of Henry Wallace to the position of Secretary of Commerce. I am hopeful that the Senate will confirm him without quibbling."

Dan Tobin, president of the AFL, Brotherhood of Teamsters, asserted that "there isn't a man better fitted for this job than is Henry Wallace."

Tobin said he was aware of the move to separate the Department of Commerce from its more important RFC activities and added:

"So when I say I favor Mr. Wallace's appointment as Secretary of Commerce, I naturally include these newer functions of the Department."

Harvey Brown, president of the AFL International Association of Machinists, commented that the former Vice President "will be able to make a very real contribution toward solving our postwar problems, especially since everything must be done to promote continuity of employment. * * *"

RAIL UNIONS

E. E. Milliman, president of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes, said he favored the appointment and "without question the Senate should confirm it."

Felix Knight, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, said he favored confirmation on the grounds that "a person in a position of responsibility should have the right to choose his assistants."

George M. Harrison, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Clerks, largest railroad union in the country, said he was highly pleased with the Wallace appointment and looked forward to confirmation.

Wallace's appointment will be tremendously helpful because of the program of readjustment required for the postwar, H. W. Fraser, president of the Order of Railway Conductors, said. He predicted Wallace would prove to be a very able Secretary of Commerce.

Nothing lets us know so dramatically that the opposition to Henry Wallace for Secretary of Commerce is in reality a battle against President Roosevelt as the opinions on the controversy expressed in the Nation's press.

In the recent election campaign about 85 percent of the commercial newspapers of the country were against FDR for the fourth term, as Secretary of the Interior Ickes put down for the record immediately after November 7. Approximately the same percentage is hounding Wallace now. The same purpose of scuttling the national-unity position represented by Mr. Roosevelt exists in this anti-Wallace campaign.

There are some voices of opinion, of course, which have learned something from the Roosevelt coalition's victory. Among these is the Des Moines Tribune, owned by the Cowles brothers. Backing the GOP in the 1944 elections, it is now out in strong terms for the former Vice President.

"Henry Wallace," it says editorially on January 23, "knows more about the economics of trade and finance in an interdependent world than Jesse Jones will ever suspect."

Digitized by Google

And it says sarcastically that it is not impressed by the argument that no man should be in public office "who hasn't at one time or other made vast sums of money."

On the banks of the Mississippi, the independent St. Louis Post-Dispatch is winning national fame againn in its pro-Wallace attitude. This paper states that Jesse Jones "failed in the crucial test; was still pinching pennies instead of buying strategic materials in a desperate period of the war."

The defeatist press, as was to be expected, is 100 percent on the other side. The Chicago Tribune, leader of the subversive gangs in America, tears its hair in opposition to Wallace. It sees a new Red plot in his appointment, but, in its ranting talk of Communist slavery, lets us know the true basis of its barrage by bitterly saying that Wallace is a fit companion for FDR. The pro-Fascist New York News echoes the same thoughts.

The New York Times, which grudgingly came out for FDR just before November 7, and then only because of his foreign policy, is now saying things to hurt Wallace. Its reasons for not liking his appointment are the same as those that cause it to be against the President's domestic policies.

The Republican Herald Tribune likewise follows the pattern of the election period. Then its partisanship betrayed it into supporting the Dewey ticket, and caused it to resort to arguments that must have made the editorial writers blush. Now it follows the same course, talking stupidly about "socialism" being the only way to get full employment, implying that Wallace is therefore a "Red" and that full employment is undesirable in America.

The issues therefore are sharply drawn in this contest; they are Mr. Roosevelt's view of prosperity and enduring peace versus those people who oppose such objectives.

As in the national election campaign, some danger that the scene may be messed up comes from the liberals. The newspaper PM would like to make the fight for Wallace a battle on a white horse against "big business" monopolies.

The New York Post, as it did before November 7, spends much time in whining about the words used by the President in the Wallace appointment. Were either of these attitudes to become widespread, it would be injurious to the Wallace appointment.

Seeing the line-up, the people can make the fight for the former Vice President a clear-cut one for FDR and national unity.

Negro Leaders Rally Behind Wallace

(By Eugene Gordon)

Negro leaders in all walks of life are rallying to the support of Henry A. Wallace, in the struggle around Wallace's appointment as Secretary of Commerce.

Wallace's appointment brought the decisions of Tehran "several steps nearer to the people," declared Miss Daisy George, business agent of local 6, Hotel and Club Employees Union, AFL.

The appointment "is proof that the President means business in his plan to put America to work," declared Charles A. Collins, executive secretary of the Negro Labor Victory Committee. He added:

"The disappointment felt by the Negro people when Wallace failed to get the Vice Presidential nomination has been more than compensated for by his inclusion in the President's Cabinet. He'll be associated with his chief on the program for 60,000,000 jobs. The Negro people want him."

Mrs. Ada Jackson, chairman, Brooklyn Interracial Assembly, expressed her feeling in the story of the women who, riding in a buggy along a narrow road overhanging a precipice, retorted, when asked whether she was scared:

"Scared. Why, how could I be scared? Isn't Brother Jones holding the reins?"

MAN OF VISION

The Reverend Charles Y. Trigg, pastor of Salem Methodist Church, 209 West One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street. He said:

"The Secretary of Commerce should be a man of great vision and of unwavering courage. Wallace is that man. It would be a gloomy day for us all if he were sidetracked by the reactionaries. That must not happen."

Digitized by Google

Ludlow Werner, editor of the New York Age, traditionally a Republican paper but which supported Roosevelt last November, saw the Wallace appointment as a "boon to the forgotten man in business in the professions and everywhere else."

The Negro people, Mr. Werner added, certainly constitute the largest segment of America's forgotten men."

The Department of Commerce is "basic to the welfare of the Nation's economy," said the Reverend James B. Johnson, pastor of the Church of the Master, 86 Morningside Avenue.

Mrs. Dorothy Robinson Homer, librarian, One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street branch, New York Public Library, said the appointment "means a feather in the President's cap." It means a great deal "for the colored people, whom he knows so well and who have such a high regard for him."

Alpheus Hunton, educational director, Council on African Affairs, said:

"The basic question confronting the United States is postwar economy in international trade. Wallace's presence in the Cabinet as representative of the Department of Commerce will give us all a feeling that our interests are being looked after."

Mr. BUDENZ. If I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, may I add one more thing here?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is: To cap off the attitude of the Communist Party toward Mr. Wallace in the 1944–45 period, in the famous article by Jacques Duclos, the general secretary of the Communist Party of France, attacking Earl Browder as a revisionist, and which led to Browder's demotion from leadership, Henry Wallace was commended to Browder as an example on two different occasions.

Now, this was a very unusual thing, and immediately the Communists understood that they should adopt Henry Wallace as a substitute for Browder, not as a Communist leader, but as a united front leader, which eventually, within a very short time, they proceeded to do, through the Progressive Party.

It is very significant that an international document such as that written by Jacques Duclos, in effect demoting Browder, and in which Browder said in its introduction that it represented the mind of all the leading Marxists in Europe, should have twice commended Wallace to Browder's consideration as having a more correct view of how to proceed than what Browder had.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that article available?

Mr. BUDENZ. It is available. It was published in Political Affairs and in the Daily Worker and in many other places by the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. We have the article, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mandel is now getting it. It will be made a part of the record.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Senator FERGUSON. Is this your book, Soviet Asia Mission?

Mr. BUDENZ. It is, Senator.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say it is your book, you mean you own the book; it is the Soviet Asia Mission, by Henry Wallace?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes. It isn't mine.

Senator FERGUSON. I wish you would read a memorandum there on page 32. It is underscored. Then I think the same thing is referred to on page 172. That is one of the men mentioned there.

I would like to have you read it aloud.

Mr. BUDENZ. Do you want the whole paragraph?

Senator FERGUSON. That part.

Mr. BUDENZ (reading):

When we arrived at Seimchan, it was the early evening of our first day in Soviet Russia. We were put up for the night at the Airport Hotel. On the walls of the large pleasant room assigned to me were Soviet oriental rugs. An official banquet of welcome was arranged for us. The master of ceremonies was a Georgian, Sergei Arsenevich Goglidze, an intimate friend of Marshal Stalin. He is president of the executive committee of Khabarovsk's territory, under which this far northern area is governed, and he had flown up 1,500 miles from the Amur River region to greet us.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. Page 172 shows who was at the meeting and what this Russian was thinking about. Will you read that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Yes, Senator. I think this was read before in the proceedings, but I will read it again:

At dinner, after our return from China, Goglidze offered a significant toast to "Owen Lattimore and John Carter Vincent, American experts on China, on whom rests great responsibility for China's future."

Senator FERGUSON. I am trying to place how the responsibility for China's future was placed upon these two men.

At that time, what was Vincent's mission? As I understood, at that time he was the United States employee representing the United States to carry out the United States policy; was he not?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. What was Lattimore's mission?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, he was sent as an adviser, because of his knowledge of China and Soviet Asia, particularly of China.

Senator FERGUSON. But he was really representing the United States?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. But this Russian, who was a personal friend of Stalin and represented really one of the republics of the Soviet Union, said there was a burden on them in relation to China. How do you account for that?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I only accounted by my own knowledge of these Soviet toasts.

First of all, a Soviet toast to an individual is not necessarily a sign that he is a Communist.

Senator FERGUSON. No; I did not mention that.

Mr. BUDENZ. But when he puts a responsibility on them, that does indicate that he expects them to deliver the goods—if I may use an American phrase. He expects them to deliver the goods.

Senator FERGUSON. It was more than a toast of good health. It was an indication that they had a certain responsibility.

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. How do you account for that? They were also advisers to Mr. Wallace, were with him at the time that he was going along on this mission; is not that true?

Mr. BUDENZ. Well, I account for it by the fact that my official information is that they were Communists, and I think that is the interpretation that is most to be drawn from that statement.

The future China the Communists had in mind was a Communist China, to be attained through a coalition government, and the responsibility for that future China was placed on their shoulders.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, let us proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have at this time noted the author's note on this volume that we have been having testimony about, Soviet Asia Mission.

Mr. Mandel, will you read the author's note?

Digitized by Google

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

Author's note: In acknowledgment of invaluable assistance in preparing the manuscript of Soviet Asia Mission, my sincere thanks are extended to John Hazard, Owen Lattimore, and Capt. Kennith Knowles, for intimate observations of life in east Asia today; Joseph Barnes, Harriet Moore, Albert Rhys Williams, Dr. Tredwell Smith, and Myra Jordan for reading the text and offering editorial suggestions; and to Andrew J. Steiger, who compiled the book from the diary I wrote during the trip and from other factual materials supplied him by me.

HENRY A. WALLACE.

Mr. MORRIS. In addition to Mr. Lattimore, you had two people who served as secretaries, who have been affiliated with the Institute of Pacific Relations, Joseph Barnes and Harriet Moore, making a contribution to this particular volume.

Mr. Chairman, we have here an article in Political Affairs, about which Mr. Budenz gave testimony.

First, I wonder if Mr. Budenz would want to refresh his recollection on the article that he testified about and, secondly, how much would you like to have go into the record?

Mr. BUDENZ. It requires very little refreshing on this historic document on the dissolution of the Communist Party in the United States, by Jacques Duclos, which was reprinted and issued as the theoretical organ of the Communist Party in France, in which Browder, who was held to be the leading Marxist-Leninist in the Western Hemisphere, was renounced as a revisionist and demoted eventually, in accordance with Duclos' directives as general secretary of the Communist Party.

In this connection Mr. Duclos refers Mr. Browder and the Communist Party to Mr. Wallace:

The former Vice President of the United States, Henry Wallace, present Secretary of Commerce, said rightly that one cannot fight fascism abroad and tolerate at home the activity of powerful groups which intend to make peace "with a simple breathing spell between the death of an old tyranny and the birth of a new."

The Yalta decisions thwarted these plans, but the enemies of liberty will not disarm of their free will. They will only retreat before the acting coalition of all the forces of democracy and progress.

And it is clear that if Comrade Earl Browder had seen, as a Marxist-Leninist, this important aspect of the problems facing liberty-loving peoples in this moment in their history, he would have arrived at a conclusion quite other than the dissolution of the Communist Party of the United States.

Mr. MORRIS. That is taken from Political Affairs, of July 1945, Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

It is my impression there was still another reference to Mr. Wallace here, but I can't find it in the short time we have before us.

At any rate, this created a certain definite repercussion within the leading ranks of the Communist Party, because it was an unusual and, in fact, unheard of precedent that a non-Communist, such as Mr. Wallace is, should be used as an example or an imitation for a Communist leader, and should have been shown to have been more in line with the Communist thinking than the Communist leader was.

It was immediately understood and so analyzed at the Politburo that Mr. Wallace was to be the leader of the united front forces as formulated by the Communists, in the immediate future, at least.

And so it turned out to be.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. But the Communist Party does not hesitate to take advantage of a person's thinking, even though he is not a Communist, if it is in line with their philosophy.

Mr. BUDENZ. Oh, yes. They have referred to many people.

But in this case, this was an official act demoting a Communist leader and, in addition, was quoting a non-Communist leader as having clearer thoughts on the questions from the Communist viewpoint than the Communist leader.

That, I state, is where the precedent is remarkable, and it was immediately seized upon in the Politburo discussions and acted upon, as history shows, in the fact that they understood that Mr. Wallace was destined to be the leading united front figure for the Communists before the American people, during that period.

Senator FERGUSON. I would just go back now to the first part that I asked about.

Again, you have testified before this committee and gave your reasons this morning for your belief that your testimony was true and accurate, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Do you now again say that it was?

Mr. BUDENZ. I say it with more assurance than ever, because these documents I presented, as I have said, are only part of what could have been presented to this committee, and they confirm my contention, which was that the Communist Party Politburo, from its vantage point, thought that the Wallace Mission to Soviet Asia and China was being properly guided and would end in the way they wished it would end.

We have to appreciate what that objective of theirs was, knowing their objective during that particular period of time.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you feel their objective was carried out?

Mr. BUDENZ. Absolutely, it was carried out.

In addition to that, this is demonstrated by the Communist attitude toward Mr. Wallace. The Communists are not modest people who shrink before public personalities. If they disagree with someone they attack him, and very vigorously.

In this case, we have a rising crescendo of commendation for Mr. Wallace, up to the Duclos article.

Senator FERGUSON. You come back to the proposition, then, that the cables and the report to the President, that is now before you, were not adverse to the Communist line at the time they were written?

Mr. BUDENZ. They were certainly not adverse; they were helpful to the Communist line at the time they were written, for example, where it says that—I don't want to go too far afield, but where it says that Chiang Kai-shek can only be viewed as a short-term investment.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we addressed ourselves only to the Kunming cables because they are the only issues before this committee.

Mr. SOURWINE. There has been a good deal of discussion about that, and the connotation makes it appear that Mr. Budenz is testifying that the Communists were approving Mr. Wallace in spite of the Kunming cables and therefore the Communists concurred in the Kunming cables, but I do not think we have any testimony that the Communists knew anything about that.

How about that, Mr. Budenz?

Digitized by Google

Mr. BUDENZ. To my knowledge, there was no discussion in the Politburo cables, or any official report of Mr. Wallace.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any knowledge that the Communist leaders knew anything about those reports?

Mr. BUDENZ. I know that they knew Mr. Wallace's attitude. They discussed it, and it was in accordance with these cables.

That is to say, they knew that Mr. Wallace stood for Soviet-Chinese close relations, and that he also stood for a criticism of Chiang Kai-shek as ineffective and inefficient.

I said they had a remarkable knowledge of what later develops appeared apparently in these cables.

Senator FERGUSON. I agree with you, Mr. Sourwine, that there is no evidence in the record that shows that the Communist Party knew of the contents of the cables or the report to the President.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been testified to on 2 occasions now.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Senator FERGUSON. I was directing my questions to what the cables show now and his opinion on them in the light of his knowledge of the Communist line as of the date they were written.

Mr. BUDENZ. And I so addressed myself to the question.

Senator FERGUSON. And you understood my question?

Mr. BUDENZ. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there is no indication whatever that John Carter Vincent concurred in the so-called Wallace report, as opposed to the Kunming cables, I suggest that we not accept Mr. Budenz's testimony at this time on that report.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you made yourself clear so that you know what you have?

Senator FERGUSON. I think, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of Mr. Budenz's coming here was to be sure the record was complete on the score of his testimony.

Since the record is irrelevant on that point, I think we would be going too far afield in our inquiry on the Institute of Pacific Relations if we went into that. So that is all we have on that score, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the witness to be excused indefinitely, or is he to be held under subpena?

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, he has agreed to have an executive session with the committee on another matter we have under inquiry. That will be the next assignment for the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

The committee will stand in recess until tomorrow morning at 10:30.

(Thereupon, at 11:50 a. m., the hearing was recessed, to reconvene at 10:30 a. m., Saturday, October 6 ,1951.)

Digitized by Google

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10 a. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. Pat McCarran (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Wiley, Ferguson, and Watkins.

Also present: Senator Knowland; J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel, Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel, and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

The record discloses that Governor Stassen wired the chairman requesting an opportunity to return before the committee. The chairman replied to his wire that if it was satisfactory he might appear this Saturday morning, to which he replied it was satisfactory and he would appear.

The governor is still under oath so far as presenting his testimony to this committee is concerned. If there is any question as to that, he will be sworn again.

Mr. STASSEN. I might as well be sworn again so there will not be any question.

The CHAIRMAN. You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the Committee on the Judiciary, of the United States Senate, will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. STASSEN. I do.

TESTIMONY OF HAROLD E. STASSEN, PRESIDENT, UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, you have requested that the record will show the two letters that you sent yesterday pursuant to the decision of the committee after yesterday's session. They are now in the possession of Mr. Mandel.

Will you read those into the record?

Senator FERGUSON. What replies have we had?

Mr. MORRIS. They only went out late yesterday.

Senator FERGUSON. If it were possible this morning to call up the State Department, Mr. Chairman, and see whether or not we can get all of the minutes this morning in compliance with your letter, it would allow the governor to have an opportunity to see them.

Digitized by Google

I wonder whether that could be done.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know. I would make a guess that this being Saturday morning you would not get very much.

Senator FERGUSON. Would it be possible to try?

The CHAIRMAN. I would not hesitate to try; no.

Read these into the record.

Mr. MANDEL. October 5, 1951:

Hon. DEAN ACHESON,
Secretary of State.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have your letter of September 12, 1951, in connection of the State Department round-table conference of October 6, 7, and 8, 1949.

In that letter you state that you would not make the transcript available because you wish to honor a commitment made to the participants and not make their remarks public.

In view of the extensive comments made concerning the remarks of the participants, I write this to renew my request that the transcript be made available to the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate.

Very sincerely yours,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

OCTOBER 5, 1951.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There was testimony before the Internal Security Subcommittee today that a report was made by a Naval Intelligence officer, reporting that John Carter Vincent was a member of the Communist Party. The estimated date of the report is sometime during the summer of 1950.

The source of that information was Mr. Louis Budenz who testified today before the Internal Security Subcommittee.

The committee decided today that it would like to have this report in its record. Inasmuch as there is no security involved because the source of the information has publicly testified to the fact of his reporting, it is requested that this report be made available to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

The report went through the district intelligence office of the Third Naval District.

Sincerely yours,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I am now sending a communication to the State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may both of those letters be made part of the official record?

The CHAIRMAN. They will.

(Documents referred to and read in full were marked "Exhibit Nos. 319 and 320," and filed for the record.)

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Governor Stassen.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, subsequent to your testimony here before this committee last Monday, have you learned anything more, any more facts, that would be relevant to our inquiry?

Mr. STASSEN. I have, Mr. Morris and Senator McCarran, and before proceeding, I would like, with your permission, to say again that I appear following through from the earlier hearing in which I was subpenaed that day, and I do not appear to make any charges against anyone nor to give any clearance to anyone.

I appear to answer your questions and to directly and simply state facts.

I feel, as I said then, it is your province to form opinions and to reach conclusions.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Morris and Senator, following my appearance on Monday, my attention was called to a State Department denial of certain important aspects of my testimony.

Starting in on that question, I might refer back to the transcript of what I said on Monday. I have in my hand the official transcript of the committee in which you say:

Will you tell us what he told you about it?

That is with reference to Senator Arthur Vandenberg.

I might further indicate, as you are aware, this recollection developed in the course of my testimony. This was not something on which I had prepared my advance memorandum, nor did I have any documents with me. It developed as you explored further the consequences of my first testimony which I did have outlined and prepared.

So this is what I then testified when I said:

When I saw Senator Vandenberg, for whom, as you know, I have the highest regard, for the last time in his home in Grand Rapids, Mich., in November of 1950, just prior to my last trip through Asia and round the world, he told me of a White House conference on this question of stopping supplies for Chiang Kai-shek.

You said:

Will you develop that for us, if there is any more to develop?

I said:

Senator Vandenberg told me in this conference he was called into, which he said was the only conference he had been called into on Asia policy, it was there proposed by Secretary Acheson and Dr. Jessup to the President that the supplies which were then being loaded in ships in Hawaii and San Francisco for the Chiang Kai-shek government, be dramatically stopped as a move toward world peace. That is, all armaments should be immediately cut off from the Chinese Nationalists and the ships that were then on the way and then being loaded—as I recall, he said there were five such ships that would be carrying supplies to the Chinese Nationalists—they should all be stopped in a dramatic and direct announcement to stop the supplies that were continuing the internal war in China; that he then vigorously opposed and analyzed it, and that after discussion with members of the Cabinet who were present, the President decided not to go ahead with the recommendation of Secretary Acheson and Dr. Jessup in view of Senator Vandenberg's statement he would publicly oppose it and he would certainly get a majority of the United States Senate to join with him in the opposition to that policy.

That is the essential part of that testimony.

The next day in my office in Philadelphia a representative of the United Press brought from the ticker a release ticked out of Washington, which I will now present for this record and in referring to it, it states that the State Department said Stassen's memory was playing him tricks.

It says that neither Acheson nor Jessup had recollection of such a meeting and it said further that there has never been any proposal to abolish aid to Nationalist China by Secretary Acheson, by Ambassador Jessup, or by any other authorized official of the State Department.

I present that for the record.

Senator FERGUSON. Did it continue with the other part of the release:

Insofar as military aid is concerned, this was covered by the President's statement of January 5, 1950, and exhaustively covered by Secretary Acheson and others during the course of the MacArthur hearings.

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. The ticker does not go to that extent, but I have subsequently obtained the official department of State press release No. 895.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will that ticker release be made part of the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. I will look it over while the witness is testifying.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 321" and is as follows:)

(Teletype copy, United Press story)

WITH JESSUP

WASHINGTON, October 3 (UP).—The State Department and far-eastern expert, Owen Lattimore, both have contradicted statements by Harold E. Stassen on China and Asian policies.

Lattimore accused the former Republican Governor of Minnesota of "fantastically inaccurate" statements. He asked the State Department to make public "all remarks made by me" at a 1949 conference on Asia.

The State Department said that Stassen's memory was playing him tricks. In considerable detail it disputed statements made by the now president of the University of Pennsylvania to Senate investigators on Monday.

Stassen testified that Lattimore gave the 1949 round-table conference 10 recommendations "best characterized as steps to hasten the victory of the Chinese Communists and liquidation of the Chinese Nationalists."

Stassen said the recommendations included United States recognition of Red China and turning over Formosa and Hong Kong to the Communists.

Lattimore denied last night that he urged such action. He said Stassen's testimony before the Senate Internal Security Committee gave "an entirely misleading impression" of the conference.

The State Department said Stassen's memory was "playing him tricks" when he testified that the late Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, Republican, Michigan, told him that Acheson and Ambassador at Large Phillip C. Jessup proposed cutting off United States aid to the Chinese Nationalists as a dramatic gesture to achieve world peace.

Stassen told the Senate committee that Vandenberg said the proposals were made at a White House conference. However, State Department press officer Michael J. McDermott said an "exhaustive search" of records failed to uncover any evidence of such a conference. Neither Acheson nor Jessup, McDermott said, had "recollection of such a meeting."

"There has never been any proposal to abolish aid to Nationalist China by Secretary Acheson, by Ambassador Jessup, or by any other authorized official of the State Department," McDermott said.

Referring to the 1949 conference on Asia, McDermott said the stenographic transcript of the meeting showed that 18 members of the panel spoke. He said Lattimore and Lawrence Rosinger, a member of the Institute of Pacific Relations, urged recognition of Red China, and that 11 others believed 'recognition could not be withheld for an indefinite period."

"Five, including Mr. Stassen, recommended that recognition not be considered at that time," McDermott said.

Rosinger, whom Stassen testified joined Lattimore in offering the 10-point program, said in New York last night that Stassen's statement was "simply untrue."

Mr. STASSEN. I will present this official release for a part of the record, but it says in it, and, of course, the press is familiar with it:

Secretary Acheson has no recollection of such a meeting. Ambassador Jessup has no recollection of such a meeting. We have checked the records at the White House thoroughly. We have checked the Secretary's records and find nothing.

Then it goes on:

Moreover, there has never been any proposal—

et cetera.

Digitized by Google

Senator, of course, when that ticker was brought to me I realized that I faced a very grave and very fundamental situation, a matter that I had testified to before this committee that was of great consequence, and it had been directly denied and denied from records.

Of course, that went in the press across the country. There was just a trace of double talk in the release and so what I immediately did at 10:15 a. m., on October 1, when this was brought to me, I said this to the press:

My attention has been called to the State Department's release of October 2. I will make a more complete statement later, but I immediately ask this direct specific question of Secretary Acheson:

"Do you deny that you were at the conference with President Truman and Senator Vandenberg in 1949, at which you recommended cutting off all military supplies for the China Nationalists and at which Senator Vandenberg opposed such action?"

The CHAIRMAN. That was a wire from you to the Secretary of State?

Mr. STASSEN. That was a statement to the press immediately when they brought this ticker to me.

Mr. MORRIS. Excuse me, Mr. Stassen.

Mr. Chairman, we have here the press release Mr. Stassen read from. Should that be made part of the public record?

The CHAIRMAN. I think this is a matter that Mr. Stassen has testified to and I do not know whether the whole wire should be made a part, or not.

I already put the ticker in. It illustrates the testimony of the witness.

In regard to the press release, I will pass on that later.

Mr. MORRIS. The last is the question addressed to Secretary Acheson. I think the testimony covers that completely.

The CHAIRMAN. It was a statement given to the press, according to the witness, in which it propounds a question through the press to the Secretary; is that correct?

Mr. STASSEN. That is correct.

Senator WATKINS. There would not be any necessity for putting that in the record. He has read it.

Mr. STASSEN. I read it. It is just there for reference.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you get an answer, a direct answer to this, Governor?

Mr. STASSEN. No, I have not received a direct answer to it. There is an indirect answer that I will refer to.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Governor.

Mr. STASSEN. Then, of course, realizing this was a grave situation, I immediately relived in my memory that conference with Senator Vandenberg in order that I might there explore for sources of confirmation and corroboration. At the same time I asked my secretary to look in our files with reference to the conference itself with Senator Vandenberg.

Since the basic statement that my memory was playing tricks was involved, I felt that was material. They imediately came back from the files with a copy of a telegram from Senator Vandenberg to me on November 17, 1950, which reads:

Anent your visit tomorrow, are you arriving by plane? Happy to have my chauffeur meet you if you will advise the hour.

Sincerely,

A. H. VANDENBERG.

Digitized by Google

This is sent from Grand Rapids.

My secretary also produced the stub of my airline ticket which shows my routing to Minneapolis, to Milwaukee, to Grand Rapids, to Ypsilanti, to Pittsburgh, and back to Philadelphia, and also a copy of the letter that I wrote then a week later to Senator Vandenberg saying:

I deeply appreciate having had the opportunity to see you. My visits with you are always stimulating and inspiring.

I will look forward to seeing you again upon my return from Asia.

My very best wishes.

That is a comparatively minor point, but it definitely corroborates what my memory was, that I had seen him in November of 1950, the exact date being November 18, 1950.

I present these three things for the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I think they may go in the record.

(Documents referred to and read in full were marked "Exhibits Nos. 322, 323, and 324," and filed for the record.)

Mr. STASSEN. Then as I reflected and relived in my memory this conference, I recall Senator Vandenberg had said that it had been subsequent to some serious reverses of Chiang's forces and that it was at a time when an effort was underway to establish unity between the China Nationalists and the China Communists in the war.

Therefore, referring out our own chronological memorandum regarding the development of the war, I placed that as being in February, March, or April of 1949, although I emphasize Senator Vandenberg had not told me when it was, but he said it was in 1949, as I testified here.

Then, in reflecting, I further recalled he said that the meeting had documentation; that is, that when he arrived for the meeting some of the members of the Cabinet were present; that there was a formal presentation of the proposal; that the documents were ready to put it into effect, and there was documentation to support it.

With these two clues, I then said to my secretary, "Locate Arthur Vandenberg's son, Arthur Vandenberg, Jr., and get him on the phone."

In due course, perhaps an hour, my secretary said that Arthur Vandenberg, Jr., was in South America.

I said, "Try to reach him there."

Then he came back and said they had located him at another place. He had just recently returned and that he was on the phone.

So I told him of my testimony here; told him that it would involve, as I saw it, February, March, or April of 1949, and asked him if Senator Vandenberg had any diary or memorandum that might bear on this situation.

Within a short time he advised me that the Senator did have such a diary; that the date was February 5, 1949; that the conference was held in the White House; that the essential facts that I testified to could be corroborated in Senator Vandenberg's diary.

He told me further that Senator Vandenberg's diary was kept by the Senator himself, typing it on his own typewriter with his own hands, following conferences such as this, and that the specific reference for February 5, 1949, is there in these documents; that it is there in Senator Vandenberg's own typing, and that he had the document.

Digitized by Google

I then asked as to getting it, or getting a copy of it. He said that he has sold the rights on it to the New York Herald Tribune and to the Houghton, Mifflin Book Co. and that, therefore, it would be necessary that it be subpenaed to produce it.

The CHAIRMAN. That would have to be subpenaed?

Mr. STASSEN. It would be necessary, as I see it, to subpena Arthur Vandenberg, Jr., the syndicate editor of the New York Herald Tribune, and the book editor of the Houghton, Mifflin Co., and ask that they produce the Vandenberg diary for February 5, 1949.

Senator FERGUSON. Then the owners have the copyright.

The CHAIRMAN. I was wondering who had possession. Whoever has possession should be subpenaed.

Mr. STASSEN. I assume it is a situation in which Arthur Vandenberg, Jr., is working on the papers, but they are in the legal custody of those who have purchased the rights. So I think the subpena must be joint. I would request that it be done and that this committee and the public might have that vital corroborating evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is Mr. Arthur Vandenberg, Jr.?

Mr. STASSEN. He is in New York City.

Let me consult my secretary.

My secretary will check and get the phone number at which he is finally reached and locate him.

Mr. SOURWINE. The address would be more helpful.

Mr. STASSEN. He undoubtedly could also be reached through the New York Herald Tribune syndicate editor because they are in active work on the diary.

My secretary will get the exact location where he can be reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter of issuing a subpena will be submitted to the committee.

Senator FERGUSON. Governor, the other day you testified I think in the record that Senator Vandenberg had stated as part of the conversation that this was the only consultation he had on the Far East.

Do you recall that?

Mr. STASSEN. On Asiatic policy.

Here are my exact records and this is what he told me. Senator Vandenberg told me in this conference that he was called into, which he said was the only conference he had been called into on Asiatic policy,

It was there proposed by Secretary Acheson—

et cetera.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, do you care to make a ruling with regard to the Department of State release to which Mr. Stassen referred?

The CHAIRMAN. I think the release should be submitted. I think the members of the committee will agree it should go in the record.

Senator FERGUSON. I see one thing in the release that I would like to say something on.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me rule on this first.

Senator WATKINS. I think it ought to be in.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record.

Digitized by Google

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 325," and is as follows:)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE—FOR THE PRESS—NO. 895, OCTOBER 2, 1951

ORAL STATEMENT BY MICHAEL J. M'DERMOTT REGARDING TESTIMONY OF MR. HAROLD STASSEN ON OCTOBER 1 BEFORE THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERNAL SECURITY

I have been getting questions all day about the testimony yesterday of Mr. Harold Stassen and his allegations, which summarized were—

1. That Secretary Acheson, according to the late Senator Vandenburg, proposed in November 1950 the cutting off of aid to Nationalist China in a dramatic move "toward world peace."

2. That at the October 1949 round table, Lattimore and Lawrence K. Rosinger headed the "prevailing group" which recommended the recognition of Red China at an early date and other moves favorable to Red China.

3. That the State Department tended to "implement" the "Lattimore-Rosinger recommendations" and to ignore those presented by Mr. Stassen and others.

4. That Ambassador Jessup, who presided at some of the meeting, told Mr. Stassen, who appealed to him against the "recommendations" of the "prevailing group," that there was "greater logic" on the Lattimore side.

In taking them up, one by one, with respect to the allegations of Mr. Stassen that Secretary Acheson and Ambassador Jessup at a White House meeting proposed the cutting off of aid to Nationalist China in a dramatic move "toward world peace," I fear that Mr. Stassen's memory is playing him tricks. An exhaustive search of the records has been made and no record can be found of any such meeting ever having taken place. Secretary Acheson has no recollection of such a meeting. Ambassador Jessup has no recollection of such a meeting. We have checked the records at the White House thoroughly. We have checked the Secretary's records and find nothing.

Moreover, there has never been any proposal to abolish economic aid to Nationalist China by Secretary Acheson, by Ambassador Jessup, or by any other authorized official of the Department of State. Insofar as military aid is concerned, this was covered by the President's statement of January 5, 1950, and exhaustively covered by Secretary Acheson and others during the course of the MacArthur hearings.

2. About the "prevailing group": While the Department must, in fairness to the confidential pledge given participants in the round table, adhere to that pledge, it can state—following a close study of the stenographic transcript—the following:

Eighteen members of the panel spoke on the subject of recognition of Red China. Of these, two—Messrs. Lattimore and Rosinger—recommended that recognition be extended to Red China. The consensus among 11 others was that the situation obtaining at that time (1949) was such that recognition could not be withheld for an indefinite period. In general, they expressed the view that this was largely a matter of timing in the light of future developments. Five, including Mr. Stassen, recommended that recognition not be considered at that time.

3. Mr. Stassen's allegation that the Department tended to implement what he (Stassen) refers to as "the Lattimore-Rosinger recommendations" not only is not confirmed by history, but history proves that the policy of the Department tended in the opposite direction. One may quibble over impressions, but there is no quibbling with facts. These are—

The United States has not recognized Red China. As you gentlemen know, the Secretary at various press conferences stated that nothing would be done with respect to that question without full consultation with the appropriate committees of the Congress. Similar assurances were given the committees themselves.

Mr. Stassen admits that the point in the "Lattimore-Rosinger proposal" regarding United States recognition of the Chinese Communists was not implemented. He charges that a "collateral Lattimore proposal" that this country encourage the British and others to give that recognition was carried out. This charge is absolutely without basis in fact. The record shows that this Government not only made it clear to the Britsh Government that in the United States view recognition of Communist China was unwise and could not be given consideration by the United States, but it repeatedly instructed United States diplomatic representatives abroad to make this view known to governments to which they were accredited.

Digitized by Google

Another point which, according to Mr. Stassen, was proposed by Lattimore and Rosinger and, by implication, adopted by the State Departmen was that "it should be United States policy to turn Formosa over to the Chinese Communist Government." It has at no time been United States policy to turn Formosa over to the Chinese Communists and the Department of State has at no time suggested or advocated this policy.

Here again the facts of history refute such an implication. As the Secretary and others pointed out in great detail during the course of the MacArthur hearings the policy of this Government was to prevent the fall of Formosa to the Chinese Reds. The decision of the Joint Chiefs, however, was that no United States forces should be used in this undertaking and that, therefore, the implementation of this policy must rest upon diplomatic and economic means.

Under the circumstances set forth by the President in his statement of January 5, 1950, and subsequently set forth in greater detail, a decision was made not to provide additional military aid to Formosa. The accent there is on the word "additional"—not to provide additional military aid to Formosa. However, existing programs of military assistance were continued to completion and the press carried stories and photographs of shipments of military supplies under existing programs shortly following the President's statement.

Until the assignment of the Seventh Fleet to the protection of Formosa, and the provision of additional military aid to Nationalist forces on the island, the policy of preventing the fall of Formosa to Communist hands was pressed with vigor through diplomatic and economic means. The indisputable facts are that Formosa remains in Nationalist hands and that the United States lent diplomatic economic, and military aid in assuring the retention of the island in Nationalist hands.

Nor is there any basis in fact for the implication by Mr. Stassen that "it should be United States policy to permit the Chinese Communists to take Hong Kong if they insisted." I can state categorically that this has never been United States policy, and the State Department has never advocated that it should be.

Now, with respect to "breaking the Chinese blockade," I think you gentlemen are fully aware of our position on that. The port-closure orders of the Chinese National Government did not meet the legal requirements of a blockade and the United States did not recognize it as such. Moreover, the Chinese National Government itself did not claim that it constituted a blockade. The United States Government, in accordance with its obligations to protect American shipping, protested to the Chinese Government certain cases in which it considered these rights violated.

The United States Government, in accordance with its obligations to protect American shipping, protested to the Chinese Government certain cases in which it considered these rights violated. However, and I should like particularly to emphasize this: The United States Government repeatedly warned American masters of the danger of entering closed ports and in practice followed the general policy of doing nothing to lessen the effectiveness of the Chinese Government's port-closure order.

4. That Ambassador Jessup, who presided at some of the meetings, told Stassen, who appealed to him against the recommendations of the "prevailing group," that there was "greater logic" on the Lattimore side; with respect to that, Ambassador Jessup has no recollection of ever having made any such remark. When questioned about this, Ambassador Jessup pointed out that the purpose of the round table was to get the independent views of a well-rounded group of consultants with varying points of view. Accordingly he did not consider it appropriate, nor did he express any opinions, regarding the views expressed by individual members of the panel.

Mr. Stassen, by implication, alleges the adoption by the Department of other points which he described as the Lattimore "proposals." These were that Asia should be considered as a long-term problem to be studied and deferred, that priority be given to Europe, and that aid to Asia not be started until after long and careful study.

The record is clear that the United States has exercised and is now exercising through the Marshall plan, NATO, and the European defense force its leadership in welding the forces of free Europe against the threat of Soviet aggression. But that does not for an instant mean that it has adopted a policy of deferring coming to grips with the problems of Asia. You will recall the efforts of the administration, and particularly of Secretary Acheson, in getting through the Congress the aid bill for Korea. You will recall that that bill was defeated in the House over the vehement protestations of the Secretary. It was subsequently passed. You will recall the Griffin mission to the Philippines and southeast Asia in the spring of 1950 in preparation for a program of economic aid to the countries of that area. You will also recall the MDAP mission to the same area in the summer of 1950.

Digitized by Google

Again Mr. Stassen implies that United States policy was based on the assumption that the Russian Communists were not as aggressive as Hitler and would not be apt to take direct military action to expand their empire. This implication is refuted by the facts. The Marshall plan, the NATO, MDAP, the security treaties with the Philippines, with Australia and New Zealand, the bilateral agreement with Japan, all go to show the concern of this country against the threat of Communist subversion and actual hostilities. Moreover, it should be clear to all that this Government recognized and now recognizes that the fifth-column activities of the Communists were and are more menacing than the fifth column activities of the Nazis.

Finally, it is obviously not appropriate for me to comment on any implications of how this Government should regard the Prime Minister of India. Suffice it to say that the policy of this Government with respect to India is well known.

Senator FERGUSON (reading):

Insofar as military aid is concerned, this was covered by the President's statement of January 5, 1950, and exhaustively covered by Secretary Acheson and others during the course of the MacArthur hearings.

I would like to have the committee get in touch by subpena, or otherwise, with the State Department to get a copy of the message that was sent to the Nationalist Government in the month of October 1949. It was along the line that no further military aid would be given to the Nationalist Government so far as Formosa was concerned, and that message was sent to the Nationalist Government.

I can now state upon the record that I first learned of that message from the Vice President of China in the month of November 1949. He described it to me and the contents in Hong Kong in a hospital room where he was ill. I then saw a copy of that message in the Embassy office in Hong Kong.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean our embassy?

Senator FERGUSON. The American Embassy in Hong Kong.

So that it is in conflict with this.

The CHAIRMAN. You are requesting a subpena be issued for this document?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes. This press release says the only thing done in relation to that was in January 1950.

If Louis Johnson, the Secretary of Defense, kept notes, a report was made of this document and this meeting with the Vice President when I returned from my trip from the Far East.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been suggested we ask the State Department for the delivery of a foreign affairs document. I think, Senator, we had better take it up in executive session. It will be the intent of the chairman to issue the subpena if it can be issued properly. If not, we can get at it some other way.

Senator FERGUSON. I just want the record to show information concerning the press release.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, have you any further information with respect to that particular conference which you learned about from the late Senator Vandenberg?

Mr. STASSEN. I have further corrobration which I will now develop.

Digitized by Google

Might I first state that the essential points of that conference, as I see it, are these, and I give them because I believe our issue here concerned is much broader than any one individual or any two individuals.

We are dealing with grave questions of policy of our country with relationship to 300 millions of people and with relation to the whole world.

So, I think the essential points of the February 5, 1949, meeting are these:

Was the meeting held?

Was it conducted by the President?

The CHAIRMAN. You are referring to the meeting that is related to have taken place in the White House?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Executive Office?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Was it conducted by the President?

In that respect, I might say the President is reported to have said in his press conference the day before yesterday he had no recollection of such a meeting.

Third, at that meeting was the proposal made that all further military aid to the Chinese Nationalists be stopped?

Four. Did Senator Vandenberg there oppose the proposal with vigor?

Five. Was the proposal then not ordered?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a little bit greater significance than that. The question involved here is: Who proposed it and what movement was behind the proposition?

Mr. STASSEN. I will now develop that, Senator.

I think further in understanding it it is important to recall the situation as of February 5, 1949. In this respect, Senator, Mr. Robert Matteson, of my staff, has prepared a rough map of the situation in China on February 5, 1949.

I would like permission now to present it before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. STASSEN. I think we might first present it on the table and then put it up on the easel.

I now have before you a map of Greater China and the lines of red and blue alongside are approximately the lines of the status between the Chinese Communists and the Chinese Nationalists in February 5, 1949, the date of the White House conference.

You will note that the line here is north of the Yangtze River. They had not yet driven down to the Yangtze River.

You will note that the line cups up here across the Yellow River near Kuei-sui and takes in only the border Provinces here.

So all of south China, a part of the central Yangtze Basin, all of west China, Singkiang, Chinghai, all of those that border on Tibet specifically were still in Nationalists hands.

This was the situation on the night of February 5, 1949, when the White House conference was held. That means that about two-thirds of the peoples of China were in Nationalist hands and about one-third were in Communist hands.

The CHAIRMAN. I think, gentlemen of the committee, that the map used by the witness at this time is of great importance and if it is pos sible to have the map reduced so that it may become a part of the record of this committee, the Chairman intends to have it inserted in the record.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. If it is necessary to have a motion, I so move that it be incorporated into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know whether we can have it done, or not, but I think that we can.

(Map referred to is Appendix I and faces p. 1250.)

Mr. STASSEN. As I indicated, I recall Senator Vandenberg telling me there was documentation that the proposal was ready for action if he approved that night. So, therefore, as I sought avenues of corroboration, again on that day still facing the situation of the denial that even such conference had taken place, I thought of Secretary Forrestal still having been Secretary of Defense. I thought of the Forrestal Diaries. So then I obtained through a book reviewer the information of the editor of the Forrestal Diaries. I phoned Walter Millis, got him on the phone in New York City. I said to him that I was on the trail of documentation with reference to stopping of aid of a military nature to Nationalist China in late 1948 or early 1949, and did the Forrestal Diaries, which are not yet published, give any light on that matter, and could I see the Forrestal Diaries.

He told me the diaries themselves had been returned to the White House and are in the custody of the White House under the original arrangement of the estate and the White House and the screening for security.

He said he had gone through them and from them had prepared the book, which would soon be out, about a week, I believe he said.

Then he read to me certain passages he had reduced into the book from the diaries themselves.

I think that about carries me through Tuesday, then up to the point where the State Department said they were making a new search.

Then came their subsequent partial admission that I was right about the conference; that it had occurred on February 5, 1949, and I do not have a copy of that release, but that then indicated that the presentation of the proposal was made by a General Barr and seemed to endeavor to place—I will let the release speak for itself.

I would ask the committee to secure, or my staff will secure—we have not been able to yet—the transcript of that next State Department conference with reference to Barr.

I see that I have an unofficial report of it. I had a person take it down.

The CHAIRMAN. We will suspend at this time for a few minutes. I have a call from the State Department.

(A short recess was taken.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Pursuant to the direction of the committee, the chairman has just talked with Secretary Webb in the Department of State. He stated that in keeping with my letter and with an idea of whether or not there would be a compliance wtih my request, a conference was held yesterday in the State Department and that certain individuals of the State Department were directed to communicate with the several people who had been present at the conference to determine whether or not they would consent to have the minutes of that conference released, and that they would let me know either this afternoon or Monday.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, two people have stated in the press, Rosinger and Lattimore, as to their statements, and Lattimore specifically, that he wanted his released. So I think then there should be no question. If anybody objects, at least we ought to have Rosinger's and Lattimore's statements.

I think it would be advisable that we try to have that accomplished this morning so that the Governor would have those releases before him so that we may complete the hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. I take it, Senator, from the statement made to me by Mr. Webb just now, it would be impossible to get a conference with those who have the matter in hand down there today, this being Saturday, but that they will call me either this afternoon or Monday and let me know.

I want to say that statement to me by Mr. Webb over the phone was confirmed by another individual from the State Department earlier this morning.

In other words, to make it specific, the State Department is now endeavoring to get a release from the various participants in that conference.

Senator FERGUSON. That is the conference of October 6, 7, and 8, 1949?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, the conference to which Governor Stassen has testified.

I told Mr. Webb that the Governor was here before the committee and testifying, and that we would be glad to have the minutes if we could get them.

You may proceed.

Mr. STASSEN. Senator, my secretary has now brought in the information in regard to Mr. Arthur Vandenberg, Jr's. address. His office is 5101–30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York. His private office phone is Judson 6–2560. His home telephone is LeHigh 46–689.

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask the committee to pause just a minute until I take another phone call.

(A short recess was taken.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

You may proceed.

Mr. STASSEN. Senator, the press and radio news comments that I last referred to was on October 3, 1951. This is now the follow-up from the State Department.

I would like to file later when we can get a hold of one, an official copy of it. I have an unofficial transcript which does indicate that the press stated to Mr. McDemott that he still had not answered my question; that he had partially reversed himself, but had not answered my specific question of Secretary Acheson.

Following, as I indicated, my search for corroboration in the grave picture I found myself, and recalling Senator Vandenberg's reference to the documentation and the preparation for an order to carry out the recommendation, and getting a hold of the Forrestal Diaries, having followed that lead as I earlier indicated to you, I found that on page 534 of the book "The Forrestal Diaries," which has not yet been released—it is to be out some time in a week, edited by Walter

Digitized by Google

Millis with the collaboration of E. S. Duffield, issued by the Viking Press, there is a significant item.

Mr. Chairman, I fear you should have this item. I wired the publisher for permission to present it, notwithstanding copyright.

The publisher phoned and said he had no objection, but that it must be cleared with the newspaper syndicate. So I called the New York Herald Tribune Newspaper Syndicate. They advised that the rights had been sold to 109 newspapers. Obviously I could not get permission in 24 hours from 109 newspapers to release the copyright.

Of course, the book is almost off. It is to be out in a week. I got a hold of a review copy.

Now I am under subpena and I am at this committee's command. I have ready to present to you a photostatic copy of page 534 of the Forrestal Diaries and then certain other pages as we go along.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I have a copy which I have sent for. If there is any question about the use of this copy that came from a reviewer that may feel he did not want this copy used, I would be glad to see that my copy is made part of the record, this page and these photostats.

Mr. STASSEN. I think the legal situation is clearly these newspapers would give their consent, and I think we can assume it.

But I think the committee should specifically request me to present it.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, what is your pleasure?

Senator FERGUSON. My copy has no strings on it.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not see why any copy should have.

Senator FERGUSON. I do not, either. It may be the reviewer.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand, the reviewer gives his consent.

Mr. STASSEN. The publisher, provided you clear it with the newspapers. I could have gotten that if it had not been sold to 109 newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Senator from Michigan has it, that makes 110 newspapers.

Senator WATKINS. Probably some more Senators have copies.

Senator FERGUSON. I move we go ahead with this photostatic copy.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

You may proceed.

Mr. STASSEN. I then proceed with a copy of page 534 of the Forrestal Diaries.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Ferguson, my remark might have appeared to be offensive, but I did not mean it that way. I meant it to be a compliment.

Senator FERGUSON. I did not take any offense at it.

Mr. STASSEN. Senator, in the middle of page 534 of the Forrestal Diaries in the part that is underlined by me, we read this:

> Marshall read a paper from some office people in the State Department who advocated going to the American public now to explain the inadequacies of the Chiang Kai-shek government. This paper stated we had two alternatives: (1) To follow this course. or (2) to continue to do all we can to support Chiang and accept the embarrassment that will accompany the disintegration of China.
>
> With the President's approval, Marshall said that he felt that he would reject his department's paper advocating criticism of Chiang. He felt that this would administer the final coup de grâce to Chiang's government, and this, he felt, we could not do.

This is of the date of November 26, 1948.

Digitized by Google

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a corroboration of the existence of documentation on this subject and the other stories and Senator Vandenberg's report indicate that this matter, subsequent to Secretary Marshall leaving the State Department, then was reactivated, came up before the National Security Council and came from there to the conference on February 5, 1949.

Secretary Marshall left the State Department on January 21, 1949.

In other words, it is about 7 weeks after Senator Marshall rejects this recommendation. Then it is about 3 weeks later under Secretary Acheson that the February 5, 1949, conference is held.

Then in the surrounding circumstance there is another important matter. That deals with the Secretary of Defense.

The CHAIRMAN. Right at that point, Governor Stassen, the significant part of this is the first three lines:

Marshall read a paper from some office people in the State Department who advocated going to the American public now to explain the inadequacies of the Chiang Kai-shek government.

It seems to me those lines are the significant lines as far as corroboration is concerned.

Mr. STASSEN. Yes. Then it is very significant that Secretary Marshall rejected that proposal and that he characterized it—you understand these are the words written in his diary by Mr. James Forrestal at the time it happened and are now in the diary in the White House.

In other words, I should explain that the format of this book, the matter that is in the size type such as I have outlined is the matter that is in Mr. Forrestal's words in his diary. The smaller type which you see below is Mr. Walter Millis' comment, and is not from the Forrestal diaries themselves.

Then you go down below to further explain a conversation—"The President." That, again, is Mr. Forrestal's words for his diaries.

A further relevant and corroborating fact affecting this entire situation is found on page 532 and page 533 of the book, the Forrestal Diaries, and I now present those two pages under the same understanding of the previous pages.

On these pages you have the reports of these reverses that Chiang Kai-shek had suffered which Senator Vandenberg had told me had been in that conference.

Then you have the reference to the Cabinet meeting on November 26, 1948.

At the bottom of the page you have this:

Marshall referred to the suggestion that I—and that is Forrestal—

made to Lovett on Thursday evening that we explore the reactivation of the AVG (American Volunteer Group, the Flying Tigers, who provided air support for the Chinese armies prior to Pearl Harbor), and that we get a formal invitation from the Chinese Government to remain at Tsing Tao. Marshall said the latter would be easy to get, but he was fearful of the conditions that might accompany such an invitation.

Now, then, Senator, we have this situation established, but before I say that, let me further refer to Secretary Forrestal.

Secretary Forrestal was notified by the President that his resignation was going to be accepted on January 28, 1949. He actually then stepped out of office on March 28, 1949, at a brief ceremony in the central court of the Pentagon Building.

Digitized by Google

Now, we have established I believe beyond denial by anyone that on the 5th of February 1949 the Secretary of Defense was opposed to any stoppage of aid to China Nationalists and was, in fact, exploring in that period reactivation of greater aid in some such steps of even going to the extent of reactivating the Flying Tigers of General Chennault.

Mr. MORRIS. The Secretary of Defense being Mr. Forrestal?

Mr. STASSEN. Mr. Forrestal through this period.

We have further established that Under Secretary Lovett was conferring with him in a similar vein and that Under Secretary Lovett of the State Department had left the State Department at about the same time that General Marshall left the State Department, he then being succeeded by Mr. Webb as Under Secretary.

It is thus a simple fact that a proposal to stop military aid to the China Nationalists would not have been presented to Senator Vandenberg and the President in form ready for order unless it had the support of and was presented by the State Department .

I think that is elementary in the governmental structure of our country.

Senator FERGUSON. Governor, is it not a fact that Secretary of State Acheson became Secretary on January 11, 1949, which was right before this meeting?

Mr. STASSEN. I think it was the 21st. It is right in there.

Senator FERGUSON. In January of 1949?

Mr. STASSEN. He might be announced on the 11th and sworn in on the 21st, or something of that kind.

Senator FERGUSON. So, this relation to Secretary Marshall, he was then Secretary of State?

Mr. STASSEN. Secretary Marshall was Secretary of State in November of 1948 when he turned down this recommendation.

I respectfully request the committee to request of the President the minutes of the February 5, 1949, conference held in the White House.

I further request this committee to request of the President the minutes insofar as they refer to China, the minutes of the November 26, 1948, meeting of the Cabinet.

I respectfully request the committee to request of the National Security Council the minutes of the meeting between November 26, 1948, and February 5, 1949, at which the documentation that was presented on February 5, 1949, was acted on.

I further respectfully request of the committee that they request of the National Security Council, of the State Department, and of the President, copies of the documentation that was prepared in connection with the Cabinet meeting of November 26, 1948, affecting China and the Vandenberg conference of February 5, 1949.

The CHAIRMAN. Your request in that respect will be made before the committee in executive session, and the chairman will abide by the order of the committee.

Mr. STASSEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I further say, Mr. Chairman, that if it is your wish when those documents are produced, that I should return for further examination upon them, I would, of course, be at your command because of the double reason of the very great importance of this whole matter of policy, and because of the reason that I am now completely confident and I feel I have demonstrated that my testimony before this committee was exactly right and true, and that I have been wrongly assailed by the State Department as being a man whose memory plays him tricks.

Digitized by Google

The CHAIRMAN. I wish to say in that regard, so far as the Chairman is concerned, it would be my judgment that the request of the witness be carried out and that the request be made on the executive branch for the instruments suggested.

I, however, will submit the matter to my committee in executive session. I think the whole matter should be made clear to the American public. I do not think the State Department, or any other department, should deliberately accuse any witness before this committee of falsifying unless they know what they are talking about.

It looks to me in this instance they did not exactly know what they were talking about.

Senator FERGUSON. They should be willing to bring the evidence before the committee and show what the facts are.

The CHAIRMAN. In justice to the committee and justice to any witness, they should be perfectly willing to bring the matter before the committee. They should not brand a witness before this committee, or any committee as testifying falsely when, as a matter of fact, they have the facts and documents in their possession which would give them access to the truth.

Senator WATKINS. You have in mind bringing it before the full Judiciary Committee, or just this subcommittee?

The CHAIRMAN. This subcommittee is handling this matter.

Senator FERGUSON. Might we have an executive meeting at the close of this meeting?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

I would like to have some more members present, but it is all right. Those who are present will act on the matter.

You may proceed if you have anything further to state.

Mr. STASSEN. I do have further evidence, Senator. In fact, I am prepared to develop the evidence which I believe will convince any impartial person of the truth of everything I said to this committee on Monday.

Senator, the State Department release which is now in evidence endeavors to indicate that the references to recognition of Communist China in the October 1949 conference were rather incidental to a discussion of all of Asia policy.

I, of course, testified that there were many other points discussed, and I presented the 10 points that were there recommended by them and the 7 points concerning those that were associated with me, without any prearrangement whatsoever; but during the course of the discussion, I might say specifically for the record, that I did not confer in advance of that October 1949 conference with any of the members.

The CHAIRMAN. You made a statement in your testimony on Monday, Governor, that has lingered in my mind, as I recall it. I at that time intended to question you about it. My recollection is you stated that before that meeting certain briefing took place.

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you kindly develop that? Who did the briefing, and where, and what was done and said?

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. Yes. At the opening of the conference there was a briefing by Mr. Butterworth, who at that time had a responsible position in the State Department in the Asiatic Section. I testified on Monday with reference to his briefing, as follows:

On page 1999 of your own official transcript:

Mr. STASSEN. In the conference Mr. Butterworth of the State Department said that when the Communist Chinese crossed the Yangtze River, which as I recall would have been about April of 1949, that then this Government had approached these other governments as to their views about recognizing the Chinese Communists.

May I respectfully call your attention, Senator, to the fact that the reason the State Department has given for not releasing this transcript has been that nonofficials of the Government had been called in on a confidential basis for consultation.

Now, clearly, that reason then does not apply at all to what Mr. Butterworth said in his briefing. So that I would suggest, without waiting to find out whether 25 private citizens will all consent, those portions of the transcript that showed what Mr. Butterworth told that conference—he then being an official of the State Department; he now being an official of the State Department—would clearly not have any justification from being withheld from this committee or any other committee of the Congress.

Mr. Butterworth went at some length into the matter of recognition and the various theories of recognition. Mr. Kennan gave a broad briefing on the policy of the Soviet Union and their analysis of it, our own objectives.

An officer, whom I did not know and whose name I do not recall, gave a briefing on the then military situation, as he described it, in China.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a military officer?

Mr. STASSEN. He was presented to us as a military officer; yes.

As I recall it, he was a junior officer, or he might have been as much as a colonel. But I think he was of lower rank than a colonel.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was he in uniform, sir?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes; I did not know him. I do not recall that his name was mentioned or understood.

Then, after that briefing, the discussion opened and proceeded. So, there is a whole early part of this transcript in which there are no statements of any private citizens and to which, clearly, would not apply their own rule of withholding.

I think the only thing you will find in that early part of the transcript is my personal insistence that I be promised a copy of my own remarks before I would participate.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us make it clear that, from the beginning and during the briefings until the conclusion, a record was made?

Mr. STASSEN. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether a stenographic record was taken, Governor, of these briefings?

Mr. STASSEN. A stenotype was operating at all times on the table. In fact, the stenotypist was near my seat. I was a little bit to the head table side of center, and on Dr. Jessup's right I would say about four seats down on the right-hand side of the table, and General Marshall was on the other extreme end of the table just opposite Dr.

Digitized by Google

Jessup and Dr. Fosdick. The stenotypist was along about half way down the table, right up against the table, much as this young man has been here.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, there is some testimony by Professor Colegrove which bears on this point of briefing, and I think it might be appropriate at this time if we addressed a question or two to Governor Stassen on this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. During the open session of September 25, 1951, when Prof. Kenneth Colegrove was on the stand, the following colloquy took place:

Senator FERGUSON. I want to go back to this question of the experts being briefed at the meeting in the State Department. Was that briefing before you were asked to give your opinion?

Mr. COLEGROVE. It began with a briefing by George Kennan on the very first day, and the rest of it was interspersed. I was very much disappointed in the briefing by George Kennan. This was a conference upon the Far East, and George Kennan didn't tell us anything that we hadn't known or thought about for years and years and years. I thought George Kennan just wasted the time of the conference.

Senator FERGUSON. You got a kind of feeling that the briefing was to give you some propaganda to take back to the people?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I felt distinctly that the briefing by Cora Dubois was of that kind. The briefing done on the military situation by Colonel McCann didn't give us anything we had not already read in the New York Times.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you get an impression from this conference on the Far East, which you said was in your estimation propaganda, that it was the desire of the State Department to have a policy of great leniency at least toward the Communists in China?

Mr. COLEGROVE. The State Department didn't tip its hand in this respect. I indicated that Ambassador Jessup——

Senator FERGUSON. I am not talking about his action but the lady who briefed you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, I would like to have him conclude his sentence there. It would be interesting. You said "didn't tip its hand"?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Didn't tip its hand, and Ambassador Jessup is a very clever and able presiding officer. He didn't disclose his own views, but the briefing by Cora Dubois was a briefing very sympathetic toward the Communists.

Senator FERGUSON. Those were the kind of questions that were being brought up in the meeting?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know when her briefing took place?

Mr. COLEGROVE. I think her briefing took place in the second session.

Senator FERGUSON. When was the question discussed on the recognition of China by the United States?

Mr. COLEGROVE. Curiously enough, that was discussed in every session but particularly emphasized in what would be the second session.

Senator FERGUSON. How did this lady who briefed you stand on that question? Did she express herself?

Mr. COLEGROVE. She was talking only about southeast Asia and did not cover other subjects.

Mr. STASSEN. Mr. Morris, may I say, since you have read that testimony, that I do not associate myself with Dr. Colegrove's remarks about Mr. Kennan's briefing. In other words, I thought that Mr. Kennan's briefing was worth while. While I didn't agree with every particular of it, I thought it was a good briefing.

Also, I want to point out, in accordance with my previous testimony, I was not present on the second day when apparently Cora Dubois did her briefing. So I cannot comment upon that.

But I do want to make it clear that I am not adopting or associating myself with the words of Dr. Colegrove, one way or the other.

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. I do not know that he was criticizing what Mr. Kennan said, but he indicated here that he knew it.

Mr. STASSEN. I didn't want any inference to draw from the reading of the testimony.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think in the transcript, if we ever get it, there should be included the statements by Cora Dubois in connection with this testimony by Mr. Colegrove.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Governor, you may proceed. I think you stepped off your line a little.

Mr. STASSEN. That is right, Senator.

Senator, in this matter of what the nature of the discussion was on recognition and as to whether my description of it as having been the prevailing view that had developed under the leadership in the discussion of Mr. Owen Lattimore and Mr. Lawrence Rosinger, in the presentation to me of the transcript of my remarks there are a few instances in which there is some material of the transcript on the same pages stated by others, and it just so happens, as I reviewed this matter after the challenge by the State Department on Tuesday, that I found two significant examples of that.

I now present to you page D–6 of the official State Department transcript of this October 1949 conference.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a transcript of your own participation?

Mr. STASSEN. On the top three lines you will see three lines with a pencil mark drawn through them. That pencil line was drawn through by me when I asked my secretary then to run off just my own testimony. In other words, the top three lines are not my words. You read there:

* * * the conditions are that condition our foreign policy, so I doubt if there would be a very serious explosion upon recognition if that were proposed in this country.

So that is confirmation that by this third day of the conference the prevailing talk was so much in the direction of recognition, that one of those who associated with me in objecting to it, said that you would get a very strong public adverse reaction to recognition. This, then, was an argument that they doubted if there would be a very serious explosion upon recognition if that were proposed in this country.

Now, then, that led to my really insistent appeal, which is then found on the following pages, that we should not recognize, and you find that going on through these next pages.

I think that then my remarks with that opening introduction, with those first three lines, are an important corroboration of the whole analysis that I presented to the committee on Monday.

So I present to you photostats of the following pages, D–7, D–8, and D–9, which follow along and you can see how I picked up and went forward from that point.

Mr. MORRIS. Governor Stassen, you do not know whose testimony is concluded at the top of page D–6?

The CHAIRMAN. On page D–6, referring to the three lines through which pencil marks have been drawn, the transcription shows this:

Governor STASSEN. Dr. Jessup, I might say first that I regret very much that I have not been able to sit through the entire conference * * * which would indicate that the three lines that were not the words of the witness were the words of Dr. Jessup. Is that a fair inference?

Digitized by Google

Mr. STASSEN. Not necessarily, Senator. I could have addressed the chairman even though some other participant had been immediately preceding. So I do not present that as evidence that those former three lines were stated by Dr. Jessup. The transcript itself in full will show. You see, I do not have the preceding page; it was never given to me, therefore I do not know for certain whose words those were. They are corroboration of what I said of how the discussion went, of such a prevailing nature that we were going to recognize in a comparatively short time, and that it is corroborated by that little pickup of three lines, and then it is corroborated, I think, as you can see, by my plea from that time on that we must not make this tragic mistake, and so forth.

I do not think that any impartial person could read those pages without realizing that they do reflect the kind of circumstance that I described on Monday.

Senator FERGUSON. They indicate clearly that someone in the meeting had used the language other than you.

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. That it was proposed there would not be very serious explosions in this country. I think that is clear, Mr. Chairman, from the memorandum.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Governor.

Mr. STASSEN. Now, then, it has also been contended in these State Department statements and denials issued since I testified that after all, in effect, this was just a consultation with a group of people and that it was not really a part of policy formation.

I have here a newspaper story of Monday, November 21, 1949, in the St. Paul Pioneer Press, which refers to an official State Department release. I have photostatic copies of that, the significant language of which I have underlined. This is the first disclosure by the State Department that this October 1949 conference had taken place and it is an announcement by the State Department that it had taken place, that General Marshall and myself were present, and then it says, down at the bottom of the first column:

> There were among a group of 25 men who participated in a recent closed-door, 3-day session called to aid the work of shaping a current revision of American policy, which now is apparently in its final stages.
>
> What to do about recognizing the new Communist regime and halting the advance of communism to the rest of the Far East were among questions put up to them by Secretary Acheson.

Now, then, have in mind that it has been testified that our Government never considered recognizing Red China and it has also been testified or stated by others that this conference really was just a place where a group of outside people were talking.

Here is a story from an official State Department release which said they "were called to aid the work of shaping a current revision of American policy, which now is apparently in its final stages."

It says:

> What to do about recognizing the new Communist regime and halting the advance of communism to the rest of the Far East were among questions put up to them by Secretary Acheson.

Now, then, I think it is significant to look at what was the circumstance when this release——

Digitized by Google

Senator FERGUSON. Might we make this a part of the record at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record in facsimile.

(The document referred to, in facsimile, is as follows:)

STASSEN, DR. QUIGLEY SIT IN AT CHINA POLICY PARLEY

[Monday, November 21, 1949, St. Paul Pioneer Press]

WASHINGTON (AP).—State Department officials disclosed Sunday former Secretary George C. Marshall, Harold Stassen and other American leaders outside the Government have been called in to help find answers to the Chinese Communist upheaval.

Another Minnesotan, Dr. Harold S. Quigley of the University of Minnesota's department of political science, also took part in the conference.

These were among a group of 25 men who participated in a recent closed-door 3-day session called to aid the work of shaping a current revision of American policy, which now is apparently in its final stages.

What to do about recognizing the new Communist regime and halting the advance of communism to the rest of the Far East were among questions put up to them by Secretary Acheson. Their views were not disclosed but officials said they were taken fully into account by Acheson and others involved in the China problem.

SETS PRECEDENCE

The State Department has had frequent meetings with representatives of organizations concerned with foreign policy, beginning with the Dumbarton Oaks Conference on the United Nations in 1944 when there were 44 civilian consultants. But calling in leading Americans for advice while the specific policy is in a formative stage is a new departure.

In addition, a 3-day conference under direction of Francis H. Russell, Director of the Department's Office of Public Affairs, on means of strengthening the United Nations was concluded Saturday at the State Department.

MEETING IN OCTOBER

The China meeting was held October 6–8. Aside from Marshall and Stassen, those taking part included university specialists on oriental affairs, officials of international business firms, bankers, and a representative of the Army War College. Stassen, former Governor of Minnesota, is now president of the University of Pennsylvania. Another college president who served as a temporary consultant was Arthur G. Coons, Occidental College, Los Angeles.

They were asked to make no formal recommendations but to state their views fully and frankly.

This conference was independent of the specialized study of the problem being made by a three-man group of consultants to Acheson, headed by Ambassador-at-Large Philip Jessup.

Senator WATKINS. I call your attention, Governor, to the paragraph following which indicates this is a new departure from the policy and they are calling them in now for advice. This is in the article from the newspaper to which you have just called our attention.

Mr. STASSEN. Now, the situation that existed on November 21, 1949, is important in that it says it is now approaching a final determination.

On November 16, 1949, Mr. Acheson protested the China Nationalists' firing on the Flying Cloud ship which was running the blockade. That, I pointed out the other day, was one of the things that had been recommended by this conference in the prevailing group but which was objected to by me and by others.

And on that day or the next day—I am not clear—Bevin, in the House of Commons, said they were waiting for a decision of the United States and others to join on the question of recognition of

Digitized by Google

Red China. Mr. Acheson said that recognition was out of the question until the Communists released Angus Ward.

Then on November 21, you have the release of the story about the study.

On December 3, Mr. Acheson said the United States did not recognize the legality of the Nationalists' blockade and protested the shelling of another United States ship of the Isbrandtsen Line.

On December 30, India recognized Red China. On January 5, Britain recognized Red China, and on December 23, right in that period just immediately in advance of that, that memorandum about Formosa was issued by the State Department to all of its embassies and the Voice of America all over the world.

Senator FERGUSON. Governor, were you familiar with General Fortier's testimony that he had a conversation with Dr. Jessup when he was out in Japan in January?

Mr. STASSEN. I was told of it here in my hearing the other day.

Senator FERGUSON. About the recognition that might take place?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. In 2 or 3 weeks?

Mr. MORRIS. In 2 or 3 weeks was the testimony.

Mr. STASSEN. Now, then, I have another item. Even though I stated that I would be meticulous to stay within the exact statement of facts and not to make characterizations or conclusions, it has been said that when I testified here on Monday there was inference of the intentions of this prevailing group under Mr. Lattimore and Mr. Rosinger which was false and unfair. I do not wish to be unfair to any one but I do feel that I must state the facts in this vital matter, and I did point out that during the conference and in Mr. Lattimore's presence, I said to Mr. Lattimore and the others that the steps that they were advocating could best be characterized as steps that would hasten the victory of the Communists in China and hasten the complete liquidation of the Nationalist Government. So that right in the conference in 1949, and the transcript shows it and you now have page D–6, as a photostat that statement is made and relevant to this question of what the intention was in advocating these things.

As a matter of fact, I think it is a document of value to this committee to note the cover on Mr. Owen Lattimore's book, Solution in Asia. It is regular publishing practice that the cover of a book is cleared with the author as to its contents.

I have here a photostatic copy of the cover of the book and on this matter of characterization there is this one sentence which says:

> He inclines to support American newspapermen who report that the only real democracy in China is found in Communist areas.

This book was published in 1945. So that the characterization that I gave to his testimony in his presence and which I reported has a relevancy in its fairness to this document which I now present to you, and I emphasize that except in reference to what I said at the conference in his presence, I have not, and I will not make any characterization of what any of these gentlemen did, because it is, of course, true that men can for perfectly good motives and men can for a perfectly justified judgment on their part of what facts mean and policies ought to be, take divergent positions.

Digitized by Google

My situation is that I have been reporting to this committee on the facts as I knew them and not in any instance testifying as to characterization or conclusions or as to accusations or to clearances.

The CHAIRMAN. I think there are a number of exhibits you have that have not been inserted in the record.

Those pages, D–6, D–7, D–8, and D–9, it seems to me, should go into the record.

Mr. MORRIS. The whole transcript did go into the record the other day.

Mr. STASSEN. A mimeographed copy of it but not the transcript itself. There you have photostats of the State Department documents themselves.

Mr. MORRIS. This is different from the one introduced in the record the other day.

Senator FERGUSON. I move, Mr. Chairman, that they be made a part of the record.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. I point out one sentence in support of Mr. Stassen's testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. You are reading from page D–6.

Mr. MORRIS (reading):

I think that would be the correct characterization of the related steps that have been advanced along with the urging of recognition at the earliest possible date.

And, Mr. Chairman, that would indicate that there had been advance testimony, recommendations along the lines of Governor Stassen's testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. The four pages, D–6, D–7, D–8, and D–9 of the State Department transcript and the book cover of Mr. Lattimore's book Solution in Asia, will be inserted in the record.

(The documents referred to are as follows:)

Governor STASSEN. Dr. Jessup, I might say first that I regret very much that I have not been able to sit through the entire conference. I made the greatest possible readjustment of my schedule when I received the invitation to be here and I will address myself very concisely to the point now under discussion and through the kind assistance of Dr. Talbot, I had some briefing of the discussion, and particularly of General Marshall's able presentation this morning.

I stated on Thursday that I was opposed to recognition of the north Government in China at this time and not at least for a question of a couple of years. I want to go into that a little more thoroughly because at that time I merely stated my position on it.

My first comment is on some of the related discussion this morning that has been advanced that along with recognition other steps we ought to take were proposed. These steps I say, frankly, to me could be best characterized as steps that would hasten the victory of the Communists in China and hasten the complete liquidation of the Nationalist Government. I think that would be the correct characterization of the related steps that have been advanced along with the urging of recognition at the earliest possible date.

To me that would be a very sad mistake in our world policy. If we recognize the Communist Government of China now, clearly that does mean we must at the same time not only withdraw recognition of the other Government—the Nationalist Government—but that we must then join in affirmative action to throw the Nationalist Government out of the United Nations. There are no half-way measures on this. You cannot be recognizing a government in one way and then in the United Nations tribunal, in which we are a great leading nation, take a different position to that. Nor should we possibly abstain. That would be a cowardly and weak position to take. So, we would then be in the position of going into the United Nations, with our great prestige, and throw out from that

Digitized by Google

United Nations the representative of whatever you may wish to call them—the remnants of a former government that still has now, and I think will for some foreseeable time, the effective jurisdiction over one-third of the area of China and one-third of its people and that is continuing to put up some form of resistance to the Communist areas.

Now, to put ourselves in that position in my mind, cannot be countenanced and I might urge, as I go forward, and respectfully submit that there have been some implications that perhaps those that oppose recognition are trying to play the popular tune in America, and the high view of statesmanship is the contrary and difficult and unpopular course. I will not attempt to draw any cloak of statesmanship about me this morning, or any other time, but I would modestly state that the steps that I took in the early days of opposition to Hitler and of supporting lend-lease and on the whole question of isolation and world trade have not been popular courses at the time they were taken particularly in my home part of the country. To the greatest degree it is possible, I approach these policies from the standpoint of what is right in the long view for our country and our ideals, rather than what is the current popular view. In fact, I have such faith in democracy that if a policy is right, then I am certain you can interpret it to the American people and convince the majority of them it is right.

Going to the specifics of recognition, it seems to me that taking the affirmative stand of ejecting the Nationalist Government from the United Nations and placing in its stead the Communist Government of the north would be a clear invitation to a disregard of our fundamental ideals and objectives in the world picture. Whatever else may be said about the Nationalist Government, it seems to me that there has been a greater measure of democracy, a greater measure of individual freedom, the right of free expression, of a free press, of the communication of news in that area than there has been in any of the Communist areas of the world.

I might project my views of the Communist Government of North China. I believe that in the early stages they have brought in some of those who are not Communists into leadership—some of those we might call moderates. In the early stages they will say to the American businessman, if your country treats us better and recognizes us that will facilitate your doing business here. However, you will find quite rapidly as they consolidate their control over the country and as they introduce people into these industries and businesses who learn something about them, they will proceed to throw out the moderates from the government and will tighten up and possibly expropriate and take over the businesses and that process will move forward steadily.

Solution in Asia

(By Owen Lattimore)

Mr. Lattimore has at last taken the lid off his vast and exclusive knowledge of Asia. What he says will have a direct effect on the war and the peace since it will be read in foreign offices throughout the world. (Mr. Lattimore's right to speak for Asia will be readily apparent from the biographical sketch printed on the back of this jacket.)

In this book he points out the road American policy must take to achieve a victory for democracy in Asia. He discusses China, Japan, and all the other eastern areas from their real basis, the people in them. He shows how the "experts" have covered their ignorance with such dogmas and clichés as the myth that the Chinese are enigmatic, that the Japanese Emperor is an ancient Japanese deity, that the Chinese are incapable of democratic government. He says bluntly that Japan's exploitation of China was aided and abetted by the United States and Britain on condition that they receive their share of the loot. He shows that all the Asiatic peoples are more interested in actual democratic practices, such as the ones they can see in action across the Russian border, than they are in the fine theories of Anglo-Saxon democracies which come coupled with ruthless imperialism. He warns us that if we help the European powers revive sahib rule in the colonies, we shall be classed as imperialists no matter what we do in the Philippines. He inclines to support American newspapermen who report that the only real democracy in China is found in Communist areas. Finally he shows what United States policy should be in Asia and why the solution is political and economic rather than military.

Digitized by Google

JACKET DRAWING BY EDWARD A. KARR

(Atlantic-Little, Brown books are published by Little, Brown & Co., in association with the Atlantic Monthly Press)

The format of this book is designed to save paper, which is now rationed, as well as other materials. In 1941 this volume would have been larger, or thicker, or heavier, and perhaps all three of these, and might have been set in a larger type face with wider margins to the page. The size and the weight of books have increased steadily since the end of World War I; now, in World War II, the process must be reversed. But the value of a book is not to be measured by its dimensions or its weight, though it is important that it be printed in clear, readable type. What does count is its content, whether it provides good entertainment or sound information to the reader, whether it stimulates the mind, whether it is first class of its kind.

This company's policy of publishing "fewer and better books" has never been more strictly followed than during this period of world crisis. We hope you will find this book helpful or entertaining. If you do not wish to add it to your permanent library, why not give it to a member of our Armed Forces?

The Council on Books in Wartime, an organization made up of publishers, booksellers, librarians and other groups believing that some books are weapons in the war of ideas, from time to time recommends books which it considers important to the war effort or the planning of a proper peace. We urge you to read these books.

OWEN LATTIMORE

Mr. Lattimore is often called "the best-informed American on Asiatic affairs living today." For 22 years he has been absorbing knowledge about Asia as businessman, newspaperman, editor, traveler, scholar, and research scientist. In the last 4 years he has held official positions in both the American and the Chinese Governments:—

1. As political adviser to Chiang Kai-shek, on the recommendation of President Roosevelt, for two war-torn years (1941–42).

2. Until recently as Director of Pacific Operations for the OWI.

The following shows how well his career had fitted him for these important posts:—

Engaged in business, Shanghai, 1920.

Newspaper work, Tientsin, 1921.

In export business, Tientsin and Peking, 1922–26.

Social Science Research Council, Manchuria, 1929–30.

In Peiping under Harvard-Yenching Institute, 1930–31; under Guggenheim Foundation 1931–33.

Field work in Mongolia and research in Peiping for Institute of Pacific Relations, 1934–35.

Editor Pacific Affairs, 1934–41.

Director Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University, 1938—

Mr. Lattimore is the author of seven previous books on the Far East and has written widely for the Atlantic Monthly, National Geographic magazine, Asia, and other periodicals.

Mr. STASSEN. Senator, I have presented now, I believe, supporting evidence on every point on which my testimony was challenged, at least in its main aspects, and I have indicated the documents which I hope the committee will decide to ask for and my willingness to return further at your call and again under oath at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. May it be understood that if we are successful in getting any of the transcripts of either the State Department officials or Mr. Lattimore, or Mr. Rosinger, who have apparently consented, that we allow the Governor to see them and then determine at that time whether or not he is to return for testimony.

As was indicated, it does appear at least to the Senator from Michigan that if we are going to conduct our hearings and have the State Department, who have the record, dispute the testimony that we are receiving in evidence, at least they ought to be willing to come up and produce the official records rather than a statement from some one in the State Department not under oath that the records do dispute the witness. I think that is only fair to the committee and fair to the witnesses that they at least do that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, in that connection, we have requested, after the committee made the decision, the State Department for a transcript of another conference, a conference that was held in September 1949 at which were present three officials of the American Federation of Labor and two officials of the CIO.

The CHAIRMAN. That request has gone down?

Mr. MORRIS. That has gone down, and again that would be particularly appropriate, Senator Ferguson's request would be particularly appropriate, so that we do not now have to proceed to take testimony on what happened at that conference.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

There were some requests that have been suggested this morning by the witness that, of course, have not been made up to date.

Mr. MORRIS. I have made a record of those.

Governor Stassen, you testified on Monday that at the termination of the conference you had a discussion with the presiding officer, Dr. Jessup, and that during that conference he stated to you that the greater logic was on the side of what you characterized as the prevailing opinion.

Mr. STASSEN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. In view of any subsequent developments, do you care to affirm your testimony on that score?

Mr. STASSEN. My memory is very clear upon it, and of course, all of these subsequent events which I have verified this morning by corroborating evidence all give further evidence that Mr. Jessup did act in accordance with a judgment on his part that the greater logic was on the other view.

You do have the protests of the shelling of the ships, you do have General Fortier's testimony as to his statements when he arrived in Japan a few months later, you do have the statements of Senator Alexander Smith before the committee yesterday that it was his distinct impression—and I do not quote him exactly but I think I accurately paraphrase it—that in November 1949, Dr. Jessup gave him the distinct impression that they were moving on recognition; and I do not know of anything that has been presented by anyone between October 1949 and the outbreak of the Korean war that would indicate that Dr. Jessup did anything other than act in accordance with what I say he told me, that the greater logic was on that other view. My own recollection of that conversation is very clear.

The CHAIRMAN. That, of course, would not be a part of the record?

Mr. STASSEN. No; that was at recess.

Mr. SOURWINE. There is no possibility, is there, that you are assuming that he took the position of where the logic lay because of any other actions or because of any other answer; that is a recital by you of words that he spoke to you; is that right?

Mr. STASSEN. Yes; because, further, as I testified, when he said that, then I pleaded with him to go and see General MacArthur before they acted in accordance with that other prevailing group's view.

Digitized by Google

I don't know whether he was asked whether he recalled my suggestion to him to go see General MacArthur. I don't know whether that was gone into with him, but my memory is very clear on that and the following circumstances and all the surrounding bases show it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further?

Mr. STASSEN. I think I should add to that that in so stating I am simply stating the fact of a conversation as I recall it. I do not state anything as to what the motivation of Dr. Jessup was in making that statement to me at that time. I only state the fact that he said that.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are stating that he did make that statement to you?

Mr. STASSEN. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is not something that he might have said to you; it is something that you remember he did say?

Mr. STASSEN. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions, Senators?

All right, Governor. Thank you.

Mr. STASSEN. Thank you. I shall be at your call if these documents arrive.

(Whereupon, at 11:45 a. m., the hearing was recessed, subject to the call of the Chair.)

Digitized by Google

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1951

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 11:20 a. m., pursuant to notice, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. James O. Eastland, presiding.

Present: Senators Eastland, O'Conor, Smith, and Watkins.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel, and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

Senator EASTLAND. The committee will come to order.

You do solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before the Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do.

Senator EASTLAND. Mr. Morris, you may proceed.

Mr. CROSSMAN. I should like to show in the record that I am appearing for Mr. Holland, as well as the Institute of Pacific Relations.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM L. HOLLAND, SECRETARY GENERAL OF THE INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, AND EXECUTIVE VICE CHAIRMAN OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, ACCOMPANIED BY EDGAR G. CROSSMAN, OF DAVIS, POLK, WARDWELL, SUNDERLAND & KIENDL, COUNSEL

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, may I ask your permission to make, sometime during the course of the hearings today, a somewhat extended statement?

I have just reported to Mr. Morris my desire to do this as a matter of courtesy, and I now ask this request of you.

Senator EASTLAND. When was it filed?

Mr. MORRIS. It was not filed.

Senator EASTLAND. Under the Reorganization Act, Mr. Holland, it has to be filed 24 hours in advance.

Mr. CROSSMAN. I have just looked at that part of the statute, which does not say anything about 24 hours. It says:

> Each such standing committee shall so far as practicable require all witnesses to appear before it to file in advance written statement of their proposed testimony.

Senator EASTLAND. What is the committee rule?

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. Twenty-four hours, Mr. Chairman, under the theory that less than that would not be in substantial compliance with the statute.

Senator EASTLAND. That is the committee rule?

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

It has been waived by the committee when the committee considered the circumstances warranted.

The language of the statute permits waiving.

Could I inquire by question or two with regard to this statement, Mr. Chairman?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Has the statement been released to the press yet, or given to the press for future release?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; it has not.

My purpose in asking the question is that I do not wish to give it to the press in advance.

May I also assume for your own reasons you do not wish me to read the statement now?

Senator EASTLAND. It is simply a matter for the committee to determine. I could not determine.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I was talking to someone else when I came in.

Senator EASTLAND. He has an extended statement that he wanted to read during the course of his testimony. I knew that under the Reorganization Act it was a rule of the committee that it has to be filed 24 hours in advance.

Now, I judge the committee has the authority to waive the rule. It is something that as acting chairman I could not pass upon. The committee has to pass upon it.

Senator SMITH. Is Mr. Holland under subpena of the committee, or testifying at his request?

Mr. SOURWINE. He is under subpena.

Senator SMITH. It seems to me, first, he should be required to answer the questions asked by the committee. Certainly we have no control over Mr. Holland's giving any statement to the press.

Senator EASTLAND. He desires to read his statement.

Mr. HOLLAND. I wish to read the statement to the committee at sometime during the testimony.

Of course, the committee would determine when that time comes.

Senator SMITH. I would not be insistent on the 24-hour rule if it seems that is something that Mr. Holland wanted to do, and it is fair to him.

Mr. SOURWINE. The purpose of the law is to permit the staff of the committee, which is by law directed to do it, to analyze the statement and boil it down for the benefit of the committee, so they might inquire regarding the statement.

Senator SMITH. I imagine it is so the witness may be cross-examined on the statement because it takes at least 24 hours for a staff member to see whether or not such a statement is borne out or has any information in it.

Senator O'CONOR. I do not think we ought to stand on the 24-hour rule providing the witness submits the statement to the committee in advance, because entirely apart from this instant case, it may very well be that the witness could come here and could talk about things entirely irrelevant and foreign to the matter under consideration and we do not feel that that should be permitted, but I think if the witness submits the statement and a proper opportunity given to the staff to analyze it and the committee to see it, that the rule should not be pressed.

Digitized by Google

Senator EASTLAND. Suppose we just pass the matter over for a while.

Mr. SOURWINE. Might I inquire further, Mr. Chairman?

Senator EASTLAND. Proceed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you hold a press conference this morning, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I did not, Mr. Chairman. I spoke to two members of the press at my hotel this morning, telling them briefly I intended to make this request. I did not give them a copy of this statement.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you aware that it was on the news ticker yesterday evening that you were having a press conference?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I announced it at the time of the press conference given by my chairman in New York. I announced that I would appear this morning here.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you make any announcement to anyone that you were holding a press conference at 9:15, or any time this morning?

Mr. HOLLAND. To the best of my knowledge, I said I would like to meet two representatives of the press at my hotel room this morning to tell them what I wished to request.

Mr. SOURWINE. To whom did you say that?

Mr. HOLLAND. I spoke to the representatives of the Herald Tribune and the Washington Post.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who were the two people to whom you spoke?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Marder and Mr. Irwin.

Mr. SOURWINE. They were the only two that you notified of the conference this morning?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not consider it a conference, but I notified my counsel here, Mr. Crossman.

Mr. SOURWINE. I meant newspapermen, sir.

Mr. HOLLAND. I asked a friend here in Washington to say that I wished to speak to a number of newspapermen about this.

Senator EASTLAND. I will say this right now, that while it is a matter that the committee has to determine, I think it is very improper for a witness who is under subpena and brought down here to be asked questions, to try to break into the press and discredit the investigation.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with you, because it is perfectly apparent to anybody who has had experience in public life at all, that one of the objectives of some people is to try to discredit this investigation.

Now, I am not accusing anybody for the moment. I would not hesitate to when some particular individual appears to me to justify criticism. But we subpena a man to come here to give testimony along the lines we want to inquire about.

88338—52—pt. 4——14

Digitized by Google

Now I think every one of us wishes to be absolutely fair to everybody. I think we have demonstrated that to the satisfaction of fair-minded people.

When a witness is subpenaed to answer a certain line of questions, I do not think it is a fair thing for a witness to try to catch the attention of the public press and get his story of the things he wants to tell in print ahead of the hearing.

I do not think it is a fair thing to do, and I do not think we should be a party to it.

When he asks to be allowed to testify, then I concede he can give anything he wants to the press.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have one or two questions.

Would you tell the committee who it was you asked in your behalf to give notice of the conference this morning?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I asked Mrs. Owen Lattimore if she would speak to one or two of the newspapermen. The names I recall, besides the two I spoke of, were a representative of the Associated Press and a representative of the New York Times.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you testify whom you wanted notified on behalf of the Associated Press?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you specify whom you wanted notified on behalf of the New York Times?

Mr. HOLLAND. I said preferably Mr. White.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you had specified Mr. Marder and Mr. Irwin?

Mr. HOLLAND. I said someone from the Washington Post and the New York Herald Tribune, preferably Mr. Marder and Mr. Irwin.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you call anyone yourself?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. You limited your request to the four you mentioned?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. She was not instructed to call the United Press?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. She was not instructed to call the International News Service?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why did you select the four you named?

Mr. HOLLAND. Because these happened to be people I had had the privilege of meeting personally.

Mr. SOURWINE. Wait a minute. You had not specified any person. You mean you have met the entire staff of the Associated Press?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have seen these people and read their reports and spoken to them casually in previous hearings of these sessions.

Mr. SOURWINE. So you had confidence in them?

Mr. HOLLAND. I believe their reports have been fair and they have seemed to take an interest in the proceedings of this subcommittee.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not think that is true of the United Press and International News Service?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have not had the privilege of speaking to the other gentlemen.

Mr. SOURWINE. I am trying to find out why you did not notify the other two news services.

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. Simply because I am not well in touch with the others.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was this your own idea to call this press conference?

Mr. HOLLAND. Entirely my own idea.

I do not regard it as a press conference, Mr. Chairman, for the simple reason that my sole purpose was not to say anything about the content of my statement, but simply to notify these gentlemen that I wished to request the privilege of making an extended statement.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you happen to call on Mrs. Lattimore to act as your agent in notifying those whom you wished to meet with you this morning?

Mr. HOLLAND. A very simple reason. I tried through my office to make hotel reservations at about six hotels in Washington, and was not able to get a room. I therefore called Mrs. Lattimore and asked her if she would be kind enough to do some telephoning around Washington, and since she was doing that, if she would also mind notifying these representatives of the press.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions on that point, Mr. Chairman.

Senator EASTLAND. You may proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, may I ask if it is the decision of the committee that they will not permit me to make this statement?

Senator EASTLAND. No, that is my idea.

Mr. HOLLAND. Your ruling, sir?

Senator EASTLAND. I have made no ruling.

Senator O'CONOR. I understand that it has been held in reservation.

Senator EASTLAND. The acting chairman of the committee cannot waive a rule of the committee. The committee itself might do it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, since I do wish to be fair and courteous to this subcommittee, may I then ask whether you will have any objection to my making available to the press the text of this statement either during this morning's session, or at the end of this morning's session?

I do not wish to do anything which you feel is improper or discourteous.

Senator EASTLAND. I think we had better get on with the questions. Mr. Morris has some questions. You were brought here under subpena and I want you to answer them.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, there are a few preliminary matters before we get into the substance of the examination.

I called you last week, as you may recall, in connection with the testimony that Professor Colegrove and Professor Stassen gave in connection with a round-table conference.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Twenty-five people participated in that conference and we asked you if you would inform us, if you would come down and testify and tell us how many of these 25 people were members of the Institute of Pacific Relations in this conference. You said it would be inconvenient for you to come down and that you would send the names down and their associations with the institute and the first time you were down here you would put those statements under oath.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. I now offer you your letter to me, Mr. Holland, of September 28, 1951, where you do set forth the IPR associations of the various people connected with the institute.

Will you now make that a part of the official records?

Mr. HOLLAND. I confirm this letter, Mr. Chairman. If you wish, I will read the text of the covering letter, but otherwise I am prepared to say this is a true statement, to the best of my recollection and belief.

Senator SMITH. I wish you would examine each of those pages, to see that they are copies of the letter you sent.

Senator EASTLAND. He testified they were.

Senator SMITH. I heard him say it, but I noticed that he did not turn his sheets and look. I want to be certain that there is no question about it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Since it is a short covering letter, I think I might read it.

Senator EASTLAND. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Why not read the covering letter?

Mr. HOLLAND (reading):

DEAR MR. MORRIS: In accordance with your telephoned request, I send you herewith a memorandum indicating as precisely as possible the IPR connections of the persons who attended the State Department conference on Far Eastern policy, October 6–8, 1949.

You will note on pages 3 and 4 that Messrs. Brody, Colegrove, Holcomb, McNaughton, Murphy, Quigley, Reischauer, and Stassen were not members of or actively participating in the work of the Institute of Pacific Relations at the time of the State Department conference.

Would you kindly notify Senator McCarran of my desire that this statement be made part of the record of the hearings and indicate that on a later occasion I will be glad to confirm the memorandum as part of my sworn testimony.

Mr. MORRIS. Then the list does show that 17 of the 25 people were at that time associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. That is a fair statement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You see, Mr. Chairman, the question has come up as to how the Stassen testimony is related to the Institute of Pacific Relations.

In this 3-day conference, of the 25 people called in to engage in that discussion, 17 of the 25 were then active members of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator EASTLAND. The testimony has been that that list was made up by Dr. Jessup; is that right?

Mr. MORRIS. The conference was under his direction.

Senator EASTLAND. The testimony was that the list of those provided was made up by him.

I think this information should be given to the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. MORRIS. It shall be done.

Senator EASTLAND. I understand he testified that he did not compile that list largely from people affiliated with the Institute of Pacific Relations, but from the heads of the departments of political science in the different universities of the country.

I do not know whether it is true, or not.

Senator O'CONOR. Mr. Chairman, I did understand Mr. Holland to have some comment to make. I thought it was audible that you did indicate some opinion as to whether or not that compilation was made under the circumstances, did you not?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. I am not clear, Mr. Chairman, which compilation you are talking about. Do you mean the original list of people who came to the State Department conference?

Senator EASTLAND. Who were invited.

Mr. HOLLAND. I had no knowledge of, or connection with, that conference; absolutely none. All I have done in response to Mr. Morris' request is to take the list of names he sent me, look into our files and record, and indicate what connection those people have, and as he points out, 17 of them had some kind of connection.

Now, the nature of the connection is indicated in this memorandum. Some were officers; most were just ordinary members. Some had been contributors to IPR publications. A few had attended IPR conferences.

But the precise nature of their connection is indicated in the memorandum, and I do not think it is necessary to read it.

Senator EASTLAND. Proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Holland, I notice, however, that you did not give the IPR association of the board of three people who were appointed by Dean Acheson to run this conference. That is Mr. Jessup, Mr. Case, and Mr. Fosdick.

Are you prepared to testify as to the connection of those three gentlemen?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am prepared. I think I gave one of your staff information informally over the telephone.

Dr. Jessup's connection, I think is well known. I don't think I need take your time. As you know, at one time he was the chairman of our international governing body of the Pacific Council.

Mr. MORRIS. For what period of time was that, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. He was chairman of our international governing body of the Pacific Council from 1939 to 1942.

In addition, at a later date, he was chairman of the American Institute of Pacific Relations from 1939 to 1940.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he chairman of the research committee?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Jessup was chairman of the research advisory committee of the American Institute of Pacific Relations for a brief period in 1944.

He severed any activity; he withdrew from any activity, and active participation in the Institute when he went into the State Department in 1946, but he is still an ordinary member.

Senator EASTAND. Between 1944 and 1946, what was his connection with the Institute?

Mr. HOLLAND. He was an ordinary member, and may still have been trustee. I am afraid I don't have the information.

Senator EASTLAND. He was active in the affairs of the Institute?

Mr. HOLLAND. In 1944 and 1946, I would say not active, Mr. Chairman, because at that time he was doing a number of consultant jobs for the Government in connection with UNRRA, I think, and such things. Nevertheless, he was a member and may have been consulted on IPR affairs occasionally. I cannot speak from direct knowledge on that.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the association of Mr. Case?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Everett Case of Colgate University, had been a treasurer of the American Institute of Pacific Relations from 1932 to 1934. He is still an ordinary member.

Mr. MORRIS. And Mr. Fosdick?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Fosdick at an early period, about 1933, appears in our records as having been invited to membership. The membership card is not clear that he paid any dues. That may well have been because he was a high official of the Rockefeller Foundation at the time and we, therefore, did not dun him.

He also appears to have been invited to serve on the board of trustees in 1934, but, again, we have no records of his having attended the meetings.

My own belief is that he considered it would not usually be appropriate for him since he had by then become president of the Rockefeller Foundation, but he at least seems to have had that nominal connection back in 1933, 1934.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, we have had testimony about a briefiing at this conference by a person named Cora Dubois. Was she active in the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. HOLLAND. Miss Dubois is an ordinary dues-paying member. She has never been an officer or trustee, and, to the best of my knowledge, has never taken any active part in meetings or conferences of the institute. She has been asked to review books by us, and I think has been invited to write articles, but I do not believe she has actually contributed, although I am not sure on the last point.

Senator SMITH. May I ask one question?

Mr. Holland, just now the committee's counsel made the statement and you answered it; have you read all the testimony that has been taken in this case that is available to you?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I have not been able to read it all. As you know, it has been very voluminous.

Senator SMITH. You know that these people who testified had been sworn?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am not quite clear what testimony you are referring to.

Senator SMITH. With respect to just what you finished answering.

Mr. HOLLAND. About the connections of these people?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. I know I am saying it under oath.

Senator SMITH. You know that what Mr. Morris stated and asked you about has also been testified to under oath?

Mr. MORRIS. By Mr. Stassen and by Mr. Colegrove.

Mr. HOLLAND. I see what you mean.

Senator SMITH. The reason I say that is that I notice some person in the paper this morning referred to unsupported statements which the committee counsel made. I want to make it clear that Mr. Morris made that statement as to what was testified to under oath.

Mr. HOLLAND. I understand.

Mr. MORRIS. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Chairman, will you receive that into evidence?

Senator EASTLAND. What is it?

Mr. MORRIS. That is the list which was sent in by Mr. Holland.

Senator EASTLAND. Was it identified by him?

Mr. MORRIS. He identified it.

Digitized by Google

Senator EASTLAND. It will be admitted into evidence.

Mr. MORRIS. He affirmed the underlying facts in that letter.

Senator EASTLAND. It will be admitted.

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 326" and is as follows:)

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, INC.,
New York 22, N. Y., September 28, 1951.

Mr. ROBERT MORRIS,
Counsel, Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Internal Security,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRIS: In accordance with your telephoned request, I send you herewith a memorandum indicating as precisely as possible the IPR connections of the persons who attended the State Department conference on far eastern policy, October 6–8, 1949.

You will note on pages 3 and 4 that Messrs. Brodie, Colegrove, Holcombe, MacNaughton, Murphy, Quigley, Reischauer, and Stassen were not members of or actively participating in the work of the Institute of Pacific Relations at the time of the State Department conference.

Would you kindly notify Senator McCarran of my desire that this statement be made part of the record of the hearings and indicate that on a later occasion I will be glad to confirm the memorandum as part of my sworn testimony.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM L. HOLLAND,
Executive Vice Chairman.

IPR CONNECTIONS OF PERSONS ATTENDING STATE DEPARTMENT CONFERENCE ON FAR EASTERN POLICY OCTOBER 6–8, 1949

Joseph W. Ballantine: Trustee, American IPR, February 1949 to present; member, American IPR, 1948–?; contributor to Far Eastern Survey, 1948 and 1950.

Claude A. Buss: Member, American IPR, 1945–?; active in San Francisco Bay region; contributor to Far Eastern Survey; attended International IPR Conference, 1947; attended American IPR National Conference, 1947.

Arthur G. Coons: Trustee, American IPR, February 1947 to present; member, American IPR, 1935–?; active in southern California; attended American IPR National Conference, 1947.

John W. Decker: Member, American IPR, 1938–?; contributor to Far Eastern Survey, 1946.

John K. Fairbank: Trustee, American IPR, April 1944–March 1946, February 1947 to present; member, American IPR, 1936–?; contributor to Pacific Affairs, September 1949; contributor to Far Eastern Survey, 1947, 1948 and 1949; author of American Education in the Far East (1942, reprint from Social Education); What Can the United States Do in China? (1949, 16 pp.); Next Step in Asia (1949), contributor; attended International IPR Conferences in 1945 and 1947.

William R. Herod: Trustee, American IPR, February 1940–December 1942, January 1946–February 1951; member, American IPR Executive Committee, November 1940–December 1942; vice chairman, American IPR, November 1940–April 1942; member, American IPR, 1938–?; attended IPR International Conference, 1939.

Benjamin H. Kizer: Trustee, American IPR, December 1935–March 1946, February 1947 to present; member, American IPR Executive Committee, 1936–39; vice chairman, American IPR, March 1943–March 1946; member, American IPR, 1933–?; contributor to Far Eastern Survey, 1944; author of North Pacific International Planning Board, data paper, 1942; United States-Canadian Northwest, 1943; attended IPR International Conferences in 1933, 1936, 1942, 1945; attended India-America Conference, 1949; active in Pacific Northwest.

Owen Lattimore: Editor, Pacific Affairs, 1933–July 1941; author of Inner Asian Frontiers of China 1940 and 1951; Empire in the East (chapter), 1936; Manchuria: Cradle of Conflict, 1935; Mongols of Manchuria, 1934; trustee, American IPR, February 1943 to present; non-quorum member, American IPR Executive Committee, 1946–1949; chairman, American IPR Research Advisory Committee, March 1946–March 1951; Member, American IPR, 1936–?; attended IPR International Conferences in 1933, 1936, 1939, 1942, 1945, 1947; attended India-America Conference, 1949.

Digitized by Google

George C. Marshall: trustee American IPR, April 1949 to present.

Nathaniel Peffer: Member, American IPR, 1937–?; contributor to Pacific Affairs, September 1935 and March 1937; contributor to Far Eastern Survey, 1946, 1947; author of Prerequisites for Peace in the Far East (Inquiry Series); Basis for Peace in the Far East; attended IPR International Conference in 1936.

W. S. Robertson: member, American IPR, 1939–?; helpful in financial solicitation in New York.

John D. Rockefeller 3d: member, American IPR, 1933–?; spoke at Bankers Club lunch in 1949; attended IPR International Conference, 1929, in American Secretariat.

Lawrence K. Rosinger: fellowship holder, American IPR, 1939–40; Research staff, American IPR, July 1948–September 1950; author of Deadlock in China, 1940; China's Wartime Politics, 1937–44, 1944; India and the United States; 1950; State of Asia, 1951; co-author and editor; attended IPR International Conferences, 1939 and 1945; attended India-America Conference 1949.

Eugene Staley: trustee, American IPR, February 1942–February 1943; chairman, American IPR Research Committee, April 1941–March 1943; member, American IPR, 1937–48; Director, Bay Region Division, American IPR—subsequently World Affairs Council of Northern California; attended IPR International Conferences, 1939 and 1945.

Phillips Talbot: Member, American IPR, 1947–?; contributor to Far Eastern Survey, 1950; author, India and Pakistan (FPA report) 1949; attended India-American Conference 1949.

George E. Taylor: Trustee, American IPR, March 1946–February 1947, February 1948 to present; member, American IPR, 1941–?; contributor to Pacific Affairs, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1941, 1942; author of Struggle for North China (inquiry series), 1940; Changing China (Webster school pamphlet) 1942; America in the New Pacific, 1942; Reconstruction Movement in China, 1936 (35 pp.); Some Aspects of China's Economic Reconstruction (in Japanese) 1937; What Can the United States Do in China, 1949 (16 pp.); attended IPR International Conference, 1939; fellowship holder, American IPR, 1941–42.

Harold M. Vinacke: Member, American IPR, 1933–51; contributor to Pacific Affairs, December 1946; author of the United States and the Far East data paper, 1950; Far Eastern Policy of the United States (FPA report) 1951; attended several regional American IPR conferences.

The following were not members of and were not actively participating in the work of the Institute of Pacific Relations at the time of the State Department Conference:

Bernard Brodie: Member, American IPR, 1943–47.

Kenneth Colegrove: Member, American IPR, 1938–47 (was assigned to write a report for the IPR inquiry series, but never delivered).

Arthur N. Holcombe: Member, American IPR, 1932–48; member, American IPR Research Committee, 1930–32 or 1934; attended several regional American IPR conferences.

Ernest MacNaughton: Member, American IPR, 1936–42.

J. Morden Murphy: Trustee American IPR, February 1950 to present; member, American IPR Executive Committee, March 1951–?; attended India-American Conference, December 1949.

Harold J. Quigley: Member, American IPR, 1931–43; member, American IPR Research Committee, 1930–32 or 1934; contributor to Pacific Affairs, September 1937 and September 1947; author of Chinese Politics and Foreign Powers, 1927; attended IPR International Conference, 1931.

Edwin O. Reischauer: Member, American IPR, 1944–48; contributor to Far Eastern Survey, 1948; coauthor of Next Step in Asia.

Harold E. Stassen: Elected to membership, American IPR, September 1938, and again in March 1940. Regretted April 1940; invited to attend India-America Conference, December 1949.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, there have been some actions taken on the part of the staff in connection with the last open hearing that we had here. We were directed to issue a subpena in connection with the Vandenberg diaries about which the last witness before the committee made certain recommendations.

I would like to report that a subpena has been issued to Arthur Vandenberg, Jr., the New York Herald Tribune, and the Houghton Mifflin Publishing Co. that they make available the diary of the late

Digitized by Google

Senator Vandenberg from January 1, 1947, to July 1, 1950, that that be made available to the committee.

In connection with the other request, we have sent two letters to the President and one letter to the Secretary of State in relation to that open hearing.

I wondered if you would like to have them in the record at this time.

Senator EASTLAND. Yes. Will you read them?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir. [Reading:]

OCTOBER 8, 1951.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: During recent testimony before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee there was extensive reference to a Cabinet meeting held at the White House on February 5, 1949, at which was present the late Senator Vandenberg.

It is respectfully requested that the minutes of that meeting be made available to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

Sincerely yours,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

OCTOBER 8, 1951.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: During recent testimony before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, there was reference to a Cabinet meeting held on November 26, 1948, during which the late Secretary of Defense James Forrestal made recommendations that the AVG be reactivated.

It is respectfully requested that the minutes of this Cabinet meeting be made available to the Senate Internal Security Committee.

Very sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

OCTOBER 8, 1951.

Hon. DEAN ACHESON,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: During the recent testimony of former Gov. Harold Stassen before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee on October 6, 1951, Senator Homer Ferguson of this committee related that he had seen, in the American Embassy in Hong Kong, a copy of a message from the State Department that was sent to the Nationalist Government in the month of October 1949, and which stated, according to Senator Ferguson, that no further military aid would be given the Nationalist Government as far as Formosa was concerned.

It is respectfully suggested that a copy of this message be made available to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

Your cooperation in this matter will be appreciated.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

Senator EASTLAND. They will be admitted in evidence.

(Documents referred to and read in full were marked "Exhibits Nos. 327, 328, 329," and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. On September 28, 1951, Senator McCarran sent to the President the following letter, to which we received a reply yesterday.

Mr. MANDEL. This is dated September 28, 1951.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House:

A letter from Robert Ramspeck, Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission, dated July 13, 1951, contains the following statement about Ellen Van Zyll de Jong Atkinson:

"Ellen Van Zyll de Jong Atkinson was employed by the War Department from October 22, 1941, to April 30, 1945, when she resigned. In connection with an application for a position with the Office of War Information, Mrs. Atkinson was the subject of an investigation as to her qualifications, including loyalty. Mrs. Atkinson was not appointed and the investigation of her was discontinued. Precautionary measures were taken to prevent Mrs. Atkinson's reemployment in the Federal service at a later date until the question of her loyalty has been resolved."

Digitized by Google

Inasmuch as Ellen Atkinson was a staff member of the Institute of Pacific Relations which is presently under inquiry, it would be appreciated if her file were made available to this committee.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

Here is the reply, dated October 8, 1951, from the White House:

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I acknowledge your letter of September 28, 1951, requesting the file of Ellen Van Zyll De Jong Atkinson be made available to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

I am requesting the Secretary of the Army to make Mrs. Atkinson's employment record available to the subcommittee. However, in conformity with the position I have heretofore stated on several occasions, I do not feel that the information so made available to the subcommittee should include investigative data of a confidential nature.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

Senator EASTLAND. They may be admitted in evidence.

(Documents referred to and read in full were marked "Exhibits Nos. 330–A and 330–B," and filed for the record.)

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, what is your present position in the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. HOLLAND. My position is secretary-general of the International Institute of Pacific Relations, and also concurrently and temporarily executive vice chairman of the American Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. How long have you held both positions?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have been secretary-general since March 1946, and I have been executive vice chairman of the American Institute since, I believe, August 1950.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your association with the institute prior to that time, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. My association is quite long, Mr. Chairman. I began as a junior research assistant in Honolulu which was then the international headquarters, in January 1929.

From 1931 to 1933, I was acting international research secretary of the institute, and from 1933 to 1944, I was the international research secretary, which is equivalent to research director, of the institute.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Holland, are you in a position to tell us what the principal sources of revenue have been for the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us as fully as possible, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. May I divide my answer into two parts, first, relating to the international institute, and, second to the American.

I think it is known, Mr. Chairman, that the institute is a loose association of independent national organizations called national councils in 10 countries, each with their own independent offices and programs and organization.

The sources of funds of the International Institute of Pacific Relations consists of donations, or, rather, of contributions supplied by each of the national councils. A quota is worked out every 2 or 3 years and as far as possible each national council tries to pay that quota.

Digitized by Google

In addition, the International Institute of Pacific Relations receives and has received over a considerable period substantial grants from American foundations, say the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Corp.

In addition, one or two large firms, chiefly outside the United States, have occasionally made contributions direct to the International Institute of Pacific Relations.

At the present time, Lever Bros., London, does that.

Finally, some small income, I say net income, is received from the sale of publications and from the sales of our quarterly journal, Pacific Affairs.

The financial sources of the American Institute of Pacific Relations are, first, substantial contributions by leading American companies. I won't give you the list, but they include major corporations, such as the Standard Vacuum Oil Co., the International General Electric, the Chase Bank, the National City Bank, and some 40 or 50 similar well-known corporations.

In addition, funds are received from ordinary individual gifts. There are a considerable number of wealthy persons who have given liberally at various times to the Institute. They range all the way from Mr. Thomas W. Lamont to Mr. Frederick V. Field, and both of those contributions have been mentioned in the press already.

Next are ordinary membership subscriptions. The membership consists today of about 1,100 people.

The minimum membership is $7.50 a year. The ordinary membership fee is $15 a year. Then there are, I think, two other categories, contributing and supporting membership.

Then finally there are, of course, substantial contributions also to the American Institute of Pacific Relations from the big foundations, and there, again, the principal ones have been the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Corp.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you tell us substantially what the Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations contribute each year to the institute?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not have a very detailed statement on that. It will take a long time to give it. I would be glad to supply it to the committee. I can give you totals approximately, but it extends over a very long period of years.

Mr. MORRIS. Give us a rough estimate. If you want to give it in detail, we will put that in the record.

Mr. HOLLAND. The record shows in the 26 years since the American IPR has been operating, but let me begin with the International IPR.

Mr. MORRIS. Please do.

Mr. HOLLAND. In the 26 years since the International IPR has been operating total receipts amount to about two and a half million dollars, actually $2,569,000, which is an average of about $100,000 a year.

Of this, 48 percent came from the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Corp. together. I don't have immediately the breakdown between those two.

About 30 percent came from the national council quotas, and about 9 percent from publication sales, and 3 percent from miscellaneous sources.

Digitized by Google

In answer to your question on the foundations, if we include grants made to the American IPR, the contribution of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Foundation to the work of the IPR through 1950 totals $2,176,000. Our latest grant in 1950 consisted of a 2-year grant from the Rockefeller Foundation of $60,000; that is to say, $30,000 a year for the International IPR.

I am sorry. Fifty thousand dollars for the International IPR divided into two installments of $20,000 and $30,000, and $60,000 to the American IPR divided into two installments of $30,000 each.

Mr. MORRIS. You are going to supplement that, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I will be glad to. We have a full record of the sources for each foundation.

Senator SMITH. Is that sort of a handbook?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do have copies of this, which is just a brief description of the organization. I will be glad to make additional copies available.

Senator EASTLAND. Thank you, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. How many members are there in the American Council of the IPR?

Mr. HOLLAND. At the present time approximately 1,100.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you aid individuals in obtaining grants from the various foundations to do research work?

Mr. HOLLAND. At times we have done this.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you tell us about that, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. On a number of occasions in addition to requesting funds for ourselves or for our own research program, the institute offices have brought to the attention of various foundations the fact that some university or research institution or some individual scholar is working on a particular piece of research which is in general related to the problems that the institute itself is interested in.

That is to say political, economic, and cultural conditions in the Far East. On a number of occasions, therefore, we have actually requested and sometimes recommended to the foundation officers that they should make grants directly to those institutions or individuals.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you estimate the number of people who obtained grants through your intercession in that way, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. Speaking for myself I would estimate I suppose between 10 and 15 over the whole period of my connection as a research officer back to 1933. If you wish, I can give you one or two examples that I remember.

Mr. MORRIS. I have a list here. How about Robert W. Barnett?

Mr. HOLLAND. I myself did not take part in this, but I can tell you the circumstances. This was not so much a direct request for funds. At that time the Rockefeller Foundation indicated that they would be prepared to give every year to the American IPR a fellowship for one or two qualified young men to get training in far-eastern studies. The procedure was that the American IPR executive committee would consider various candidates and then nominate several names to the Rockefeller Foundation.

The foundation would then select the one or two that they thought were suitable and award them a fellowship usually of about $1,800 or $2,500 a year. Mr. Barnett held one of those fellowships.

Mr. MORRIS. Who else have held those?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. Another man that I recall—I speak only from memory because this was the American IPR—was Mr. Walter Radius, of Stanford University. Another one was Mr. Lawrence Rosinger, who was being connected with the institute on another occasion. There were four or five. If you have the names, I would be glad to confirm them.

Mr. MORRIS. T. A. Bisson?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Bisson's case was different. Mr. Bisson's was more recent and was an example of where a specific grant was made to his university, the University of California, on a recommendation jointly from me and Professor Odegard, the head of his department at the university. This was about 2 or 3 years ago.

Mr. MORRIS. How about Mr. Grajdansev?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Grajdanzev, who goes under the name of Andrew Grad, is also a case of a special grant being made by the foundation to the IPR, but on the understanding—I should say to the international IPR—on the understanding it was to be used for his specific projects, namely, a very detailed sociological survey of a Japanese town. This was made on my recommendation supported, as always, by the chairman of my international research committee, Sir George Sansom.

Mr. MORRIS. You yourself had a grant, did you not?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. Well, I am not sure, but I can explain the circumstances. I went on leave from the Institute of Pacific Relations for a period of 1 year between 1931 and 1933. My purpose of going on leave was to take one of the regular Rockefeller Foundation social science fellowships for foreign study. I was entirely separated then from the institute.

This is part of the foundation regular fellowship series. It was not made to the IPR. It was awarded to me specifically in order to allow me to study in Cambridge, England.

Mr. MORRIS. How about E. Herbert Norman?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not recall the circumstances. I think it is quite possible he was given a special Rockefeller Foundation grant at the suggestion of Mr. Edward C. Carter, but I cannot be absolutely sure of that. I do know that Mr. Norman worked as a temporary research member of the international secretariat roughly about 1938 writing a book on Japanese economic history.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, how is it decided by the institute or how was it decided by the institute who should be selected for these various grants? Start with the case of Mr. Norman. How was the selection of Norman determined?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I can speak only from imperfect recollection here, but I am reasonably certain my account is accurate.

We needed an author for our inquiry series, which was to be a series of books designed to provide background information on the Sino-Japanese conflict on the possibility there might be a Sino-Japanese peace conference for which a great many background studies would be useful, not for the Government, but just for the general public.

As part of the series of reports on Japan we thought it was desirable to have a historical study showing how the Japanese system of government had evolved out of the old medieval system which came to an end with the restoration in 1868.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Norman had recently completed a graduate course at Harvard University under the great Japanese scholar, Mr. Elizayev, in specializing on the history of the Meiji period of Japan. That was the period of the restoration.

He had made a very exhaustive survey of all of the Japanese literature, was very familiar with Japanese language materials. We were informed by a number of experts in the Japanese field that he was uniquely qualified to write in this particular field. I know that Mr. Carter therefore approached him with a request that he should prepare this volume for us.

As I have said before, I believe it may have been in that connection that he asked the Rockefeller Foundation to give Mr. Norman a fellowship to enable him to work in our office preparing this book. This was in 1938. It was at this time when he was doing this research—Mr. Norman did most of his work in the Columbia University library.

I understand it was there that he first made the acquaintance or first saw and probably spoke to Dr. Karl Wittfogel, who has previously testified here.

Mr. MORRIS. You are an expert in the field of Chinese political affairs, are you not?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I would not say that. My own training has been in economics. If I have any specialty at all, it is in far eastern general economic problems. I have some knowledge of Chinese economic problems and as a research director I have had to generally familiarize myself with Chinese politics, too. But I do not consider myself a specialist in that field.

Mr. MORRIS. You also have had to deal with various organizations, particularly around New York City, that have to do with Chinese research?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I have.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you acquainted with an organization called the American Friends of the Chinese People?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am acquainted with it only in the sense that I have learned about it in very recent months. I knew it as the name of an organization, I suppose, as far back as 1941 or perhaps before that, just before Pearl Harbor, because I vaguely remember it as one of the organizations which was active in trying to organize American feeling to launch a boycott against Japan.

For some reason I have been looking in my own records. I seem to have had no connection with it and therefore in answer to Mr. Morris' question, it is only since my executive session before this committee some weeks ago when the question arose that I have taken the trouble to inquire a little about it. In that sense I have since become familiar.

Mr. MORRIS. What did you find the political nature of that organization to be?

Mr. HOLLAND. I find considerable disagreement. I find some people who say that it contained a number of left-wing people who urged policies of rather vigorous anti-Japanese character at that time, which some people today say were in line with the views of the Communists.

I found other people who say they knew about it who said that it was a mixed organization containing quite a number of eminent and well-known people who had quite different political points of view.

Digitized by Google

I cannot myself say that I am satisfied as to which is the more correct organization. Obviously it was a mixed organization. To what extent it could be properly called a Communist-front organization, I really have not been able to decide in my own mind.

Mr. MORRIS. People active in the IPR were very active in American Friends of the Chinese People, and in its journal, China Today; is that the fact?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MORRIS. Isn't China Today the publication? I mean the publication of The American Friends of the Chinese People?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, this again is a fact which I have ascertained for myself since just within the last year. I know that I had ascertained it before my executive session, but just precisely when —in any case in fairly recent years I knew of the existence of the publication China Today, but I had not collected it in my mind as being the official publication of this organization.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Frederick Field was secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations at a time when he was one of the editors of China Today, was he not?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have also tried to get some information on this because a similar question was asked me by Mr. Morris in the executive session. I myself knew that after 1945 that Mr. Field had this connection with the magazine China Today. I put it in that way for a very special reason.

When I say after 1945, I mean that at that time I was on Government duty in China. As you know, at about that time, sometime in 1945, the Amerasia case broke. After I returned to this country, I was curious to read more about it. In the course of inquiring about this, because I think it was in that connection that this matter was raised, I asked a number of people whether this had been a fact that Mr. Field had been editor of the magazine China Today.

A number of these people said yes, but they understood he wrote under a pseudonym. I am not sure whether he was ever on the magazine, on the masthead of the magazine, under his own name because I have not had a chance to look through the files.

Senator SMITH. Was he trying to hide who he was in writing these materials on account of his relationship with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I really don't know. I am not even sure whether this related to the period of after he had ceased to be an employee of the IPR, which was in 1940. So I am afraid I do not know the answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Holland, your reply seems to indicate that you mean to convey the idea you were not familiar with the publication China Today prior to the time when, being in China, you made these inquiries; is that correct?

Mr. HOLLAND. I made the inquiries after I returned from China at the end of 1945. The answer to your question is essentially "Yes," but I did know of the existence of this magazine. I am sure that I must have seen it occasionally in the library. But I have recently taken the trouble to look at one or two of the bound volumes which we still have in our library. I find I really was not familiar with it.

Mr. SOURWINE. The bound volumes were in your library at the time?

Mr. HOLLAND. Only 2 years. I don't know how that happened.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. What were those years?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I can't recall now, but I did take the trouble—I looked up in connection with another name which you may be asking me about later.

Mr. SOURWINE. You want the committee to understand it was not a magazine which you habitually read or frequently read or which you were at that time familiar with?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is quite true.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, you said Mr. Field used a pseudonym in China Today. Do you know what pseudonym?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think I said I was told Mr. Field used a pseudonym. I was told at that time that his pseudonym was Frederick Spencer.

Senator O'CONOR (presiding). Was any explanation given as to the reason for his use of the pseudonym?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; there was not, Mr. Chairman.

Senator O'CONOR. At that time did you hear any discussion at all as to why he was using it?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I did not, Mr. Chairman, and I am afraid I did not at that time ask the question. If I may continue a moment, Mr. Chairman, since I do want to give a full picture and since I have said I have recently tried to find out a little bit more more of the facts of this matter, I was told just the other day by a person in New York who said that he knew the actual circumstances of these pseudonyms that this information which I have just said that Mr. Field used the name of Frederick Spencer was in fact not correct; that Mr. Field actually wrote under the pseudonym of Lawrence Hearn.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who told you that?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Philip Jaffe told me this 2 or 3 days ago.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is it your intention to convey to the committee the impression that up until a few days ago you had no knowledge or information with regard to Mr. Field's using a pseudonym in writing for the publication China Today?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. As I have indicated, I learned about this fact shortly after my return from China in 1945.

Mr. SOURWINE. Prior to that time you had not known or heard of his using a pseudonym in writing for that magazine?

Mr. HOLLAND. To the best of my recollection that is correct.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Holland, had not you talked with Mr. Field after this inquiry began about the use he made of pseudonyms in writing those articles? Have you not discussed this with Mr. Field?

Mr. HOLLAND. Since this subcommittee's work began?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I have not discussed this.

Senator SMITH. It has never been mentioned between you and Mr. Field?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Senator SMITH. You have seen him frequently?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. I have seen him twice since the seizure of our files in February.

Senator SMITH. That is all.

Mr. MORRIS. The last 90 days he has been in jail.

Mr. HOLLAND. So I understand.

Digitized by Google

I want to be perfectly frank. I did see him because he came one day to my office soon after the seizure to ask what in the world it was all about.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you seen him in prison?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I have not. I saw him here. I was present in the audience the day he testified here.

Mr. MORRIS. You have testified in executive session, I believe, that it was your understanding that Frederick Field wrote under the name of Frederick Spencer. Who told you that?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have been trying to recall, Mr. Chairman, because I did make the statement in executive session, and I am sorry I have not been able to recall whom I learned it from. I know I talked to a large number of people when I returned from China about November 1945.

I am sorry; I really made an effort to try and recall, but I cannot at the moment. There may have been evidence in our files which would indicate it, but I cannot recall it.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, it just so happens that we had a sample copy of China Today ready for presentation today. I notice that on the cover the first article is Whither American Policy in China, by Lawrence Hearn, which Mr. Holland just testified that Mr. Jaffe said was the pen name of Frederick Field in China Today.

Mr. HOLLAND. May I ask the date, Mr. Chairman?

Senator O'CONOR. Yes, March 1936.

Did you wish to examine it?

Mr. SOURWINE. Is it possible Mr. Field might have written for that publication under both pseudonyms?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I can't answer. Obviously it is possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had at one time been told that he used the other pseudonym.

Mr. HOLLAND. As I say, late in 1945 I was told that he had used the name of Frederick Spencer, but apparently, according to Mr. Jaffe, that was wrong information.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Jaffe tell you that was wrong and he never used that name?

Mr. HOLLAND. What he told me was that the real fact was that the pseudonym used by Field was Lawrence Hearn.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your understanding was he intended to tell you he had never used the Spencer pseudonym?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. He didn't put it in so many words, but I interpreted him as meaning the previous statement that Field used the name of Spencer and that was wrong.

Mr. SOURWINE. In fairness to Mr. Jaffe and your other informant, whose name you can't recall, you cannot say now that Mr. Jaffe definitely did deny that he had ever used the name of Spencer?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; he did not deny it.

Mr. SOURWINE. That he was meant to refer to Mr. Field?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. I notice one of the editors of China Today is a man named Hansu Chan. Do you know who he is?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. I have also learned what some people have said is the real identity of Hansu Chan, namely, that it was Mr. Chao-ting Chi, whose name has appeared in these hearings before. I learned this fact also after I returned from China at the end of 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Where is Mr. Chi now?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chi, I am told, is somewhere in China as an official of one of the central banks in the Communist Government of China.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, he is a Chinese Communist official now?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I am not in a position to answer that, Mr. Chairman. I know he is a high official of a Chinese Communist bank.

Senator O'CONOR. Under the Communist regime?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. I have no knowledge of whether he is a Communist Party member or not.

Mr. MORRIS. He was a staff member of the Institute of Pacific Relations, was he not?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would describe him better as a temporary research worker, as I have indicated before. We kept a rather small regular staff, but we would engage specific research workers on a fee basis to write a particular report for us.

Senator O'CONOR. Over what period did that extend in his case?

Mr. HOLLAND. In Mr. Chi's case—I think I have the actual records—they are not here, but I know it was approximately between 1939 and 1941, probably in the middle, after which time Mr. Chi left us, leaving his work unfinished, I am sorry to say, in order to take a job with the Chinese National Government Currency Stabilization Board.

Mr. MORRIS. But, Mr. Holland, you will concede his association with the Institute of Pacific Relations was substantial? Mr. Mandel and I have gone through your files and noticed extremely frequent letters to and from Mr. Chi and continual references to Mr. Chi throughout. Will you make that concession?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I do not feel I should make that concession. If counsel will ask me more precise questions, I will be glad to answer.

Senator O'CONOR. Just what in your opinion was the extent of his association?

Mr. HOLLAND. The extent of his association, Mr. Chairman, was that, as I have described, of a research worker engaged for this period to write a specific book on China's wartime economic problems, which unfortunately he never finished.

In addition, he was, I think, prior to that, an occasional contributor to our magazine and a book reviewer. I think there is a record of his having attended one or more of our international conferences. I recall he was at our conference in 1936, I believe, in California.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you keep track of him after he left the institute, sir?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am not sure I would say "kept track." I certainly knew about his work because I was interested as an economist in the work of the Currency Stabilization Board.

Digitized by Google

I also saw Mr. Chi later when I visited in China, Chungking, in the middle of the war in 1943. At that time he had become a senior official in the Ministry of Finance.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you correspond with him?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think it is almost certain I did for the very simple reason I was very angry he had not finished up his report, and I was trying to get him to at least complete a portion of it which would not have the material that it would embarrass him as a government official, which we could get out. He eventually did succeed in that. We published in proof form only 100 copies of parts of his report.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you, subsequent to the war, continue to keep in touch with him?

Mr. HOLLAND. I did not keep in touch with him. When I went to China, visited Shanghai in 1937, I called on a number of officials in the——

Mr. SOURWINE. We are talking about subsequent to the war.

Mr. HOLLAND. I meant 1947. In 1947 I visited a number of Chinese officials in Shanghai including leading members of the banks there. At that time I met Dr. Chi, who was then the director of research department of the Central Bank of China, which was still then a Nationalist organization. He was at that time very interested in having one of his associates prepare an economic history of the Manchu dynasty in China and wanted me to take it up with the Rockefeller Foundation, take up the question of whether some grant would be got for 24 scholars who had done a good deal of the work on it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know him at that time as Hansu Chan?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. I must have known since, as I say, the name had been mentioned to me in 1945. I never thought of calling him because I had known him previously as Chi. We always called each other by the first name. I called him Chi.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you continue contact with him after 1947?

Mr. HOLLAND. I did not continue contact, but I think I wrote one letter to him some time between 1947 and probably 1949. I am afraid I don't recall that. It is possible because I was still curious to know whether he might still be in a position to give us something for the grant we made.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you continue the relationship after that time, let us say after 1949, either personal contact or correspondence with him?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not to the best of my recollections, Mr. Chairman, but again without looking at my files I can't be sure. I do want to say a word on the point which has already been brought into the hearings a little earlier in a letter. I think some time in early 1950 in one of the other hearings there is a reference to a letter from me to Mr. Ivison Macadam, the director of our British unit, in which I make a reference to Mr. Chi and describe him as someone who may be one of our most influential friends in China.

My reason for that was very simple. Mr. Macadam had written to me saying that a prominent official of the British-American Tobacco Co., who is one of his own board members, was going out to China shortly and wanted to visit a number of cities and also get in touch with a number of Chinese professors and research people, and asked me if I could give the names.

Digitized by Google

I gave the names of several professors in Peking and Shanghai who had previously been active in the China branch of the IPR. Also along with this list I mentioned Dr. Chi as the research director of this bank. I said that, "As you know, he has now become an official in the People's Bank of China and may be one of our more influential friends in China."

Mr. SOURWINE. At least you would not want the committee to understand that Mr. Chi was a person whose connection and importance was so negligible he dropped out of sight after he left the institute?

Mr. HOLLAND. I don't believe I could answer the question that way, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SOURWINE. It sounded a little bit as though you were attempting to make a point something like that earlier.

Mr. HOLLAND. I would like my testimony to stand as it is, indicating that I had a specific meeting with Dr. Chi in 1947, that I may have written him a letter between 1947 and 1949, and that I made a reference to him early in 1950 in writing to Mr. Macadam. I did not see Dr. Chi after 1947 because it was not possible to go back.

Mr. SOURWINE. The reference in 1950 was that you considered him one of IPR's more influential friends in China?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I did not put it that way. To the best of my recollection the phrase was "he may be one of our more influential friends in China."

Mr. SOURWINE. By "our" did you not mean the IPR?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. I thought that is what I said.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Morris, I think there is a certain real distinction in my saying he may be one. I don't want to quibble about it, however.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just one more question. You have just recounted three specific instances of contact with Dr. Chi.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, correction, please. The last was not a contact, nor was the in-between one, which is a possibility of my having written a letter.

Mr. SOURWINE. You however enumerated those instances in such a way that the impression might have been gathered that it was an exclusive list. In other words, that it included all of your contacts either in person or by correspondence. Did you intend it that way?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think I have made it clear that so far as——

Mr. SOURWINE. You can answer that "Yes" or "No." Did you intend it that way? Did you intend that to be an exclusive list?

Mr. HOLLAND. I did not intend it to be an exclusive list. Obviously it might have been.

Mr. MORRIS. May we get back to the American Friends of the Chinese People in China Today? We have mentioned two editors, two, I believe, of the three editors of that publication, Mr. Frederick Field, who was writing under the name of Lawrence Hearn, Mr. Chao-ting Chi, who was writing under the name of Hansu Chan.

The third was J. W. Phillips. Do you know who he was?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not know from direct knowledge, or I do not know certainly, but I have a recollection—where I picked it up I don't know—that Mr. Phillips was in fact Mr. Jaffe.

Mr. MORRIS. That is Philip Jaffe?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he tell you he was Phillips?

Mr. HOLLAND. I can't recall, but I have it somewhere in my mind. I put it that way because I think this question was asked me in the executive session earlier. Therefore, it has become part of my memory. I can't be quite sure whether I had it in my mind before that or only since.

Senator O'CONNOR. Mr. Holland, in your recent conference with Mr. Jaffe in which he discussed the use by Field of a pseudonym, did he make any mention of the fact that he had been using one himself?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, he did not.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention here——

Senator SMITH. Do you have any doubt in your mind but that this pseudonym of Phillips for Mr. Jaffe was a pseudonym he used?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think, Senator, that it certainly is a very good presumption. I am under oath. Therefore, when you ask me something specific I try to make it. Certainly my own general feeling, since whenever this recent date was, has been that Mr. Jaffe wrote under the name of Phillips.

Mr. SOURWINE. When you were talking with Mr. Jaffe about Mr. Field's pseudonym, or at any other time, had you discussed with him the question of pseudonyms he himself, Mr. Jaffe, might have used?

Mr. HOLLAND. I did not, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have never heard him state whether he did or did not use a pseudonym in writing?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I have not heard him.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do have the letter that we both made reference to here. It has already been introduced as an exhibit. It is exhibit 1–A. It is dated February 10, 1950. It is from Mr. Holland to Mr. Macadam and the last paragraph reads:

> If Loudon goes to Shanghai I hope he will see Chi Chao-ting, vice president of the Bank of China who has recently been named as Chinese Communist delegate to the Economic and Social Council of the UN. You may remember that Chi was attached to the IPR International Secretariat in 1940 and wrote one of the inquiry reports on China's economic development (distributed only in brief form because it was incomplete). He may well prove to be one of our more influential friends in China.

That is 1950.

Just bearing on the reputation of this American Friends of the Chinese People organization, Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention the fact that it has been cited as a Communist front by two particular organizations. I don't want to accept this as conclusive, but I would like it accepted on the general reputation of the American Friends of the Chinese People.

Mr. Mandel, will you read that into the record?

Senator SMITH. May I ask a question first?

Senator O'CONOR. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Holland, the last paragraph of this letter of February 10, 1950, which Mr. Morris just read to you, shows that you say that this man Chi has recently been named as a Chinese Communist delegate to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. Do you recall where you got that information?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; from the newspapers.

Senator SMITH. That is all?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. You had not heard directly from Chi himself?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read the testimony of Mr. Field that it was through Mr. Chi he was appointed foreign agent of three Chinese Communist principals?

Mr. HOLLAND. I heard Mr. Field state that here in his testimony.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel.

Mr. MANDEL. "American Friends of the Chinese People, also known as Friends of the Chinese People, has been cited as a Communist front by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of March 29, 1944," this being prior to the issuance of the Attorney General's list. This organization is of course no longer in existence. "It was also similarly cited by the California Committee on Un-American Activities in its report of 1948."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, will you therefore acknowledge that the three editors—Mr. Chi, Frederick V. Field, and Mr. Jaffe—were people who were active in the IPR during the time they were editors of China Today?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to answer if counsel will indicate the dates. I am not quite clear in my mind when they were active in China Today.

Mr. MORRIS. I have here March 1935's list, Hansu Chan, editor, page 102 in the volume No. 6 of March 1935.

Mr. HOLLAND. So far as Dr. Chi is concerned, he was not active at all. As I have indicated, he was first employed by us in 1939, I believe. He may have contributed articles before that, but I can't recall definitely. Certainly I would say he was definitely not active in the institute as early as 1935.

This doesn't mean he could not have been a member or an occasional contributor.

Mr. MORRIS. How about Mr. Jaffe?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Jaffe, to the best of my recollection, was also not active at all at that time. I can't again remember——

Mr. MORRIS. When did Mr. Jaffe become active?

Mr. HOLLAND. My best recollection was when I was invited to attend the only conference of ours which he attended, which was in 1939 at Virginia Beach. It is possible Mr. Jaffe may have been an ordinary member before 1939.

Mr. MORRIS. I have here in a list of things just casually made up by Mr. Mandel that Mr. Chi had an article in March 1936 in your publication, Pacific Affairs.

Mr. HOLLAND. As I have indicated, Mr. Chairman, it is quite possible that Dr. Chi contributed to our publications before 1939 when he was engaged by us to write his book. I would not say he was active at all. I do emphasize that fact.

Mr. MORRIS. You do concede, however, that the three of them were active in China Today and in the IPR?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I do not concede that blanket statement because, as I indicated previously, by any reasonable meaning of the word Dr. Chi was not active. When I use the word "active" I think most reasonable people would say you were dealing with people over a considerable period of time who were taking a leading part in the committees of the institute or attending a great number of its conferences and writing very frequently for its publications.

Senator O'CONOR. In that connection do you agree with the observation that Mr. Morris made before that the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations reveal considerable correspondence and other indications of the activity of Mr. Chi?

Mr. HOLLAND. Of course I acknowledge that. As much of this correspondence was somewhat of a quarrel between me and Mr. Chi as to when he was going to finish his book, I don't think that it necessarily indicates he was actively associated in the ordinary sense of the word. I don't want to extend this conference or to quibble, but I think it is a valid distinction.

Senator O'CONOR. I think you have made it quite clear.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read the volumes of China Today that you do have in your office?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. I am sorry I have not read them. I looked at them rather quickly to get some idea of the kind of people who contributed to them and also to see if it was true that these pseudonyms appeared on the masthead.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, on the basis of everything will you give us an estimate on your part as to whether or not you think this organization, the American Friends of the Chinese People, publishing as it did China Today, was an organization that was friendly to the Communists? Will you concede that much?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I think I indicated before that I got two rather contradictory impressions from the people I asked about this. My own feeling is that it is not possible to make the statement which counsel has made. I think it is clear that one can find in this magazine a number of articles which are sympathetic to the Chinese Communists.

As I said, I only looked at it rather hastily. I don't recall noting any articles which were sympathetic to communism in general or to Russia because I think it dealt chiefly with the Far East. Undoubtedly there were, I think, articles which were sympathetic to the Chinese Communists.

Also I have noticed that the magazine carried articles by people who were obviously not Communists, one of them being Senator Schwellenbach, of Washington, another Mr. George Fitch, of the YMCA in China, who has subsequently, as many people know, become one of the most ardent opponents of communism and a most vigorous spokesman for the Chinese Nationalists, and his wife, Mrs. Geraldine Fitch, together with a number of others. I just recall those three at the moment.

Mr. MORRIS. You have made a survey of China Today to the extent you know about those people?

Mr. HOLLAND. As I indicated, I looked hastily through the volume just at the title pages and content pages to get a quick idea of what sort of names appeared on the front and only for these two volumes.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. You claim you are in no position to say that China Today is a pro-Communist publication?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; that is my considered judgment.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know the Canadian affiliate of the American Friends of the Chinese People, called the Canadian Friends of the Chinese People?

Mr. HOLLAND. I know this only by having heard it mentioned in the testimony, I think, related to one of the earlier sessions here, and I have forgotten which one.

Mr. MORRIS. What was that?

Mr. HOLLAND. It had some connection with Dr. Norman, but I don't recall which session it was brought up in.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I don't think this item has come up. We are introducing this item for the first time today.

Mr. HOLLAND. I have been under the impression that Mr. Norman was described somewhere as the secretary or had some connection with the Canadian Friends of the Chinese People, and the name of that organization came to me then very recently as a surprise because I had not heard of it before.

I am perfectly willing to give another possible reason for my knowing this because I am trying to be very candid. My recollection was, as I indicated, but it is also true that Mr. Jaffe in the course of talking to me about this matter of Frederick Field's pseudonym said that—I don't know whether he he said he knew or he had heard Mr. Norman had been a member of the organization called the Canadian Friends of the Chinese People. It sticks in my mind because it came as a surprise to me.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he tell you he was secretary?

Mr. HOLLAND. I believe he did, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SOURWINE. In what connection did Mr. Jaffe bring that up?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Jaffe told me this—I am a little embarrassed at having to tell this, but since you have asked it I will put it quite frankly—Mr. Jaffe came to tell me that Mr. Morris had been to see him to ask if Mr. Jaffe would cooperate with this committee in providing all the information he knew about either people in the Institute of Pacific Relations or people in the various Communist organizations.

Mr. Jaffee told me he had met with Mr. Morris at lunch with his lawyer and that they had discussed a number of these questions. He did not indicate that he had discussed Mr. Field's—yes, I think he did. He indicated a question of Mr. Field's pseudonym had been discussed. I can't recall whether he said that the question of the Canadian Friends of the Chinese People had been discussed.

I think it was at this conference that Mr. Jaffe himself probably told me. I say probably because I am not absolutely sure in my mind. I have the recollection, as I stated first, that I had learned of this through hearing it in the testimony. That is very natural because I have been trying to study this voluminous testimony for the last several weeks. It is certainly hard for me to remember exactly where I learned each particular item.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Jaffe mention to you that Mr. Morris discussed with him the question of his, Jaffe's, own use of a pseudonym?

Mr. HOLLAND. I don't believe he did, Mr. Sourwine.

Digitized by Google

Senator SMITH. When did this conversation with Mr. Jaffe take place, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think it was about 7 to 10 days ago, to the best of my recollection.

Senator SMITH. Where did it take place?

Mr. HOLLAND. In my office.

Senator SMITH. Did Mr. Jaffe come to your office?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Did he come voluntarily?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, he did.

Senator SMITH. You had not heard before about any conversations he had with Mr. Morris or anybody else about this matter?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. It came as rather a surprise to me. I have met Mr. Jaffe more on occasions in recent months because he and literally scores of other people who cannot afford to buy the transcript of these hearings just besieged my office asking if they could look at certain passages, particularly Mr. Budenz' numerous accusations. This is the reason for Mr. Jaffe having asked if he could see certain passages.

I do not recall his having—I have forgotten the original question.

Senator SMITH. The point I was trying to find out was whether or not Mr. Jaffe had come to your office to tell you about this conversation of his own accord or if you had heard about it and asked him to come?

Mr. HOLLAND. He came to tell me.

Senator SMITH. He did tell you about the conversation he had with Mr. Morris?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he indicate to you whether or not he was going to testify?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; he did not. I got the impression—I was still frankly rather—well, he did not. I am glad to tell you if you wish anything further, but the answer is "No."

Mr. SOURWINE. I think the the committee would be interested in the impression you got since you stated you got one.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, but if my counsel wishes to advise me that it is not relevant——

Mr. SOURWINE. I don't think your counsel can rule on what is a germane question.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to accept your wish.

Senator O'CONOR. We are not entirely interested in the matter of your opinion as we are in the matter of facts. If there are any facts on which you did base an opinion, it would certainly be relevant.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am glad to tell you facts that registered in my mind. This is why I said I was embarrassed: Because it seemed rather striking. I got the fairly definite impression from Mr. Jaffe's conversation that Mr. Morris had been hoping to get some cooperation from Mr. Jaffe on the ground if he testified he would be immune from any subsequent legal action because of a pending immunity law—I am not familiar with the details of it, but I have seen a discussion in the papers, by which certain witnesses if they agreed to testify would not be held liable subsequently for anything they might have said.

It was the first I heard of such a case, and therefore it stuck in my mind.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. Does Mr. Jaffe make a practice of informing you with regard to contacts he may have in connection with the Institute of Pacific Relations or related matters?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; it was very surprising. It is very rare indeed. I never had such an experience.

Mr. SOURWINE. This was the first instance in which Mr. Jaffe had made any such report to you?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have others who have been contacted by representatives of this committee come to you with reports of their contacts?

Mr. HOLLAND. I recall one other case, Mr. Raymond Dennett, who told me simply that he had been questioned in executive session and indicated that part of the questions dealt with the staff set-up when he was our executive secretary.

I must say in fairness to Mr. Dennett he did not give me any precise indication of the question, just indicated it covered that subject.

Mr. MORRIS. He went into a little more detail than that?

Mr. HOLLAND. He told me what his general attitude was, as I think you know from his testimony, and part of it concerned the question of the union of the employees.

Mr. MORRIS. You made a memorandum in fact of his conversation, did you not?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you make that memorandum available to this committee?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; I am glad to do so.

Mr. MORRIS. Then we will note the precise extent to which he did relate the material of the conversation.

Mr. HOLLAND. It was on the telephone from Boston; therefore, I jotted down the main points.

Mr. MORRIS. We were at the point of discussing the various grants that had been given to individuals through the intervention and the aid of the Institute of Pacific Relations. We were discussing the fact that Herbert Norman had gotten a grant. That is how we got into this business of the American Friends of the Chinese People, "China Today" and the Canadian Friends of the Chinese People.

I notice the next name on this list is Mr. Walter Radius.

I think you mentioned him.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. The next name is Lawrence K. Rosinger. Can you tell what Rosinger's associations with the IPR had been?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. Mr. Rosinger, I think then a recent graduate from Columbia, I believe was awarded one of the junior fellowships to work at the IPR by the Rockefeller Foundation probably back about 1939, 1938. I don't have the years because, as I say, I was not in the American IPR at that time. I did see him around the office. Then he left us after 1 year. I think he wrote one or two articles and a pamphlet at that time.

I believe he went to work for the Indian trade commissioner's office in New York. Subsequent to that I believe he went on the staff of the Foreign Policy Association. Then somewhere in 1943 while he was still employed, I think by the Foreign Policy Association, I invited him to prepare a short book for the Institute of Pacific Relations on China's wartime politics.

Digitized by Google

This consisted of about 50 pages of a brief analysis and description followed by some 50 pages of documents about the Chinese Government set-up. This was published, I think, in 1944 or 1945 by the Princeton University Press and is still available. I think there are a few copies still on sale. It had a rather good reception, and it has for a long time been regarded as a useful reference work.

Then about 1948 when the Foreign Policy Association was going through rather drastic financial retrenchment and they decided to drop most of their research staff, I learned that Mr. Rosinger was going to be leaving and discussed with him the question of whether he would be prepared to undertake a research assignment for the Institute of Pacific Relations. He said that he would.

I therefore went to the Rockefeller Foundation officers and asked if they would be prepared to give a substantial grant—I think it was $6,000 or $9,000—to enable him to direct a rather large book on the postwar Far East. Originally it was planned as essentially a one-man job, but after a few months we realized it was too big a job for one man and therefore it eventually became a symposium by 13 authors and three of the chapters were written by Mr. Rosinger.

This book under the title "The State of Asia" was published last year by Alfred Knopf under the auspices of the American Institute of Pacific Relations.

So then Mr. Rosinger finished that assignment about September 1950 and went off our payroll and is no longer employed by the IPR. He went off and was awarded a rather generous what is called area training fellowship by the Social Science Research Council of Washington to complete a detailed study of the Chinese Renaissance, on which I believe he is still working.

Mr. MORRIS. What was Mr. Rosinger's role in your Indian conference in 1949?

Mr. HOLLAND. In 1949 we held a special conference in Delhi on Indian-American relations. This was financed in considerable part by the Carnegie Corp., which made rather large grants to, I think, seven or eight university presidents to go out to India in the belief that India was going to become suddenly much more important, and that not only should you send experts out there, but it was important to get the heads of universities to realize the importance of India and of Indian studies in their universities.

Among them was the new president of Cornell, President Malott; President Darden of the University of Virginia; President Hancher of Iowa, and a number of others.

It happened just before this conference was to start there was a reception at the Waldorf-Astoria for Mr. Nehru, Prime Minister Nehru. In the reception it happened that Mr. Barnard, the president of the Rockefeller Foundation, was talking to Mr. Shiva Rao, who has been one of the long-time advisers of the Prime Minister. They got talking about this forthcoming conference.

Mr. Rao said, "I think it is important you ought to send out a number of younger people who are interested in specializing for some time in Indian affairs and also who know a good deal about east Asia because one of the big problems is that India has been so long cut off from east Asia we don't really have enough people who know about Japan and China."

Digitized by Google

This conference I understand was subsequently followed up in the Rockefeller Foundation, and they called my predecessor, Mr. Clayton Lane, the secretary of the American IPR, to inquire whether it would serve the institute's purposes if a special grant were made available to enable Mr. Rosinger to go out to this conference and also to make a tour of India.

Mr. Lane naturally said "Yes," and I think a grant of something like $2,000 was made available for travel.

In connection with that conference also Mr. Rosinger wrote a report called Indian-American Relations. This was subsequently published by Macmillan under the title of "India and the United States." This volume here is the proceedings of this Indian-American conference.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, you will notice in the report on the India-American Relations Conference, this digest here, that the rapporteur of the report was Lawrence K. Rosinger.

Mr. HOLLAND. That was true. As I indicated, he prepared one of the documents for this conference.

Mr. MORRIS. That indicates active participation in IPR affairs as late as 1949?

Mr. HOLLAND. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, I noticed your press release. Did you read the testimony of Mr. Canning before our committee about Mr. Rosinger?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, Mr. Chairman. I am not sure whether I read it. But I was here that morning, so I certainly heard the testimony.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know that Mr. Canning had identified Mr. Rosinger as a member of the Communist Party in 1940?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. In 1940?

Mr. HOLLAND. Did I know in 1940?

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know he identified in 1940 Lawrence Rosinger as a member of the Communist Party at a time prior to that?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I did not. I heard it for the first time when he testified here a few weeks ago.

Mr. SOURWINE. So the record may be clear, let me rephrase the question.

Did you know that Mr. Canning had identified Mr. Rosinger as having been, in 1940, a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; I heard him say so here.

Mr. MORRIS. You did hear that he testified before this committee that Lawrence Rosinger was a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have already answered that. It was the same question.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, there was public testimony before the New York State legislative committee at that time that Lawrence Rosinger, according to the testimony of Mr. William Canning, was a member of the Communist Party.

Mr. HOLLAND. This I did not know. I would have answered if you had made the thing clear.

Mr. CROSSMAN. Might I ask that you read what he said? I was there, and he said he couldn't tell whether he testified to that fact publicly or not. I heard him. He said he testified twice, once privately and once publicly. He couldn't remember whether he had testified to that fact publicly or not.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. I had asked Mr. Holland the question whether he knew that Mr. Canning had identified Mr. Rosinger to have been a member of the Communist Party in 1940.

Mr. CROSSMAN. Publicly.

Mr. MORRIS. Publicly. The answer is——

Mr. CROSSMAN. He doesn't know; but I do remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just a minute, Mr. Chairman, please. I don't believe Mr. Crossman can testify for Mr. Holland or that he should on this record purport to correct and change Mr. Holland's testimony.

Senator O'CONOR. Yes; Mr. Holland has answered it.

Mr. CROSSMAN. I am not purporting to change it.

Senator O'CONOR. Proceed with the next question.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this problem of identifying somebody to have been a member of the Communist Party, great care has to be exercised at all times. I think ordinarily we would not introduce the executive session which takes place prior to the full session into the public record. But I think I would like to reintroduce at this time the testimony of Mr. Canning at executive session in connection with Lawrence Rosinger's membership in the Communist Party.

Mr. Mandel, will you read into the record the testimony of Mr. Canning? Mr. William Canning had been a member of the City College unit of the Communist Party. He was on the staff of the City College at the time.

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us, Mr. Canning, what you knew of a man named Lawrence Rosinger?

Mr. CANNING. I knew Lawrence Rosinger at City College where in 1935 I became an instructor in history. Rosinger was a graduate of City College either of that year, 1935, or 1936. I knew him fairly well during the few years of my party membership.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know him as a Communist Party member?

Mr. CANNING. I knew him as a Communist Party member.

Mr. MORRIS. How do you know that, Mr. Canning?

Mr. CANNING. From his own discussions with me. He spoke frequently about his activities in the Communist unit at Columbia University.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you in that unit, Mr. Canning?

Mr. CANNING. No; I was not.

Mr. MORRIS. In what unit were you at that time?

Mr. CANNING. I belonged to the City College of New York unit.

Mr. MORRIS. You disclosed to him you were in that unit?

Mr. CANNING. Yes; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. So that when you two discussed various political activities you discussed them as a member of one unit talking to a member of another unit?

Mr. CANNING. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you give us his unit?

Mr. CANNING. The Columbia University unit.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it customary for members of one Communist unit to disclose that fact to members of another Communist unit and discuss the activities?

Mr. CANNING. That happened quite frequently during that period. Possibly in later years there was more tightening up of secrecy.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any reason to believe that Mr. Rosinger left the Communist Party?

Mr. CANNING. No; I have not.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know what Rosinger is doing now?

Mr. CANNING. So far as I know he is on the staff of the IPR.

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. What was the date of this, Mr. Chairman? Is it permissible to tell us the date?

Mr. MORRIS. I will strike out the last sentence if it is a question of whether he is a member of the Institute. Communist Party membership is what I am talking about.

Have you heard the testimony of Mr. Karl Wittfogel?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; I was here.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read the testimony of Mr. Budenz about Mr. Rosinger being a member of the Communits Party?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I have not read that. I saw it reported in the paper. Mr. Budenz has named so many names I did not actually read the testimony, but I saw the report in the paper.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman,, I don't think it would be necessary to read Mr. Wittfogel's or Mr. Budenz's testimony at this point.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, before counsel finishes with this subject of Dr. Wittfogel's testimony, I would like to say a word or two regarding the allegations concerning Mr. Rosinger made by Dr. Wittfogel.

Senator O'CONOR. Inasmuch as you have been asked generally about the other session, you may do so.

Mr. HOLLAND. I say this because naturally I want to indicate that I have been taking the work of this committee seriously and quite naturally therefore I was very disturbed when Dr. Wittfogel, whom I have known a long time—we have been cordial friends for a long time, as late as last year I sublet his apartment. Therefore I was quite disturbed when he made the statement he considered Mr. Rosinger to be a Communist. I spoke to Mr. Rosinger about it afterward as soon as I could.

And particularly I was concerned about Dr. Wittfogel's statement that he apparently reached this conclusion in large part on the basis of certain of Mr. Rosinger's writings. Therefore, what my chief conconcern was, is there anything in Mr. Rosinger's two principal books for the IPR which would give ground for this?

I therefore asked Mr. Rosinger to talk to me about it. He did. He gave me a brief memorandum, which I will not read textually, but if you will permit me, I would like to look at it to refresh my memory as I talk to you.

Essentially, however, it was pointed out to me by Mr. Rosinger that he had not come in to the——

Senator SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering about this. Is that a proper way to get Mr. Rosinger's testimony in? If he wants to testify, I would be in favor of hearing him.

Senator O'CONOR. I do not think it is proper for one witness to testify for another.

Mr. HOLLAND. I would much prefer the other. My only point was that I felt some time in the hearings the rest of this story should be heard.

Senator SMITH. In other words, you think Mr. Rosinger would like to be heard here?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I can't answer that directly. All I was saying if there is to be testimony, certainly it would be better for him to testify.

Digitized by Google

Senator O'CONOR. He should be given an opportunity, but if he wishes to deny it, he should come in person and take an oath and testify rather than do it through another person.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

May I add one point further, which I think is valid for me? My chief concern was the quality of the books he had written for the Institute of Pacific Relations because it is possible that he might have had other affiliations long before I knew him. I therefore did take the trouble to look at these publications. I do know with all sincerity and submit to the committee that any honest appraisal of these books I have mentioned—China's Wartime Politics and India and the United States—would show they are truly scholarly and balanced pieces of work.

This is certainly confirmed by a number of reviews in very reputable, scholarly publications. Not only that, this most recent book which is mentioned, namely The State of Asia, contains a chapter on China by Mr. Rosinger. Quite naturally there have been differing opinions on that particular chapter.

The New York Times was somewhat critical of it, called the book as a whole extremely good and included Mr. Rosinger's chapter on India, but was critical of the China chapter.

On the other hand, I find that the Catholic journal, Commonweal, praised the book very highly and particularly singled out the chapter on China as admirable, I don't want to always quote reviews, but it did seem this was a pertinent point from the point of view——

Senator SMITH. Have you the book?

Mr. HOLLAND. I don't have it here.

That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as Mr. Holland has characterized the testimony of Mr. Wittfogel, at this time I think we should read it into the record. It is very brief. It amounts to about two lines.

Senator O'CONOR. From what page are you reading?

Mr. MANDEL. This is page 313 of the testimony of August 7, 1951:

Dr. WITTFOGEL. I met Rosinger there, and he was treated as a Communist and spoken of as a Communist by Finklestein.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you read the preceding part?

Mr. MANDEL (reading):

Mr. MORRIS. Can you tell us more about Lawrence Rosinger's experience at that time? You testified about Moses Finklestein's Communist study group and Rosinger was a member of that. Can you tell us anything further?

Mr. WITTFOGEL. I don't remember whether it was a permanent group. It was an institution. I was invited a very few times. I met Rosinger there and he was treated as a Communist and spoken of as a Communist by Finklestein. And afterward I met Rosinger a number of times and up to my formal break he was a very friendly man.

Mr. MORRIS. I introduce that in the record because Mr. Holland has said that Mr. Wittfogel has testified that Rosinger was a Communist from Rosinger's writings.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am sure at a later stage in Dr. Wittfogel's remarks he did discuss Mr. Rosinger's writings. Specifically he said he had taken part in helping some people in Seattle and sent a memorandum to the executive secretary of the American IPR protesting against some of Mr. Rosinger's writings, or rather, protesting against his being engaged.

Digitized by Google

If I may add one more point because I have taken the trouble to have this compiled, Mr. Rosinger's book China's Wartime Politics was described in the United States Quarterly Book List published by the Library of Congress as "One of the few dispassionate accounts of current Chinese politics to appear in English in recent years."

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you read that book list?

Mr. HOLLAND. The quarterly book list?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. I have read the list. I have not seen this particular review. This is being compiled by my staff. I am willing to leave it out if you wish.

Senator O'CONOR. Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, I don't want to interrupt your line of questioning, but are we getting close to a recess?

Mr. MORRIS. I think so. On the question of the grants, who received the grants, I think I can put that off until a later time.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have one matter that will take a few minutes if the chairman will permit. I would like to close it up at this morning's session. It jumps quite a ways from anything we have discussed before.

I have here, which I will hand you in a moment, a clipping from the Washington Post of February 10, 1951, being an Associated Press story—that was the time of the subpenaing before this committee of the records of the IPR—and I call your attention to the two marked paragraphs which I will now read:

As for the subcommittee's seeing the files, Holland said "We have no objection to their being seen by any properly accredited agency provided they are used fairly and nothing is quoted out of context."

He said the IPR voluntarily opened all its files to the FBI last summer when McCarthy's charges were first made. He said an FBI team spent several weeks examining them.

I would like to ask you, sir, if you would examine that news story and tell the committee if it reports in substantially accurate fashion what you said to the newspaper men at that time.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, Mr. Chairman, it does.

Mr. SOURWINE. I hold here in my hand, and I will show you this in a moment, a press release headed:

For immediate release, Institute of Pacific Relations, 1 East Fifty-fourth Street, New York, Telephone Eldorado 5-1759, Statement of IPR Secretary General on Seizure of Institute's Back Files.

I want to read from that, but first I will ask you if that is a press release which you issued. The first page is all I will ask you to identify. That is all I will read from at this time.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I identify this.

Mr. SOURWINE. I would like to read from it.

Mr. HOLLAND. May I just check the date? I am afraid it is not given.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you read the first page?

Mr. HOLLAND (reading):

Statement of IPR secretary general on Seizure of the Institute's Back Files—dated 2/9/50. That is February 9, 1950.

Commenting on the statement of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee investigating un-American activities—

I am afraid I didn't have the title exact then.

Digitized by Google

Senator SMITH. Was that 1950 or 1951?

Mr. HOLLAND. It is obviously a mistake, Mr. Chairman. It refers to this year—

* * * that it had subpenaed "several thousand documents belonging to the IPR," Mr. William L. Holland, secretary general of the Institute stated today that these documents consisted of old correspondence files mostly relating to the years 1925 to 1945. He denied that these files had "recently been transferred" from New York, but said that they were moved during the summer of 1949 in order to make space in the Institute's overcrowded files at its New York office. To avoid storage charges, the Institute, he said, asked Mr. Edward C. Carter, the former secretary general of the Institute from 1933 to 1946, to store them in the barn belonging to his summer home in Lee, Mass.

Holland stated that the contents of these files had been well known to the FBI since the summer of 1950 at which time he and Mr. Clayton Lane, then an executive of the American IPR, wrote Mr. J. Edgar Hoover inviting the FBI to make a thorough investigation of all the IPR files and records both in New York and in Lee. Holland said that he and Mr. Lane took this action because the IPR's work has always been open in the matter of public record. During subsequent weeks. a group of FBI agents made a thorough search of all the IPR files and were given full permission to copy or photostat any material they wished to reproduce.

Holland said that the institute's officers had no objection to making these files of the institute available to any accredited United States agency, but said he felt the Senate subcommittee should have served the subpena on the institute's officers who are the proper custodians.

Mr. SOURWINE. I would like to ask you, sir, again, if that is a press release which you issued?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are the statements therein true?

Mr. HOLLAND. They were true, to the best of my belief and conviction.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you now believe them to have been true at the time they were made?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SOURWINE. You stated that the files had recently been transferred from New York, or rather you denied that the files had been transferred from New York but said they were moved during the summer of 1949 in order to make space in the institute's overcrowded files at its New York office.

Senator O'CONOR. Will you answer audibly so the reporter can get it?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is the statement in my press release.

Mr. SOURWINE. That statement necessarily implies, does it not, that the files were moved out of the institute's New York office and up to Lee, Mass.?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; it does, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that what actually happened?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. If I may explain the exact circumstances, I will be glad to do so.

Mr. SOURWINE. They were moved to Lee directly?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; not directly but first to a warehouse in the Bronx where some older files had also been stored for a time. These, in turn, were put together and put on a truck and sent to Lee.

Mr. MORRIS. What warehouse was that, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry; I don't recall it. I gave the name to the FBI. I know we have a record.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that a commercial warehouse where you rented space?

Mr. HOLLAND. The reason was this, Mr. Chairman: that warehouse, I understand, had stored a great deal of bulky goods for Russian war relief during the war and thus was known to Mr. Edward C. Carter. When we were looking for a place to put some of our old files when we moved from our previous office in 1943—I think it was at 129 East Fifty-second Street—Mr. Carter spoke to the manager of this warehouse who agreed that since they had so much business through Mr. Carter, they would give us free storage for this relatively small amount of stuff.

Mr. MORRIS. What kind of business had they from Mr. Carter?

Mr. HOLLAND. He was president of Russian War Relief. They had thousands of tons of clothing they were shipping to Russia.

So this material in 1943 was sent to this warehouse. In 1948, rather. We had two floors in our present building. But for reasons of financial retrenchment we decided to give up one and consolidate on one. That meant there was a problem of excessive overcrowding of files. So, therefore, we said, "Why don't we move some of our back files here," and at the same time or approximately that time, the manager of the warehouse said "I am sorry, I have got a lot of business now and I don't believe I can go on giving you free storage."

So we decided we would have to put them somewhere else.

At this stage, Mr. Carter said, "Why not—since we are not going to be using them, and I will probably want to consult them in writing my memoirs and looking over the stuff for the proposed history of the IPR—send them up to my barn?" His barn, by the way, is not a barn in the ordinary sense of the word. It has been renovated and consists of offices and a library and a regular study room.

Mr. SOURWINE. It has all the usual appurtenances of a barn, does it not?

Mr. HOLLAND. I would say it is anything but typical of a barn. It is made over to look like an office.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have they removed the manure chute?

Mr. HOLLAND. I'm not sure. I didn't examine it the last time.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean your reference to that manure chute was without knowledge as to whether there was one?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do know there was a pile at the back of the barn. Whether the chute is there, I cannot say.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead, Mr. Holland.

Mr. HOLLAND. Somewhere in the summer—I don't recall the exact month—the old files already in the Bronx warehouse together with some of the files in our present office were put on a truck and sent up to Mr. Carter's place.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is this your testimony: The movement was from the Institute of Pacific Relations' overcrowded office in New York to the warehouse and almost immediately thereafter up to Lee?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true.

Senator SMITH. How long did they stay in the warehouse?

Mr. HOLLAND. You mean at this immediate period?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I can't say. It was a short time. It was just a matter of getting a truck to take them up. I could find out, I am sure. It may have been the same truck that took the stuff from our office, went up to the Bronx, loaded the stuff on and took it to Lee.

Digitized by Google

Senator SMITH. When they were moved from the warehouse in the Bronx to Lee, Mass., did that take place about the time a rumor got out that this committee was looking for those files?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am not sure when the rumor was.

Senator SMITH. Did you not know some days before?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, very definitely. This was the middle of 1949, to the best of my recollection. These rumors you speak of—at least the talks about leaks from the files which, I suppose, is what you mean—they came shortly before the actual seizure which was February 1951. This was the middle of 1949. They went up to Lee. They remained there untouched certainly, because Mr. Carter had no time to look at them.

When Senator McCarthy began making his charges about Mr. Lattimore and the IPR in 1950, then Mr. Lane, who was then the executive secretary of the American IPR, after talking to me, invited the FBI to come and make a search.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is the second point in this statement. May I question you about that? Before we do that, I want to sum up and be sure I understand your testimony.

These files were at either your own office, in the warehouse of which you speak, or at Lee, Mass., or en route from one of those places to the other?

Mr. HOLLAND. To the best of my knowledge, they were.

Mr. SOURWINE. They were not out of your custody and control at any time?

Mr. HOLLAND. The files in the warehouse, as far as I know, were untouched. I was not responsible for having moved them.

Mr. SOURWINE. With your knowledge and consent they were not out of your control?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Senator SMITH. How long were the records in the warehouse with the Russian War Relief goods?

Mr. HOLLAND. From some time in 1943 to the middle of 1949.

Senator SMITH. Did you check them during that time?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Senator SMITH. Do you know whether any records that have not been produced here of the IPR were packed with goods going to Russia and shipped to Russia?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, Senator Smith, I am sure this is not true because the reason we could store the things free was because all the stuff had gone, and, therefore, the warehouse was empty.

Senator SMITH. All the Russian war relief goods had gone. I thought you said they were there.

Mr. HOLLAND. This warehouse had a great deal of business. The stuff had all been shipped as far as I know.

I must say I am not speaking from direct knowledge because it was Mr. Carter who handled those things.

Mr. SOURWINE. If I may go back to the statement which you have repeated here in different words but which, in the press release, was set forth:

Holland stated the contents of these files have been well known to the FBI since the Summer of 1950 at which time Mr. Clayton Lane, executive secretary of the IPR, wrote Mr. J. Edgar Hoover inviting the FBI to make a thorough investigation of all the IPR files and records both in New York and in Lee.

Digitized by Google

Is that a correct statement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did make such an offer?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. You say "you." Mr. Clayton Lane actually made it.

Mr. SOURWINE. I meant you and Mr. Clayton Lane.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that offer made in good faith?

Mr. HOLLAND. It certainly was.

Mr. SOURWINE. At the last part you have this sentence:

During subsequent weeks a group of FBI agents made a thorough search of all of the IPR files and were given full permission to copy or photostat any material they wished to reproduce.

Was that a correct statement?

Mr. HOLLAND. To the best of my knowledge and belief, it was a correct statement.

Mr. SOURWINE. You made available to the FBI at that time all of your files, that is, the ones in your office, the ones in the warehouse and the ones at Lee, Mass.?

Mr. HOLLAND. We did. The way it was done was this way: We notified the FBI of our wish to have them come and look. They learned from us some were in Lee. They asked if they might go there. Mr. Carter provided them with the key to the barn. They worked there for something like 3 weeks, a team of them. He provided them with a heater to keep warm because it got cold up there. They took out several hundred documents which they thought were pertinent.

Mr. SOURWINE. They had access not only to your files at Lee but to all your other files?

Mr. HOLLAND. Of course. Another team worked for many weeks in our office in New York.

Mr. SOURWINE. You made available to the FBI all the files you had? You did not hold out anything?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is all.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Holland, did the Institute of Pacific Relations, your international organization, or any part of your organization, have any activities in any of the European countries other than Russia?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, indeed. We had one of the constituent national councils in England, another in France, and another in Holland.

Senator SMITH. In any of the Central European countries?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. The basis for membership is either the country is in the Pacific area or the Far East or has possessions there.

Senator SMITH. So your group had no work in any of the Central European countries?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Senator SMITH. I believe you said you had a conference in Delhi, India?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Did you have any work done by your association in Mongolia or China?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. There was never any branch in Mongolia, which you know is an inaccessible sort of country. In China, we had from the beginning an active branch. The Chinese are one of the charter members. The China council continued in operation up until quite recently, I think 1949 or '50.

Senator SMITH. Did any of your representatives or officials or interested members travel in Mongolia and do any work of any sort there?

Mr. HOLLAND. Only one, to my knowledge, Mr. Lattimore, but I am certain that—if we are speaking about Inner Mongolia, yes. He did travel there while working part time as an editor of our magazine. I don't believe he traveled through Outer Mongolia, the Russian satellite state. Certainly he did not travel there while working for the Institute of Pacific Relations. He visited over there with Vice President Wallace.

Senator SMITH. What about Mr. Carter? Did he travel through?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Carter has traveled across the trans-Siberian railway but never been to Mongolia.

Mr. SOURWINE. I want to be sure I understand you correctly so I can close this matter in my own mind as well as in the record.

Is it your intent to testify here that at the time you issued this press release in February—I believe February 9 of this year—you had already given the FBI access to and they had examined all of the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. HOLLAND. I can certainly say that the first part of your statement is correct. We had given them access. I personally did not see whether they literally went through every folder.

Mr. SOURWINE. I did not mean that as a catch question.

Mr. HOLLAND. There is one important point, Mr. Chairman. I am trying to give you a full picture. Mr. Sourwine has not asked me the question, but I think it is only fair to say that this is what I have told the FBI: a few days later—I think it was 3 days later—Mr. Field came to my office on a Saturday morning and said——

Mr. SOURWINE. You finally figured out what I was driving at.

Mr. HOLLAND. I was not sure until you asked me about the date.

I wish to tell you frankly that Mr. Field came to my office and said:

I don't know whether you know it, but ever since 1941 or 1943 there have been some old files of the IPR sitting in my cellar. There were a number of old vouchers and accounts which were sent down there in 1941 or 1943.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did Mr. Field have in the institute at that time?

Senator O'CONOR. I do think he ought to complete the answer now.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Field said:

I have absolutely forgotten all about these until I read the news about this seizure. Then I looked through my own files because I was naturally curious to know what in the files there might be that would affect me. I found, along with a number of my own personal files in the cellar, several cartons—I think 20 or 24—of old Institute of Pacific Relations files.

I was considerably upset about this, and said, "Well, I hate to learn this now, but it seems to me the only thing to do is to bring them up to the IPR." This I did. They are still there in the IPR offices and I have asked the FBI to examine them, too.

Mr. SOURWINE. When were they integrated?

Mr. HOLLAND. They have not been integrated.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. Are they included in the files you have made available to representatives of this committee?

Mr. HOLLAND. They are right there in the office. I am glad to make them available at any time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have they before now been pointed out?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you tell the FBI about these files?

Mr. HOLLAND. I should think about 2 weeks ago.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does that square up with all the other answers you have been giving here today?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think it does, Mr. Sourwine.

Senator O'CONOR. Is there any explanation why the FBI was not notified until 2 weeks ago of the existence of the additional files that Mr. Field had when they had been notified of course, long since, of the existence of the others?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator O'CONOR. What is the explanation?

Mr. HOLLAND. It is something I am somewhat concerned about. The simple reason is I looked them over hastily myself by opening the tops of the cartons. As far as I could see, there were a lot of old vouchers of paid bills there. It was only 2 weeks ago when someone else on my staff—I have forgotten who it was—asked: "Where are we going to put these?" To maintain our record of frankness with the FBI, I should at least tell them that these are here and ask them if they would come up. Mr. Guiliano, one of the agents of the FBI, who had looked through the previous file, came up with two or three of his men and went through all of them. They took out a few letters, memoranda, and some bills. I noticed one of the things he took out was a check paid to Mr. Stanley Hornbeck of the State Department with travel expenses to one of our meetings and a few other things, took them away and I presume photostated them and returned them to me a few days alter.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many cases or boxes of files are in that category?

Mr. HOLLAND. These are in cartons. Approximately, I should think, 16 to 20. I haven't actually counted them.

Mr. SOURWINE. With 16 or 20 cartons of papers and correspondence, bills and receipts, perhaps other memoranda and documents which had not been shown to the FBI in February or indeed until some 2 weeks ago, do you think it is a fair statement to say all of the files had been made available to the FBI?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I do, for this reason: I am convinced from my looking at the thing and my subsequent looking over the stuff, that the FBI took out, this is practically all duplication of what was in our files. It was our practice to send carbon copies of our things to a number of people. There are a great deal of duplications. If you were to look in our San Francisco office you would find many more. We don't have a San Francisco branch, so technically I made all the files available to the FBI. There are some in Honolulu and San Francisco.

Mr. SOURWINE. These were in your New York office and they were duplicates and that is why the FBI had all the files?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. The reason was the one which I gave before: That I had looked at these and considered there was nothing there of importance.

Mr. SOURWINE. It was on that basis you testify today the FBI had all the files?

Mr. HOLLAND. I don't get your question.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are testifying today that the FBI had been given all the files. That was based, you said, did you not, on your own opinion that the material and these 16 or 20 cartons duplicated matter which had already been made available to the FBI?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Please restate it in your own language.

Mr. HOLLAND. The point is at the time you were asking me about this press release, when I made that answer that was my honest conviction.

Mr. SOURWINE. You testified this morning that it was the truth and that you still believed it to be the truth. You testified this morning without regard to the press release, except as background, that the FBI had been given all of the files of the institute, had been given access to them.

You think that was an accurate statement?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think it is an accurate statement.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why do you think so?

Mr. HOLLAND. Because, first of all, I was answering the question of the press release at the time. That was a true statement then. I have subsequently, on my own initiative, volunteered this information which makes it completely true, that the FBI has seen all the files.

Senator SMITH. That is not the point as I understand Mr. Sourwine's question. The point he is making, this morning when you testified that everything had been turned over that was a true statement. So far as we knew, it was not a true statement. I never heard, and I don't suppose a good many of us have heard about these additional files.

Why did you testify this morning when your statement, when made, was a true statement and still was a true statement that the FBI had all the files?

Mr. HOLLAND. Your question was: my statement when made was a true statement. That is, I consider true. I came down here perfectly expecting this question to be asked. That is why, when I finally got the idea of what Mr. Sourwine was getting at about the date that I volunteered the information. This is a true statement of the facts. When I issued that release, that was a true statement, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean at that time the files were still in Field's basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, sir, they were, because it was a day or two later——

Mr. SOURWINE. You did not know it?

Mr. HOLLAND. I did not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Had any other files been moved out of Mr. Field's basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not to my knowledge.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. These 16 cartons are the only files of the institute which ever were in his basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. I don't know, but to the best of my knowledge, that is true. I did not have anything to do with moving of those files. I can only report what happened, to my knowledge.

Mr. SOURWINE. With regard to these files, I believe you testified they had been in Mr. Field's basement since 1943 or thereabouts.

Mr. HOLLAND. I believe so. It was 1941 or 1943. I'm not sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you still say it is your opinion that these files are duplicates of material already made available to the FBI?

Mr. HOLLAND. I cannot say they are all duplicates, because I have not been through them all myself. I do know from looking at a few of them they are duplicates.

Mr. SOURWINE. And did I understand you correctly when you said a moment ago that the reason you did not call them to the attention of the FBI was because you thought they were duplicates?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, it was not just that. I didn't say that.

My first statement was that I looked these over. From looking in the tops of the cartons I could see that nearly all of them were old vouchers and bills. I, therefore, really felt there was no significant material in them. It was only more recently when someone on my staff asked about moving them that I thought, just to make our record complete, I should at least tell the FBI about these and have them look at them.

Mr. SOURWINE. You noticed, did you not, they were not, as a matter of fact, duplicates?

Mr. HOLLAND. I cannot say.

Mr. SOURWINE. You should know that from the fact that the Federal Bureau of Investigation, according to your testimony, has taken certain items out to have them photostated and have them returned to you?

Mr. HOLLAND. This is obviously true of the vouchers, but whether they have found any correspondence which is not duplicates, I cannot say, because I don't know what they took.

Mr. SOURWINE. I would like to ask two more questions, if I may.

Was it your intention to tell this committee or its representatives about these files?

Mr. HOLLAND. It was my intention to show these files to Mr. Morris, because, as you may recall, Mr. Morris, you told me that tomorrow you hoped to come up and make a further examination.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you form the intention to tell us about them?

Mr. HOLLAND. At the time when the FBI people came to look them over. It was when they picked out a few things which they indicated they wanted to look at that it was clear to me that there conceivably was material here of substance which the subcommittee should see.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were not consciously withholding the information from this committee or its representatives that these files existed?

Mr. HOLLAND. Certainly not. I want to make this final statement: I have made a very conscious effort throughout the whole of this business and with some considerable effort, and at times embarrassment, to play fair with this committee to show where our files are, to volunteer information to Mr. Morris and his staff. This has been the line we have taken all along. I am sorry that I did not call the FBI to look at this material immediately at the time. I ask you to believe what a whirlwind of work and activity I have been going through. I am the only senior executive officer at the present time.

Digitized by Google

Senator SMITH. Mr. Holland, one question there, because I am sure the committee does not want to be unfair to you.

As I understand you to answer Mr. Sourwine, Mr. Field acquainted you with the fact just 2 or 3 days after seizure?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true.

Senator SMITH. That there were these files in his basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. That was about when?

Mr. HOLLAND. It was on a Saturday about 3 or 4 days later than the seizure.

Senator SMITH. That was along in last January or February?

Mr. HOLLAND. The seizure was on February 8. My release was next day, February 9.

Senator SMITH. So you are saying about the 12th or 15th of February you knew that?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. You had from the 12th or the 15th up to now?

Mr. HOLLAND. Two weeks ago.

Senator SMITH. And you have been here before this committee and have never, until now, volunteered to us the story about the extra files that Mr. Field had in his basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is correct.

Senator SMITH. Why didn't you disclose to us months ago when you learned of these additional files that you did have them?

Mr. HOLLAND. Because, Senator, I looked at this material, saw that it was old vouchers. There are other vouchers and old boxes in our office yet.

Mr. SOURWINE. You said you had not looked at it until a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. HOLLAND. You are wrong. I did, as I indicated, look hastily in the tops of the cartons at the time when the stuff was brought up. It seemed to me that this was, as far as I could see, old files.

I would be the first to admit, Senator Smith, if I had been alert I should have notified the counsel immediately at that time. I had no intention of concealing it.

The fact is this material had been in our office. Mr. Morris has not asked me to just indicate this or that folder. If he goes through our files—he was coming up tomorrow literally fishing for whatever he could find. He was, I am sure, going to look in any other parts of the office when he got around to it.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask this further question: Where else are there files of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. HOLLAND. Today?

Senator SMITH. Today. You said in San Francisco just now, I believe.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, when you say "of the IPR," I meant in previous years we had branch offices in San Francisco, in Seattle, and in Honolulu.

Senator SMITH. Are their files there?

Mr. HOLLAND. These branches were independent. I have no direct knowledge of where they are.

Digitized by Google

Some of them may be in San Francisco. In San Francisco, for instance, the IPR was dissolved some years ago and now taken over by the Northern California Council of World Affairs.

Senator SMITH. Who has control of those files?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, I don't know. We did not have control of those outside offices. They operated independently.

I am sure there are some files today in Honolulu because that was the origin of the IPR. Mr. Loomis, the executive secretary, no doubt has them.

Senator SMITH. Do you have any more files at your home?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Senator SMITH. Does Mr. Field have any more in his home?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not to my knowledge.

Senator SMITH. Does Mr. Carter have any?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am not sure, Senator. I think it is quite possible Mr. Carter has some, again, duplicates of things which he has kept for his own memoirs.

Senator SMITH. They might be, in your eyes, duplicates and not duplicates in the eyes of the committee.

Mr. HOLLAND. I agree. I cannot say for sure about Mr. Carter.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I believe that we ought to ask Mr. Carter and maybe some of these other people under oath as to any other files that they may have that we ought to have.

Mr. HOLLAND. May I continue with a few points on this at the next session?

Senator O'CONOR. I do think you can after recess.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, you made a great point of the fact that Mr. Field resigned as secretary in 1940.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. I didn't make a point of it; I just reported.

Mr. MORRIS. Why were files put in his basement in 1941 or 1943?

Mr. HOLLAND. I don't know the answer, Mr. Chairman. I was not, at that time, in the IPR. It is a fact that Mr. Field remained a trustee and a member of the executive committee of the American IPR. I am sure there are people in the office who can probably remember why that was done.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you endeavor, during the recess, to find out what other files were put in Mr. Field's home, other than the ones you have just described, the 16 or 20 boxes, after 1940 when Field resigned as secretary?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I would certainly try. I can only ask if anybody in my office remembers what was sent there.

Mr. Field may have had other things.

Senator SMITH. He has not got any of them with him.

Mr. HOLLAND. I don't know.

Senator O'CONOR. The committee will stand in recess for 1 hour.

(Whereupon, at 1:40 p. m., a recess was taken until 2:40 p. m., this same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

The hearing reconvened at 2:40 p. m., upon the expiration of the recess.

Senator SMITH (presiding). We will come to order.

Mr. SOURWINE. I want to say for the record in case there was any misconception about it that there was no intention on my part this morning, nor, I am sure, on the part of the committee, in asking about the meeting Mr. Holland held this morning with certain members of the press, to imply in any way that there was anything wrong about reporters going to that conference or to such a conference.

Digitized by Google

As a matter of fact, the committee, of course, understands that when a reporter is asked to attend a conference at which he has reason to believe some news may be produced or released, it is his duty to attend; it is part of his job, and it might be pointed out that the committee has no reason to question that news coverage by any of the news services or newspapers mentioned has been anything but fair and objective.

Before you start, Mr. Morris, the line of questioning that you have before this afternoon, I would like to wind up one last thread with regard to the matter we were talking about at the conclusion of this morning's session.

Did I understand you correctly, Mr. Holland, that these files which had been in Mr. Field's basement came back to you, that is, back to the offices of the Institute of Pacific Relations on approximately the 12th of February, some 3 or 4 days after you had issued your press release of February 9?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true. I think it was February 12. It was a Monday morning, because I went down myself over the Saturday and Sunday and got myself filthy putting these dusty files into cartons.

Mr. SOURWINE. They were not in cartons in the basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. They were sitting there in old transfer cases too bulky for me to carry upstairs.

Mr. SOURWINE. You actually put them in the cartons and then moved the cartons?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. So at that time you issued your press release of February 9 you did not know the existence of these files in the basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I did not. It was a great bombshell to me when Mr. Fields came in the following Saturday and told me.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you been able to ascertain what other files Mr. Fields kept in his home?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. I telephoned during the lunch hour and so far as my staff know there were no other files.

I can actually give you a much more precise statement of when things were moved there, and, if you wish, or if you prefer, I will put that in a memorandum, just as you wish, Senator.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to have it.

Mr. HOLLAND. I gave this very precisely to the FBI and I am glad to give it to the committee.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to find out whether there were other files of the institute put down in Mr. Field's basement, or where ever they were, subsequent to 1940 when he resigned as secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. HOLLAND. Let me give you the story because I know it quite clear.

I think it will take just 5 or 6 minutes, Senator.

As indicated, the reason for all this moving of files was in 1943 when the institute decided to move from its old offices at 159 East Fifty-Second Street, to its new and present office in 1 East Fifty-fourth Street—there are two organizations, the International IPR and the American IPR, both separate, but both using the same offices—in 1943 the old American IPR files from about 1927, the beginning, right up to 1942—in other words, all except the current files which they needed—were moved to Mr. Field's cellar.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. All of them were put there?

Mr. HOLLAND. All the IPR stuff at that time was sent to Mr. Field's cellar.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is somewhat different from what you told us this morning.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. This now is in 1942?

Mr. HOLLAND. 1943.

Mr. MORRIS. And this is a time when Field is no longer secretary?

Mr. HOLLAND. Field was a member of the executive committee, but had resigned from the secretaryship a few years before.

At the same date all the opened files of the International IPR, namely, from 1925 right up to 1943, were sent to our new office, which was of the International IPR, which was on the fourth floor of our present building, namely, East Fifty-Fourth Street.

The American IPR had the fifth floor. They only took over what current files they needed, whereas the Pacific Council, which was separate, at that time brought all its files.

Now, that was the situation until 1947. In '47 while I and most of the international senior officers were away at a conference in England——

Mr. SOURWINE. If you will pardon me, you say that was the situation until 1947. I take it by that you mean that from 1943 until 1947 all of the files of the American Council of IPR which you had felt you get along without and which had in 1943 been moved to Mr. Field's basement, remained there in his basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Where was his basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. It is in his home somewhere on West Twelfth Street. I forget the exact number.

Mr. MORRIS. How many people in the institute knew these files were there?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I can't say. Of my present staff I would say that probably—I think only two people.

Mr. MORRIS. How about the board of trustees? Did they know?

Mr. HOLLAND. I really cannot say. I am sure that some former employees must have known because certainly there was nothing surprising about it then.

As I understand it, the reason Mr. Field offered was simply because he had been secretary, was still active on the executive committee, and he offered them the free storage there, but I must say this: I had no direct information about this.

I am only reporting what I have learned.

Mr. MORRIS. But the fact here is that Mr. Field at that time was an open contributor to the Daily Worker and therefore an open Communist, and was it not of some concern to the institute that all their files were in his basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. So far as I know no such concern was expressed, but, as I say, I cannot speak from direct knowledge then, because the International IPR which I was connected with brought all its files over and we were not involved in that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Carter at this time was in the International also.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Carter knew they were there, did he not?

Mr. HOLLAND. I can't say for sure, Senator, because he was also, like me, in the International IPR and I don't know whether he had anything to do with the arrangement to send them to Mr. Field.

At that time in 1943 I believe the Secretary of the IPR was Mr. William Lockwood, now at Princeton University.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know they were there?

Mr. HOLLAND. I learned they were there, I think in 1949, as you will see if you will allow me to finish my statement of what actually happened. May I go on?

Senator SMITH. Yes; go ahead.

Mr. HOLLAND. As I said, that was the situation until 1947. Then sometime in the fall of 1947 while I was away and Mr. Carter and several of the international officers were away in England at a conference, it was decided, because we knew our budget for next year was going to be cut, to consolidate the two floors in our present office. This meant that the International IPR on the fourth floor decided to move upstairs to the slightly larger office on the fifth.

That meant that we had to do something about our files and also our furniture. It was for this reason, I find upon talking on the phone, that all the files from 1925 up to that date, namely, up to 1945, everything prior to my tenure, of the International IPR, was sent to this warehouse in the Bronx, together with a lot of our furniture, and this was apparently the chief reason for sending it to a warehouse.

We had so much furniture and stuff besides files. This takes care of 1947, so that now you have the situation that the International IPR's files, the old files, are up in the Bronx warehouse.

The old files of the American IPR are still in Mr. Field's cellar.

Now, in 1949, the warehouseman told us that we would have to take our stuff out or else start paying storage fees. So we decided that we would ship it up to Mr. Carter's, but, at the same time, they decided that since there was a great deal of historical material in the old American IPR files, namely, Mr. Field's cellar, they should take that, too, so what happened was that a truck was sent down to Mr. Field's place, and they took the old files from there with one exception, which I will explain in a moment, sent the truck up to the warehouse, loaded all the old International files there on a truck; disposed of the furniture, and sent all those files up to Lee, so that therefore, you had sent up to Lee the old International files from 1925 to 1945, and most of the old American IPR files from 1927 to 1943.

Now, the exception is that in going through these files in Mr. Field's cellar, the girls—I don't know who they were, junior typists, and so on—they went down and saw there were several cartons—I mean transfer cases—there of old vouchers and of stuff that looked like duplicates and which seemed to have no value whatever for historical purposes.

This was left behind in Mr. Field's cellar, and I believe the idea was that it should be just thrown away. It was, therefore, a complete accident that this stuff which should have been thrown away lay there and whether Mr. Field was supposed to get rid of it, or somebody else, is not clear, but in any case, it was forgotten about and it was only when this seizure of the files took place in February 1951 that Mr. Field in the process of going down to his cellar to look at his own personal records there, saw this stack of stuff and immediately notified me.

Digitized by Google

I think that is as accurate an account as I can give of it.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you did not learn that those files were in there, in Mr. Field's cellar, until 1949?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true; that is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you did learn it in 1949?

Mr. HOLLAND. I say I must have heard it then. I do not recall it.

The only thing which brought it back to my memory was this bombshell of Mr. Field coming in and telling me, but I am sure I must have heard it talked about because I remember vaguely the circumstances of sending the stuff out.

Mr. SOURWINE. But what Mr. Field did just a few weeks ago——

Mr. HOLLAND. In February, you mean?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Then you recalled the circumstances of——

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; but I did not recall all the steps which I have outlined here because that has only been given to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us why you testified this morning that the 16 cartons were the only files that had ever been in Mr. Field's basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Because this is what I considered to be a fair statement of the case.

In other words, the files in Lee and the files which I learned were in Mr. Field's cellar comprised the whole of the IPR files so far as I know.

This precise step I learned about by telephoning at lunch time.

Mr. SOURWINE. In fairness to you, in view of the fact that you have testified that at the time you issued your February 9 press release, you did not know that these other files existed?

Mr. HOLLAND. These remaining files which Mr. Field told me about?

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. I would like to ask you to say whether if you had at the time you had issued the press release known they existed, would you still have said in the press release that all of the IPR files had been made available to the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

Mr. HOLLAND. My honest answer is I think I probably would have because I am afraid I was acting with some indignation at this moment and I felt in any reasonable sense of the word we had shown the FBI all our files, but as I indicated this morning, later on when, as I said, 2 weeks ago—actually I found the date was about September 14—that one of the girls in the office asked me, "Well, where do you want all these cartons put?" that I recognized to be literally true, and to be literally in accordance with the line we had been taking of showing the FBI everything, that I should ask them to come and look at it, which they did, and I find they actually came and inspected on September 20.

Mr. SOURWINE. I would like to ask you if this I hand you is a press release which you issued?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; it is.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you look at the last page and tell me the date on which it was issued?

Mr. HOLLAND. This says February 16, 1951.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you any question that that is the date when it was issued?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I believe it is true.

Mr. SOURWINE. That contains this paragraph on the first page of the release:

A wholly misleading impression has been created by some recent press reports to the effect that Senator McCarthy "supplied a tip" which led to the seizure of certain IPR correspondence files by the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee investigating un-American activities. I therefore wish to point out again that there was never any secret or mystery about the presence of these files at the house of Mr. Edward C. Carter (former secretary general of the IPR) in Lee, Mass. The location and contents of these files were known not only to several IPR officers and staff members but also to a group of at least a dozen FBI agents, who at the explicit invitation of the institute's executive officers studied the IPR files and financial records in Lee, and also in New York, for a period of 6 or 7 weeks during April, May, and June, 1950. The agents were freely authorized by the IPR officers and by Mr. Carter himself to make notes or copies of any materials they considered of interest, and did so. They also had numerous discussions with present and past officers or staff members of the institute to elucidate questions arising out of the correspondence files.

All these facts were made known at the time to the trustees of the IPR; and, in a letter published in the May 29, 1950, issue of Newsweek, Mr. Clayton Lane, then executive secretary of the American IPR, stated that "The FBI has inspected the institute's files thoroughly on my invitation."

I ask you was that statement to the best of your knowledge and belief accurate at the time it was made?

Mr. HOLLAND. I consider it was accurate for the reason that I mentioned this morning: that, as far as I know, even though I had been told of this stuff in Mr. Field's files, from my cursory look at the cartons I had no reason to believe that the FBI had not seen all the files.

Senator EASTLAND. You said you believed it was accurate. In reality, was it accurate?

The question was not whether you believed. Was it accurate?

Mr. HOLLAND. I consider it was accurate, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SOURWINE. This statement includes two sentences I would like to ask you about. This sentence—the quotes are mine—says:

They also had numerous discussions with present and past officers or staff members of the institute to elucidate questions arising out of the correspondence files.

"They" obviously refers to the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether in the course of any of those discussions the attention of the Federal Bureau of Investigation was called to any of the files that were in Mr. Field's basement, or that had been in Mr. Field's basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not know for sure. I do believe that in discussing how the files got to Lee the FBI was told, as I have indicated here, they previously had been stored there from 1943 to 1947.

What the FBI, I think, was not told was that part of them had been left behind.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, you could not have told the FBI about it at that time because, according to your testimony here, you did not know it at that time.

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not get your question, Mr. Sourwine. I am sorry.

Mr. SOURWINE. At the time that the FBI——

Mr. HOLLAND. That was 1950, of course.

Mr. SOURWINE. You could not have told them about the files in the basement because you did not know about it.

Mr. HOLLAND. You keep saying "the files in the basement." You mean the stuff that was left behind?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes; that is right, the 16 to 20 cartons.

Mr. HOLLAND. These conversations with the FBI in 1950 were not concerned primarily with how the files got there. What they wanted to know was what did Mr. Lattimore mean when he wrote this letter, or who was he writing to. It was chiefly Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. SOURWINE. You state in the release that all these facts were made known at the time to the trustees of the IPR.

Can you tell us whether the trustees of the IPR were at the time apprised of the fact that files were in or had been in Mr. Field's basement?

Mr. HOLLAND. I cannot remember that because Mr. Clayton Lane was then the executive secretary of the American IPR and the one who reported it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were the files ever authorized to be placed in Mr. Field's basement by vote or direction of the trustees?

Mr. HOLLAND. That I cannot say. It was 1943, you see, and I am afraid I was not in the American IPR then. I don't know.

Senator Smith, may I add, with reference to the release there, what I think is a pertinent point?

I think you or Senator O'Conor was asking me about other IPR files in other places at the present time. As I indicated, I think it is very likely there are some in what used to be our San Francisco branch office, in our Seattle branch office, and in our Honolulu branch office.

One other point I think is very important to make here to give a full picture. I hope you will allow me to explain it clearly.

I have some serious doubt about whether the files when they were seized by your committee in February 1951 in Lee were complete. I say this because, as you yourself indicated, sir, there were some rumors in the press that there had been some mysterious leakages in the press, and I actually wrote a letter, I think, to Senator Ferguson, saying I was puzzled about this——

Senator EASTLAND. You say there was leakage to the press?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

The Washington Daily News and the New York Mirror published what they said were excerpts of these files. They did almost the day after.

Senator EASTLAND. They could not have gotten anything from the committee.

Mr. HOLLAND. That was exactly it.

Senator EASTLAND. They were 2 days getting down here and under Treasury guard.

Mr. HOLLAND. I didn't know that, and I was frankly puzzled and I therefore wrote a letter, I believe to Senator Ferguson, in which I rather protested about this, feeling that perhaps there had been some accidental leakage here, and he assured me to the best of his knowledge there was not.

Digitized by Google

That left me even more mystified.

Just recently, I think 3 or 4 weeks ago, I read a newspaper story in the New York Post which stated very precisely that several months before this subcommittee's seizure was made these files had been previously rifled by—I must quote what the story said—Senator McCarthy's agent, Mr. Surine; Mr. Schroeder, who was the man that made your seizure, and some local neighborhood farm boy up there, and this story said that these materials——

Mr. MORRIS. You say "this story." What do you mean?

Mr. HOLLAND. The New York Post reported that these were brought to New York and shown to Mr. J. B. Matthews of the Hearst press there, and that also Senator Mundt was told about them, and the story in the New York Post said that Senator Mundt advised that the material should be sent back to Lee and that this was done, and he also advised that your subcommittee should make the seizure and should serve the subpena duces tecum on the neighboring lady, Mrs. Markham.

Mr. MORRIS. Who wrote that story, Mr. Holland?

Mr. HOLLAND. A man called Mr. Shannon. I can't remember his name. Mr. W. Shannon, I think, of the New York Post.

I mention this, Mr. Chairman, only because it cleared up—at least, it seemed to be a possible explanation of something that had puzzled me very much as to how this leakage might have occurred.

I don't know whether they are the true facts or not, but I felt I ought to report it to you.

Senator SMITH. Let me ask you a question.

From the evidence that has come out before this committee, has there been any single case of any document being offered here that was not genuine so far as you know?

Mr. HOLLAND. By your committee?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. No. I have seen none; no.

Senator SMITH. If there was any tampering with any of those records, there was nothing put in there which would tend to falsify the particulars and then afterward presented to this committee?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not to my knowledge; and perhaps I should say, when Senator Ferguson wrote assuring me that there would be no leakage from this committee so far as he knew, that made me more puzzled.

Mr. SMITH. Did you ever visit Mr. Carter's barn yourself?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; I have been there many times over the years, because it was used as a place for weekly conferences or discussions on Far East affairs.

Senator EASTLAND. The barn?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. It was remodeled to have a meeting room and library. A barn is a misleading word for it.

Senator SMITH. How many times did you say you visited this barn? How many times after the records were carried there had you been there up to the time of the seizure?

Mr. HOLLAND. The records were carried there in 1949. Not very often. I should think pobably not more than two or three times.

88348—52—pt. 4——17

Digitized by Google

Senator SMITH. Had you had access to the records in the barn?

Mr. HOLLAND. I would have any time I wanted to, but I do not believe I ever opened them. I saw them standing there.

As you know, there were 60 cases or so.

Senator SMITH. If you had occasion to try to verify some statement you did have the right and privilege of going there and examining the files?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Who else besides yourself had that privilege?

Mr. HOLLAND. There was no rule about it, Senator, but I am sure if I had asked one of my staff to go there and look something up that Mr. Carter would have raised no question whatever.

Senator SMITH. So that a good many people had access to this barn and to these papers?

Mr. HOLLAND. They could have had access; I can't say they did.

As a matter of fact—I am sure this would be confirmed—no one did, because the simple fact was that Mr. Carter remained busy on other things and never did get started seriously on the work of writing——

Senator EASTLAND. Who had access to that barn in Mr. Carter's absence?

Mr. HOLLAND. Members of his family, certainly, because Mrs. Carter often stayed up there.

Senator EASTLAND. There was a caretaker there who had keys; was there not?

Mr. HOLLAND. No one was ever appointed as caretaker or designated by that. I think Mr. Carter testified here that this neighborly lady, Mrs. Markham, was given the key, as he explained, so that in case there was any emergency, particularly a fire, they could open the door. The chief purpose of giving her the keys, they were all on a ring covering the house and the barn and everything—they used to do their housecleaning.

Senator SMITH. Did you ever go in Mr. Field's basement yourself?

Mr. HOLLAND. I did on this one occasion when——

Senator SMITH. Except this one time.

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Senator SMITH. That was the only time you ever went there?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. It was a very uninviting place.

Senator SMITH. All right, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you finished examining on that statement, Mr. Sourwine?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, I have.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we receive Mr. Holland's statement, reserving, however, the right to examine it. I know I have not had a chance to examine them, and you can imagine how unfair it would be.

Mr. HOLLAND. I very much appreciate Mr. Morris' suggestion.

Mr. SOURWINE. I would concur in that, but I have not had an opportunity to examine this as it has only been in my hands about the last 20 minutes and I would, therefore, like to ask a couple of questions about it as a foundation for introducing it in the record.

This is in very good form and begins with what is titled "Introductory Statement by William L. Holland."

Did you write or introduce that statement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I did.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. Would the same be true with regard to all the rest of the statement, or was some of it prepared by others?

Mr. HOLLAND. I can indicate the parts which were specifically—to answer your question quickly, some parts of it were drafted by others and gone over by me.

Mr. SOURWINE. To aid the committee in evaluation of it, as you say, will you run through it and indicate?

Mr. HOLLAND. I dictated "My own role in the IPR."

I dictated "Some points not brought out by the McCarran subcommittee."

This consists largely of a description of the IPR and is practically a summary of what is in that pamphlet which was circulated this morning.

I just simply asked one of my assistants to go through the pamphlet and pick out the salient points.

The next section, "Who were 'associated' with the IPR," I prepared that myself, on page 10.

Mr. SOURWINE. There are two subheadings, one on page 7, "The international IPR," and one on page 9, "How the institute is financed."

Were those dictated by you?

Mr. HOLLAND. These were also summaries of that pamphlet.

Mr. SOURWINE. Prepared by someone else in your office?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true.

Page 10, "Who were 'associated' with the IPR," I prepared that myself.

Mr. SOURWINE. On that page, sir, about the twelfth or thirteenth line from the bottom—it is in the fourth paragraph on the page—there is a name which has been stricken out. Can you tell us who that was whose name was stricken out?

Mr. HOLLAND. The name was Moses Finkelstein. It was pointed out to me rather late last night that it was rather erroneous. This is a category of people whom I said had nothing whatever to do with the institute, and then I said the following are examples, but in picking out the examples I find that I included practically all people who have been alleged to be Communists or spies, rather, it says there, "had numerous connections with various Communist agents, Soviet officials, and persons alleged to have transmitted official secrets to Communist couriers."

It was pointed out to me that it was not particularly true of Moses Finkelstein.

Mr. SOURWINE. You eliminated his name not because he was connected with the IPR, but you did not want to assert that he was in the category of those named?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is right.

The rest of that statement I prepared.

Page 12 is simply a list of the people who have ever served on the executive committee of the IPR and was compiled by my staff from my records.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does it include all of such people?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, if you and Senator Eastland would like to have a copy of the statement, I would be glad to give you one.

Senator SMITH. If you have an extra copy.

Mr. MORRIS. On the third item of that you said:

Some points not brought out by the McCarran subcommittee.

Digitized by Google

You said an assistant of yours aided you in the prepartion of that. Will you name that assistant?

That is the third item on page 6.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; Miss Miriam Farley, editor of the Far Eastern, but, as you can see from that whole text, it is chiefly an excerpt of this pamphlet I circulated this morning, Understanding Asia.

Mr. SOURWINE. And I had asked the question whether this list included all of the committee members during the period covered.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. This is an attempt to state every one who has ever served on the executive committee of the American IPR.

Page 14 is a list of 20 distinguished Americans active in the IPR.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does that indicate that this earlier list of executive committee members may include some who did not actively participate?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, it does not, and my purpose for including the members of the executive committee was because by definition—at least by my belief—if you are an executive or if you are on an executive committee, you are active in a real sense, whereas, if you are a trustee, you may be somewhat inactive.

The selection on page 14 is somewhat arbitrary, but I just picked out rather hurriedly a number of distinguished names that I could remember with their connections.

Page 16, "IPR publications and publication policies," I prepared myself.

On page 17, you will notice a partial list of anti-Communist writers in IPR publications.

Senator EASTLAND. In your judgment, was Mr. Frederick V. Field a Communist?

Mr. HOLLAND. My judgment, Senator Eastland, is that he was not a Communist up to 1940, at which time——

Senator EASTLAND. All right, is he a Communist today, in your judgment?

Mr. HOLLAND. My judgment on that is that I do not know that he is a Communist, but I feel that he is a 100-percent Communist sympathizer and supporter, and has been, probably since about 1947.

Senator EASTLAND. Let us say, not card-carrying member—but a Communist sympathizer and supporter. How many other Communist sympathizers and supporters are there in the IPR in the American section?

Mr. HOLLAND. Are you speaking of the organization today?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. To the best of my belief and knowledge, none.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you think Owen Lattimore is a Communist sympathizer?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not, sir. He is not on the staff of the IPR and has not been——

Senator EASTLAND. In the past 5 years how many Communist sympathizers and supporters were connected with the American section of the IPR?

Mr. HOLLAND. Past 5 years, 1945 or 1946. Again may I ask, Senator Eastland, you are speaking of the American IPR staff?

Senator EASTLAND. Connected with it.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the Senator means by "connected." This word has been so loosely used that I am not sure what he means. I think I can give a little time and give my opinion so far as staff or employees are concerned.

Digitized by Google

Senator EASTLAND. I am at a loss to learn why so many Communists were connected with your organization and why action was not taken to put them out.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I cannot honestly say that I feel a large number or a large proportion of Communists were connected with the IPR. I do not deny that some may have been, or some secret Communists whom we don't know about, or didn't know about—you asked about what steps were taken.

The only case I can report is that, as you well know, Mr. Field in 1947 was asked by the trustees of the organization to resign, and I think that was based on the belief that whether he was a Communist member, he was a Communist sympathizer.

Senator SMITH. Your board of trustees asked Mr. Field to resign?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. In what year?

Mr. HOLLAND. Perhaps I should say—I think it was the executive committee.

Senator SMITH. And when was that?

Mr. HOLLAND. In 1947.

Senator SMITH. When was it that Mr. Field was allowed to take the records to his house, or they were sent there?

Mr. HOLLAND. 1943.

Senator EASTLAND. Some of those records were left there until 1949, were they not?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true.

Senator EASTLAND. What about Joe Barnes? Do you have any reason to believe he was a Communist?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I do not.

I feel I can speak with some knowledge here because I do know Mr. Barnes.

Senator EASTLAND. You know that we have had five people who swore he was a Communist?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; I have noticed that from the reports.

I don't know whether it is pertinent now, Mr. Chairman, but I do have with me a letter from Mr. Barnes in which he not only denies that charge, but does explain the actual facts about his connection with the IPR. I don't wish to introduce it if you don't want it.

Senator EASTLAND. He says he is not guilty.

Mr. HOLLAND. I see you do not want it, so I will not introduce it.

May I finish answering on Mr. Barnes? I said I do feel I do have some basis for knowledge here. I knew Mr. Barnes when he was a colleague in the IPR in 1934. I had not seen him very frequently from 1934 up to about 1947, but I read his writing in the Herald Tribune, and it seemed to me inconceivable that a man who wrote as he did about Russia, and who I know got in the bad graces of the Soviet censors, could be a Communist or Communist sympathizer.

Now, in the past 6 weeks I had occasion to talk to Mr. Barnes.

Senator SMITH. Would you tell us how you knew he got in the bad graces of the Soviet censors? Did Mr. Barnes tell you that?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, he did. Not tell me directly, but he stated, I think, in his press release.

Digitized by Google

Senator SMITH. That was the basis of your testimony there? That is all you knew about it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. You did not talk to the Soviet censors themselves?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I did not.

As I was just saying, I have also seen Mr. Barnes on a good many occasions during the past 2 months, and in fact, for about 2 or 3 weeks I stayed at his house in New York because I was moving from my apartment and I, therefore, had many occasions to hear his views and I just feel personally very strongly that not only is he not a Communist or Communist sympathizer, but it is almost inconceivable that he could be.

Senator EASTLAND. Of course, you do not believe that Alger Hiss was a Communist or Communist sympathizer.

Mr. HOLLAND. I was never asked my opinion on that. If you ask me to answer that directly, I will.

Senator EASTLAND. Here is a list of 37 names connected with your organization who have been identified as Communists or under Communist discipline, and I would like to know how so many people that were generally known to be Communists would get places in that organization with you and the other officials not knowing anything about it, that is, if you were not going along with the Communists.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, may I begin by saying first that I do not accept the accuracy of the word "identification" as it has been stated here.

Senator EASTLAND. There has been testimony here under oath.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I would stick to my statement on that. I have tried to answer by way of some very concrete facts in my statement in this section, "Who were 'associated' with the IPR," and I think you will see there what I think are very accurate statements about a number of these people.

Therefore, I do not accept the statement that an excessively or in any sense even an unusually large number of people in the Institute of Pacific Relations have been Communists.

Senator EASTLAND. How about Len De Caux? He was kicked out of the CIO as a Communist. He was a member of your board of trustees; was he not?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am not personally acquainted with Mr. Len De Caux, and I was not in the IPR when he was a trustee. I will only report that at that time the CIO was a very well-known and reputable union, that at that time Mr. Len De Caux was the international educational director of the CIO and it was therefore nothing very surprising that he should have been asked to be a trustee of an organization like this.

Senator EASTLAND. What about Israel Epstein?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am prepared to make a statement about Israel Epstein, if you wish, now.

Mr. Epstein is a case of someone who did contribute a publication on Chinese labor problems to the IPR. This may take perhaps 5 or 7 minutes, Senator.

Senator EASTLAND. No; it is not worth it.

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not know that he is a Communist. I believe from his writings in the last 2 or 3 years that he is a certainly strong Communist sympathizer, but from the time I met him and commissioned him to write a report for us, which is 1943 in Chungking up to about 1948 or 1949, when he finally, after much delay finished this report, I had no evidence to suggest that he was a Communist, or anything more than a rather strong critic of the Chinese Nationalist regime.

Digitized by Google

After that time he showed himself rather clearly in his activities in New York to be a very strong pro-Communist sympathizer.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Holland, you are aware of the time we examined Mr. Carter—you thought unfairly—on the question of a letter that he wrote in which he was urging the leaders of our Congress and the leaders of our State Department that they do everything possible to read Israel Epstein's book so that they might be swayed by it.

How do you reconcile that statement to what you have just said?

Mr. HOLLAND. I will answer first by saying that I did not make the statement, that is, that was Mr. Carter's statement, and, as far as I can see, it had no connection with Mr. Epstein's role in the IPR, what you just said. It was just one report. It started in 1943 and was completed about 1947.

If you would ask me my opinion, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to give it.

Mr. MORRIS. We had this letter which was introduced into the record which was written by Mr. Carter in his official capacity as secretary general of the IPR in 1947——

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Morris, I was secretary general in 1947.

Mr. MORRIS. What role did he have then?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think he was executive officer of the American IPR.

Mr. MORRIS. He was telling of the extensive efforts that he was then making to get Epstein's book in the hands of the State Department and the leaders of the Eightieth Congress so that he could sway American policy along the lines of Israel Epstein's book.

I think I could get the letter, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOLLAND. I would rather have the letter because the last clause that the counsel has just said is misleading. I don't believe there was anything in the letter or testimony which indicated Mr. Carter was doing this in order to sway——

Senator SMITH. Why would he have been doing it?

Senator EASTLAND. Did you know traitor Harry Dexter White?

Mr. HOLLAND. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, if the Senator would state his question again?

Senator EASTLAND. Did you know traitor Harry Dexter White?

Mr. HOLLAND. I certainly cannot answer that question, Mr. Chairman, because I have no knowledge that Mr. White was a traitor.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you know him?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I never met Mr. Harry White. I know he was invited to one IPR conference, but he did not come.

Senator EASTLAND. The information is that he was at the head of an espionage ring in Washington. That is true, is it not, in the Government in Washington?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have no evidence which would make me believe——

Senator EASTLAND. You read that?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have read the story, but do not consider it at all convincing, but, Mr. Chairman, may I say the Senator said, "You know that is true, do you not?"

Digitized by Google

I wish it to be understood that I do not know it is true.

Senator EASTLAND. All right, Harry Dexter White was an active supporter of the institute, was he not?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman——

Senator EASTLAND. Look at me and answer my question.

Mr. HOLLAND. No, no.

Senator EASTLAND. What about William Mandel?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Mandel was employed to write one book for the IPR back about 1942 or 1943 on Soviet Central Asia.

Senator EASTLAND. Why was a Communist employed to write that book?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not know whether Mr. Mandel is a Communist. Certainly at the time we had no reason to believe that he was a Communist.

Senator EASTLAND. Mr. Holland, do you not think that it is sinister? Here is an organization that attracts Communists from all over the country and they participate in it and the officials do not know that they are Communists. They do not know anything about it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I will answer that by saying that the Senator's first remark is completely erroneous and misleading. There is no evidence whatever to suggest that the Institute of Pacific Relations attracted Communists from all over the country.

Senator EASTLAND. Here they are.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that that is a gratuitous slander on a reputable organization.

Senator EASTLAND. There they are.

Mr. HOLLAND. They are mere allegations, many of which in my opinion——

Senator SMITH. They have been sworn to.

Mr. HOLLAND. These have been sworn statements by witnesses appearing before you. I do not believe that the evidence which they have given would stand up in the courts of this country.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you think for a minute, Mr. Holland, that that was a conspiracy by a great number of people to come before this committee and to commit perjury against those people in order to injure the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not make any such statement, Mr. Chairman.

Senator EASTLAND. Of course, you do not. You really think that is true, but yet if they were not Communists——

Mr. HOLLAND. Senator Eastland is repeatedly putting words in my mouth. If he will ask me specific questions, I will answer them.

Senator SMITH. I do not believe you have allowed him to do that up to now.

Senator EASTLAND. No, sir; he certainly has not.

Mr. HOLLAND. Thank you, but I do not consider—this is my first time before any such committee, Mr. Chairman. If I speak too much, please tell me so.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I get into this point about Israel Epstein?

Senator SMITH. Let me ask him one question.

I understood you to say just now that from what you had seen of Mr. Barnes and had talked to him in these recent months, you were not willing to say that he was Communist or Communist-dominated, or a Communist sympathizer.

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. Or even a Communist sympathizer; that is true.

Senator SMITH. That is the idea you got from your contacts with Mr. Barnes during the last few months?

Mr. HOLLAND. No.

Senator SMITH. How long have you known Mr. Barnes?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have known Mr. Barnes since approximately 1931. I knew him fairly closely from 1931 to 1934, as a colleague in the office, and I certainly had that impression then.

I will tell you in all candor that I was somewhat curious in view of these allegations to see if there was anything in his present conversation which would give me any grounds for doubting my earlier opinion, and I did not find them.

Senator SMITH. If he had been a Communist in the past you would not expect him to talk like a Communist while this investigation was going on, would you?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; that is true. I would agree. I would not, no; but having known him previously as a close friend, I would think that it would be unlikely that he would start acting as if he were a new person.

Mr. MORRIS. You indicated that I did not state the case properly when I said the Institute of Pacific Relations was endeavoring to sway the opinion of the United States Government by Israel Epstein's book.

I would like to read from a letter which has been introduced in evidence as exhibit No. 116 from Mr. Carter.

Senator EASTLAND. Did Carter acknowledge writing that letter?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, he did.

I think it's of the utmost importance that you devise some means of getting it read at an early date, among others, by Secretary of State George Marshall, Senators Vandenberg, Morse, and Ives, John Foster Dulles and John Carter Vincent of the State Department.

This is June 12, 1947 and they are the leaders of the Government at that time. They are the leaders of the Eightieth Congress and the leaders of the State Department.

You will know better than I how to make certain that they read it in the near future. A letter from me on the subject might lead a few of them to think that I was recommending it because I was an admirer of Epstein and for that reason they might slightly discount my recommendation.

I have another suggestion to make. The book is so full of profound understanding and admiration of the Chinese people that I think it is equally important to find ways and means of getting a wide circulation in China.

Then it goes on to say:

Referring to General Marshall, I wish you could find someone who would get him to read the book from start to finish and not simply the end with Epstein's analysis of Marshall. It seems to me he would need the cumulative effect of the preceding chapters to make him reassess objectively his own role.

I assume that John Carter Vincent would read the book with a very open mind. Probably he is generally acquainted with most of the material, but he has probably never seen it organized so logically. If he were sold on the book he might persuade General Marshall to read it from cover to cover.

Of course, many will say that Epstein is a special pleader. I think this is probably true, but I think he is pleading for a more sound analysis of the world than many of the other current special pleaders. I hear that the New York Times has asked Owen Lattimore to review the book. I hope other publications will make as wise a choice.

I imagine the Kuomintang government will put the book on the forbidden list for import in China. I would hope that you could get it into the hands of Ambassador Leighton Stuart and some of the American correspondents like Benjamin Welles, Christopher Rand, and Arch Steele, Sun Fo, Madam Sun Yat-sen, and a few others, before the bronze curtain falls.

Digitized by Google

Now, if you concede, Mr. Holland, that Israel Epstein is a man who has Communist sympathies, would you not admit that Mr. Carter in his official capacity, whatever it was, in the Institute of Pacific Relations at that time was endeavoring to influence the course of our foreign relations at that time?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I would not make that admission. It is perfectly clear from the statement that Mr. Carter hoped that these officials would read the book, but it is also perfectly clear that Mr. Carter knows that high officials of this kind have to take into account thousands of other factors, and particularly the secret intelligence which they have at their disposal, before they can make up their minds, and to suggest that this one book by a man which Mr. Carter says himself is obviously somewhat biased would sway the opinion of these high government officials seems to me to be preposterous.

Senator EASTLAND. Was that book Communist propaganda?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry to say I have not read Mr. Epstein's book. I am willing to say on the basis of what has been indicated in Mr. Carter's letter that it certainly was sympathetic to the Chinese Communists.

Senator EASTLAND. Yes; to the Chinese Communists; then, to plant that book in the hands of the Secretary of State and officials of the American Government was an attempt to influence them by Communist propaganda, was it not?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I can accept that. It was not an attempt to plant a book. This was published and sold in thousands throughout this country.

Senator EASTLAND. If it was not the influence, then why was it given to them?

Mr. HOLLAND. For this very reason: To provide a lot of important facts which would enable General Marshall and these other people to know what they were going to be up against.

Senator EASTLAND. Important facts from the Communist viewpoint, were they not?

Mr. HOLLAND. A description of what was happening in China as reported by a pro-Communist writer.

Senator SMITH. Do you think that Mr. Carter could have expected that this book contained facts and information that was not readily available to the State Department with all of its resources for gathering information?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I don't know what was in his mind, but, as he indicated in the letter there, he says something about not having seen it put together in this way.

Senator EASTLAND. He gave them the book to influence them, did he not?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I did not write the letter. I cannot say what was in Mr. Carter's mind.

Senator EASTLAND. That is your judgment, is it not?

Mr. HOLLAND. As I indicated, I do not believe that is true.

Senator EASTLAND. That was bound to be the purpose.

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. I have already said I do not believe that to be the case.

Senator EASTLAND. You do not think he wanted to influence them?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I think he simply wanted them to see a number of facts.

Senator SMITH. Did you discuss with Mr. Carter who was to circulate this book among these men at that time?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; at the time I did not know they had done it.

Mr. SOURWINE. If the Senators have finished that line, perhaps we can get back and run through this statement and get on to other matters.

Senator SMITH. I have one question before I forget it.

I believe you told us that the files were put in Mr. Field's basement in 1943?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true.

Senator SMITH. That was after Mr. Field had come to be known as a Communist, was it not?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I can't answer——

Senator SMITH. Well, the record will show.

Mr. HOLLAND. My own recollection is that Mr. Field became fairly generally recognized as a Communist because he wrote in the New Masses about 1945. I say that because I was out of this country in China through 1944 and 1945, but you may be more correct than I am.

Senator SMITH. Were you connected with the institute in 1940?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And Mr. Field resigned as secretary——

Mr. HOLLAND. In that year.

Senator SMITH. In 1940.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. So after he had resigned as secretary, 3 years after that, these files of the IPR were stored in his basement.

Mr. HOLLAND. That is true.

As I indicated, he was still a member of the executive committee.

Mr. SOURWINE. We had, I think, reached page 17, in discussing this statement. Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Before you tell us who, if anyone, helped in the preparation of that paragraph that begins under that heading, "Anti-Communist writers in IPR publications," I wish you would look up the last sentence of the first paragraph on that page in which you say that no IPR publication has advocated communism or urged acceptance of Communist policies or programs.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Because you yourself a moment ago made a distinction with regard to who might have been in the IPR.

I am wondering if what you mean there, perhaps, is not this: That no IPR publication has urged acceptance of Communist policies or programs as such?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman; I appreciate Mr. Sourwine's attempt, but this is my own statement, and I would rather not have it——

Senator SMITH. You do not like those words "as such"?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. I don't ever like that phrase.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you mean to say that you can positively state yourself that no IPR publication has ever urged acceptance of any policy or program which was at the time it was so urged a policy or program urged and advanced by the Communist Party?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I cannot say that because it is a complete restatement and misinterpretation of my sentence here.

Mr. SOURWINE. Obviously, I cannot say that. I want to know what you mean precisely by your language here. I do not want to trick you.

Mr. HOLLAND. I do feel that I took some time writing this sentence. It reads:

> But no IPR publication has advocated communism or urged acceptance of Communist policies or programs.

I believe that to be a fair statement. I may be wrong and I will be glad to be shown if I am wrong.

Mr. SOURWINE. We are challenging what you mean by it, and not challenging whether it is fair, or not.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I meant what I said here.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is a quibble and I am not engaging in semantics with you.

Senator SMITH. So we may get the idea you attempted to convey, just what did you mean?

Mr. HOLLAND. I thought about this rather carefully and I meant that no IPR publication, to the best of my knowledge and belief—and I have known them for a long time—has ever advocated communism or has urged the acceptance of it.

In other words, has urged anyone, the reader, to accept Communist policies or programs, and I say that in any country.

Senator SMITH. Are you attempting to differentiate between a writer in your publication and the publication?

Mr. HOLLAND. I say publication, sir; that is what I mean.

Senator SMITH. No publication of its own does anything except editorially; is that what you mean?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, sir. If this book contains a statement that we should recognize and approve the policies of the Chinese communism, I say that publication advocates, but no IPR publication does that.

Mr. SOURWINE. That would be advocating communism as such. I am sure we can reach an understanding as to what the question is.

Will you define what you mean by Communist policies or programs as you use the phrase in that sentence?

Mr. HOLLAND. I mean official policies or programs as stated by either Communist leaders, that is to say, leaders of Communist parties or important leaders in countries which have Communist Governments.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you mean the essence of the statement itself, or the statement as quoting such leaders?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry. I do not grasp that question.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is a statement of a policy by a known Communist leader a Communist policy within the meaning of the phrase as you use it only when it is attributed to that leader, or is it a Communist policy within the meaning of the phrase as you use it whenever it is advanced by anyone as a proposal?

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. I would say that the latter part of your statement is not correct——

Mr. SOURWINE. I did not make a statement; I asked you a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. Then, I cannot answer the question because you stated it in a way in which I cannot give the answer.

Senator SMITH. Try to give him another question.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

You have stated, sir, that you include in the phrase: "Communist policies or programs," as you have used them, a policy which was enunciated and urged by a known and recognized Communist leader.

I believe you also used the word "official."

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. First, will you drop the word official and say, "a policy enunciated and urged by a recognized world leader in the Communist movement is a Communist policy." Is that what you mean?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; I would say so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you still call it a Communist policy if Joe Blow, who is not a Communist leader, picks it up and restates it and urges the same or approximately the same as the Communist leader who originally enunciated it?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; sometimes it would be, and sometimes it would not be.

May I illustrate? We are making this unnecessarily difficult, Senator.

Senator SMITH. We are for me.

Mr. HOLLAND. If Joe Blow has learned that reform in China is a good thing and is long overdue, and it ought to have been started long ago, that is in some respects similar to what Communists have been saying, but it does not in any sense make Joe Blow a Communist.

Mr. SOURWINE. No one says it does.

I am still simply trying to define your statement when you use the term "Communist policies or programs." You mean only a policy or program which is not only favorable to communism, but which is enunciated by a Communist, which is labeled as a Communist policy or a Communist program; is that not a fair statement?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I am sorry; it is not. Let me give you an illustration again. Let us take Mr. Epstein, for example, since we have been talking about him.

If Mr. Epstein in the book we have been talking about says, "I think the Chinese program of redistributing lands is a good thing and that the American people ought to support it," I say that he is advocating a Communist policy. Mr. Epstein may not be a Communist himself, but this is simply a matter of using common sense, but if some well-known leader—and I can think of some connected with our own ECA program—say that we think land reform in certain parts of China ought to have been carried out a long time ago, that is just common sense in their opinion, and because the Communist leaders have been saying the same thing in other years or today, it has absolutely no bearing whatever on whether he is or is not a Communist.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean the question of whether it is a Communist program depends upon who utters it?

Mr. HOLLAND. And, most of all, it depends on the contention on which he is using the argument.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right, so it is in that restricted sense that you have made the statement that no IPR publication has urged the acceptance of Communist policies or programs?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not accept Mr. Sourwine's statement that it is restricted in any significance or meaningful sense of the word "restricted."

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you trying to say that no IPR publication has ever contained a representation favorable to the Communists, or that no IPR publication has ever urged acceptance of a policy or program which was at that time an avowed policy or program of the Communist Party?

Mr. HOLLAND. I did not, obviously, make such a statement. My statement stands as it is, Mr. Chairman. I think I have made it very clear.

Mr. MORRIS. In connection with Israel Epstein's the Unfinished Revolution in China, we have had three witnesses identify Israel Epstein as a Communist. Elizabeth Bentley said he was a Soviet agent.

In addition to that, we have introduced into the record his writings in the Communist press. Would you say that his Unfinished Revolution in China, is a Communist book?

Mr. HOLLAND. On those grounds, no. There may be other evidence which would convince me that his book is essentially a Communist book, but, as I have said, I have not read it, so I can't give a judgment.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could we continue now, sir? I think we were up to page 17.

Mr. HOLLAND. Page 17, the middle of the page, is a partial list of writers well known for their active opposition to communism, whose work the IPR has published.

This particular list I compiled from two sources: One, my own memory, and second, Mr. Morris some weeks ago asked me if I would send down to him a list of writers or articles in our journal which, in our opinion, were anti-Soviet, and so it is a mixture of those two, but it is my selection and it is a partial one.

If I had time I could think of others.

Mr. MORRIS. Did Chamberlin write an article?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chamberlin wrote a very important textbook for us on Japan.

Mr. MORRIS. When he wrote an article for you, you repudiated it?

Mr. HOLLAND. I, no.

Mr. MORRIS. I mean the IPR.

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I am sorry, the IPR did not repudiate Chamberlin. We published a note by Mr. Chamberlin in our journal in Pacific Affairs.

Mr. MORRIS. What did you say?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, I don't recall it. I was not connected with it at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. On page 18, sir——

Mr. HOLLAND. The institute is not partisan. This was written in first draft by me and polished up here and there as to English and arrangement by Miss Farley.

Mr. SOURWINE. And on page 20.

Digitized by Google

Mr. HOLLAND. Page 20, "Some false impressions." This went through three drafts, the first of which was mine; second of which was Miss Farley's, and I finally revised it again, the third draft.

The next page, "The Soviet Council of the IPR." This is my own work, part of it based on material in this pamphlet which was circulated.

Page 23 was my own work, and is now. I think it is important. It is a statement of rather specific, and I think, vituperative, criticism of the Institute of Pacific Relations by Tass and by the Soviet radio, particularly relating to our conference in India in 1950, and a violent attack on a book one of our people published written as a review, written in 1949, which the Soviet historical review denounced as an example of imperialist objectivity.

Mr. SOURWINE. That runs over to page 24.

Mr. HOLLAND. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. You say that is a result of your own research?

Mr. HOLLAND. You see, most of it is quotations from the Soviet press and radio and it is of my own work.

Mr. SOURWINE. Some of it from the book by Owen and Eleanor Lattimore?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; on page 24 there is a quotation on Lattimore's book on The Making of Modern China, but that is not a reference by a reviewer.

Page 25 is headed "Frederick V. Field's role in the institute." That was also written by me in first draft and was revised, I think once, by Miss Farley, and then finally completed the final draft myself 2 or 3 nights ago.

On page 26 there is a brief statement by the institute on Amerasia, which I wrote myself.

On page 27, "The institute did not 'smear' Nationalist China," is my own work.

Mr. MORRIS. Whoever used the word "smear"?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Alfred Kohlberg.

Mr. MORRIS. What has that to do with this investigation?

Mr. HOLLAND. Because a great part of the stories coming out of this investigation have paralleled to an extraordinary degree the precise nature of the charges brought by Mr. Kohlberg against the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator SMITH. Has Mr. Kohlberg testified before this committee?

Mr. MORRIS. He has not testified before this committee, and this is entirely irrelevant thinking Mr. Holland is bringing into this thing.

Mr. HOLLAND. I will accept your correction on this.

Mr. MORRIS. You knew very well that was the case. You knew he has not testified before this committee?

Senator SMITH. Let him answer.

Did you know whether or not Mr. Kohlberg had testified before this committee?

Mr. HOLLAND. No; I didn't know whether he had, or not. I know he has not testified in public, but I think, Mr. Chairman, you will recognize that it is only reasonable that there has been widespread public discussion throughout the press and for months now, and even in your own sessions here, that testimony has been given indicating that IPR writers, and particularly Mr. Bisson, violently attacked and criticized Nationalist China.

Digitized by Google

Mr. MORRIS. No assertions whatever, Mr. Holland. We put his writing right in the record.

Mr. HOLLAND. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that other witnesses here have certainly given the impression that they considered the Institute of Pacific Relations has unfairly attacked Nationalist China, and I think the use of the word "smear" there is a popular and reasonable interpretation of the word.

In my section I specifically mention this incident of Mr. Bisson, and I point out that Mr. Bisson certainly wrote this article in the Far Eastern Survey. It was immediately followed by an immediate rebuttal of a vigorous Chinese Nationalist official, which we printed at the same time other magazines, namely, Life, the New York Times, and the Reader's Digest, were also publishing very strong criticism of the Chinese national war effort at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. You say that section was your own work?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; it was.

Senator WATKINS. Is there any ruling on the withdrawal of this material by Mr. Holland, this particular one?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think the report is not being accepted by the subcommittee yet.

Senator SMITH. I thought that Mr. Holland admitted that he did not know of Mr. Kohlberg having testified, and the statement was made by Mr. Morris that Mr. Kohlberg had not testified. That should certainly show that there is no place for this particular language to be in here.

Senator WATKINS. The point I want to make is this: That in this hearing we receive different points of view and if that is his point of view, I do not see why we should not take it. I surely would not vote to have it excluded.

Mr. HOLLAND. I appreciate Senator Watkins' remarks, and I would certainly only want it understood as my belief.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Holland, do you feel that in a hearing of this sort, which has been going on for a good many months, the committee when it is taking testimony from witnesses who are sworn to tell the truth, is being fair in requiring testimony to be sworn to?

Mr. HOLLAND. I certainly do, and I admire the procedure the committee has followed.

Senator SMITH. Do you know of anything the committee may do to conduct a fairer hearing?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; to call more witnesses who would give a more accurate and informed picture of this organization, and I appreciate the fact that you have allowed me to do it today.

Senator SMITH. Of course, you realize that we cannot take but one at a time.

Mr. HOLLAND. I do, and I appreciate the very fair hearing you have given me today.

Senator SMITH. Would you like to give Mr. Morris a list of names that you think should be called?

Mr. HOLLAND. Senator McCarran has already asked for a list of that sort, and we are prepared to give you such a list.

Digitized by Google

Senator SMITH. Do you know of any testimony that has been taken by this committee unfairly, or any witnesses treated unfairly, so far as the committee is concerned?

Mr. HOLLAND. There are a number of cases, Mr. Chairman, which I say apologetically. I feel that Mr. Morris, no doubt inadvertently or accidentally, has both asked unfair questions and occasionally made unsworn statements himself which I think tend to give a slightly misleading impression.

Mr. MORRIS. Ask him for an example.

Mr. SOURWINE. In defense of Mr. Morris, may I ask, Mr. Chairman, that if counsel is going to continue the practice of constantly coaching the witness, he at least move far enough away so that it will be audible and go on the record?

Mr. CROSSMAN. I thought I had a right to communicate.

Senator SMITH. I think so, but there has been some little complaint about your whispering to the witness, and I think when he is asked a question you ought to let him answer.

Mr. CROSSMAN. But do I have a right to communicate with him possibly before he answers the question?

Senator SMITH. Strictly speaking, the committee could conduct the hearing without any counsel, but out of an abundance of caution we do not want any witness to testify to something that would be unfair to him or that would be prejudicial to him personally. We have adopted this practice of letting counsel come in, but I think objecting to a question that might be asked him and then questioning whether or not you should suggest an answer is quite a different thing.

Mr. CROSSMAN. I would be quite glad if I could conduct myself as I do in court, and I did not know that I had that privilege.

Senator WATKINS. I do not know of any court that would permit you to tell a witness how to answer a question. It is never permitted in any court that I know anything about.

Senator SMITH. That is right. I do not believe our courts would allow one of us to go up and prompt the witness while he was on the stand, but I can understand that this is a little unusual proceeding.

Mr. CROSSMAN. Mr. Davis, in the senatorial investigations, was allowed to communicate in the course of the proceeding.

Senator WATKINS. That is, with respect to whether he ought to answer. He certainly was not allowed to go so far as to tell him what he ought to answer.

The witness is sworn to tell the truth and not the counsel.

Mr. HOLLAND. I assure you on my oath that at no time today has Mr. Crossman told me what to say. Once or twice he has said, "I wish you wouldn't answer."

Senator SMITH. I do not believe he should whisper, in any event. He could advise you not to answer questions.

Mr. CROSSMAN. Of course, I object to the form of the questions sometimes.

Senator SMITH. As to the form, if it is capable of being understood by Mr. Holland, I do not think there would be too much to that because this is strictly not a court procedure and no attempt is made to conform to court rules.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. I interjected because—perhaps I was mistaken—it appeared to me at the time the witness had been asked for an example to support the charge that he had made that Mr. Morris was making testimony unsworn, which was inaccurate or incorrect, that Mr. Crossman had leaned over to whisper to him and suggesting something for the witness to say.

Mr. HOLLAND. That was not so.

Mr. SOURWINE. I apologize to Mr. Crossman.

Mr. HOLLAND. In the rather limited time we have had to examine the transcript, we have found—and I say "we" because I have had the assistance of counsel in this—a number of cases in which we feel that an inaccurate or misleading, or, in some cases, false impression has been given as a result of the methods adopted by the counsel.

Now, in many cases, I feel certain that Mr. Morris has done this inadvertently, but it is something we feel that we should like to submit to you later on as a memorandum.

Senator SMITH. Could you illustrate just what you mean? I know that no counsel I have ever seen has done that when he has asked a question.

Every once in a while there may be an objection so far as the form is concerned.

Will you point out to Mr. Morris what statements he has made that are incorrect?

I had understood that where Mr. Morris has made statements, as he has done upon several occasions today, he was speaking from sworn testimony hitherto introduced here and he was reading it or paraphrasing it.

Mr. HOLLAND. In those cases, I think that is certainly Mr. Morris' intention, but we have found in the transcript——

Senator SMITH. Can you tell us about them?

Mr. HOLLAND. A number of cases.

Mr. HOLLAND. I can remember one. You will excuse me. There are many. There was a hearing in which the discussion of Mr. Harry White's connection with the IPR was under discussion. And the statement appears in the transcript, that is, from Mr. Morris, that, well, he was a delegate at an IPR conference.

Well, that is a statement, and it happens to be an incorrect statement.

Senator SMITH. Was that a statement, or a question?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I took particular notice, and it was in the form of a statement, and it was construed by the witness as a statement.

Senator SMITH. Have you not many times heard a lawyer ask a question in just that way?

Mr. HOLLAND. But in this case, you see, it was not only a statement but it was an inaccurate one and had a rather serious bearing, because, as I pointed out, Mr. White was not a delegate to an IPR conference. This was not asked in the form of a question.

Senator SMITH. It was the witness' privilege to answer it either way, affirmatively or negatively, was it not?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, it wasn't.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we introduced a letter here recently by Mr. Jessup, wherein he recommended, among others, 10 people who had been identified before this committee as members of the Communist Party, a Harry Dexter White.

Digitized by Google

Senator SMITH. That has been sworn testimony before this committee?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right. The letter mentioned a group of people, and 10 of them had been identified before this committee by sworn testimony, and Jessup was recommending that this man, Harry Dexter White, be made a delegate to the Hot Springs convention in 1945.

Was that the incident?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, it was an earlier incident in the hearing, I think. This was an earlier occasion.

Mr. MORRIS. Here he was being proposed as a delegate to the Hot Springs convention.

Mr. HOLLAND. I cite this as only one instance from memory.

I have three or four pages, which I honestly feel—and all I ask is that you allow us to submit these to you. I do not make any unfair allegations against the counsel. I just say that sometimes an unfair implication has been given as a result of that.

Senator SMITH. Anyone can understand how lawyers can ask questions sometimes. They do not always ask them perfectly.

Now, then, you have made a very careful study and analysis of the transcript in this case?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not all of it, because it is too much for me to keep up with, but up to 2 or 3 weeks ago, yes.

Senator SMITH. Have you been the source of some of the statements received by this committee alleging that this committee is receiving demonstrably false testimony and statements from the counsel?

Have you been the one making those statements to newspaper men?

Mr. HOLLAND. I do not believe, sir, that I have used those words.

I have certainly said to a number of friends, and I may have said it in certain press releases, that I consider some aspects of the committee's procedure up to now to have been unfair, chiefly because I feel we have not been given a proper chance until now to state our case. And I felt that for 12 or 13 weeks now nothing but adverse testimony against this organization has been spread over the newspapers of the country.

Senator SMITH. Did you know, Mr. Holland, that Mr. Carter was examined here for days and days? He is one of your main men.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Carter, sir, was, I think, examined in three sessions and was given practically no opportunity to make the kind of lengthy explanatory statements that you kindly allowed me to do today.

Even now, sir,. you have not allowed me to make anything like a full or even a reasonably rounded statement of what the IPR really is. But I appreciate your willingness to permit me to make my statement.

Senator SMITH. You realize, do you not, that when people are being investigated the committee is first entitled to have answers to questions put to them.

Mr. HOLLAND. I realize that.

Senator SMITH. You realize that if you started an investigation any other way, the party being investigated could talk forever and never get to the point being inquired about.

Mr. HOLLAND. I appreciate that, sir, very fully.

Digitized by Google

But you used an argument on me, or at least Senator Watkins did, that Mr. Carter was given his chance.

All I was saying was that Mr. Carter was not given anything like the chance you have kindly given me.

Senator SMITH. Has Mr. Carter ever stated to this committee that he never had a chance to express himself? I did not think so.

Mr. MORRIS. No, Senator. We also had Mr. Field here, and we gave him ample opportunity to speak.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Field was a worn-out man taken from jail at 5 o'clock in the morning and perhaps practically on the point of collapse, because he said he hadn't eaten. But I do appreciate Senator Watkins' point, and certainly you have asked Mr. Carter a great many questions, and he has tried to give answers, but he is not an officer of the institute today.

And yet much of the effect of this unfavorable testimony reflects on the organization today.

Therefore, it is only proper, I think, that people who are in positions to have responsibility in the organization today and over the past 2 or 3 years should be given a full chance to testify.

That is why I appreciate your offer to us to name other witnesses. We are very glad to have that opportunity.

Senator SMITH. I want to know whether or not you subscribe to the testimony earlier given to this committee by Mr. Carter with respect to its accuracy.

Mr. HOLLAND. With respect to what, sir?

Senator SMITH. With respect to the accuracy of his testimony. Do you say Mr. Carter did not tell us the truth and give us the facts?

Mr. HOLLAND. Oh, no, sir. I make no such charge. I only said he did not have anything like an opportunity to explain and give positive statements. In other words, you carefully selected bits of the evidence and confined him to answering those, and did not give him anything like an opportunity——

Senator SMITH. I do not recall anything other than that Mr. Carter was given a full opportunity to say everything he wanted to say.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am sorry, sir. I disagree with you on that.

Senator SMITH. Otherwise, I am persuaded that the tactics you could try to adopt is to go so far afield with extraneous statements that this whole matter will be clouded. Is that your point?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. I want you to have a perfectly fair hearing.

Mr. HOLLAND. I do appreciate that, and I think today you have given me the kind of opportunity we have been wanting and which we think should have been accorded to us perhaps 5 or 6 weeks ago.

Senator SMITH. I think perhaps all of us have had enough experience to know that the witness prefers to say what he wishes to say on extraneous matters if he can, if he can get the examiner off of the subject.

Mr. HOLLAND. May I just say that my reason, or my main reason, for making these remarks, sir, is not in any way to imply hostility or criticism, but I am constantly reminded of the very inspiring remarks which Senator McCarran made at the beginning of this investigation, in which he said that the subcommittee would conduct a full and impartial hearing and would seek only facts, not headlines.

Digitized by Google

And I believe that by calling me today, and other witnesses whom you have now kindly asked us to suggest, you will get—a little overdue, but you will get—a much more accurate and useful picture of this organization than has hitherto emerged.

Senator WATKINS. Mr. Holland, I note that you said you should have been called weeks ago. Would you think that it would have been proper for us to call you in every time some one said something that you thought was damaging?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not at all, sir.

Senator WATKINS. To run in and give some more testimony?

Mr. HOLLAND. Not at all, sir.

Senator WATKINS. We have to take this in a sort of organized, systematized way, and as we were going into this you could not be permitted to run in every time we had a witness who was unfavorable.

I think probably the development has reached the stage where you should be in, and I personally want everybody connected with the institute that can throw any light on its conduct to come and testify.

I am willing to sit here for the rest of the year if necessary to hear them.

Senator SMITH. I may say that I do not think you need be too concerned as to the fairness or unfairness of this committee, when we learned today, after much prodding by Mr. Sourwine of Mr. Holland, that there were 16 packages of papers about the IPR in Mr. Field's basement of which we had not heard until today, or at least I had not heard until today.

Senator WATKINS. How does that fit in with the statement of the institute officials that everything had been made available to the FBI and this committee?

Senator SMITH. I mention that to bring you up to date.

Senator WATKINS. But I wanted it understood as far as I am concerned, and I think the committee is acquainted with my thought on the matter, because it happens to coincide with theirs, that it is proper that in every case you hear one side until they get through, and then the other side comes in. You may have to wait 2 months before you get to that point, because we do not work everyday.

From what I can see of the conduct of the counsel in this case, it has been absolutely fair.

Personally, I hope we will go on and get all these people in here that know anything about this.

Mr. SOURWINE. We were on page 28, Mr. Holland.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. There is a short heading there, "The institute has not been listed as a subversive organization," which I prepared, and at the bottom something about "the myth of the 'powerful combine'," which I prepared.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is the end of page 28.

Mr. HOLLAND. And "The institute welcomes constructive criticism," which I also prepared.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just one or two questions on that subject.

As you have indicated in the number of cases here, you prepared an original draft, Miss Farley went over that, and you went over it again. So it is obvious this must have been under preparation for quite some time; it that right?

Mr. HOLLAND. Portions of it have, I should say for perhaps a month or 6 weeks. But most of the parts which I say I wrote myself I have done under very considerable pressure, in fact up to almost midnight last night.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, I want to ask: Have you told us about everybody who has assisted in the preparation of this?

Mr. HOLLAND. I believe I have, sir, with the one exception that my counsel has seen various drafts at various times and also suggested changes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, you mentioned something about having recently had a fairly close connection with Mr. Joseph Barnes. Would you repeat again what that was?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. I forget how long ago, but——

Mr. SOURWINE. That is what I wanted to get. How long ago.

Mr. HOLLAND. It was some time, I think, in the first half of August. I saw Mr. Barnes in a restaurant on the other side of the room, and I had not seen him for a very considerable time, so I went over and spoke to him.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that in New York City?

Mr. HOLLAND. In New York City. And he asked me what I was doing for the summer. I said, "I am here on my own. My wife is away in California." He said, "I am also on my own. My wife is in the country. Why don't you come over and stay at my place." So for a period of—I don't know—2 weeks or 2½ weeks, I spent quite a number of nights at his place.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you move out? How recently? Last month? In September?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, it was some time in September.

Mr. SOURWINE. Past the middle of September?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I think it was probably in the first half. I am not sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would it be fair to say that portions at least of this statement were under preparation at the time you were living in Mr. Barnes' quarters?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, I think so, because, as I have indicated, considerable portions are taken directly from this earlier pamphlet we published.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you discuss that with him?

Mr. HOLLAND. I told him I was preparing it. I can say, however, that he gave me no advice, did no drafting for me on this particular document. He did give me some suggestions as to how it possibly might be made more—how a press release on it might eventually be written. He said it was too long and dull.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you didn't consider the advice in connection with the preparation of it?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, Mr. Barnes hasn't had any contact directly with the IPR for a long time and therefore isn't in a position to know about a lot of these details here.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you discuss this or the preparation of it with Mr. Carter?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. Mr. Carter knew I was working on it, but I never consulted him about the text of it.

Digitized by Google

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you in connection with preparing this avail yourself of the knowledge or advice of Mr. Lattimore or Mrs. Lattimore?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, I did not. They knew I was preparing it. My hesitation was simply that I have, of course, discussed many other things with Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore; but looking down these headings here, I know I didn't consult them on this.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did they read this before you came to testify here today?

Mr. HOLLAND. No. They have seen certain portions of it, namely, the sections which are in the other pamphlet.

Mr. SOURWINE. But they did not see them as portions prepared for inclusion in this?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, these documents were stapled together late last night and were brought down on the midnight train.

Mr. SOURWINE. When I say "prepared for inclusion in this," I didn't mean physically for inclusion in this paper. I mean the draft after it had occurred to you that this was eventually to be a press statement.

Mr. HOLLAND. No, to the best of my knowledge they weren't consulted on that.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions on that, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SMITH. I want to ask him a few.

Mr. Holland, you say this was in preparation over how long a time? I have forgotten.

Mr. HOLLAND. I am afraid I have forgotten what I said, myself. But it has been probably——

Senator SMITH. Several weeks?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And several drafts were made of different portions of it?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Senator SMITH. And this was gone over very carefully by you?

Mr. HOLLAND. To the best of my ability; because I was working under very great pressure in the past weeks.

Senator SMITH. And you prepared it for presentation here today?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. And you want to have it just exactly right from your standpoint?

Mr. HOLLAND. Within the limits of the time available to me; yes, sir.

Senator SMITH. You want to have it just exactly right from your standpoint. That is what you are trying to do.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes, sir. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could this be admitted, now, Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that the committee reserves the right to question Mr. Holland about it further?

Senator SMITH. It is so ordered.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit 331" and is as follows:)

Digitized by Google

FACT AND FICTION ABOUT THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS—STATEMENT BY WILLIAM L. HOLLAND, SECRETARY GENERAL, INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS; EXECUTIVE VICE CHAIRMAN, AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, OCTOBER 10, 1951

INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT BY WILLIAM L. HOLLAND

I have prepared this statement as a supplement to the testimony which I expect to give in response to questions directed to me by members of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee in a public hearing on October 10. I have prepared it because this will be the first occasion on which a responsible officer of the Institue of Pacific Relations has had any opportunity to describe the real facts about the organization, aims, and activities of the institute and to answer some of the numerous misleading or erroneous statements about it which have been made in previous hearings.

The present statement is by no means to be interpreted as a full and final answer to these misstatements and misleading allegations. To deal fully with them would take much more space than is available here and would require at least a month's intensive work after the subcommittee had finished taking testimony from witnesses.

Because of this, I wish to repeat here the request which was made on August 10 by the institute's legal counsel, namely that the institute's officers and counsel be given access to the IPR files which the subcommittee seized last February and has withheld from the institute ever since, and also that the institute's officers and legal counsel be given at least one month to study the whole record with a view to suggesting further evidence or providing a statement to form part of the subcommittee's record or both. These were eminently reasonable requests, but the subcommittee has ignored them.

The present statement is intended chiefly for the following purposes:

(1) To provide a clearer and more balanced account than has thus far emerged from the subcommittee hearings as to the aims, methods, activities, publications and personnel of the Institute.

(2) To explain or refute some of the more serious cases of misstatements and misleading allegations which have been made either deliberately or inadvertently by certain witnesses, but which have gone uncorrected in the record.

(3) To indicate how some of the procedures adopted by the subcommittee thus far have inevitably led to the presentation of a very distorted picture of the institute and to suggest some corrective steps which should be taken if the subcommittee is to live up to the opening statement made by its chairman. In that statement, he stressed that it intended to conduct its investigation in a fair and impartial manner, adopting a truly objective approach and seeking facts rather than publicity.

Since I am speaking as the executive officer of both the international IPR and the American IPR, and as a person who has been closely connected with the institute's work and staff for a very long period, I wish to add a few statements about my own role in the institute and to answer some of the questions which may be asked about me in the hearings. I mention this because I am concerned that the members of the IPR and the general public, as well as the Senators on the subcommittee, should understand my position and responsibility, past and present. I also want to show that the institute's officers are completely sincere in saying that, despite the unfair allegations thus far made, they welcome an investigation of the IPR, provided only that it is fair and comprehensive.

I stress this fact because the impression has been given in certain newspapers that the institute has concealed many suspicious or discreditable facts about itself. This has tended to lend color to the false rumors maliciously spread by a few unprincipled persons that the institute has been an agency or tool of the Communists or a channel for Soviet espionage activities or a sinister, secret pressure group influencing the development of far eastern policy.

To the thousands of loyal and well-informed people who have been thoroughly familiar with the institute and its activities over the past 26 years, these stories are slanderous and manifestly absurd. But in these days when public thinking and feeling about Russia, China, and the Far East generally have become so charged with emotion, even the most fantastic rumors tend to be taken seriously; and it therefore becomes necessary to refute them in a careful and detailed manner.

Digitized by Google

MY OWN ROLE IN THE IPR

My work for the IPR began in January 1929 when I came from New Zealand to work as a junior research assistant and private secretary to Dr. J. B. Condliffe, the research secretary of the international headquarters of the IPR, then located in Honolulu. After attending the Kyoto (Japan) conference of the IPR in 1929, I worked in north China in 1930 as a research assistant to Prof. R. H. Tawney in the preparation of his noted IPR book, Land and Labour in China.

I was acting international research secretary of the IPR from 1931 to 1932. After a year's leave of absence for study in England, I became international research secretary in 1933 and held this position until 1944, frequently visiting the Far East and Western Europe (though not Russia). During 1943 and 1944, I was editor of Pacific Affairs. I was given leave in 1944 to work for the OSS and the OWI in Washington and New York. I became a naturalized American citizen in July 1944. From February to October 1945, I was acting director of the China division of the United States Office of War Information in Chungking.

In March 1946 I was appointed secretary general of the international IPR, succeeding Mr. Edward C. Carter who had held that position since 1933. For a brief period in 1948 and again from August 1950 to the present, I have also acted temporarily as executive vice chairman of the American IPR concurrently with my position as international secretary general. I have also taken over the functions of the international research secretary.

I thus carry a complicated set of responsibilities. Some responsibilities are to the American IPR, some to the other nine national councils of the institute, some to the foundations and corporations which contribute generously to both the American and international budgets of the IPR, and some to the individual research workers and contributors to the IPR journals.

These diverse responsibilities are not always easy to harmonize. This problem has grown increasingly acute as public controversy, especially in the United States, has become more bitter over the trend of events in the Far East and as sharp differences have appeared between the foreign policies of such countries as the United States, Britain, India, and the U. S. S. R. toward developments in China, Korea, Japan, and southeast Asia.

This point needs to be kept in mind because it serves to explain the peculiar limitations imposed on the international officers of a nonpartisan organization like the IPR which is international but nonofficial and is simply a loose confederation of completely autonomous national societies, each differing somewhat in organization and activities. It should never be forgotten that the international IPR is not a unitary, monolithic organization with national branches controlled by a central headquarters. Nor is it even a federation of identical or like-minded societies such as Rotary International or the International YMCA.

The autonomous national councils of the IPR, though differing in their programs and constitutional structure, have nearly all sought a wide diversity of interests and attitudes among their members. They are not groups of like-minded persons, linked by common political attitudes or professional interests. For the most part they are united only by a belief that the unfettered nonpartisan collection of facts and discussion about the problems of the Far East and the Pacific area is important and that (because the truth in these complex problems is inevitably many-sided) it is wise to seek a diversity of opinions and interpretations, including the views of persons with whom one sharply disagrees.

Even more striking is the absence of any common ideology or philosophical approach as between IPR members in one country and those in another. This difference is often vividly revealed in the frank but friendly clash of opinion which occurs in the private international conferences of the institute, such as the one held in Lucknow in October 1950. Any attempt to force this great diversity of views into one philosophical mold or conceptual scheme would be fruitless and ridiculous. This fact has always been recognized by the national councils and individual members of the institute and differences of opinion and even vigorous disagreements have always been welcomed, not only in the conference round tables, but in the conference preparatory papers and in the larger scholarly research volumes and magazine articles published under the institute's auspices.

All this is familiar enough to IPR members, but it is apt to be forgotten at a time when the institute has been dragged by partisan extremists into the middle of a nation-wide American political controversy over far-eastern policy which is itself becoming more and more a football of 1952 election campaign politics.

Digitized by Google

As the servant of both a far-flung and diversified international organization and of an American society of some 1,100 persons with widely differing and strongly felt opinions, I, as the executive officer of the IPR, have to serve many masters. I must try to do this without allowing the institute to degenerate into the condition where the attempt to compromise and please all conflicting points of view results in mere confusion and ineffectualness. At the same time, I must always strive to see that important points of view of varying schools of opinion find expression in the institute's activities and publications and not use the fact of conflicting opinions and counsel as an excuse for imposing my own ideas or pet theories on the conduct and content of the institute's work.

Having been so long connected with the institute and so largely responsible for the administration of its research, I cannot dissociate myself from its past activities, nor would I want to. I feel considerable pride in having been associated with it, though I would be the last to assert that the institute's officers have never made errors in judgment or that in particular my own decisions, looked at in retrospect, have always been wise. Nor could I in good conscience give the impression that the institute today has been radically transformed, when, in fact, I believe that it has always been basically committed to the principles of freedom of scholarly inquiry and diversity of opinion.

Those principles remain as valid and important as ever. It has simply become more difficult to apply them, because of the great change which Soviet postwar policy has produced in the whole climate of opinion on the crucial problems of communism and nationalism which beset the Far East and the far eastern policies of the western nations.

At the same time, as an executive officer of an organization which has some responsibility to the general public, and which depends for its existence on its public reputation as well as on the financial support of foundations and corporations, I have to be realistic. In particular, I have to take account of the honestly held views of well-informed, genuine friends of the IPR concerning the present-day activities of the institute and the policies which it must follow if it is to keep or regain the financial support and confidence of the individuals and foundations that make its existence possible.

To steer a wise course in such conflicting currents is not easy. I can only say that I have made an honest effort to serve the over-all interests of the institute. Whether I have succeeded or will succeed in this is for others to judge. I appeal to both the subcommittee members and the general public to have understanding of the job which Mr. Swope and I (and the other institute officers, who give generously of their time and energy) are trying to do. We are concerned with an area of the world where the need for facts and for cool heads as well as warm hearts was never greater than it is today.

As for my "associations" outside the IPR, I must admit that I have not been a great "joiner." Before I became an American citizen, I was a member of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, London. Today I am an ordinary member of the Foreign Policy Association and of the Council on Foreign Relations in New York. I am a member of the board of the Public Affairs Committee, New York, and of United Service to China. From 1944 I have been a board member of the China Aid Council (now inactive). I have been a director and am still a member of the Far Eastern Association. I am not active in politics but registered as a Democrat in New York City for the last two presidential elections. I am neither a Communist nor an ex-Communist, nor a Communist fellow traveler. To the best of my knowledge, I have not been accused of Communist "associations." In Chungking in 1945, I met Mao Tse-tung, at the time when he was brought down from Yenan by Ambassador Patrick Hurley. I also met Chou En-lai then, at a reception given by Gen. A. C. Wedemeyer.

Some points not brought out by the McCarran subcommittee

The institute should be judged by its record as a whole, not by bits and pieces culled from its files. For example, the contents of the 28 volumes in its "inquiry" series are more important evidence of the nature of its activities than an informal comment on tentative plans for this project in an intraoffice letter which the committee has publicized. It should be judged primarily by what it has done, not by speculations about projected programs. The contents of the two-hundred-odd research volumes and conference reports published by the institute are a better index of its influence on American thinking than allegations by ex-Communists who had nothing to do with this organization's program and publications.

Digitized by Google

There is not space here to present the institute's full record of achievement in four continents over the last 26 years. A brief summary of this record is given in the pamphlet, Understanding Asia, issued by the institute in June 1951.[1] Four points only will be stressed here: (1) The institute is an international organization. (2) It is a nonpartisan organization. (3) It has never tried to influence the actions of governments. (4) The character of its work has been determined not by Communists, but by the hundreds of eminent citizens and scholars who have taken an active part in the institute as officers of the organization, as delegates to its conferences, or as writers of books and articles which it has published.

What the institute is

The Institute of Pacific Relations is an association composed of national councils in 10 countries. Each national council is autonomous and carries on its own work in its own distinctive way. Together they cooperate in an international IPR program of research, publications, and conferences. This program is directed by a Pacific Council in which each national council is represented, and administered by a small international secretariat working in New York under the direction of the Pacific Council.

The institute at present consists of the following independent national councils:

American Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc.
Australian Institute of International Affairs
Canadian Institute of International Affairs
Comité d'Etudes des Problèmes du Pacifique (France)
Indian Council of World Affairs
Japan Institute of Pacific Relations
New Zealand Institute of International Affairs
Pakistan Institute of International Affairs
Philippine Council, Institute of Pacific Relations
Royal Institute of International Affairs (Great Britain)

The institute was founded in 1925 at a conference in Honolulu of religious leaders, scholars and businessmen from various countries of the Pacific area, who, even then, realized the need for greater knowledge and frank discussion of the problems of Asia and the relations of Asia and the West. The impetus came in part from leaders of the YMCA.

At this first conference it was realized that intelligent discussion was impossible on many subjects because many basic facts were lacking about the peoples, resources, trade, and politics of the Pacific area. This led to the inauguration by the international IPR of a large and continuing research program which subsequently received generous support from the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Corp. The IPR has played an important part in increasing available knowledge about Asia in the United States and other countries. The Rockefeller Foundation has called the institute "the most important single source of independent studies of the Pacific area and the Far East."

Since 1925 the institute has held 11 international but nonofficial conferences, the latest having taken place at Lucknow, India, in 1950. Conference membership is usually about a hundred, and consists of delegates chosen by each national council. The agenda is carefully prepared and full documentation is provided in the form of data papers compiled by the international secretariat and the national councils. While the conferences are private and the press is excluded to assure full freedom of discussion, reports of the discussion are subsequently published.

Dr. Ralph Bunche, the distinguished United Nations official and Nobel prize winner, attended his first international conference as a member of the American group at the Eighth IPR Conference, held at Mount Tremblant in Canada in 1942. He recently said: "Although I have participated in a great many international conferences since, I have never experienced a more profitable one than the Mount Tremblant Conference, or one that was better conducted."

[1] Available on request from the American IPR, 1 East 54th Street, New York 22, N. Y.

Digitized by Google

The International IPR

Following are the names of the chairmen of the Pacific Council, international governing body of the institute, from 1925 to the present:

1925–29: Ray Lyman Wilbur (United States), frormer Secretary of the Interior
1929–33: Jerome D. Greene (United States), former member of the firm of Lee, Higginson & Co.
1933–36: Hon. Newton D. Baker (United States), former United States Secretary of War
1936–39: J. W. Dafoe (Canada), former editor, Winnipeg Free Press
1939–42: Philip C. Jessup (United States), professor of international law, Columbia University
1942–45: Edgar J. Tarr (Canada), former president, Monarch Life Assurance Co.
1945–47: Percy E. Corbett (Canada), professor of government, Yale University
1947–50: Huntington Gilchrist (United States), American Cyanamid Co.
1950: Arthur H. Dean, attorney, Sullivan and Cromwell, New York

The following persons, as chairmen of the international research committee, have directed the international research program of the institute from 1925 to the present:

Prof. James T. Shotwell, Columbia University
Prof. Charles P. Howland, Yale University
Dr. Carl L. Alsberg, Food Research Institute, Stanford University
Prof. J. B. Condliffe, University of California
Sir George Sansom, East Asian Institute, Columbia University.

Other prominent persons who have taken an active leadership in the work of the IPR outside the United States include the following:

Rt. Hon. A. V. Alexander, former Minister of Defense, Great Britain
Dr. Horace Belshaw, Professor of Economics, Victoria College, Wellington, New Zealand
R. J. F. Boyer, Australian Broadcasting Commission
K. P. Chen, president, Shanghai Commercial Bank, China
Dr. Chiang Mon-Lin, former Minister of Education, China
Rt. Hon. Arthur Creech-Jones, former Minister of Colonies, Great Britain
Lionel Curtis, All Souls College, Oxford
J. W. Dafoe, former editor, Winnipeg Free Press, Canada
Sir Frederic Eggleston, former Australian Ambassador to the United States
Pierre Gourou, professor of geography, Sorbonne, Paris
Dr. Hu Shih, former Chinese Ambassador to the United States
Junnosuke Inouye, former Premier of Japan
Viscount K. Ishii, former member, House of Peers, Japan
Sir Mohammed Zafrullah Khan, Foreign Minister, Pakistan
Pandit H. N. Kunzru, Servants of India Society, India
K. C. Li, Wah Chang Trading Co., New York
Yoshisaburo Matsukata, general manager, Kyodo News Agency, Japan
Sir Andrew McFadyean, president, Liberal Party, Great Britain
Walter Nash, former Finance Minister, New Zealand
Dr. Inazo Nitobe, former member, House of Peers, Japan
Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, Indian Ambassador to the United States
Archibald Rose, British American Tobacco Co.
Hon. Newton W. Rowell, former President of the Privy Council, Canada
Albert Sarraut, former Premier of France
Hon. W. Downie Stewart, former Minister of Defense, New Zealand
Arnold J. Toynbee, director of studies, Royal Institute of International Affairs, Great Britain
Sir Frederick Whyte, former president, Indian Legislative Assembly
W. W. Yen, former Chinese Ambassador to the U. S. S. R.

The American Institute of Pacific Relations, one of the national councils of the IPR, is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization composed of about 1,100 businessmen, scholars, teachers, journalists, Government officials, community leaders, and others interested in contemporary Far Eastern problems. Membership is open to anyone but voting rights are limited to American citizens. The American Institute is governed by a board of about 60 trustees who are elected by the membership and who in turn elect the officers and members of the executive committee which supervises the work of the staff. Besides cooperating in the international IPR research and conference program, the American Institute publishes the fortnightly Far Eastern Survey, publishes books, pamphlets, reading lists and other educational materials, holds meetings, conferences and study groups, and in various ways, often in cooperation with other organizations, works to promote the study and discussion of Far Eastern problems in the United States.

Digitized by Google

A list of the members who have been executive committee members and of prominent Americans who have actively taken part in the work of the American IPR is given elsewhere in this statement.

How the institute is financed

The work of the international Institute of Pacific Relations is financed principally by contributions from its national councils and by grants from foundations. In the 26 years from 1925 through 1950 total receipts amounted to $2,569,000, an average of about $100,000 a year. Of this total, 48 percent came from the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Corp., 40 percent from the national councils, 9 percent from sales of publications, and 3 percent from miscellaneous sources. The American IPR contributed 29 percent of the total receipts, the British and Canadian national councils 3 percent each, the China council 2 percent, and the Japanese council 1 percent; the eight other national councils each contributed less than 1 percent. Thus United States sources, including foundations, supplied 77 percent of the organization's income. If grants to the American IPR are included, the contribution of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Corp. to the work of the IPR through 1950 totals $2,176,000. In 1950 the Rockefeller Foundation voted a new grant of $50,000 to the international institute and $60,000 to the American IPR.

The American Institute of Pacific Relations derives its funds from membership subscriptions, gifts from individuals and corporations, and grants from foundations. From 1925 through 1950 its total net income was $2,536,000, of which 50 percent came from foundations (chiefly the Rockefeller Foundation, Carnegie Corp. and Carnegie Endowment), 33 percent from individual and corporate contributions, 12 percent from sales of publications, and 5 percent from miscellaneous sources. Leading contributors to the American IPR today include the Standard-Vacuum Oil Co., International General Electric Co., National City Bank, Chase National Bank, Bankers Trust Co., International Business Machines Corp., International Telephone and Telegraph Co., Electric Bond and Share Co., and the Rockefeller Brothers Fund. Lever Brothers (London) is a major contributor to the international IPR.

Among other large corporate contributors have been Alexander & Baldwin, American Trust Co., Castle & Cooke, Time Inc., J. P. Morgan, Studebaker Corp., Reader's Digest, American President Lines, Matson Steamship Co., Bank of Hawaii, Pan American Airways, Bank of America, Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., Shell Oil Co., National Cash Register, Wilbur Ellis Co., Bank of California, American Foreign Power Co.

Major individual contributors to the IPR have included the late Frank C. Atherton, Juan Trippe, Henry R. Luce, Jerome D. Greene, Mrs. Thomas W. Lamont, the late Joseph P. Chamberlain, Mrs. Frances Bolton, Joseph E. Davies, Mrs. Wallace Alexander, Mrs. Frank Gerbode, Arthur H. Dean and Gerard Swope. The large contributions of Frederick V. Field (total $60,000) and of the late Thomas W. Lamont (total $14,700) have already been reported in the press.

WHO WERE "ASSOCIATED" WITH THE IPR?—STATEMENT BY WILLIAM L. HOLLAND, EXECUTIVE VICE CHAIRMAN, AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

The counsel for the McCarran subcommittee has made great efforts to show that numerous persons, many of whom are alleged to be Communist agents or sympathizers, were "associated" or "connected" with the IPR. Early in the hearings he required Mr. E. C. Carter to give quick "yes" or "no" answers on whether some 80 people on a list were "connected" in any way with the institute. In subsequent hearings, he has often said that certain persons had been shown to be "connected" with the institute. This "guilt by association" technique is so misleading and unfair that one must attempt to make some meaningful distinction between those who were closely and significantly associated with the IPR and those who had only marginal or negligible contacts.

Senator Ferguson has recently given a somewhat apologetic explanation of the fact that he was a member of the American IPR for 10 years and paid dues for 7. He described his association as merely "nominal" but it was certainly closer than that of some of the persons named in the testimony. However, he hardly need feel apologetic because he was in good company. Many other Senators and Congressmen, including Senators Flanders, Elbert Thomas, Thomas Hart, and Representatives such as Mrs. Frances Bolton, have been IPR members, have taken an active part in its meetings and contributed to its budget. Moreover, their associations extended over the period when Mr. Frederick V. Field was still active in the American IPR either as executive secretary (1934–40) or as a member of the executive committee (1941–47).

Digitized by Google

It should be noted first that dozens of people who have had no contact or association of any kind with the IPR have been named in the hearings. Only in a few cases has the subcommittee counsel troubled to point out that these people had nothing whatever to do with the institute. He has thus left the impression in the minds of the public that the IPR had numerous connections with various Communist agents, Soviet officials, and persons alleged to have transmitted official secrets to Communist couriers. Persons in this category include Nathan Silvermaster, Noel Field, J. Peters, Elizabeth Bentley and her lover Golos, Theodore Geiger, Jack Stachel, Louis Budenz, Louis Balemuth, Mary Price, Victor Perlo, Harrison George, General Berzin, General Krivitsky, and many others.

Second, many other people named as "associated" with the IPR have had only the most marginal, insignificant, contacts with it and have exerted no influence whatever on its activities or publications. Persons in this category include Duncan Lee, Solomon Adler, Harry White, Agnes Smedley, Mildred Price, John Service, John P. Davies, Lawrence Duggan, Frank Coe. Some of these people were ordinary dues-paying members for varying periods; some were personally acquainted with IPR staff members; some attended occasional IPR meetings. None of these persons were ever officers, trustees, or employees of the institute, or contributors to its publications, and none ever had any influence in the formulation or execution of its policies or programs. (The subcommittee's counsel made a labored effort to show the "association" of Agnes Smedley, an acknowledged Chinese Communist sympathizer though not herself a Communist Party member, with the IPR simply because she wrote a letter to the institute in 1941 asking IPR officers to request the International Red Cross to try to get a Chinese friend released from a Japanese internment camp in Hong Kong.)

The subcommittee has tried to make much of the institute's alleged associations with two well-known former Government officials, Lawrence Duggan and Harry White, both of them now dead, and unable to answer the charges of disloyalty brought against them by ex-Communists. The IPR never had the active cooperation of Mr. Duggan and Mr. White in its program. Neither was even an ordinary member of the institute. The subcommittee counsel has described Mr. White as a delegate to one of the IPR international conferences, whereas he was one of those invited but unable to accept. Mr. Duggan, as a State Department official, was informally consulted a few times about the possibility of establishing IPR groups in certain Latin-American countries.

The preposterous allegation has been made by Elizabeth Bentley that Mildred Price (for many years executive secretary of the China Aid Council, a well-known philanthropic society and one of the constituent agencies of United China Relief) was in charge of a Communist "unit" which had responsibility for the IPR and certain other Far East organizations. The facts are that Miss Price has played no part whatever in the institute's work. She has been an ordinary dues-paying member but has never been active in IPR affairs. She has never been a trustee, or served on IPR committees, or been a substantial financial contributor, or worked as an employee or advisor of the IPR or attended its conferences. She has very rarely even visited the IPR offices or been invited to meetings. At no time has she been in a position to know in detail anything of the program or administration of the institute. It is thus quite impossible for her to have been "responsible" for the IPR or to have influenced its policies, activities, or publications, even had she been inclined to do so (and there is certainly nothing in her conduct or attitudes to suggest that she would be).

Far more meaningful evidence of who were really "associated" with the IPR and really in a position to control, influence, and supervise its activities, were the able and loyal citizens who have served as active IPR officers and members of its executive committee and other major committees. The attached lists of members of the American IPR executive committee and members of other major comittees over the past 25 years or so gives an infinitely more authentic picture of who controlled and shaped the institute's policies and programs than the grotesque caricature painted in the subcommittee hearings. These people were not "dupes" or "window dressing" but actively participated in the American institute's affairs.

Digitized by Google

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, INC., EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEMBERS, 1927–51

Initials at end of line indicate member is or was at one time: C—chairman, American IPR; VC—vice chairman; T—treasurer; S—secretary.

Dates of committee membership

1929–39: Wallace M. Alexander,[1] Alexander & Baldwin Ltd., San Francisco (VC)
1947–48: Edward W. Allen,[1] Allen, Froude, Hilen & DeGarmo, Seattle
1948–51: Raymond B. Allen,[1] President, University of Washington, Seattle (VC)
1929–39: Carl L. Alsberg,[2] director, Food Research Institute, Stanford University (C)
1932–36: Newton D. Baker,[2] former United States Secretary of War (C)
1943–46: Eugene E. Barnett, international committee, YMCA
1948–49: Edward W. Beltz, Standard-Vacuum Oil Co.
1928–30: George H. Blakeslee, professor of international relations, Clark University
1949: Hugh Borton, East Asian Institute, Columbia University
1947: Lincoln C. Brownell, American Bank Note Co.
1943–45: Robert D. Calkins, School of Business, Columbia University
1927–32, 1940–44, 1946–51: Edward C. Carter, former secretary general, IPR (VC and S)
1932–34: Everett Case, president, Colgate University (T)
1932–42: Joseph P. Chamberlain,[2] professor of public law, Columbia University (VC)
1947–48: Dwight L. Clark,[1] Occidental Life Insurance Co., Los Angeles
1927–40, 1944–46: Ada L. Comstock (Notestein), former president, Radcliffe College (VC)
1932–36: George S. Counts, Teachers College, Columbia University
1946–47: John L. Curtis, National City Bank of New York
1946–50: Arthur H. Dean, partner, Sullivan & Cromwell, New York (VC)
1944–46: Raymond Dennett, World Peace Foundation, Boston (S)
1947–51: Walter F. Dillingham,[1] Oahu Land & Railway Co., Honolulu (VC)
1927–32: Stephen P. Duggan,[2] Institute of International Education
1934–47: Frederick V. Field, secretary, American IPR, 1934–40 (S)
1929–32, 1936–39: Galen M. Fisher, specialist on Japanese civilization, Berkeley
1946–48: Huntington Gilchrist, American Cyanamid Co.
1951: L. Carrington Goodrich, professor of Chinese, Columbia University
1927–39: Jerome D. Greene, former partner, Lee Higginson & Co. (C)
1939–42: Francis S. Harmon, Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America (T)
1940–42: W. R. Herod, president, International General Electric Co. (VC)
1946, 1948, 1950: William L. Holland, secretary general, IPR (VC)
1927–32: Charles P. Howland,[2] professor of international relations, Yale University.
1943–46: G. Ellsworth Huggins,[2] Catlin, Farrish & Co. (T)
1927–32: Edward H. Hume, medical missionary in China
1936–40, 1944–46: Philip C. Jessup, professor of international law, Columbia University (C)
1932–36: Frederick P. Keppel,[2] president, Carnegie Corp. of New York
1927–32: William H. Kilpatrick, professor of education, Columbia University
1936–39: Benjamin H. Kizer, Graves, Kizer & Graves, Spokane (VC)
1927–30: Thomas W. Lamont,[2] J. P. Morgan & Co. (VC)
1948–50: Clayton Lane, executive secretary, American IPR, 1948–50 (S)
1949–51: Lewis Lapham, president, American Hawaiian Steamship Co.
1946–49: Owen Lattimore,[2] Walter Hines Page School of International Relations
1942–44, 1946–51: William W. Lockwood, Woodrow Wilson School, Princeton University (S)
1950: James A. Mackay, National City Bank of New York
1950: Clifford B. Marshall, Standard-Vacuum Oil Co. (T)
1943–46: James L. McConaughy,[2] president, United China Relief
1929–32: Mrs. Alfred McLaughlin, civic leader, San Francisco
1936–39: James D. Mooney, General Motors Export Corp.

[1] Regional nonquorum member.
[2] Deceased.

Digitized by Google

Dates of committee membership

1941–43, 1946: Harriet L. Moore, research director, American Russian Institute (S)
1944–47: Lawrence Morris, Hawkins, Delafield & Wood, New York
1932–39: Mrs. James W. Morrisson, active in League of Women Voters (VC)
1951: J. Morden Murphy, Bankers Trust Co.
1937–42: Philo W. Parker, Standard-Vacuum Oil Co. (VC)
1936–38: Charles J. Rhoads, formerly Brown Bros. & Co., Philadelphia (T)
1927–32: Henry M. Robinson,[2] Security First National Bank, Los Angeles
1929–36: Chester Rowell,[2] San Francisco Chronicle
1943–46: Lawrence D. Seymour, Dodge & Seymour
1936–39: David L. Shillinglaw, David L. Shillinglaw & Co., Chicago
1927–36: James T. Shotwell, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace
1927–36: Mrs. F. Louis Slade,[2] active in League of Women Voters (VC)
1927–36: George Soule, editor, New Republic, 1924–47
1943–48: Robert Gordon Sproul, president, University of California (C)
1946: Donald B. Straus, Management Employee Relations, Inc. (T)
1950: Gerard Swope, honorary president, General Electric Co. (C)
1947–49, 1950: Donald G. Tewksbury, Teachers College, Columbia University
1932–36: Mrs. John Paul Welling, formerly vice president, Chicago Council on Foreign Relations (VC)
1947–48: Lynn White, Jr.,[1] president, Mills College
1927–29, 1937–42, 1948–49: Ray Lyman Wilbur,[2] chancelor, Stanford University (C)
1951: Heaton L. Wrenn,[1] Anderson, Wrenn & Jenks, Honolulu (VC)

TWENTY DISTINGUISHED AMERICANS WHO HAVE ACTIVELY PARTICIPATED IN THE WORK OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS (EXCLUDING MEMBERS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE)

Carroll Binder, editorial editor, Minneapolis Tribune, Minneapolis; trustee, 1935–45; delegate, first and sixth IPR conferences; vice chairman, 1943–46.

Isaiah Bowman (deceased), geographer; formerly president, the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore; trustee, 1931–41; member, AIPR Research Committee, 1929–32.

Ralph J. Bunche, top-ranking director, Division of Trusteeship, United Nations; acting mediator on Palestine, United Nations; New York; Nobel Peace Prize; delegate, eighth and ninth IPR conferences; active in Washington IPR branch.

Brooks Emeny, president, Foreign Policy Association, New York; trustee, 1938 to date; delegate, sixth, seventh, and eighth IPR conferences; vice chairman, 1947–48.

Harold H. Fisher, chairman, Hoover War Library, Stanford University, Calif.; formerly, director, School of Naval Administration; chairman, American delegation, eleventh IPR conference. Member, AIPR Research Committee, 1948–51.

Henry F. Grady, formerly United States Ambassador to Iran; formerly president, American President Lines, San Francisco; trustee, 1941–49; active in San Francisco Bay region IPR work.

Mortimer Graves, administrative secretary, American Council of Learned Societies, Washington; delegate, ninth IPR conference; trustee, 1943–49; vice chairman, 1946–47.

Mrs. Edward H. Heller, member, Democratic National Committee; Democratic National Committeewoman for California, 1944–48; education secretary, War Finance Division, United States Treasury, northern California and Massachusetts, 1941–45; trustee, 1938–45; delegate, sixth IPR conference; active in San Francisco Bay region IPR branch.

Felix M. Keesing, executive head, Department of Sociology and Anthropology, Stanford University, Calif.; United States Senior Commissioner, South Pacific Commission; delegate, fourth and ninth IPR conferences; member, AIPR Research Committee, 1945–48; author of three IPR research volumes.

Grayson Kirk, vice president and provost, Columbia University, New York; executive officer, Third Commission, San Francisco Conference, 1945; delegate, ninth IPR conference; member, AIPR Research Committee, 1944–48; chairman, International Program Committee, IPR, 1946.

[1] Regional nonquorum member.
[2] Deceased.

Digitized by Google

Henry R. Luce, publisher, Time, Life, and Fortune, New York; director, United China Relief, and Yenching University, China; trustee, 1933–47; delegate, fifth IPR conference; vice chairman, 1946–47; member, finance committee, 1938–46.

Maj. Gen. Frank R. McCoy, United States Army, chairman, Far Eastern Commission, Washington; formerly president, Foreign Policy Association, New York; trustee, 1940–46; delegate, seventh, eighth, and ninth IPR conferences.

James G. McDonald, first United States Ambassador to Israel; formerly chairman of the board and honoray chairman, Foreign Policy Association, New York; formerly High Commissioner for Refugees From Germany; trustee, 1929–40; delegate, third and sixth IPR conferences; member, IPR Education Committee. 1929–30.

Donald M. Nelson, formerly Chairman, War Production Board, Washington; formerly president, Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, Los Angeles; trustee, 1946–50; vice chairman, 1947–48; active in Los Angeles IPR branch.

Mrs. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt (deceased), formerly president, Mills College, Oakland, Calif.; trustee, 1927–44; delegate, third IPR conference; active in San Francisco Bay region IPR work.

W. W. Waymack, formerly vice president and editor, Des Moines Register and Tribune; formerly member, United States Atomic Energy Commission; Pulitzer Prize winner; trustee, 1941–43, 1951 to date; delegate, ninth IPR conference.

Sumner Welles, former Secretary of State, Washington; trustee, 1946 to date; vice chairman, 1947–48; chairman, Washington IPR branch, 1946–47.

Brayton Wilbur, Wilbur Ellis Co., San Francisco; trustee, 1943 to date; delegate, eighth IPR conference; member, nominating committee, 1943–46; treasurer, San Francisco Bay region division, IPR, 1942–46.

Quincy Wright, professor of international law, University of Chicago; formerly consultant, Foreign Economic Administration and Department of State; formerly technical adviser to American member, International Military Tribunal, Nuremberg, Germany; trustee, 1935–40; delegate, first, second, fifth, sixth, and seventh IPR conferences; member, AIPR Research Committee, 1928–32, 1938.

Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, United States Navy, retired; formerly commander in chief, United States Asiatic Fleet; trustee, 1940–46; delegate, seventh and eighth IPR conferences; vice chairman, 1943–46.

IPR PUBLICATIONS AND PUBLICATION POLICIES

Since 1925 the IPR has published about 220 major research volumes, written by scholars from a dozen or more countries, which may be found in libraries throughout the world, and which are recognized as standard works in their fields. They deal with such subjects as population problems, land utilization, agrarian problems, industrialization of eastern countries, the family, colonial administration, nationalist movements, labor problems, international politics, and international trade and investment in the Pacific area. In addition, several hundred monographs, data papers, pamphlets, and other smaller studies have been issued. The international institute publishes a quarterly magazine, Pacific Affairs, and several of the national councils issue their own periodicals.

The following titles, taken at random from the long IPR publications list, illustrate the character of its research and publications:

British Economic Interests in the Far East, by E. M. Gull (1943)
Commodity Control in the Pacific Area edited by W. L. Holland
Trade and Trade Barriers in the Pacific by Philip Wright (1935)
British Rule in Eastern Asia by Lennox A. Mills (1942)
The State of Asia by Lawrence K. Rosinger
Asia and the West by Maurice Zinkin
China's Economic Stabilization and Reconstruction by D. K. Lieu (1948)
Banking and Finance in China by Frank M. Tamagna (1942)
Land Utilization in China by J. Lossing Buck (1937)
History of Press and Public Opinion in China by Lin Yu-tang (1936)
Land and Labor in China by R. H. Tawney (1932)
China, the Land and the People by Gerald Winfield (1948)
The Struggle for North China by George E. Taylor (1940)
Essays on the Manchurian Problem by Shuhsi Hsu (1932)
The Western World and Japan by Sir George Sansom (1950)
Japanese Industry by G. C. Allen (1940)
Western Influences on Modern Japan by I. Nitobe and others (1931)
Japan's Economy in War and Reconstruction by Jerome S. Cohen (1949)

Digitized by Google

Government in Japan by C. B. Fahs (1940)
Japan's Emergence as a Modern State by E. Herbert Norman (1940)
The Chinese in Southeast Asia by Victor Purcell (1951)
Colonial Policy and Practice by J. S. Furnivall (1948)
The Economic Development of French Indochina by Charles Robequain (1944)
The Structure of Netherlands Indian Economy by J. H. Boeke (1942)
The Left Wing in Southeast Asia by Virginia Thompson and Richard Adloff (1950)
Government and Nationalism in Southeast Asia by Rupert Emerson and others (1942)
Thailand, the New Siam by Virginia Thompson (1941)
The South Seas in the Modern World by Felix M. Keesing (1941)
Agricultural Organization in New Zealand by Horace Belshaw (1936)
Australia and the Far East edited by I. Clunies Ross (1936)

A fuller list is available in the printed catalog issued regularly by the IPR.

It is worth noting that most of the studies published by the institute are purely factual and descriptive, expressing no political judgments or sympathies. Among the few that are concerned with political and ideological problems, there are some which describe the methods of the Communists in Asia and the ways in which they try, sometimes successfully, to appeal to Asian peoples. In a few articles or chapters, some writers in IPR publications have described the earlier phases of Chinese Communist activities in a relatively sympathetic way. Other IPR articles or reports have, of course, been highly critical of Communist policies and practices. But no IPR publication has advocated communism or urged acceptance of Communist policies or programs.

It is worth noting also that very few of the institute's publications deal with Russia. The institute has not concerned itself with internal conditions in the U. S. S. R. as a whole, but only with Soviet Asia and Soviet relations with far eastern countries. Similarly, publications on China form only a fraction of the institute's total output. The great majority of its publications deal with Japan, India, southeast Asia, the South Pacific, and the far eastern interests or policies of North American or Western European nations. Publications on China and Russia together form probably less than 20 percent of the institute's total product.

Manuscripts of IPR publications are always submitted before publication for comment and criticism by competent authorities. The author is requested to take such comments carefully into account in revising his study, though he himself naturally makes the decision and accepts responsibility for his final text.

ANTI-COMMUNIST WRITERS IN IPR PUBLICATIONS

Following is a partial list of writers well known for their active opposition to communism, whose work the IPR has published. This should dispel any notion that the IPR tended to favor authors sympathetic to communism.

Edwin M. Borchard
Joseph W. Ballantine
Jan O. M. Broek
Kurt Bloch
William Henry Chamberlin
George B. Cressey
J. B. Condliffe
C. B. Fahs
Randall Gould
Robert J. Kerner
Paul M. A. Linebarger
Paul Langer
Herrymon Maurer
Robert C. North
David N. Rowe
Rodger Swearingen
Benjamin Schwartz
H. Arthur Steiner
Milton Sacks
George E. Taylor
Gerald F. Winfield
John N. Washburn
Hu Shih
Franklin Ho
Lin Yutang
Chiang Mon-lin
Shuhsi Hsu
Max Beloff
L. E. Hubbard
Sir Frederic Eggleston
Victor Purcell
Gerard Friters
Roger Levy
H. J. van Mook
M. R. Masani
J. Lossing Buck
Percy E. Corbett
Lenox A. Mills
Shiroshi Nasu
E. Stuart Kirby
Sir George Sansom
Robert A. Fearey
Sir Frederick Whyte
C. M. Chang
Walter H. Millis
Arnold J. Toynbee
D. K. Lieu

Digitized by Google

THE INSTITUTE IS NONPARTISAN

At the outset of its existence, the institute adopted the principle of complete nonpartisanship. The constitutions of the international institute and of all its national councils provide that the organization shall advocate no policies and express no opinions on public issues. This does not mean that individual members of the institute, or delegates to its conferences, or writers for its publication, may not express their personal opinions. On the contrary, a major purpose of the institute is to provide a forum in which issues of the day may be debated from all points of view.

Thus the institute is not a society of like-minded people interested in advancing some particular philosophy or policy. It is not even a federation of like-minded groups, for there are wide differences in national outlook, organizational structure, and operative methods among its national councils. Its membership is very diverse, including people of many different professional and business interests and of nearly all shades of political opinion. This is true to a degree which would be hard to find in an organization promoting some particular cause or "line."

Moreover, since it is international, the IPR membership represents different national viewpoints as well. Institute conferences are invariably marked by frequent differences of opinion, often among the delegates from a single country. The one thing that all institute members agree on is that reliable and up-to-date information about the Pacific area is urgently needed if the citizens and governments of that area are to adopt and carry out wise policies. To the advancement of such knowledge, the institute has devoted itself for the past 26 years.

In its research program the institute uses the best professionally qualified people it can find. Because it has always recognized the importance of having the facts analyzed from a variety of viewpoints, it has never been identified with any one school of thought, with any political faction, or with any one national outlook. It has permitted writers of very diverse opinions to express their own views about any problem or government, but has insisted that these opinions be clearly indicated as those of the writer alone, not of the institute.

Perhaps, the best evidence that the institute has been truly nonpartisan is in the character of the criticism which it has received in the 26 years of its existence. This has come from many directions. For example, before the war the institute was criticized by Japanese writers for allegedly favoring the cause of Nationalist China against Japan. Since the war it has been attacked by certain partisan critics in the United States for allegedly helping to ruin Nationalist China. It has also been denounced by Russian writers in Soviet publications who have called it a mouthpiece of Wall Street imperialism and similar epithets. Its initials were once interpreted by an Australian Communist publication as standing for "Institute of Pirates and Robbers," because the Rockefeller Foundation gave it such large financial support.

THE INSTITUTE DOES NOT TRY TO INFLUENCE GOVERNMENT POLICIES

The claim that the institute has exerted a strong influence on the Department of State is unfounded. Many of its publications have of course been read by officers of the Department, but its publications represent no consensus of views. For the institute is not an "action" organization. It takes no stand on public issues. It does not pass resolutions and it does not engage in lobbying. It makes no attempt to influence in any way the policy of the United States or any other government.

Specific evidence on this point is given by Joseph W. Ballantine, who was a member of the Department of State from 1937 to 1946, serving as Chief of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs, Deputy Director and later Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, and Special Assistant to the Secretary of State. Mr. Ballantine says in a recent letter:

